

COMMERCIAL AND GENERAL LAWYER;

A PLAIN AND PRACTICAL EXPOSITION OF THE LAW OF ENGLAND

IN ALL ITS DEPARTMENTS;

WITH A MORE PARTICULAR CONSIDERATION OF THOSE BRANCHES WHICH RELATE TO

COMMERCE, TRADE, AND MANUFACTURES.

By ~~EDWARD~~ CHITTY, Esq.

OF LINCOLN'S INN, BARRISTER AT LAW.

Sixth Edition,

REVISED AND CORRECTED

By THOMAS GEORGE WESTERN, Esq.

OF THE MIDDLE TEMPLE;

AUTHOR OF COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION AND LAWS OF ENGLAND, &c. &c.

LONDON:

R. MACDONALD, 30, GREAT SUTTON STREET,

CLERKENWELL.

1848.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	1
Division of the Law of England into Common and Statute Law	—
Countries subject to the Laws of England	6
Ecclesiastical and Civil Divisions of England	10
BOOK I.—OF THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF PERSONS.
<small>CHAP.</small>
I. OF THE PARLIAMENT	17
1. How and when assembled	—
2. How constituted	—
3. The Laws and Customs relating to Parliament collectively	16
HOUSE OF LORDS	19
HOUSE OF COMMONS	20
I. Who are and who are not capable of being elected	—
II. Who are the Electors, or the Constituency of the H. of C.	21
1. What Aggregate Bodies are entitled to elect	—
Disfranchisement of Places	22
Enfranchisement of Places	—
Increase of County Members	—
2. Persons who cannot be Electors	23
3. Qualifications of Electors	24
For Counties	—
For Cities and Boroughs	25
4. Registration, and Revising Barristers	27
III. Proceedings at Elections	28
4. Mode of passing Acts of Parliament	32
II. OF THE KING OR QUEEN AND THE ROYAL FAMILY	33
The Crown—Powers and Duties of	—
Prerogatives of	—
III. OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL	35
IV. OF THE REVENUE OF THE CROWN	38
Ordinary	—
Extraordinary Revenue	39
LAND TAX	40
POST OFFICE	41
Exclusive Privilege of the Post Office	—
Postage Duties	42
Recovery of	46
Offences against the Post Office	47

IV. OF THE REVENUE OF THE CROWN (continued)—

CUSTOMS	51
1. Management of the Customs	—
2. Regulations of the Customs	52
On Importation	—
Manifest	—
Master's Report	53
Entry of Goods	54
By Bill of Sight	56
Abatement of Duty on account of Damages	—
Re-Importation	57
A Table of Goods which may not be re-imported	—
Goods from British Possessions	58
Fish	—
Wrecked Goods	59
Exciseable Goods	—
Times and Places for Landing Goods	60
A Table of Prohibitions and Restrictions Inwards	—
On Exportation	61
Entry Outwards of Ship	62
— of Goods	63
Clearance of Goods	64
— of Ship	65
Debenture Goods	66
A Table of Prohibitions and Restrictions Outwards	67
Coasting Trade	—
General Regulations	69
3. Warehousing or Bonding System	71
4. Smuggling	77
Excise	83
1. Excise Laws in General	—
Licences	84
Entries	85
Payment of Duties	86
Permits	87
Powers of Officers, Seizures, &c.	88
Prosecutions	90
Appeals	91
2. Laws relating to Particular Articles and Traders	93
Auctioneers	—
Brewers and Retailers of Beer, Ale, Cider, &c.	95
Bricks and Tiles	100
Candles	101
Coffee, Tea, Cocoa Nuts, Chocolate, and Pepper	—
Glass	102
Hops	—
Leather	103
Maltsters and Malt	—
Paper, Pasteboard, Scaleboard, Millboard, &c.	105
Printed, Painted, or Stained Paper	108
Printed, Painted, or Stained Muslins, Linen, &c.	—
Plate	—

IV. OF THE REVENUE OF THE CROWN (continued)EXCISE—Laws as to Particular Articles and Traders (continued)—

Soap	109
Spirits	110
Sweets or Made Wines, and Mead or Metheglin	114
Starch, Hair Powder, and Stone Blue	—
Beet-Root Sugar	—
Stone Bottles	115
Tobacco and Snuff	116
Roasted Malt	117
Vinegar, Acetous Acid, and Verjuice	—
Wine	118
Wire	119

STAMP DUTIES

A Table of Stamp Duties, with the Exemptions	—
What Instruments require Stamps	134
Of the Description of Stamps on particular Instruments	136
When several Stamps are requisite	137
When Re-stamping is necessary	138
Time and Manner of Stamping	—
Consequences of Instruments not being duly stamped	—
Spoiled Stamps	139
Sale of Stamps	—

STAGE CARRIAGES

Metropolitan Stage Carriages	143
----------------------------------------	-----

HACKNEY CARRIAGES

Drivers, Conductors, and Watermen	145
---------------------------------------------	-----

POST HORSES

HAWKERS AND PEDLARS	149
-------------------------------	-----

ASSESSED TAXES

Officers &c. employed in their Collection	—
Appeals	152
Distress for Taxes	—
Duties on Windows	153
— Male Servants	154
— Carriages	155
— Horses	156
— Dogs	157
— Horse-Dealers	—
— Hair Powder	—
— Armorial Bearings	—
— Game	—

PROPERTY AND INCOME TAX

158
-----	--

V. OF SUBORDINATE MAGISTRATES

SHERIFF

Under-Sheriff	164
-------------------------	-----

Sheriff's Officers	165
------------------------------	-----

Gaolers	—
-------------------	---

Of the Execution and Return of Writs in general	166
-----------------------------------------------------------	-----

Abolition of Arrest on Mesne Process	—
------------------------------------------------	---

Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt under Twenty Pounds	167
------------------------------------------------------------------	-----

Power of Committal for Fraud &c. under Small Debts Act	168
------------------------------------------------------------------	-----

Ruling Sheriff to make a Return of the Writ	169
-------------------------------------------------------	-----

Return to Writs in general	—
--------------------------------------	---

CHAP.	PAGE
V. OF SUBORDINATE MAGISTRATES (continued)
SHERIFF—Sheriff's Duty upon Arrest	170
Outlawry	—
Habeas Corpus	171
Writ of Fieri Facias	173
Elegit	175
Habere Facias Possessionem	176
Inquiry
Sheriff's Duty as to Exchequer Writs	177
as to Juries	178
at the Assizes	179
at Sessions	180
Fees of Sheriff and Sheriff's Officers	—
CORONERS: Their Duty at Inquests on Deaths	183
Power and Duty in other Matters	185
JUSTICES OF PEACE:] Their Jurisdiction	186
In London, &c.	189
CONSTABLES	190
High Constable	—
Petty Constable	—
Duties and Powers	194
Privileges and Exemptions	196
Constabulary Police	—
Special Constables, Watchmen, and Police	197
SURVEYORS OF HIGHWAYS	—
Highways in general	—
Highway Rates	201
Repair of Highways	202
Proceedings to compel Repairs	203
Procuring Materials	204
Widening Highways	205
Diverting or Stopping up Highways	—
Obstructions, Encroachments, Nuisances, &c.	206
POOR LAW OFFICERS, AND THE POOR LAWS	209
I. Of the Officers concerned in the administration of the Poor Laws	—
1. Poor Law Commissioners	—
2. Assistant Commissioners	212
3. Churchwardens and Overseers	213
4. Guardians of the Poor	215
5. Paid Officers	218
II. Of the Poor Rate	219
III. Of the Relief of the Poor	221
Maintenance of the Poor by their own Relations	223
Bastardy	225
Relief to Widows non-resident	—
Relief to Married Women and their Children	—
IV. Of Settlement	226
1. By Birth and Parentage	—
2. By Marriage	—
3. By Apprenticeship	—
4. By Estate	—
5. By Renting a Tenement, &c.	—
6. By Payment of Taxes	—
V. Of Removing the Poor	227

CHAP.

PAGE

VI. OF THE PEOPLE	227
1. Natural-born Subjects	—
2. Aliens	—
3. Denizens	228
VII. OF THE CLERGY	228
Archbishops	230
Bishops	—
Dean and Chapter	—
Archdeacons	231
Rural Deans	—
Ordinary, what	—
Parsons and Vicars	—
Curates	232
Lecturers	233
Of the Benefit of Clergy	—
Of Churches	235
Chancel	—
Aisle	—
Pews	—
Goods and Ornaments of Churches	236
Profanation of Churches	—
Churchyards and Burials	237
Churchwardens	238
Who are to be	—
Election	239
Their Interest in and Power over the Things of the Church	—
Duties	—
Parish Clerks	240
Sextons	—
Of Parish Vestries	—
Common Vestries	—
Select Vestries, and New Vestry Act	242
Vestry Clerk	244
Parish Beadle	245
VIII. OF DISSENTERS	245
Of a Dissenting Minister's Right to his Office	247
IX. OF THE MILITARY STATE	248
1. The Regular Army	—
2. Marines	250
3. Militia	—
X. OF THE MARITIME STATE	252
1. The Royal Navy	—
Impressing Seamen	—
Privileges of Seamen	253
Regulation of the Navy	254
Assaulting Seamen	—
Seamen's Pay	—
Letters of Attorney and Wills of Seamen	—
Illegally obtaining Pay or Prize Money	—
Widows' Pensions	—

CHAP.	PAGE
X. OF THE MARITIME STATE (continued)—
2. Merchant Ships and Seamen	255
Law of Navigation	—
What are British Ships	256
Master and Seamen	257
Registering of Ships	256
Owners of Ships	262
Part Owners	263
Of the Master and Mariners	264
Master's Authority	—
Conduct of Masters and Seamen	265
Hiring Seamen, and their Wages	266
Payment of Wages	267
Parish Apprentices for Sea	268
Of Pilots	—
Affreightment by Charterparty	268
Average	270
Stoppage in Transitu	—
Salvage	—
XI. OF MASTER AND SERVANT	271
1. Apprentices	—
Parish Apprentices	273
2. Servants in General	274
Giving Characters of Servants	275
3. Domestic or Menial Servants	—
Breakages	276
Clothes and Livery	—
4. Artificers, Labourers, Journeymen, and Workmen	—
Factory Children	277
XI.* OF PRINCIPAL AND AGENT	278
1. The Duties and Responsibilities of Agents	—
Agency, how created	—
Gratuitous	—
Factors and Brokers	279
Accounts between Principal and Agent	280
2. The Rights of Agents	289
Their Remuneration	—
Advances by them	282
Lien	—
3. The Agent's Authority; and the Obligation of Principals, in respect of their Agents' Acts, to Third Persons	—
XII. OF ATTORNEY AND CLIENT	286
Admission of Attorneys	—
Attorneys' Privileges	287
Duties	288
Lien	289
Professional Confidence	292

CHAP.	PAGE
XIII. OF BAILOR AND BAILEE, OR THE LAW OF BAILMENT .	293
1. Where the Property is deposited with Bailee for no particular purpose and without a recompence to him	—
2. Where for some particular purpose, without any recompence	—
3. Gratuitous Bailment, where Bailee is to have the use of the thing bailed	294
4. Bailment in Pledge or Pawn	—
5. For Hire or Work &c. to be bestowed on it, and both Bailor and Bailee are to receive benefit therefrom	—
By Letting to Hire	—
For Work or Care to be bestowed on thing bailed	—
Warehousemen and Wharfingers	295
Where Property is to be carried from place to place	296
XVI. OF COMMON CARRIERS, BY LAND AND BY SEA .	296
1. Who are deemed Common Carriers	—
2. Their Duties and Obligations	—
3. The Risks for which they are liable	297
4. The Commencement and Termination of the Risk	300
5. What will excuse or justify a Non-delivery of Goods	—
6. General Rights of Carriers	—
Rates of Cartage and Portorage in the City of London	301
7. Carriers of Passengers by Land and by Water	302
XV. OF INNKEEPERS .	304
XVI. OF HUSBAND AND WIFE .	307
I. Contracts to Marry, and the consequences of breaking them	—
II. Of the Marriage	308
III. Divorce	312
IV. Consequences of Marriage	313
1. Rights acquired by the Husband in the Property of the Wife, and his Power over it	—
As to Real Property	—
Leaschold	315
Personal	316
2. Wife's Right over the Husband's Property	318
Dower	—
Jointure	320
3. The Effects of Marriage upon the Acts and Agreements of Husband and Wife prior to Marriage, and the Husband's Liability in respect of them	321
4. The Disabilities of Coverture, and Exceptions thereto	—
Customs of London	322
Pin-Money	—
Gifts &c. to keep house	—
Paraphernalia	—
The Wife's Power to enjoy separate Estate	323
Separation of Husband and Wife	—
5. Effects of the Marriage as between Husband and Wife	324
XVII. OF PARENT AND CHILD .	325
I. LEGITIMATE CHILDREN	326
1. The Duties of Parents towards their Children	—
2. The Power of Parents over their Children	328
3. The Legal Duties of Children towards their Parents	331

CHAP.	PAGE
XVI. OF PARENT AND CHILD (continued)—
II. BASTARDS	331
1. Who are Bastards	—
2. The Duty of Parents towards their Illegitimate Children	—
3. The Rights and Incapacities of Bastards	335
XVIII. OF GUARDIAN AND WARD, AND OF INFANTS IN GENERAL	336
Infant's General Disabilities	337
XIX. OF IDIOTS AND LUNATICS	337
Their different kinds	—
Board of Visitors for better Care and Treatment of Lunatics	338
Houses for Reception of Lunatics	—
County Lunatic Asylums	340
XX. OF CORPORATIONS	340
XXI. OF FRIENDLY SOCIETIES	340
XXII. OF SAVINGS BANKS	342
XXIII. OF INSURANCE, AND INSURANCE COMPANIES	344
I. SEA INSURANCES	—
Who may insure	—
What may be insured	345
1. Quality of the Subject-matter of Insurance	—
2. Quantity and Amount of Interest	—
Different Kinds of Policies	346
Of the Voyage and Trade insured, and of Perils or Risks	—
Of the Insurer or Underwriter	347
The Policy of Insurance	348
II. INSURANCE ON LIVES	349
III. FIRE INSURANCES	351
XXIV. OF LANDLORD AND TENANT	352
I. The Nature of Leases in general	—
II. By whom Leases may be granted	353
III. To whom Leases may be made	355
IV. What may be the Subject of Leases	356
V. Tenancy from Year to Year	—
VI. Lodgings and Lodgers	—
VII. Estates at Will	357
VIII. Tenants at Sufferance	358
IX. Estate of Mortgagor in Possession	—
X. Estate of Cestuique Trust in Possession	359
XI. Rents	—
1. Generally	—
2. Different Kinds	—
3. Time when Rent is due, and how payable	360
4. Payment of Rent, and Excuses for Non-payment	—
5. In case of Damage by Fire—Covenants to Insure	—
6. Remedies to recover Rent	367
(a). By Distress	—
(b). Remedies otherwise than by Distress	368
XII. Taxes, Rates, and Assessments	—

CHAP.	PAGE
XXIII. OF LANDLORD AND TENANT (continued)—
XIII. Repairs and Cultivation	363
XIV. Fixtures	365
XV. Termination of the Tenancy	366
1. By Effluxion of Time	—
2. By Cancellation of the Instrument of Demise	—
3. By Surrender of the Term	367
4. By Merger in a larger Estate	—
5. By Forfeiture	—
6. By Notice to Quit	—
7. By Disclaimer	368
8. By Death	—
9. By Landlord's Seizure in case of Tenant's Desertion	—
XVI. Rights and Duties of the Parties at the End of the Tenancy, and Consequences of holding over	—
XXIV. OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR	371
Payment, how to be made; and Tender of Payment	372
Application of Payments	373
Presumption of Payment	374
Statutes of Limitation	375
Of the Discharge and Extinguishment of Debts by Release and other Modes besides Specific Payment	380
1. Release by the Creditor in his life-time	—
2. Release by Construction of the Will of the Creditor	382
3. Discharge of Debt by Construction of the Debtor's Will	384
4. By Set-off on the part of the Debtor	385
What Debts may be set-off	386
Of Fraudulent Conveyances and Settlements by Debtors	388
Of Arrangements between Debtors and Creditors	390
1. Compositions	391
2. Deeds of Trust	—
3. Letters of Licence	392
Of Liens	—
Of Stoppage in Transitu	394
Of Interest on Debts	396
Of the Priority of Debts	399
XXV. OF PRINCIPAL AND SURETY	401
Generally	—
How the Suretyship may be extinguished	403
Surety's Rights against his Principal and against the Creditor	406
Contributions between Co-Sureties	409
Liabilities and Discharge of Bail	410
XXVI. OF TRUSTEES AND CESTUIQUE TRUSTS	412
Generally	—
Who may be Trustees, and the Nature of different Trusts	413
Estate of Trustees	415
Estate and Interest of the Cestuique Trust	416
Duties and Powers of Trustees	418
Responsibilities of Trustees	419
Removal of Trustees	421

CHAF.	PAGE
XXVII. OF EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS	422
Generally	—
Distribution of an Intestate's Effects	424
Table to show the course of Distribution in case of Intestacy	427
Rules for the Guidance of Executors and Administrators	430
Remuneration to Executor or Administrator	435
XXVIII. OF PARTNERS	436
Contract of Partnership	437
Interest of Partners in the Partnership Property	440
How far the Acts of one Partner may bind the Firm	441
Legal Remedies between Partners	443
Equitable Remedies between Partners	444
Legal Remedies against Strangers	447
Legal Remedies against Partners	448
Equitable Relief against Partners	451
Causes of a Dissolution of Partnership	—
Consequences of a Dissolution of Partnership	453
By Death	456
XXIX. OF AMBASSADORS AND CONSULS	458
XXX. OF BARRISTERS	460
XXXI. OF PHYSICIANS, SURGEONS, AND APOTHECARIES	462
XXXII. OF PAWNBROKERS	474

BOOK II.—OF PROPERTY AND ITS INCIDENTS.

I. OF REAL PROPERTY; AND FIRST, OF CORPOREAL HEREDITAMENTS	481
Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments defined	—
Corporal Hereditaments	482
II. OF INCORPOREAL HEREDITAMENTS	483
1. Advowsons	—
2. Tithes	491
3. Commons	496
4. Right of Way	497
5. Offices	—
6. Franchises	498
III. OF TENURES	499
Socage	500
Frankalmoign	—
Copyholds	501
Ancient Demesne	503
Commutation of Manorial Rights, and Enfranchisement of Copyholds	—
IV. OF FREEHOLD ESTATES OF INHERITANCE	506
1. Estate in Fee Simple	—
2. Limited Fees	507
Base or Qualified Fees	—
Estates in Fee Tail	—

CONTENTS.

CHAP.		XV PAGE
V.	OF FREEHOLD ESTATES NOT OF INHERITANCE . . .	510
	1. Estate of Tenant in Tail after Possibility of Issue extinct . . .	511
	2. Estate for Life	—
	3. Estate pur Autre Vie	516
	4, 5, Estates of Dower and Jointure	—
	6. Estate by Curtesy	—
	7. Estate by Special Occupancy	517
VI.	OF ESTATES LESS THAN FREEHOLD	517
	1. Estates for Years	518
	2. Estates at Will, and by Sufferance	524
VII.	OF ESTATES ON CONDITION	524
	1. Mortgages	525
	Equity of Redemption	—
	2. Estates by Statute Merchant and Statute Staple	537
	3. Estate by Elegit	—
VIII.	OF ESTATES IN POSSESSION, REMAINDER, AND REVERSION	538
	1. Estate in Possession	—
	2. Estate in Remainder	—
	3. Estate in Reversion	541
IX.	OF ESTATES IN SEVERALTY, JOINT TENANCY, COPARCE- NARY, AND IN COMMON	541
	1. Estate in Severalty	—
	2. Estate in Joint Tenancy	—
	3. Estate in Coparcenary	542
	4. Estate of Tenant in Common	543
	5. Tenancy by Entireties	544
X.	OF TITLE TO REAL PROPERTY IN GENERAL	545
	1. Title by Possession	—
	2. Right of Possession	—
	3. Right of Property	—
	4. Right of Possession and Right of Property	546
	5. Limitation of Actions and Suits for Recovery of Real Property	—
XI.	OF TITLE BY DESCENT	555
XII.	OF TITLE BY PURCHASE	561
	1. Escheat	562
	2. Occupancy	564
	3. Prescription	565
	4. Forfeiture	567
	5. Title by Alienation	572
XIII.	OF ALIENATION BY DEED	573
	General Nature of Deeds	—
	Of the several Kinds of Deeds	575
	1. Feoffments	—
	2. Gifts	576
	3. Grants	—
	4. Leases	—
	5. Exchanges	—

XIII. OF ALIENATION BY DEED (continued)—
Of the several Kinds of Deeds (continued)—
6. Partitions	576
7. Releases	577
8. Confirmations	—
9. Surrenders	—
10. Assignments	—
11. Defeasances	578
Conveyances under the Statute of Uses	—
Of Uses and Trusts	—
Trusts for Accumulation	579
Perpetuities	580
Powers	—
12. Covenant to stand seised to Uses	581
13. Bargain and Sale	582
14. Lease and Release	—
Bonds or Obligations	583
Recognizances	584
XIV. OF ALIENATION BY MATTER OF RECORD	585
1. Private Acts of Parliament	—
2. Queen's Grants	—
3, 4. Fines and Recoveries	586
XV. OF ALIENATION BY CUSTOM	593
XVI. OF ALIENATION BY DEVISE	594
XVII. OF PERSONAL PROPERTY IN GENERAL	595
XVIII. OF TITLE TO THINGS PERSONAL: FIRST, BY OCCUPANCY	600
Of Copyright	—
International Copyright	611
Dramatic Representations, and Musical Compositions	—
Engravings, Prints, &c.	612
Sculpture, Models, and Casts	613
Designs for Ornamenting Articles of Manufacture	—
Of Patents for New Inventions	615
XIX. OF TITLE BY PREROGATIVE, FORFEITURE, AND CUSTOM	628
XX. OF TITLE BY SUCCESSION, MARRIAGE, AND JUDGMENT	630
XXI. OF GIFTS AND GRANTS	631
XXII. OF CONTRACTS	633
1. Of Contracts in general	—
Contracts of Record	—
Contracts under Seal, or Specialties	—
Simple Contracts	635
2. Of the Nature and Requisites of a Contract	—
The Consideration	636
3. Of the Construction of Agreements	641
4. Of Persons who are incompetent to contract	643
As to Competency of Parties to contract on behalf of others	646
5. Of Contracts not under Seal respecting Real Property	—

CHAP.	PAGE
XXII. OF CONTRACTS (continued)—
6. Of Contracts for the Sale and Exchange of Goods	648
The Statute of Frauds	650
As to Earnest	651
Of the Form of a Contract in Writing for the Sale of Goods	652
Fraudulent Sales	—
Remedies for Non-performance of Contract	654
Warranties upon the Sale of Goods	—
Upon the Sale of Horses	656
7. Of Guarantees and Indemnities	657
8. Of Contracts respecting Services and Works	658
9. Of Contracts for Hiring and Borrowing	659
10. Of Interest	—
11. Of Illegal Contracts	660
12. Of the Defences to Actions upon Simple Contract	666
Damages for Breach of Contract	671
Rules by which Courts of Equity are guided in decreeing Specific Performance	672
XXIII. OF BILLS OF EXCHANGE, PROMISSORY NOTES, &c.	673
1. Of Bills and Notes in general	—
2. Of the Parties to Bills of Exchange, &c.	676
3. Of the Form and Requisites of Bills of Exchange, &c.	678
Ambiguous Instruments	683
4. Of the Consideration	684
5. Of the Transfer and Indorsement of Bills and Notes	689
6. Of the Presentment for Acceptance	694
7. Of Acceptance	695
8. Of Presentment for Payment	698
9. Of Payment	701
10. Of Notice of Dishonour	703
11. Of Protest and Noting	710
12. Of Acceptance and Payment Supra Protest	711
13. Of Indulgence	712
14. How far a Bill or Note is considered as Payment	714
15. Of a Lost Bill or Note	715
16. Of Forgeries on Bills or Notes	716
17. Of the Alteration of a Bill or Note	717
18. Of the Remedy by Action on a Bill or Note	718
XXIV. OF WILLS AND TESTAMENTS, AND OF ADMINISTRATION	721
1. What a Will is, and the Form of it	—
2. Who may make a Will	722
3. What may be devised or bequeathed	724
4. To whom Devises or Bequests may be made	726
5. Of the Execution and Attestation of Wills	732
6. Of the Revocation and Republication of Wills	734
7. Of Lapsed Legacies	737
8. Of the Operation of the Residuary Clause, and of the Doctrine of Constructive Conversion	740
9. Of the Proof or Probate of Wills ; and herein of the Local Law by which Wills are regulated	741

CHAP.	PAGE
XXV. OF BANKRUPTCY	747
1. The Court of Bankruptcy, and the Officers connected with the administration of the Bankrupt Laws	748
2. Who may be made Bankrupt	757
3. Acts of Bankruptcy	759
By Members of Parliament	769
4. The Petitioning Creditor's Debt	770
5. Striking the Docket, and suing out the Fiat	774
6. Opening the Fiat, and declaring the Party Bankrupt	776
7. Seizure of the Bankrupt's Property by the Messenger	780
8. Proof of Debts	—
What Debts are proveable	—
Mode of Proof	789
Effect of Proof	790
9. The Choice and Appointment of Assignees	792
10. Appointment of Assignees, and what Property passes to them	795
Concealment and Discovery of Bankrupt's Property	802
How the Property is to be disposed of	—
11. Bankrupt's Surrender and Examination	803
Privilege from Arrest	807
12. Examination of other Persons relative to Bankrupt's Estate	808
13. The Certificate	809
Effect of the Certificate	811
14. The Dividend	813
Audit of Assignees' Accounts	—
15. The Bankrupt's Maintenance and Allowance	815
16. Of the Surplus of Bankrupt's Estate, and Interest upon Debts	816
17. Annulling the Fiat	817
Writ of Procecdendo	820
19. Fiats against Partners, and Joint Fiats	—
19. Costs and Fees	822
General Rules and Orders	825
XXVI. OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS: PROTECTION FROM PROCESS	837
I. Of Petition for Protection from Process	—
1. Who may petition	839
2. Insolvent's Petition, Schedule, &c.	—
3. Interim Order for Protection	844
4. Notice to Creditors	846
5. Examination of Insolvent	847
6. Final Order	850
7. Of the Assignees	853
8. Of the Property passing to the Assignees	854
9. Dividend, Proof of Debts &c.	857
10. Evidence of Proceedings, &c.	—
11. Fees, &c.	—
II. Of Compositions or Arrangements between Debtors and Creditors in the Court of Bankruptcy	858
XXVII. OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS: RELIEF FROM IMPRISONMENT	861
1. The Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors	—
2. Who are, and who are not entitled to petition	865
As to previous Insolvency or Bankruptcy	868
3. Petition of the Insolvent	868

CHAP.	PAGE
XXVII. RELIEF OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS (continued)—
4. Compulsory Process on the Petition of a Creditor or Creditors	870
5. Vesting Order and Provisional Assignee	871
6. Insolvent's Schedule, Balance Sheet, &c.	873
7. Order for Hearing, and Notice to Creditors	878
8. Discharge of Insolvent on Bail	881
9. Of the Assignees, and of the Property passing to them	882
10. Notice of Opposition, Inspection of Books, &c.	893
11. Hearing of the Insolvent, and Adjudication of the Court	894
12. The Insolvent's Discharge	900
13. Allowance to Insolvent	902
14. Rehearing, &c.	904
15. Future Property	—
17. Married Women	905
18. Prisoners of Unsound Mind	906
19. Costs and Fees	908
Table of Fees to be taken by Attorneys and Officers of Court	—
20. Rules and Orders	911

BOOK III.—OF PRIVATE INJURIES, AND THEIR REMEDIES.

I. OF THE PREVENTION OF INJURIES WITHOUT THE AID OF THE LAW OR ANY LEGAL PROCESS	913
1. Self-defence	914
Of the Person	—
Defence of Personal Property	916
Defence of Real Property	—
2. Defence by Relatives and others	919
3. Apprehension of Wrong-doers	920
4. Resistance to Illegal Process	922
5. Recaption	923
6. Removal of Injuries by Abatement	925
7. Distresses and Seizures	926
II. OF THE PREVENTION OF INJURIES BY LEGAL AUTHORITY	928
1. Imprisonment of a Lunatic	—
2. Prevention of Injuries by Application to a Magistrate, &c.	—
3. Sureties to keep the Peace	929
4. Relief from Imprisonment by Habeas Corpus	931
5. Preventive Remedies by Application to the Superior Courts	933
Writ of Injunction	934
Writ of Ne Exeat Regno	936
Bills to Perpetuate Testimony	—
III. OF REMEDIES TO COMPEL SPECIFIC RELIEF OR PERFORMANCE	937
1. Writ of Mandamus	—
2. Bills for Specific Performance	940
IV. OF REFERENCES TO ARBITRATION	947
1. Preliminary Observations	948
When a Reference is proper	—
Who may refer	949

IV. OF REFERENCES TO ARBITRATION (continued)—

Distinction between References at Common Law and under the Statutes	949
Who to be Arbitrators	952
II. The Practice and Law of Arbitration	—
1. Terms of the Submission	—
2. Affidavit of the Execution of Agreement or Deed of Reference	953
3. Making the Submission a Rule of Court	—
4. Appointment of Umpire	—
5. The Meetings, and securing the punctual Attendance of Parties	954
6. Enlargement of the Time	—
7. Proceedings before the Arbitrator or Umpire	955
8. Enforcing the Attendance of Witnesses and the Production of Documents	—
9. Swearing the Witnesses	—
10. Examination of Witnesses	—
11. Mode of taking the Evidence	956
12. Revocations in Fact or Law	—
13. The Award	—
14. Fees	957
15. Setting aside Awards	—
16. Proceedings to enforce Performance of an Award	958
V. OF SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES	959
I. Recent Enactments on the subject	960
1. Common Assaults and Batteries	—
2. Taking of Personal Property, Trees, Fences, &c.	961
3. Small Wilful or Malicious Injuries	962
4. Trespasses in pursuit of Game	963
II. Practical Proceedings	964
1. Within what Time the Information must be exhibited	—
2. Who may prosecute	—
3. Against whom	—
4. Before what Justices	965
5. The Information or Complaint	—
6. Oath or Deposition after Information and before Summons	—
7. The Summons	966
8. Service of the Summons	967
9. Of the Warrant to apprehend an Offender	—
10. Of a Search Warrant	—
11. Of Securing Evidence and the Attendance of Witnesses	968
12. The Hearing	—
13. The Evidence	—
14. Decision of the Justices	970
15. The Conviction	971
16. Costs	972
17. Defects in Convictions	—
18. Appeal to Sessions	974
19. Certiorari	975
20. Liability of Complainant or Informer	—
21. Liabilities of Justices	976
VI. OF COURTS IN GENERAL, AND THEIR SEVERAL KINDS	977

CHAP.

PAGE

VII. OF THE SUPERIOR COURTS OF COMMON LAW	981
I. THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH	982
Its Jurisdiction over Civil matters	—
Formal Actions	—
Summary Jurisdiction	983
Proceedings in furtherance of the Court's own Jurisdiction	986
In Aid or Restraint of the Jurisdiction of other Courts	989
Writ of Prohibition	—
As a Court of Error or Appeal from Inferior Courts	—
Writ of False Judgment	—
Jurisdiction over Criminal and Public Matters	990
Quo Warranto	992
Writs of Certiorari and of Error	—
II. THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS	994
III. THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS	995
The Terms	1001
Return of Writs	—
Sittings of the Court in Banc	1002
Practice or Bail Court	1003
Business before a Judge at Chambers	1004
Trials at Nisi Prius on the Circuits	1005
Sittings at Nisi Prius for London and Middlesex	1006
Trials before the Sheriff	1007
Recent Improvements in the Practice of the Courts	1008
VIII. OF ACTIONS, THEIR SEVERAL KINDS, AND THE VARIOUS INJURIES TO WHICH EACH IS APPLICABLE	1009
I. PERSONAL ACTIONS	1010
1. Assumpsit	—
2. Debt	1015
3. Covenant	1017
4. Detinue	1018
5. Annuity	1020
6. Account	—
7. Scire Facias	—
8. Trespass Vi et Armis	—
9. Case	1025
10. Trover	1033
11. Replevin	1034
II. REAL AND MIXED ACTIONS	1036
1. Writ of Right of Dower	—
2. Dower	1037
3. Quare Impedit	—
4. Ejectment	—
IX. OF THE INFERIOR COURTS OF LAW, PARTICULARLY THE NEW COUNTY COURTS	1041
Courts Baron	—
Hundred Courts	1042
County Courts	—

IX. OF THE INFERIOR COURTS (continued)—

Borough Courts	1043
Courts of Conscience	1044
Palace Court	—
THE NEW COUNTY COURTS	1045

X. OF COURTS OF EQUITY 1065

HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY	—
Lord Chancellor	—
Master of the Rolls	1069
Vice Chancellor	1070

XI. OF THE PROCEEDINGS IN A SUIT IN CHANCERY . 1076

1. Of Filing a Bill	—
2. Of the Defendant's Appearance	1081
3. Of Compelling an Answer, and taking a Bill pro Confesso	1083
4. Of the Defence to a Bill	1086
5. Exceptions to Defendant's Answer	1091
6. Of Amending the Bill	1093
7. Of a Supplemental Bill, Bill of Revivor, &c.	1095
8. Of the Dismissal of a Bill	1097
9. Replication	1098
10. Rejoinder	—
11. Examination of Witnesses	1099
12. Motions and Petitions	1104
13. Setting down a Cause for Hearing	—
14. Proceedings in the Master's Office	1106
15. Issue—Special Case	1108
16. Setting down a Cause for further Directions	1109
17. Execution of Decrees and Orders	1110
18. Costs	1111
19. Rehearings, Appeals, and Bills of Review	1112
20. Appeal to the House of Lords	—

XII. OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS 1113

I. Private Injuries cognizable in the Ecclesiastical Courts	—
1. Causes Pecuniary	—
2. Matrimonial Causes	1114
3. Testamentary Causes	1115
4. Suits for Defamation	1116
5. Suits for Disturbance	1117
II. Public Matters cognizable by the Ecclesiastical Courts	1118
1. Church Rates	—
2. Jurisdiction over Ecclesiastical Officers	—
3. Offences of a Spiritual Nature	1119
III Course of Proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts	1120
IV. The Ecclesiastical Courts	—
1. The Archdeacon's Court	1121
2. The Consistory or Diocesan Court	—
3. The Court of Peculiars	—
4. The Court of Arches	1122
5. The Prerogative Court	—

CHAP.	PAGE
XIII. OF THE ADMIRALTY AND PRIZE COURTS	1124
I. The Admiralty Court	—
1. Its Jurisdiction as to Torts	1125
2. Its Jurisdiction in cases of Contract	1127
3. Course of Proceedings	—
II. The Prize Court	1130
XIV. OF COURTS OF ERROR AND APPEAL	1131
I. The Court of Exchequer Chamber	—
II. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council	1133
III. The House of Lords	1134

BOOK IV.—OF CRIMES, AND THEIR PUNISHMENTS.

I. OF CRIMES IN GENERAL.—PRINCIPALS AND ACCESSORIES	1137
II. OF OFFENCES AGAINST GOD AND RELIGION	1141
1. Blasphemy	—
2. Reviling the Established Church	1145
3. Nonconformity	—
4. Profane Swearing and Cursing	1143
5. Religious Imposture	—
6. Simony	1144
7. Sabbath-Breaking	—
III. OF OFFENCES AGAINST THE LAW OF NATIONS	1145
1. Violation of Safe Conducts or Passports	—
2. Infringements of the Rights of Ambassadors	—
3. Piracy	—
4. Carrying Persons away as Slaves	1146
IV. OF TREASON AND OTHER OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON OF THE QUEEN	1147
V. OF OFFENCES INJURIOUS TO THE ROYAL PREROGATIVE OR AFFECTING THE GOVERNMENT	1150
1. Offences relating to the Coin	—
2. Serving Foreign States	1152
3. Desertion from the Queen's Armies	1153
4. Inciting to Mutiny	—
5. Destroying or Embezzling the Queen's Armour or Stores	—
6. Destroying the Marks on Queen's Stores, or Using the Marks without authority	—
7. Mal-administration of Public Trusts	—
8. Præmunire	1154
9. Concealing of Treasure Trove	1155
10. Contempts against the Queen's Prerogative	—
11. Contempts and Misprisions against the Queen's Person or Government	—
12. Contempts against the Queen's Title	—
13. Refusing or Neglecting to take the Oaths of Allegiance, &c.	1157
14. Contempts against the Queen's Courts of Justice	—
15. Selling Public Offices	—
16. Administering Unlawful Oaths, and of Unlawful Societies	—

VI. OF OFFENCES AGAINST PUBLIC JUSTICE . . . 1159

1. Stealing or Obliterating Records . . . —
2. Falsifying Proceedings in a Court of Judicature . . . —
3. Obstructing the Execution of Legal Process . . . —
4. Escape from Criminal Process . . . 1160
5. Breach of Prison by the Party imprisoned . . . —
6. Rescue . . . —
7. Returning from Transportation . . . —
8. Taking a Reward under pretence of helping the Owner to his Stolen Property . . . —
9. Advertising Reward for the Return of Stolen Property . . 1161
10. Compounding of Felonies and Informations on Penal Statutes . —
11. Common Barretry . . . 1162
12. Maintenance . . . —
13. Champerty . . . —
14. Conspiracy . . . —
15. Accusing or Threatening to Accuse of an Infamous Crime with intent to Extort Money . . . —
16. Perjury and Subornation of Perjury . . . 1163
17. Bribery . . . 1165
18. Embracery . . . —
19. Negligence of Officers of Justice . . . —
20. Oppression by Judges and Magistrates . . . —
21. Extortion . . . —
22. Not obeying the Orders of a Magistrate . . . —

VII. OF OFFENCES AGAINST THE PUBLIC PEACE . . . 1165

1. Riotous Assemblies . . . —
2. Demolishing Buildings or Machinery . . . —
3. Sending Threatening Letters . . . —
4. Affrays . . . 1166
5. Riots, Routs, and Unlawful Assemblies . . . —
6. Tumultuous Petitioning . . . 1167
7. Forcible Entry and Detainer of Lands . . . —
8. Riding or Going Armed with dangerous or unusual weapons 1168
9. Spreading False News . . . —
10. False and Pretended Prophecies with intent to disturb the Peace —
11. Challenges to Fight . . . 1169
12. Libels . . . —

VIII. OF OFFENCES AGAINST PUBLIC TRADE . . . 1170

1. Smuggling . . . 1170
2. Frauds under the Bankrupt Laws . . . 1171
3. Usury . . . —
4. Cheating . . . —
5. Forestalling the Market . . . 1172
6. Regrating . . . —
7. Engrossing . . . —
8. Monopolies . . . —
9. Unlawful Interference with Journeymen or Manufacturers 1173
10. Assaults to the Obstruction of Trade . . . —

IX. OF OFFENCES AGAINST THE PUBLIC HEALTH AND THE PUBLIC POLICE OR ECONOMY . . . 1173

1. Offences against the Quarantine Acts	1173
2. Selling Unwholesome Provisions	1174
3. Clandestine or Irregular Marriages	—
4. Bigamy	1175
5. Common Nuisances	—
6. Vagrancy	1177
8. Gaming	1180
9. Drunkenness	1186
10. Lewdness	—
11. Cruelty to Animals	—
12. Refusing to Serve an Office	1188
13. Taking up Dead Bodies	—
14. Offences relating to Game	—

X. OF HOMICIDE 1193

1. Manslaughter	1195
2. Murder	1196
3. Suicide	1199

XI. OF OTHER OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON . . . 1199

1. Attempts to Murder	—
2. Stabbing, Cutting, or Wounding, with intent to Maim or Disfigure	1200
3. Sending Explosive Substances, or Throwing Destructive Matter	—
4. Attempting to procure Abortion	1201
5. Concealing the Birth of a Child by secreting its Dead Body	—
6. Unnatural Offences	—
7. Rape	1202
8. Carnally Abusing Female Children	—
9. Forcible Abduction of Heiresses or Women of Property	—
10. Abduction of Girls	1203
11. Child Stealing	—
12. Kidnapping	—
13. Assaults, Batteries, and Wounding	1204
14. Setting Spring Guns, &c.	1205
15. Injuries by Wanton and Furious Driving &c.	1206

XII. OF OFFENCES AGAINST THE HABITATIONS OF INDIVIDUALS 1206

1. Arson	—
2. Maliciously Setting Houses &c. on Fire, with intent to Injure or Defraud &c.	1207
3. Setting Fire to a Dwelling-house, any Person being therein	—
4. Fires by the Negligence of Servants	—
5. Burglary	1208
6. House-breaking	1209
7. Breaking and Entering a Detached Building within the Curtilage, and Stealing therein	—

CHAP.	PAGE
XIII. OF LARCENY AND OTHER OFFENCES AGAINST PROPERTY	1210
I. Of Larcenies, &c.	1211
1. Simple Larceny	—
2. Stealing Valuable Securities	1212
3. Robbery	—
4. Sending Threatening Letters, or Accusing, with intent to Extort Property	1214
5. Stealing in a Dwelling-house to the value of Five Pounds	—
6. Stealing in a Dwelling-house, with Menaces or Threats	—
7. Sacrilege	—
8. Shop-Breaking	1215
9. Stealing Goods in Process of Manufacture	—
10. Stealing Goods from a Vessel in a Port, River, Canal, &c., or from a Dock, &c.	—
11. Plundering Wrecks	—
12. Stealing or Obliterating Records &c.	1216
13. Stealing or Concealing Wills	—
14. Stealing Documents of Title	—
15. Stealing Cattle, or Killing them with intent to Steal	1217
16. Offences as to Deer	—
17. Taking Hares or Conies in Warrens &c.	1218
18. Stealing Dogs, Beasts, Birds, &c.	1219
19. Taking Pigeons	—
20. Taking Fish	—
21. Stealing Oysters	1220
22. Stealing Ores &c. in Mines	—
23. Stealing Trees &c.	—
24. Stealing Fences, Stiles, Gates, &c.	1221
25. Stealing Plants, Fruits, &c.	—
26. Stealing Fixtures	1222
27. Depredations by Tenants and Lodgers	—
28. Stealing by Clerks and Servants	—
29. Embezzlement by Clerks and Servants	—
30. Embezzlement by Agents	1223
31. Obtaining Money by False Pretences	—
32. Receiving Stolen Property, knowing it to have been stolen	1224
II. Of Malicious Injuries to Property	1225
33. Setting Fire to Churches, Houses, &c.	—
34. Destroying Silk &c. in the Loom, or the Machinery	—
35. Destroying Threshing Machines, or Machines employed in Manufactures	—
36. Setting Fire to Coal Mines	1226
37. Drowning Mines, or Filling up Shafts	—
38. Destroying Engines &c. used in Mines	—
39. Demolishing Churches, Houses, &c. by Riotous Assemblies	—
40. Setting Fire to or Destroying Ships	—
41. Damaging Ships otherwise than by Fire	1227
42. Exhibiting False Signals to Ships, and Offences as to Ships, Goods, and Persons Wrecked	—
43. Destroying Sea Banks &c., and Offences as to Navigable Rivers and Canals	1228
44. Injuring Public Bridges	—

CHAP.	PAGE
XIII. OF OFFENCES AGAINST PROPERTY (continued)—
45. Destroying Turnpike Gates and Toll Houses	1228
46. Destroying Fish Ponds, Mill Ponds, &c.	1229
47. Killing or Wounding Cattle	—
48. Setting Fire to Stacks of Corn, Straw, Hay, Wood, &c.	—
49. Setting Fire to Crops of Corn &c., Woods, Heath, &c.	—
50. Destroying Hop-binds	—
51. Damaging Trees, &c.	—
52. Destroying Plants, Fruits, &c.	1230
53. Destroying Fences, Walls, Stiles, or Gates	1231
54. Malicious Damage in general	—
55. Injuries to Works of Art in Public Museums, &c.	—
56. Injuries to Person or Property by Fire or Explosive Substances.	1232
XIV. OF FORGERY	1232
1. Forging the Seals, &c.	1235
2. Forging Exchequer Bills, Bank Notes, Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes, &c.	—
3. Forging Wills	—
4. Making False Entries in the Bank Books &c.	1236
5. Forging Transfers of Stock, &c.	—
6. Forging Powers of Attorney to transfer Stock or receive Dividends	—
7. Transferring Stock by means of False Personation	—
8. False Personation	1237
9. Forging the Attestation to Powers for transferring Stock or receiving Dividends	—
10. Making False Dividend Warrants	—
11. Forging Deeds, Court Rolls, Receipts, Orders, &c.	—
12. Fraudulently acknowledging Recognizances	—
13. Having in possession Forged Bank Notes &c.	1238
14. Having in possession Frames or Moulds for making Bank Paper	—
15. Engraving Plates &c. for Bank Notes &c.	—
16. Forging &c. the Plates or Paper of other Bankers	1239
17. Forgeries as to Registers of Baptisms, Marriages, or Burials, and Marriage Licences	—
18. Other Forgeries	1240
XV. OF COURTS OF CRIMINAL JURISDICTION	1241
1. The High Court of Parliament	—
2. The Court of the Lord High Steward	1242
3. The Court of Queen's Bench	—
4. The Court of Chivalry	1243
5. The High Court of Admiralty	—
6, 7. The Courts of Oyer and Terminer, and of General Gaol Delivery, at the Assizes	1244
8. The Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace	1245
9. The Sheriff's Tourn, and the Court Leet or View of Frank Pledge	1247
10. The Court of the Coroner	1248
11. The Court of the Clerk of the Market	1249
12. The Courts of the Universities	—
XVI. OF SUMMARY CONVICTIONS	1250

CHAP.	PAGE
XVII. OF ARREST	1251
1. Arrest by Warrant	—
2. Arrest by Officers without Warrant	1253
3. Arrest by Private Persons without Warrant	—
4. Arrest upon Hue and Cry	1254
5. Rewards for the Apprehension of Offenders	1255
XVIII. OF COMMITMENT AND BAIL	1256
XIX. OF THE SEVERAL MODES OF PROSECUTION	1258
1. By Presentment	—
2. By Indictment	1259
3. By Information	1261
XX. OF PROCESS	1263
1. On Indictment	—
2. On Information	1264
XXI. OF CERTIORARI	1265
XXII. OF ARRAIGNMENT	1266
XXIII. OF PLEA AND ISSUE	1268
1. Plea to the Jurisdiction	—
2. Demurrer	—
3. Plea in Abatement	1269
4. Special Plea in Bar	1270
XXIV. OF TRIAL AND CONVICTION	1272
1. Trial by Peers	—
2. Trial by Jury	—
Evidence	1277
Prosecutors' and Witnesses' Expences, &c.	1282
Restitution of Property	1283
Consequences of Conviction	1284
New Trial	—
XXV. OF JUDGMENT AND ITS CONSEQUENCES	1284
Arrest of Judgment	—
Passing Sentence	1286
Benefit of Clergy	1287
Solitary Confinement	1288
Attainder—Forfeiture	—
Transportation	1289
Other Punishments	1291
Recording Judgment	1292
XXVI. OF REVERSAL OF JUDGMENT	—
XXVII. OF REPRIEVE AND PARDON	1293
XXVIII. OF EXECUTION	1295
APPENDIX :—FORMS AND PRECEDENTS	1297
Leases, Assignments, Agreements, Notices to Quit, &c.	1298
Bills of Sale	1307
Bonds	1308
Articles of Copartnership	1309
Wills and Codicils	1310

THE COMMERCIAL AND GENERAL
LAWYER.

INTRODUCTION.

DIVISION OF THE LAW OF ENGLAND INTO COMMON LAW AND STATUTE LAW.—OF THE COUNTRIES SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF ENGLAND.—
ECCLESIASTICAL AND CIVIL DIVISIONS OF ENGLAND.

THE term law has been defined, comprehensively, as “a rule of action,” and in this view has been considered applicable to action of all kinds, animate or inanimate, rational or irrational. Thus we say, the laws of motion, of gravitation, of mechanics, as well as the laws of nature and of nations. But this is too general a definition as well as application of the term; for it is evident, that when applied to the action of natural agents, which cannot but conform to the necessary condition of their existence, it means nothing more than is expressed by the words quality, property, or influence, and that it loses its essentially inherent ideas of free agency and accountability. In strictness, therefore, the term may be confined to the rules of voluntary or intellectual action, or, in other words, to the precepts dictated by competent authority for the government of man; in which sense it will be found sufficiently comprehensive, including laws both human and divine, of which may be enumerated, 1. The law of nature; 2. The revealed law of God; 3. The law of nations; and 4. The municipal or civil law. Dismissing the consideration of the three first-mentioned kinds, we shall observe, that municipal or civil law is that which is instituted for the government of the component members of the same body politic, and is properly described as “a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state.”¹ This it is to which we apply the term law, in ordinary discourse, simply and without addition; we need scarcely add, that it is the municipal or civil law of England that forms the subject of the following pages.

¹ Blac. Com. Introd. § 2.

The municipal law of England consists of two kinds: the unwritten or COMMON LAW, and the written or STATUTE LAW.

1. COMMON LAW.—When we speak of unwritten laws, it is not to be understood that these laws are at this time merely oral, or that they have been communicated from former ages to the present solely by word of mouth; they are termed unwritten because their original institution and authority are not set down in writing, as acts of parliament are, but they receive their binding power, and the force of laws by long and immemorial usage, and by their universal reception throughout the kingdom. It is true, indeed, that, in the profound ignorance of letters which formerly overspread the whole western world, all laws were entirely traditional, because the nations among which they prevailed had little idea of letters. But with us at present the muniments and evidences of our legal customs are contained in the records of the several courts of justice, in books of reports and judicial decisions, and in the treatises of learned sages of the profession, preserved and handed down to us from times of remote antiquity.¹

This unwritten or common law is distinguishable into three kinds. It includes—1. General customs, which are the general rule of the whole kingdom, and form the common law in its stricter and more usual signification; 2. Particular customs, which affect the inhabitants of particular districts only; and 3. Certain particular laws, which are by custom adopted and used only in some particular courts.

1. General Customs, or the common law proper, form that system by which proceedings and determinations in the ordinary courts of justice are guided and directed. This, for the most part, settles the course by which lands descend by inheritance; the manner and form of acquiring and transferring property; the solemnities and obligations of contracts; the rule of expounding wills, deeds, and acts of parliament; the respective remedies for civil injuries; the several species of temporal offences, with the manner and degree of their punishment; and an infinite number of minute particulars, which diffuse themselves as extensively as the ordinary distribution of common justice requires. These customs are ascertained, and their validity determined, by the judges in the several courts of justice, who are the depositories of the laws, the living oracles who must resolve all cases of doubt, and who are bound by oath to decide according to the law of the land. Their knowledge of that law is derived from experience and study, and from having been long personally acquainted with the decisions of their predecessors. Indeed, these judicial decisions are the principal and most authoritative evidence that can be given of the existence of such a custom as shall form a part of the common law. The judgment itself, and all the proceedings previous thereto, are carefully registered and preserved, under the name of records, in public repositories set apart for the purpose; and to them recourse is had, when any critical question arises, in the determination of which former precedents may give light or assistance. For it is an established rule to abide by former precedents where the same points come again into litigation, as well to keep the scale of justice even and steady, as also because the law having been solemnly declared and determined, that which was before uncertain, and perhaps indifferent, is now become a permanent rule. Yet this rule admits of exception, when the former determination is evidently contrary to reason; though even in such cases the judges do not pretend to make a new law, but to vindicate the old one from misrepresentation, and it is declared, not that the former sentence was a bad law, but that it was not law, that is, it is not the established custom of the realm, as had been erroneously determined.

¹ See History of the Common Law, by Sir Matthew Hale.

The decisions of the courts are not only preserved as authentic records in the treasuries of the several courts, but are published in the numerous volumes of reports. These reports are in brief what the records are at large, which records they serve as indexes to, and also to explain. Reports are extant in a regular series from the reign of Edward II. inclusive; and from his time to that of Henry VIII. they were taken by the prothonotaries of the court at the expence of the crown, and published annually, whence they received the appellation of "Year Books."

2. The second branch of the unwritten law consists of particular customs, or laws which obtain only in particular districts. These customs, or some of them at least, are doubtless the remains of a multitude of local customs, out of which the common law was originally collected by Alfred, and afterwards by Edgar and Edward the Confessor. Each district mutually sacrificed some of its own special usages, in order that the whole kingdom might enjoy the benefit of one uniform system of laws; but, for reasons that are now probably forgotten, particular counties, cities, towns, manors, and lordships, were indulged with the privilege of abiding by their own customs, in contradistinction to the rest of the nation; which privilege is confirmed to them by several acts of parliament.

Gavelkind is one of those particular customs, which still obtains in Kent and some other parts of England, and probably was pretty general before the Norman Conquest. It was abolished in Ireland in the year 1604. This custom ordains that not the eldest son only, but all the sons alike, shall succeed to the inheritance of the father; that though the ancestor is attainted and hanged, yet the heir shall succeed to his estates, without any escheat to the lord. Such, likewise is the custom of borough English, prevailing in divers ancient boroughs, that the youngest son shall inherit the estate in preference to his elder brothers. Such also is the custom in others, that a widow shall be entitled for dower to all her husband's lands, whereas at the common law she is entitled to one-third part only. Such also are the special customs of manors binding copyhold and customary tenants. Such is the custom of holding divers inferior courts in cities and trading towns, the right of holding which, where no royal grant can be shown, depends on usage. Such also are many particular customs within the city of London with regard to trade, apprentices, widows, orphans, and a variety of other matters. All these depend on special usage, though the customs of London are also confirmed by act of parliament. To this head may be referred the lex mercatoria, or law merchant, which, however different from the common law, is yet engrafted into it, and allowed for the benefit of trade to be of validity in all commercial transactions, it being a maxim of the law, that "cuiuslibet credendum est in sua arte."

The rules relating to particular customs regard, 1. The proof of their existence; 2. Their legality, when proved; and 3. Their usual method of allowance.

As to gavelkind and borough English, the law takes particular notice of them, and there is no occasion to prove that such customs actually exist, but only that the lands in question are subject thereto. All other private customs must be particularly pleaded, and as well the existence of the custom must be shown, as that the thing in dispute is within the custom alleged. The trial in both cases is by jury, unless the custom has been before tried, determined, and recorded in the same court. If, however, a custom of London be brought into question, its existence is determined, not by a jury, but by a certificate from the lord mayor and aldermen by the mouth of their recorder; unless it be such a custom as the corporation itself is interested in, when the law does not permit them to certify in their own behalf.

When a custom is proved to exist, there are several things requisite to establish its legality, or to make it a good custom. It must have been used immemorially; that is, it must be so ancient that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. If any one can show the beginning of it within legal memory (that is, since the beginning of the reign of Richard I.), it is not a good custom. It must have been continued, or have had the undisputed right to have been continued; for an interruption of the right will destroy it, though not an interruption of the possession. It must have been peaceably acquiesced in, and not subject to contention or dispute. It must be reasonable, or rather, it must not be unreasonable. It must also be certain and compulsory, and not left to any man's option whether he will use it or not. And lastly, customs must be consistent with each other, for opposite customs relating to the same object cannot be of equal antiquity.

As to the allowance of customs, it must be observed, first, that all customs in derogation of the common law are construed most strictly; and secondly, that all special customs yield to the crown's prerogative. Thus, by the custom of gavelkind, a person aged fifteen may, by deed of feoffment, convey away his lands in fee-simple for ever, but he cannot at that age convey them by any other deed, or even make a lease for seven years. And if the king purchase lands of the nature of gavelkind, where all the sons inherit equally, yet on his demise his eldest son alone shall succeed to those lands.

3. The third branch of the common law are those peculiar laws which by custom are adopted and used only in certain courts and jurisdictions; namely, the civil and canon laws. By the civil law is generally understood the civil or municipal law of the Roman empire, as comprised in the Institutes, the Code, and the Digests of the Emperor Justinian, and the Novel Constitutions of himself and some of his successors. By the canon law is meant a body of Roman ecclesiastical law relative to such matters as that church either had or pretended to have the proper jurisdiction over.

There are four species of courts in which the civil and canon laws, under certain restrictions, are permitted to be used; viz. 1. The Ecclesiastical Courts; 2. The Military Courts; 3. The Courts of Admiralty; and 4. The Courts of the two Universities. In all these courts their reception in general, and the different degrees of that reception, are grounded upon custom, corroborated in the instance of the university courts by acts of parliament. With respect to all, however, it is to be remarked, that the courts of common law have superintendence and controul over them; that the common law has reserved to itself the exposition of all such acts of parliament as concern either the extent of the courts or the matters depending before them; and lastly, that an appeal lies from them to the crown in the last resort.

II. STATUTE LAW.—The written or statute law consists of statutes or acts of parliament, of which the oldest extant is Magna Carta, as confirmed in parliament in the 9th of Henry III.; though, doubtless, there were many acts of parliament before that time, the records of which are now lost, and the determinations of them are perhaps at present currently received for the maxims of the old common law. The method of enacting these statutes we shall show hereafter; at present we shall notice—1. The different kinds of them; and 2. The general rules for their construction.

1. Of acts of parliament, some are public or general, of which the courts of law are bound to take notice judicially, without their being specially pleaded; and others are special or private, which require to be specially pleaded. A private act, however, if once recognised by a public act, must afterwards be noticed as a public act by the courts. Public acts, again, are of two kinds. There are public general acts, which relate to the whole community or the kingdom at large, and which alone, in common parlance, are generally signified by the term public acts. There are others, however, which, applying only to particular places, are local or private in their application, but containing a clause declaratory of their being public acts, enjoy the privilege of such in not being required to be specially pleaded. These are termed public local acts, but are distinguished from the former or public general acts, by being separately classed and numbered.

Statutes also are either declaratory or remedial. Declaratory, when, for avoiding doubts and difficulties, they declare what the common law is and ever hath been; and remedial, when made to supply such defects, or abridge such superfluities in the common law, as arise either from the general imperfection of all human laws, from change of time and circumstances, or from any other cause; and this being done either by enlarging the common law where it was too narrow and circumscribed, or by restraining it where it was too lax, hath occasioned a farther division of remedial acts into enlarging and restraining statutes.

2. The principal rules to be observed in the construction of statutes are the following:—

In construing remedial acts, regard must be had to three points—the old law, the mischief, and the remedy; and it is the business of the judge, in general, so to construe the act as not to extend the remedy beyond the mischief which the act was intended to suppress. For instance, at common law, spiritual persons were empowered to grant leases, which, however long or unreasonable, were good. But as such persons often abused their power to the impoverishment of their successors, the restraining statute of 13 Eliz. c. 10 remedied the mischief by rendering void all leases made by such persons for a longer term than twenty-one years or three lives. If, however, a bishop lets a lease for a longer term, the judges, in the construction of this act, will hold that such lease is good during the bishop's continuance in his see; because the mischief which the act was intended to remedy, namely, the impoverishing of the successor, is sufficiently suppressed by avoiding it at the determination of the grantor's interest, and the commencement of that of the successor.

Again, a statute which treats of things and persons of an inferior rank cannot by any general words be extended to those of a superior. Thus, a statute treating of "deans, prebendaries, vicars, and others having spiritual promotion," is held not to extend to bishops.

Penal statutes must be construed strictly; but statutes against frauds are to be liberally and beneficially expounded. This may seem a contradiction, as most statutes against frauds are penal in their consequences. But this distinction is to be taken: where the statute acts upon the offender, and inflicts a penalty, it is then to be taken strictly; but when it acts upon the offence by setting aside the fraud, it is to be construed liberally.

One part of a statute must be so construed by another, that the whole may, if possible, stand; but a saving totally repugnant to the body of the act is void. If the common law and a statute differ, the common law gives place to the statute; and an old statute gives place to a new one. But if a statute that repeals another be itself repealed, the first statute is thereby revived, without any formal words for that purpose, unless the repealing act contains a clause to the contrary. Acts of parliament derogatory to the power of subsequent parliaments bind not. And lastly, acts of parliament that are impossible to be performed are of no validity.

These are the several groundworks of the law of England; over and above which, equity is frequently called in to assist, to moderate, and to explain them. Courts of equity are therefore established in order to supply the defects of the common law; and for this purpose they assume the power of enforcing the principles upon which the ordinary courts also decide, where the powers of those courts, or their modes of proceeding, are insufficient for the purpose, and also of deciding on principles of universal justice, where the interference of a court of judicature is necessary to prevent a wrong, but the positive law (as in the case of trusts) is silent. These courts, however, are only conversant in matters of property; for in criminal cases the freedom of our constitution will not entrust a power to any judge of construing the law otherwise than according to the letter. This protects public liberty without bearing hard upon individuals. The law cannot inflict a penalty beyond what the letter will warrant; but when the letter induces any hardship, the crown has power to pardon.

OF THE COUNTRIES SUBJECT TO THE LAWS OF ENGLAND.

The kingdom of England, over which our municipal laws have jurisdiction, includes not, by the common law, either Wales, Scotland, or Ireland, or any other part of the king's dominions; that is to say, it includes only the territory of England. Yet the laws and local customs of this country do now obtain, more or less, in these and many other adjacent countries, of which it will be proper first to take a review before we consider the kingdom of England itself, the original and proper subject of these laws.

Wales continued for many centuries independent of England; but in the reign of Edward I., the blood of its ancient sovereigns being extinguished, the territory of Wales was formally annexed to the crown of England. The statute of 12 Edw. I. adapted the Welsh laws and forms of judicial procedure to the English standard; but the Welsh were still suffered to retain much of their original polity, particularly their rule of inheritance, that lands were equally divisible among the issue male. In 1535, however, the 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26 gave the finishing stroke to their independence, at the same time that it advanced their civil prosperity, by admitting them to a thorough communication of laws with the subjects of England. This statute enacted, that the dominion of Wales shall be for ever united to the kingdom of England; that all Welchmen born shall have the same liberties as others the king's subjects; that lands in Wales shall be inheritable according to the English tenures and rules of descent; that the laws of England, and no other, shall be used in Wales; with many other provisions with regard to the regulation of the police of this ancient principality. The 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 26 confirmed the above statute with additions, divided the principality into shires, and reduced it into the order in which it has almost ever since continued, differing only from the kingdom of England in a few particulars, such as having courts within itself independent of the process of those at Westminster. But even this trifling distinction is at length removed; for by the 1 Wm. IV. c. 70, its separate judicature is abolished, two additional circuits are formed for the administration of justice in that country, and Wales is now in every respect assimilated to and may be considered an integral part of this kingdom.

Scotland continued a distinct kingdom from England for more than a century after the union of the two crowns in the person of James I. The union of the two kingdoms was not accomplished till the sixth year of Queen Anne, when the parliaments of both kingdoms agreed to twenty-five articles of union, the purport of the most considerable of which was, That on the 1st May, 1707, and for ever after, the kingdoms of England and Scotland should be united into one, by the name of Great Britain; that the succession to the monarchy should be the same as before settled with regard to that of England; that the united kingdom should be represented by one parliament; that there should be a communication of all rights and privileges between the subjects of both kingdoms, except where it was otherwise agreed; that the coin, weights and measures, and the laws relating to trade, customs, and the excise, should be the same as in England; that sixteen peers should be chosen to represent the peerage of Scotland in parliament, and forty-five members to sit in the House of Commons. Besides these articles, which were ratified and confirmed by the 5 Anne, c. 8, the preservation of the two churches of England and Scotland in the same state they were in at the time of the union, and the continuance of the municipal laws of Scotland, except as they might be altered by parliament, were declared to be "fundamental and essential articles of the union." As but little alteration has since been made by parliament in the municipal law of Scotland, which is chiefly founded on the civil law, it remains, so far as it is unaltered, in full force, and the law of England, generally speaking, has no force or validity there. Acts of parliament, however, extend to that country, and also to Ireland, unless their operation is particularly restricted by express words with regard to either or both of those countries.

The town of Berwick-upon-Tweed was originally part of the kingdom of Scotland. After having been many times alternately in the hands of the English and of the Scots, it was at length reduced into the possession of the crown of England by Edward I. It received a charter from that prince, and was confirmed in all its privileges and customs by the legislature in the reigns of Edward IV. and James I. Although, therefore, it has some local peculiarities derived from the law of Scotland, it is clearly a part of the realm of England, being represented by burgesses in the House of Commons, and bound by all the acts of parliament of the United Kingdom, whether specially named or otherwise. And though certain of the queen's writs do not usually run into Berwick, yet all prerogative writs (as those of mandamus, prohibition, habeas corpus, certiorari) may issue to Berwick as well as to every other of the dominions of the crown; and local matters arising in Berwick may be tried by a jury of the county of Northumberland.

Ireland was formerly governed by kings of its own, till conquered by Henry II., who, as well as his successors, were styled lords of Ireland. In the 33 Henry VIII. it was erected into a kingdom, and the title of king of Ireland was conferred upon that sovereign and his successors. But, as Scotland and England, though united, differ in their municipal laws, so Ireland and England, though distinct kingdoms, and possessing till recently separate legislatures, in general agree in their laws. For the English colonists transplanted into Ireland after its conquest by Henry II. introduced there the same laws under which they were born and bred; a privilege conceded to them by the conqueror, and confirmed by the charters of John and Henry III. Although, however, the laws of England were received and sworn to by the Irish nation assembled at the council of Lismore, yet the Irish continued for centuries after to be governed by their Brehon law (so styled from the Irish name of judges, who were denominated Brehons); and it was not till the reign of James I. that this Brehon law was finally abolished, and that of England actually and effectually extended to the inhabitants of Ireland at large. It is to be observed also, that as Ireland was a distinct dominion, with a parliament of its own, although, subsequent to its conquest, the common law of England was the rule of justice within the English pale, yet no acts of the English parliament, as such, extended to or were in force there.

The original method of passing statutes in Ireland was nearly the same as in England, the chief governor holding parliaments at pleasure, which enacted what laws they thought proper. But an ill use being made of this liberty, a set of statutes were enacted in the tenth year of Henry VII., Sir Edward Poynings being then lord deputy (from whence they are called Poynings' laws), by which it was provided, that, before summoning a parliament, the lieutenant and Irish council should certify to the king under the great seal of Ireland the causes thereof, and the articles of the acts proposed to be passed therein. But the delay occasioned by sending over the heads of bills to the British ministry before they could pass into a law created much inconvenience; and that evil, with some others, turned the thoughts of the English cabinet to an union of the two countries. This great political measure was completed in the year 1800; and by the 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 57 of the English parliament, and the 40 Geo. III. c. 38 of the Irish parliament, it was provided, that the two kingdoms should, from the 1st January, 1801, and for ever after, be united into one kingdom, by the name of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, to be represented in one and the same parliament; that the succession to the crown should continue limited and settled as at present; that the representation of Ireland in parliament should consist of four lords spiritual of Ireland, sitting by rotation of sessions, and twenty-eight lords temporal of Ireland, elected for life by the peers of Ireland, to sit and vote in the House of Lords; and that one hundred commoners be the number to sit and vote in the House of Commons on the part of Ireland (since increased, by the Reform Act, to 105); and that any peer of Ireland may be elected to sit in the House of Commons, unless previously elected to sit in the House of Lords. It is further provided, that the churches of England and Ireland should be united into one protestant episcopal church, and the church of Scotland remain as formerly established; that the subjects of Ireland shall have the same privileges as the subjects of Great Britain; that all laws in force at the time of the union, and all courts of jurisdiction within the respective kingdoms, should remain, subject to such alterations as might appear proper to the united parliament; and that writs of error and appeals, before determinable by the Irish House of Lords, should thenceforward be determined by the House of Lords of the United Kingdom.

The Isle of Man is a distinct territory from England, and not governed by our laws; neither does any act of parliament extend to it, unless particularly named therein, and then it is binding there. This island was formerly subject to the kings of Norway; then to John and Henry III. of England; and afterwards to the kings of Scotland. It was conquered from the Scots by Montacute, earl of Sarum, to whom Edward III. gave the title of king of Man. It continued in the possession of the earls of Derby for many centuries, under the title of the lordship of Man, and at length fell by inheritance to the duke of Athol in 1735, of whom it was purchased for 70,000*l.* and annexed to the crown of England in 1765, and subjected to the regulations of the British excise and customs. Though the title of king had been long disused, the earls of Derby, as lords of Man, had maintained a sort of royal authority therein, by assenting or dissenting to laws, and exercising an appellate jurisdiction. Yet, though no English writ or process from the courts at Westminster was of any authority in Man, an appeal always lay from the lord of Man to the king of Great Britain in council.

The islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Sark, Alderney, and their appendages, formerly belonged to the duchy of Normandy, and were united to the crown of England by the first princes of the Norman line. They are governed by their own laws, being mostly the ducal customs of Normandy, and are not bound by acts of the British parliament, unless specially named therein. The queen's writ is of no force there; but her commission is.¹ All causes are determined by their own officers, the bailiffs and jurats of the island; but an appeal lies to the queen in council.

Besides these, our colonies in more distant parts are also, in some respects, subject to the laws of England. Colonies are of three sorts: they are such by right of occupancy, of conquest, or of cession by treaty. When an uninhabited country is discovered and peopled by English subjects, English laws, which are the birthright of every subject, are immediately in force there; though this is to be understood with some restrictions. But in conquered or ceded countries that have already laws of their own, although the queen may change those laws, yet till she does so they remain in force. The common law of England, therefore, has no authority in such countries, they being distinct, though dependent dominions; and they are not bound by any act of parliament, unless specially named therein. The form of government in most of our colonies is similar to that of England. They have a governor, named by the queen, who is her representative or deputy. They have courts of justice of their own, from whose decisions an appeal lies to the queen in council here in England.

We come now to consider the kingdom of England, the direct and immediate subject of the laws treated of in the following pages, and which includes not only Wales and the town of Berwick, as we have already noticed, but also part of the sea. The main or high seas are a part of this realm, for thereon the courts of admiralty have jurisdiction, though they are not subject to the common law. The main sea begins at low water mark. But between the high and the low water mark, where the sea ebbs and flows, the common law and the admiralty have an alternate jurisdiction—the latter, upon the water when it is full sea; and the former, upon the land, when it is ebb.

ECCLESIASTICAL AND CIVIL DIVISIONS OF ENGLAND.

England is divided—1. Ecclesiastically; and 2. Civilly.

1. The ECCLESIASTICAL division is primarily into two provinces, Canterbury and York. A province is the circuit of an archbishop's jurisdiction. Each province contains divers dioceses, or sees of suffragan bishops; of which Canterbury includes twenty, and York four, besides the bishopric of the Isle of Man, which was annexed to the province of York by Henry VIII. Every diocese is divided into archdeaconries, whereof there are sixty in all; and each archdeaconry into rural deaneries, which are the circuits of the archdeacon's and rural dean's jurisdictions; and every deanery is divided into parishes.

A parish is the circuit of ground committed to the charge of one parson, vicar, or minister, having cure of souls therein; of which districts there are nearly 10,000 in England. The exact period of the division of the kingdom into parishes is uncertain; it most probably took place gradually. It would seem that the boundaries of parishes were origin-among other things for want of jurisdiction, Lord Denman observed, that it was now admitted that a habeas corpus ad subjiciendum issued out of that court would enforce obedience in the island of Jersey. Q. B. Hil. T. 1845.

¹ But in the case of Carus Wilson, imprisoned by the Royal Court of Jersey for contempt of court, a writ of habeas corpus having been issued out of the Court of Queen's Bench, and a rule obtained to show cause why it should not be set aside,

ally ascertained by those of manors, since a manor seldom extends over more parishes than one, though often many manors are in one parish. The lords of manors built churches on their demesnes to accommodate their tenants in one or two adjoining lordships, and, to secure service therein, obliged their tenants to appropriate their tithes to the one officiating minister; and this tract of land, the tithes whereof were so appropriated, formed a distinct parish, the patronage whereof became thus vested in the lord. This will account for the frequent intermixture of parishes; for if a lord had a parcel of land detached from his main estate, but not sufficient to form a parish of itself, he would naturally endow his newly erected church with the tithes of such parcel, especially if no church was then built in any lordship adjoining it. Still, however, some lands, either as belonging to irreligious or careless owners, or as situated in desert places, or for other now inscrutable reasons, were never united to any parish, and continue to this day extra-parochial, and their tithes by immemorial custom are payable to the queen, not to the bishop, in trust that she will bestow them for the general good of the church. Yet, by the 17 Geo. II. c. 37, extra-parochial waste and marsh lands, when improved and drained, are to be assessed to all parochial rates in the parish next adjoining.

The settling of the bounds of parishes depends upon immemorial custom; and care is, or ought to be taken, by annual perambulations, to ascertain and preserve them. In times of popery these necessary excursions were accompanied with great abuses of feastings and superstitious processions. And it is even now usual for the parishioners on such occasions to call for refreshments at the houses of certain persons in the boundaries; but no claim of this nature can be made as of right, the custom having been declared to be against law and reason.

2. The civil division of England is into counties, hundreds, and tithings or towns. This division is said to owe its original to king Alfred, who, to prevent the rapine and disorder which formerly prevailed in the realm, instituted tithings, so called because originally consisting of ten freeholders with their families, who were sureties to the king for the good behaviour of each other, and, if any offence were committed among them, were bound to have the offender forthcoming. A tithing-man, headborough, or horsholder (that is, borough's elder), was annually appointed to preside over the tithing.

The terms tithing, town, or vill, have the same signification in law. Town or vill, indeed, has become a generic term, comprehending the several species of cities, boroughs, and common towns. A city is a town incorporate which is or has been a bishop's see. A borough is a town, whether corporate or not, which sends burgesses to parliament. There are other towns which are neither cities nor boroughs, some of which have the privilege of markets, and others not, but in either case they are equally towns in law. To many of them are appendages called hamlets, which are sometimes under the same administration as the town itself, and in other cases are governed by officers of their own; in the latter case, they are, for some purposes, in law regarded as distinct townships. Towns, it is most probable, originally contained but one parish and one tithing; but now many are divided into separate parishes and tithings, and sometimes there are two or more vill or tithings in one parish.

As ten families of freeholders made up a tithing, so ten tithings composed a hundred. The hundred is governed by a high constable or bailiff, and formerly there was a hundred court for the trial of causes; but these are now fallen into disuse. In some of the northern counties, the hundreds are called wapentakes, because, it is said, the people at the hundred courts were accustomed to touch the weapon or lance of the bailiff or constable of the hundred with their weapons or lances, in token of union.

A county, or shire, is a district made up of an indefinite number of hundreds. Shire is a Saxon word, signifying a division; but county, comitatus, is plainly derived from comes, the count of the Franks, that is, the earl or alderman (as the Saxons called him) of the shire, to whom the government of it was entrusted. This he usually exercised by his deputy, still called in Latin vice-comes, and in English sheriff or shire-reeve, signifying the officer of the shire, upon whom the civil administration of it is now totally devolved. In some counties there is an intermediate division between the shire and hundred, as lathes in Kent, and rapes in Sussex; and there were formerly lathe-reeves and rape-reeves, subordinate to the shire-reeve. When a county was divided into three of these intermediate jurisdictions, they were called trithings, an instance of which still exists in the county of York, where by an easy corruption the term has been converted into ridings. There are at present forty counties in England, and twelve in Wales.

The counties of Chester, Durham, and Lancaster, are counties palatine, so called a palatio, because the owners thereof, the earl of Chester, the bishop of Durham, and the duke of Lancaster, had in these counties jura regalia as fully as the king in his palace. They might pardon treasons, murders, and felonies; they appointed judges and justices; writs ran in their name; and offences were said to be done against their peace. None of these jurisdictions, however, now remain in the hands of a subject. The earldom of Chester was united to the crown by Henry III., and has ever since given title to the king's eldest son. By various acts of parliament the inheritance to the duchy of Lancaster is vested in the crown. And by the 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 19, the palatine jurisdiction was separated from the bishopric of Durham, and transferred to the crown as a separate franchise and royalty.

The Isle of Ely was not a county palatine, but a royal franchise; the bishop having, by grant of Henry I., jura regalia within the same, whereby he exercised jurisdiction over all causes, as well criminal as civil. These rights, however, have been abrogated, and the Isle of Ely is now merged in the county of Cambridge in so far as the administration of justice is concerned.

Counties corporate are certain cities and towns to which, out of special grace and favour, the kings of England have granted the privilege to be counties of themselves, and to be governed by their own sheriffs and magistrates, so that no officer of the county at large within which they are locally situate have any power to intermeddle therein. These are the cities of London, York, Bristol, Norwich, Worcester, Canterbury, Chester, Coventry, Exeter, Gloucester, Litchfield, and Lincoln, and the five towns of Kingston upon Hull, Nottingham, Newcastle upon Tyne, Poole, and Southampton.

BOOK I.

OF THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF PERSONS.

As municipal law is "a rule of civil conduct, commanding what is right, and prohibiting what is wrong," it follows that the principal objects of the laws of England, as of every other political community, are RIGHTS, which those laws are framed to assert, and WRONGS, which they are calculated to prevent, or, if committed, to redress or punish.

Rights may be divided into two classes: 1. RIGHTS OF PERSONS, of which private property is not the direct immediate subject; and 2. Those rights of which private property is the direct immediate subject, and which may be entitled, for distinction's sake, the RIGHTS OF THINGS.

Wrongs also, considered as objects of the laws of England, are divisible into PRIVATE and PUBLIC wrongs. Those wrongs or injuries, in respect of which the law provides for the relief of the party injured by civil action, are termed PRIVATE WRONGS, or civil injuries; while those in respect of which the law provides for the punishment of the wrong-doer by indictment, at the prosecution of the crown, are termed PUBLIC WRONGS, crimes, or misdemeanors.

RIGHTS OF PERSONS, therefore, are the subject of our first consideration, including the various means of acquiring and losing them.

The rights of persons comprise those due from as well as those due to them, or rights and duties in the popular acceptation of the terms; and under the term persons we include natural persons, as a man's own self, and artificial, as corporations or bodies politic.

The rights and duties of individuals may be considered either as absolute or relative. The former class, or absolute rights, are such as concern them merely as individuals, independently of any condition with which they may be invested, or relation in which they may be placed with regard to other individuals; relative rights are those which belong to them as members of society, and standing in various relations to each other.

The ABSOLUTE rights of man, considered merely as a rational free agent, are usually summed up in the term natural liberty; which consists properly in a power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint, except from the law of nature. But a state of civil society necessarily implies a surrender from its members of part of this natural liberty; and every man, on entering into such society, in consideration of receiving the advantages of mutual commerce and intercourse obliges himself to conform to those laws which the community has thought fit to establish. The absolute rights of individuals, therefore, considered as members of society (in which point of view only it is our province to consider them), may be included in the terms civil and political liberty. Civil liberty consists in the subjection of individuals to every human law which does, and their exemption from every such law which does not conduce and contribute to the general welfare. Political liberty is made up of constitutional security that laws of public utility, and none other, shall be enacted; and that every individual shall have the full benefit of such laws. Civil and political liberty are blessings which the members of every state, commonwealth, or nation, are entitled to enjoy, as considerations for the sacrifice of their natural liberty, but which are enjoyed in the greatest perfection by the people of this country.

The absolute rights, then, of Englishmen, or, as they are usually called, their liberties, which are secured to them by the constitution and laws, may be reduced to these three heads: 1. The right of personal security; 2. The right of personal liberty; and 3. The right of property.

1. The right of personal security consists in a person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation.

The laws which assert and protect these rights will be the subject of future discussion, as in other places incidentally, so in particular when we come to treat of their infringement under the heads of private and public wrongs. We shall here merely observe, that the constitution of England is a stranger to any arbitrary power of killing or maiming the subject without the express warrant of law. Not only by Magna Carta, but by many subsequent statutes it is expressly enacted, that no man shall forfeit life or member without being brought to answer by due process of law. So also the preservation of a man's health and reputation are provided for by the law, as without these it is impossible to have the perfect enjoyment of any other right.

2. The personal liberty of the subject is strictly a natural right, and one that cannot be guarded with too great watchfulness; for if once the magistrate be left to imprison arbitrarily whom he chooses, there will soon be an end of all other rights and privileges. The language of the Great Charter is, "That no freeman shall be taken or imprisoned but by the lawful judgment of his equals, or by the law of the land." If any Englishman is deprived of his personal liberty by the arm of power, or the decree of an illegal court, the 16 Car. I. c. 10 enacts, that he shall, upon demand of his counsel, have a writ of habeas corpus to bring his body before the Court of King's Bench or Common Pleas, who shall determine whether the cause of his commitment be just, and thereupon do as to justice shall appertain. And by 31 Car. II. c. 2, commonly called the Habeas Corpus act, the methods of obtaining this writ are so plainly pointed out and enforced, that while this statute remains in force, no subject of England can be long detained in prison, except in those cases in which the law requires and justifies such detainer. Any judge who shall deny a writ of habeas corpus forfeits 500*l.* to the party aggrieved; and lest the act should be evaded by demanding unreasonable bail or sureties, it is declared by 1 W & M. st. 2, c. 2, that unreasonable bail shall not be required.

By these acts, and the judicial regulations founded upon them, the remedy is now complete for removing the injury of illegal confinement. No subject of the realm can be kept in confinement, by any power or under any pretence whatever, if he can find means to convey his case to either of the courts at Westminster, or during vacation to any judge of the same, unless such confinement be pronounced, by the court or judge applied to, to be legal.

To make imprisonment lawful, it must be either by process from the courts of judicature, or by warrant from some legal officer having authority to commit to prison; which warrant must be in writing under the hand and seal of the magistrate, and express the cause of commitment, in order to be examined into, if necessary, upon a habeas corpus; for if there be no cause expressed, the gaoler is not bound to detain the prisoner. Circumstances may sometimes arise which render it necessary, for the safety of the state, to suspend the Habeas Corpus act for a limited time; but the legislature only can authorize the executive power to imprison suspected persons without assigning any cause.

The crown may, by its prerogative, prevent any person going abroad by issuing the writ ne exeat regno, as this may be sometimes for the safety of the state; but it cannot send any subject out of the kingdom against his will, excepting sailors and soldiers, the nature of whose employment necessarily implies an exception. A man cannot even be constituted lord lieutenant of Ireland, nor made a foreign ambassador, against his consent.

3. The third absolute right of Englishmen is that of property, which consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of one's acquisitions, without control or diminution, save only by the laws of the land. So great is the regard of the law for private property, that it will not authorize the least violation of it. In instances where the property of an individual is necessary to be obtained for the accommodation of the public, as in the case of enlarging or turning highways &c., all that the legislature does is to oblige the owner to alienate his possessions for a reasonable price; and even this is an exertion of power indulged with caution, and which none but the legislature, or those acting under its immediate direction, can perform. No subject can be constrained to pay any aids or taxes, even for the defence of the realm or the support of the government, but such as are imposed by his own consent or that of his representatives in parliament. By many statutes, and lastly by the Bill of Rights, 1 W. & M. st. 2, c. 1, it is declared, that levying money for or to the use of the crown by pretence of prerogative, without grant of parliament, or for longer time or in other manner than the same is granted, is illegal.

It is unnecessary to pursue this subject any farther in this place, as the protection afforded by the law to these rights will more clearly appear in those parts of the work which treat of the wrongs that injure or detract from them.

It would be in vain, however, that these rights were declared and asserted by the mere letter of the law, if the constitution had provided no means for securing their actual enjoyment. There are, therefore, certain other auxiliary and subordinate privileges of the subject, which may be termed his political rights or liberties, to enable him to maintain the three principal rights of personal security, personal liberty, and private property. These are—

1. The constitution, powers, and privileges of parliament.

2. The limitation of the crown's prerogative by bounds so certain and notorious that it is impossible it should either be mistaken or exceeded, without the consent of the people.

3. The independence of the judiciary power, with the right of every Englishman of applying to the courts of justice for redress of injuries.

4. The right of petitioning the crown or either house of parliament for the redress of grievances, in cases of any uncommon injury or infringement of the rights before mentioned, which the ordinary course of law is too defective to redress. This right appertains to every individual; and the only restrictions placed upon it, while they are intended to promote the spirit of peace, are no check upon that of liberty, care only being taken lest, under pretence of petitioning, riot and tumult ensue, as at the opening of parliament in 1640. The 13 Car. II. st. 1, c. 5, therefore provides, that no petition to the king or either house of parliament, for alteration in matters of church or state, shall be signed by more than twenty persons, unless the matter thereof be approved by three justices or the major part of the grand jury in the country, or in London by the lord mayor, aldermen, and common council; nor shall any petition be presented by more than ten persons at a time. Under these regulations the subject has a right to petition; and commitments or prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal.

Thus far of the absolute rights of persons, considering them merely as individuals, without reference to any condition or relation in which they may be placed. Their RELATIVE rights and duties, or those which belong to them as standing in various relations to each other, embrace a much wider and more extensive field, and are either of a public or private nature. The most universal public relation is that of government. We shall therefore first consider the rights and duties of individuals with reference to their political condition or relation, as governors and governed, or magistrates and people; and afterwards with regard to the more private relations of society, as masters and servants, husbands and wives, parents and children, guardians and wards, executors, administrators, trustees, &c., and a variety of others, each of which will form a subject for separate consideration.

CHAPTER I.

Of the Parliament.

THE origin, and even the derivation of the name, of parliament are quite uncertain.

1. How and when assembled.—Parliament is summoned by the queen's writ or letter issued out of chancery by advice of the privy council, at least forty days before it begins to sit¹ (extended to fifty days by uniform practice since the Union); and without the queen's authority it cannot meet.² But when the parliament is sitting, and a vacancy occurs in the representation of any particular place, the speaker, and not the chancellor, issues his writ for filling it up.³

In case of the demise of the crown between the dissolution of parliament and the day appointed for the assembling of a new one, the last preceding parliament shall meet and continue for six months, unless sooner prorogued or dissolved by the successor; and in case of the crown's demise on or after the day of the assembling of a new parliament, such new one shall continue to sit, subject to the will of the successor, as above stated.⁴ The queen may also issue her proclamation for the meeting of parliament in fourteen days from the date thereof, notwithstanding a previous adjournment to a longer day.⁵

The crown is bound, if need be, to convoke a parliament every year, that is, to allow some parliament, not necessarily a new one, to meet thus often for the purposes of business.⁶

2. How constituted.—The parliament consists of the queen's majesty; the lords spiritual and temporal, who form the House of Lords; and the commons, or representatives of the people, styled the House of Commons. Unless at their coming together the queen, as their head, meets them, either in person or by her commissioners, there can be no beginning of a parliament. So also the queen alone has authority to dissolve it. This constitution forms a balance of power and of interest in the state; each of the three estates being able to check any encroachment upon their order by either of the other two, and to propose such laws as are adapted to their peculiar benefit. Yet the power of the crown consists rather in the liberty of rejecting than resolving or proposing any matter, as the crown cannot of itself begin any alteration in the established law, but may approve or disapprove of the alterations proposed by the other two branches of the legislature.

Of the QUEEN'S majesty we shall have occasion to treat further hereafter.

The HOUSE OF LORDS consists of the lords spiritual and temporal.

The Lords Spiritual consist of two archbishops and twenty-four bishops; and, by the act of Union with Ireland,⁷ four Irish lords spi-

¹ 7 & 8 Wm. III. c. 25.

² Chit. jun. Prerog. of Crown, 68.

³ 24 Geo. III. c. 26; Male, 21—23.

⁴ 7 & 8 Wm. III. c. 15; 6 Ann. c. 7.

⁵ 37 Geo. III. c. 127, and 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 14.

⁶ 4 Ed. III. c. 14, and 26 Ed. III. c. 10.

⁷ 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 67.

ritual are added. Though the lords spiritual are in the eye of the law a distinct estate from the lords temporal, yet in practice, to all intents and purposes, they are blended together as one estate.

The Lords Temporal consist of all the peers of the realm,—dukes, marquesses, earls, viscounts, and barons. Some sit by descent, as do all ancient peers; some by creation, as all new-made ones; and others by election, as the sixteen Scotch and twenty-eight Irish peers. The number of peers is indefinite, and may be increased by the crown at any time.

The HOUSE OF COMMONS, speaking theoretically, consists of all such men of property in the kingdom as have not seats in the House of Lords, that is to say, every such man is supposed to sit there either by himself or by his representative.

Every member, though chosen by a particular district, when elected, acts for the whole realm; for the end of his coming thither is not particular, but general,—not barely to advantage his particular constituents, but the common weal, and to advise her majesty upon the affairs of church and state; and therefore he is not bound to consult with and take advice of his constituents upon any particular point, unless he himself think it proper so to do.

These are the three estates of parliament; and, to pass any law, the consent of all three is absolutely necessary.

3. The Laws and Customs relating to Parliament collectively.—Its powers are sovereign, and its authority uncontrollable, in making, confirming, enlarging, restraining, abrogating, repealing, reviving, and expounding of laws concerning matters of all possible denominations, ecclesiastical or temporal, civil, military, maritime, or criminal.

Members of either house, to be qualified, must be twenty-one years of age.¹ They must also take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration,² except Roman Catholics, for whom another oath is provided by the 10 Geo. IV. c. 7 (the Roman Catholics Relief Act). Quakers may be admitted on their affirmation.³ Formerly, in addition to the aforementioned oaths, members of either house were required to repeat and subscribe the declaration against transubstantiation, the invocation of saints, and the sacrifice of the mass: these forms, however, were abolished by the 10 Geo. IV. c. 7.

Aliens, though naturalized, cannot sit in parliament;⁴ and any one may be adjudged incapable, though created a peer or chosen a member of the House of Commons, upon complaint and proof of any crime.

Inter se, the two houses have this maxim, that every matter which arises concerning either house of parliament in particular ought to be examined, discussed, and adjudged in that house to which it relates, and not elsewhere. The commons have no power to interfere in set-

¹ This is expressly declared with regard to the House of Commons by statute 7 & 8 Wm. III. c. 25.

² 30 Car. II. st. 3, c. 1. The oath of allegiance was settled according to its present form by 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 13; that of supremacy, by 1 W. & M. st. 1, c. 8; and that of abjuration by 6 Geo. III. c. 53. Until the 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 9, the oaths of allegiance and supremacy were required to be taken by members of the House of Commons before the lord steward or his deputy as well as in the body of the house; but now they are taken in the house only.

³ Mr. Pease's case, House of Commons, March, 1833.

⁴ 12 & 13 Wm. III. c. 2.

ting the election of a Scotch peer, nor the Lords in the election of a burghess. Nor have the subordinate courts power in either case.¹

The privileges of parliament are indefinite, lest, it is said, some new case should be devised by the executive, not within the line of privilege, to harass a member or violate the freedom of parliament. The most prominent ones are privilege of speech (which is confined to speeches in the House, for to publish one tending to calumniate any person may be the subject of a suit or indictment²), and privilege of person from arrest; but this does not extend to indictable offences.³ Formerly their servants, lands, and goods were likewise privileged, but that protection is done away with.⁴ By the common law, peers and peeresses of England, and by statute those of Scotland and Ireland, are privileged from arrest.⁵ But by the statutes 12 W. III. c. 3, 2 & 3 Ann. c. 18, 11 Geo. II. c. 24, and 10 Geo. III. c. 50, most of their other ancient personal privileges are abolished; and by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, members are liable to the bankrupt laws. It seems, however, a privilege of the House of Commons, in those cases where the arrest of a member is justifiable, to have information of such arrest communicated to them by their speaker.

Having thus noticed the most essential particulars relating to the parliament collectively, it remains to treat of each house separately.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

The House of Lords has a right to be attended by the judges, queen's counsel, masters in chancery, the secretary of state, and attorney and solicitor-general. A peer may give his vote by proxy under licence from the queen, which is always presumed; and he may enter his protest against any vote by leave of the house.⁶ All bills affecting the peerage must, by custom, take their rise in the House of Lords, and suffer no alteration in the Commons.

Peers are created either by writ or patent. The creation by writ, or the queen's letter, is a summons to attend the House of Peers by the style and title of the barony which the crown is pleased to confer; that by patent is a royal grant to the subject of any dignity and degree of peerage, as baron or viscount.

When a peer of the realm is newly created, he is introduced into the House of Peers by two lords of the same rank in their robes, Garter king at arms going before, and his lordship presents his writ of summons &c. to the lord chancellor, which being read and the oaths being taken, he is conducted to his place. Lords by descent are introduced with the same ceremony, the presenting of the writ excepted. The mode of election of the sixteen peers of Scotland is regulated by the 6 Ann. c. 23.

It is the privilege of a peer, independent of his capacity as a member of parliament and hereditary counsellor of the crown, that in all cases of treason and felony and misprision of the same he shall be tried by

¹ 8 T. R. 314; 14 East. 110; 3 Bar. & A. 420; 2 Chit. R. 207; 1 Salk. 505; 2 Ld. Raym. 1114.

² Rex v. Creevy, 1 M. & S. 273; Rex v. Abingdon, 1 Esp. 226; 1 Saund. 133.

³ 1 Chitty's Bla. Com. 167.

⁴ 10 Geo. III. c. 50.

⁵ See 1 Ch. Bla. Com. 165, n. 23, 24.

⁶ Id. 168, n. 28, 29, 30.

his peers; but in misdemeanors, as libels, riots, perjury, and conspiracies, he is tried, like a commoner, by a jury. This privilege, it is said, does not extend to bishops. Peeresses also (whether in their own right or by marriage) are to be tried before the same judicature as peers of the realm. 20 Hen. VI. c. 9. Although a peer or peeress (whether in her own right or by marriage) cannot be arrested in civil cases, yet their goods may be taken in execution. They have also many peculiar privileges annexed to their peerage in the course of judicial proceedings. A peer sitting in judgment does not give his verdict upon oath like a commoner, but upon his honour; he also answers bills in chancery upon his honour, and not upon his oath. But when he is summoned as a witness, either in civil or criminal cases, he must be sworn. In criminal trials, on arraignment he is not required, like other culprits, to hold up his hand. He cannot be outlawed in civil actions, nor his house searched by the sheriff without the authority of the queen's special warrant. He is privileged to sit on the bench in courts of justice, and to give his opinion to the judge. He is exempt from civil offices, but may exercise the power of a justice of peace in any part of the kingdom where he happens to be present.

Besides its legislative functions, the House of Lords has judicial duties. It is a court of justice, constituting the highest tribunal in the country, and one before which the final appeal in any matter is to be tried. We shall have occasion to consider it more fully in this view hereafter.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The peculiar laws &c. of the House of Commons relate principally to the raising of taxes and the elections of members.

It is a privilege of this house, that all grants of subsidies or parliamentary aids or taxes begin here, in the same manner as a bill touching the peerage does in the Lords.

With regard to the ELECTIONS of members, we must consider, first, Who may be elected; secondly, Who are the electors; and thirdly, The proceedings at elections.

I. WHO ARE, AND WHO ARE NOT, CAPABLE OF BEING ELECTED MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT.

No rank is now necessary to qualify a party to sit as member, though formerly otherwise. But county members must have a clear yearly income of 600*l.*, and those for cities and boroughs of 300*l.*, free from all incumbrance; which, before the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 48, was required to arise from real property, but now, by that act, may accrue from either real or personal estate, or from both conjointly; and in which the member must have at least either a life interest (for his own or some other person's life) or an interest for a term of years of which not less than thirteen are unexpired at the time of his election.¹ But the eldest son of a peer or lord of parliament, or of a Scotch peer, or of a peeress, or of a bishop, or of any person qualified for a knight of the shire, and the members for the universities, do not require such qualification by estate.

¹ Of the nature and particulars of his qualification the member is required to deliver in a statement to the clerk at the table of the House of Commons, at the same time making and subscribing a declaration of its truth, before he can sit or vote, on pain of rendering his election void; and if the same

be untrue in any material particular, he is guilty of a misdemeanor. Every candidate at an election, also, may be called on, at the instance of any other candidate, or of any two duly registered electors, to make a similar declaration. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 48.

Minors, aliens, denizens, naturalized persons, deaf and dumb, idiots and madmen, persons attainted of treason or felony, outlaws, peers (except Irish peers, by the act of union), and the judges, are ineligible; but the master of the rolls, and the judges of the inferior courts, unless restrained by their appointment, are eligible. The attorney-general was not, but now is, eligible. The eldest sons of Scotch peers cannot sit for places in Scotland. No person having been ordained priest or deacon, or being a minister of the church of Scotland, or a Catholic priest, is eligible.

Scotch judges, commissioners of revenue, of the Navy or Victualling office, pensioners of the crown, and several other public officers of that class, are ineligible; but any of these may become eligible by throwing up his appointment or pension. So the acceptance of office under the crown by a member vacates his seat, but he may be re-elected.

Sheriffs of counties, and mayors and bailiffs of boroughs, are not eligible in their respective jurisdictions, as being returning officers; but it would seem that they can sit for any other place.¹

Prisoners in execution for debt do not seem ineligible.² Nor are persons being or going abroad. But bribery disqualifies the guilty party even for subsequent elections.

Some disqualifications are partial, as bankruptcy, by 52 Geo. III. c. 144, or being concerned in any contract with government.

Though formerly otherwise, Roman Catholics may now, by 10 Geo. IV. c. 7, sit as members.

II. WHO ARE THE ELECTORS, OR THE CONSTITUENCY OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

1. What Aggregate Bodies are entitled to elect.

The House of Commons consists of 658 members, elected by the several counties, cities, and boroughs of the United Kingdom, and thence respectively styled knights, citizens, and burgesses. The number of members has varied at different periods. At the time of the union with Scotland, however, the number of representatives for England and Wales was 513, and 45 members were then added for Scotland. These numbers continued unchanged (with the addition of 100 members for Ireland at the time of the union with that country) until the passing of the Reform Act, which has somewhat altered the relative proportions for each country, without affecting the total number, which continues, as before, 658. We shall here therefore, consider the alterations effected in the representation by that act.

The chief objects of the Reform Act (2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 45) were the disfranchisement of some places and persons, the enfranchisement of others, an increase of members for counties, and a new mode of qualifying voters, and of taking votes at the poll. Some of these alterations commenced immediately after the dissolution of the then existing parliament; others were prospective, depending upon the extinction or abandonment of present interests.

¹ 4 Doug. 87. ² But see contra, 1 Ch. Bla. Com. 175. n. 44; Sim. Elec. Law, 33.

Disfranchisement of Places.—By the first section 56 boroughs, named therein and also in Schedule A, were totally disfranchised; 30 other boroughs, enumerated in section 2 and again in Schedule B, were partially disfranchised, being henceforth to send no more than one member each; and Weymouth and Melcombe Regis, formerly returning two members each, now return two members jointly.

Enfranchisement of Places.—The right of returning members thus taken from these boroughs was transferred to other places not before represented. Each of the 22 places named in section 3 and Schedule C, is created a borough, and sends two members. Each of the 20 places named in section 4 and Schedule D, is created a borough, and sends one member. By section 5, the boroughs of New Shoreham, Cricklade, Aylesbury, and East Retford,¹ are further extended, and their extent respectively defined. By section 6, Penryn is made to include the town of Falmouth, and Sandwich to include the parishes of Deal and Walmer, each sending two members as before. By section 7, the extent and boundaries of every city and borough in England sending members to parliament (except the four last mentioned and those in Schedule A) and of each of the forty-two new boroughs named in C and D, are declared to be as settled and described by the Boundaries Act, which is to be taken as part of this act. Merthyr Tydvil (Schedule D) is a new borough in Wales; Swansea and the four other towns named in section 10, including the places assigned to each by the Boundaries Act, form one borough, and return one member; but no person shall, from any right accruing in these towns, vote for Cardiff. Each of the eleven shire-towns of Wales named in Schedule E is enlarged by the addition of the places named in the first column of that schedule; and those places and shire-towns, and also the borough of Brecon, are to be as settled and described by the Boundaries Act.

Increase of County Members.—Each of the three ridings of Yorkshire has two members, elected as if the ridings were separate counties; the courts for the elections to be held at the cities of York, Wakefield, and Beverley. There are two members for the parts of Lindsey, and two for Kesteven and Holland in Lincolnshire, elected as if they were separate counties, at courts held at Lincoln and Sleaford. Each of the 25 counties named in Schedule F is divided into two divisions (section 14), each division returning two members, to be elected as if each division was a separate county. Each of the seven counties named in Schedule F 2, returns three members; each of the counties of Carmarthen, Denbigh, and Glamorgan, two; and the Isle of Wight, separated from Hampshire, is to be deemed a county, and to return one member, at a court held at Newport.

Thirteen cities and towns, being counties of themselves, named in Schedule G, are included in the several counties mentioned in conjunction with them in the same schedule.

Thus, 112 members were taken from the boroughs in Schedule A, 30 from those in Schedule B, and 2 from Weymouth and Melcombe Regis, making altogether 144. The counties in England have had ¹ As to these, see 11 Geo. III. c. 55; 22 Geo. III. c. 31; 44 Geo. III. c. 60; and 1 Wm. IV. c. 74.

6 added to their former number; the new boroughs in England have 63; three counties in Wales have 3 additional members, and two new boroughs there have 2,—in all 131. The remaining 13 were given to Scotland and Ireland, viz. 8 to the former, and 5 to the latter country. The present state of the representation, therefore, is as follows:—

ENGLAND—471.
41 Counties (including the Isle of Wight, which for this purpose is deemed a county of itself) return 144 knights of shires, viz.
1 (Yorkshire) consisting of 3 divisions, 2 for each division	6
26 Counties consisting of 2 divisions, 2 for each	104
7 Counties, 3 each	21
6 Counties, 2 each	12
1 (Isle of Wight)	1
	<hr/> 144
24 Cities return 50 members, viz.
1 (London)	4
23 Cities, 2 each	46
	<hr/> 50
163 Boroughs return 273 members, viz.
110 Boroughs, 2 each	220
53 Boroughs, 1 each	53
	<hr/> 273
2 Universities (Cambridge and Oxford), return 2 each	4
230 —	<hr/> 471
WALES—29.
12 Counties return 15 knights of the shires, viz.
3 Counties, 2 each	6
9 Counties, 1 each	9
	<hr/> 15
14 Boroughs, and Districts of Boroughs, 1 member each	14
26 —	<hr/> 29
SCOTLAND—53.
30 Counties and Districts of Counties, viz.
27 Counties, 1 each	27
3 Districts of Counties, each district returning 1 member	3
	<hr/> 30
21 Cities, Burghs and Towns, and Districts of Burghs and Towns—
2 (Edinburgh and Glasgow) return 2 members each	4
5 (Aberdeen, Paisley, Dundee, Greenock, Perth) 1 each	5
14 Districts of Burghs and Towns, each returning 1	14
	<hr/> 23
51 —	<hr/> 53
IRELAND—105.
64 Counties, 1 each	64
39 Cities and Boroughs, 1 each	39
1 University (Trinity College, Dublin)	2
104 —	<hr/> 105
411 Places.	Members 658

2. Persons who cannot be Electors.

Females, minors, idiots and lunatics, and aliens. Denizens are not disqualified from voting, though they cannot sit in the house; so also of persons naturalized.

British peers, ministers of state, lords lieutenant of counties.

Persons convicted of perjury and bribery, or subornation of perjury.

Felons convicted and under sentence of punishment.

Persons excommunicated in the ecclesiastical courts.

Outlaws in criminal proceedings, but not in civil.

Bankrupts uncertificated, and insolvents, as they have no property.

Receivers of alms within a limited time before the election, generally a year, though in particular cases this period is extended, either by act of parliament (as in London by the 11 Geo. I. c. 11, a determination of the House of Commons, or special usage.

Persons having received parochial relief within a year, in cities and boroughs. 2 Wm. IV. c. 45, § 36.

Commissioners and officers employed in the excise, customs, stamp duties, or assessed taxes; the postmaster general and other persons employed in the Post Office; and the captain, master, or mate of any vessel employed in conveying the mail, are all of them disqualified during the time of holding any such office, and for twelve months afterwards, under penalty of 100*l*. But commissioners of land tax and persons employed by them are not disqualified, being specially excepted by the act (22 Geo. III. c. 21), as are also those holding freehold offices by letters patent.

Justices, receivers, and all other persons belonging to the London police, are excluded from the franchise in the counties of Middlesex, Surrey, Hertford, Essex, and Kent, and from Westminster, Southwark, and the new boroughs in the Metropolitan districts.

Counsel and all agents of candidates at election, for fee or reward, are excluded from voting at the same, but not from being registered.

3. The Qualifications of Electors.

Electors for Counties.—Before the passing of the Reform Act, the right of voting for knights of the shire was confined to persons having freehold lands or tenements within the county of the value of 40*s*. by the year above reprises.¹ That act, however, while it extended the elective franchise to other descriptions of property, has somewhat restricted this class of voters. The qualification remains as before so far as relates to freeholds of inheritance, which, if of the clear annual value of 40*s*., still confer the right of voting, when duly registered according to that act. But as to freeholds for life, it is enacted by § 18, that no person shall vote in the election of a knight of the shire, or of a member to serve in parliament for any city or town being a county of itself, in respect of any freehold for life or lives of a less annual value than ten pounds, unless he be in the actual occupation of the same, or unless it have come to him by marriage, marriage settlement, devise, or promotion to a benefice or office; saving, however, the rights of all persons then seised of freeholds for life, so long as they continue so seised, if they had or might have had a right of voting in respect thereof before the passing of that act, and are registered.

As the estate must have been freehold both in respect of tenure and interest, copyholders were formerly excluded both by common law and statute.² Now, however, by § 19 of the Reform Act, persons seised at law or in equity of lands or tenements of copyhold or any other tenure whatever, except freehold, of the annual value of ten pounds, for life or lives, or any larger estate, are entitled to vote in the election of knights of the shire for the county in which the lands are situate. Under this qualification are included customary freeholders or tenants by copy of court roll, by the verge or tenant right, tenants in ancient demesne, charter tenants, &c., also equitable copyholders, as heirs, devisees, &c., according to the custom of the manor, before admission.

The original lessee or assignee of a term originally created for not less than sixty years in lands or tenements of the clear yearly value of ten pounds above all rents and charges, or of a term originally created for not less than twenty years in lands or tenements of the clear yearly value of fifty pounds, whether in the occupation thereof or not; and the sublessee or assignee of an underlease of either of the before-mentioned terms, if in the occupation thereof; and any person occupying as tenant any lands for which he is bond fide liable to a yearly rent of not less than fifty pounds, are each of them entitled to vote for knights of the shire for the county in which the lands &c. are situate.¹

¹ 8 Hen. VI. c. 7; 10 Hen. VI. c. 2; c. 24; 14 Geo. III. c. 58; 20 Geo. III. & 8 Wm. III. c. 7, § 3, 24; 10 Anne, c. 17; 53 Geo. III. c. 49.
² 23, § 3; 18 Geo. II. c. 18, § 1; 3 Geo. III. c. 31 Geo. III. c. 14.

But, as to property situated in cities and boroughs, no person can vote in the election of county members as a copyholder, leaseholder, or tenant, in respect of any house, warehouse, counting-house, shop, or other building, or any land occupied therewith, in any city or borough, which (either separately or jointly with the land occupied therewith) is of sufficient value to confer the right of voting for such city or borough; nor can any person vote as a freeholder of any such, if occupied by himself, whether in either case the right to vote for such city or borough has been actually acquired or not.²

And, whatever be the qualification, in order that a party may be entitled to vote, he must be registered, that is, his name must be entered on the Register of Voters; and, unless the property came to him by descent, succession, marriage, marriage settlement, devise, or promotion to a benefice or office, he must have been a certain time in possession thereof, or in the receipt of the rents and profits for his own use (so that trustees, and mortgagees not in possession, are excluded),³ before he can be registered, namely, if claiming as a freeholder or copyholder for six months, and if as a leaseholder or occupying tenant for twelve months, previous to the last day of July in the year of registration.⁴

In county votes, it is not necessary that the party should have been rated, or have paid rates or taxes; nor is it now necessary that the property should in any case be assessed to the land tax.⁵

Electors for Cities and Boroughs.—The Reform Act has not take away the old right of voters in scot and lot and corporation boroughs, but it has conferred a new qualification upon all occupiers of houses or buildings, either as owners or tenants, of the clear annual value (whether alone or with land) of not less than ten pounds. This is the only qualification in all the new boroughs, with the exception of Swansea, in which freemen also are entitled to vote. The party must have occupied the premises for twelve months previous to the 31st July,⁶

¹ 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 45, § 20. The lands &c. in respect of which an occupying tenant of 50*l.* claims to vote need not be the same, but may be different lands and tenements occupied in immediate succession. And joint occupying tenants are each entitled to vote, if the amount of rent be such as, divided by the number of tenants, would give 50*l.* for each.—6 & 7 Vic. c. 18, § 73.

² 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 45, § 24, 25.

³ As to the right of trustees and mortgagees to vote, much difficulty formerly prevailed in the construction of the Reform Act; but the 6 & 7 Vic. c. 18, § 74, declares and enacts, that no mortgagees of lands or tenements shall vote, unless in the actual possession or receipt of the rents and profits; but the mortgagor in actual possession or in receipt of the rents and profits may vote, notwithstanding such mortgage. And that no trustee shall have a right to vote; but the cestuique trust in actual possession or in receipt of the rents and profits, though he may receive the same through the hands of the trustee, may vote, notwithstanding such trust.

⁴ 2 & 3 W. IV. c. 45, § 26. ⁵ Ibid. § 22.

⁶ Occupation of the same premises for the whole time is not necessary; it may be different premises occupied in immediate succession. And joint occupiers are each entitled, where the premises are of such value as, divided by the number of occupiers, would give 10*l.* for each.—2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 45.

have been rated during that time to all rates made for the relief of the poor,¹ have paid on or before the 20th July all the poor's rates and assessed taxes payable previous to the 6th April preceding, and have resided for six calendar months previous to the last day of July, within the city or borough, or within seven miles thereof.

Another class of voters for cities and boroughs are freemen, members of a corporation. This right was formerly acquired by birth, servitude, marriage, or election; and admission in due form at any time before the election was sufficient till the 3 Geo. III., which requires admission twelve months previous to the election (except entitled by birth, marriage, or servitude); but residence was not in any case necessary. Now, however, by the Reform Act (§ 23) no burgess or freeman, or freeman and liveryman of the city of London, can be registered, unless he were qualified on the last day of July, in such manner as would then entitle him to vote if such were the day of election, nor unless he has resided six calendar months within the borough, or within seven miles of the place where the poll is taken. And no burgess or freeman admitted since the 1st of March, 1831, otherwise than in respect of birth or servitude, can hereafter be entitled. And no person can be entitled in respect of birth, unless his right be originally derived from some person who was admitted or was entitled to be admitted before the said 1st of March, or from some person who since that time shall have become a freeman in respect of servitude. All non-resident freemen, therefore, are disfranchised; and this franchise cannot now be conferred by election, or by marriage with the daughter or widow of a freeman.

Freeholders or burgage tenants form another class of voters in cities and towns being counties of themselves. They must have been in actual possession, or in receipt of the rents and profits for their own use twelve months previous to the last day of July (except it came by descent, marriage, devise, or promotion to a benefice or office), and must have resided six months within such city or town, or within seven miles thereof. Freehold or burgage tenements within the new boundaries confer the right in the same manner as those within the former limits. But no person can be entitled to vote for any city or borough other than a city or town being a county of itself, in respect of any burgage tenement or freehold acquired since the 1st of March, 1831, unless it came to him since that day and previous to the passing of the act (7th June, 1832) by descent, succession, marriage, marriage settlement, devise, or promotion to a benefice or office.

Other freeholders, who vote in respect of a freehold of the clear yearly value of 40s. in such cities and towns, are put upon the same footing as freehold electors for counties at large, and are not required to have more than six months' possession.

¹ No misnomer or inaccurate description, in a rate, of the person occupying, or of the premises occupied, shall prevent such occupier from being registered and entitled to vote, if, being the person liable, he shall have been called upon to pay, and shall have paid the poor rates during the time required in respect of such premises.—6 & 7 Vic. c. 18, § 75.

Where occupiers are not rated, they may claim to be rated; and, upon claim made, and payment or tender of the rates due, their names are to be put on the rate-book, and they shall be deemed rated from the time of the rate made. But where the landlord is liable by any act of parliament for payment of the rates, such claim on the part of the tenant will not exonerate him from his liability, in case the tenant makes default.—2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 45, § 30.

It would occupy too much space to enumerate all the various modifications of the elective franchise prevailing in cities and boroughs. Almost every one of them had rights of voting peculiar to itself, established by act of parliament, charter, usage, the last determination of election committees, or by common law.

4. Registration of Voters.

The names and qualifications of all voters are required to be registered before they can exercise their privilege. This system of registration was introduced by the Reform Act, but the provisions of that act on the subject have been repealed, and others substituted by the 6 & 7 Vic. c. 18.

1. First, As to the registry of county voters :—

On or before the 10th of June in every year, the clerk of the peace of each county delivers his precept to the overseers of the poor of every parish therein, with the requisite forms and notices,¹ and a copy of such part of the existing register of voters as relates to their respective parishes.

On or before the 20th of June, the overseers are to publish a notice,¹ requiring persons entitled to vote in respect of property situate in their parish, and whose names are not already on the register, or who, being on the register, do not retain the same qualification or continue in the same place of abode, to give or send in to them before the 20th of July a notice of their claim to vote.¹ Any person whose name is already on the register need not make a fresh claim while he retains the same qualification and place of abode as are there described, although he may do so if he think fit. This notice of the overseers is to be published by affixing a copy signed by them, on or near the outer doors of every church and chapel in the parish, including dissenters' chapels, or if there be no church or chapel then in some public or conspicuous situation, and keeping the same so affixed during a period including two Sundays at least.

On or before the last day of July the overseers are to make out an alphabetical list of all persons who have sent in their claims; and where they have any reason to believe that any person so claiming, or any person whose name is on the register, is not entitled to be registered, they are to add the word "Objected" in the margin, and the word "Dead" before the name of any person whom they have reason to believe to be dead. They are to cause a sufficient number of such list of claimants, and of the said copy of the register, to be written or printed, and to sign and publish the same on or before the 1st of August, and keep copies thereof for inspection without fee between the hours of ten and four of every day except Sunday during fourteen days, and also for sale.

Any person whose name is in the register may object to the insertion of any other person's name, by giving a notice on or before the 25th of August, to the overseers,¹ and to the person objected to,¹ and, if the latter do not reside in the parish, a duplicate notice to his tenant in possession.

On the 1st of September, the overseers are to make out and publish a list of all persons so objected to, and keep copies thereof for inspection during fourteen days, and also for sale, as before directed with respect to the list of claimants.

And on or before the 29th of August they are to deliver the copy of the register, the list of claimants, and the list of persons objected to, respectively signed by them, to the clerk of the peace, that he may make out an abstract of the number of persons objected to in each parish, and transmit the same to the revising barrister when he shall be appointed, in order that he may fix the times and places for holding courts for the revision of the lists.

2. The proceedings as to the registration of voters for cities and boroughs are similar to those above detailed with regard to county electors. The town clerk issues his precept to the overseers of the several parishes on or before the 10th of June; who are required, on or before the 20th of June, to publish a notice, that no person will be entitled to be registered in respect of the occupation of premises of 10*l*. yearly value unless he shall have paid on or before the 20th of July all rates and taxes due on the 6th of April preceding. But no person is required to send in his claim to vote, as in the case of county voters, at this stage of the proceedings; the duty of inserting in the list of voters the names of all persons entitled devolving upon the overseers, who have the rate-books for their guidance, and are at liberty to inspect the tax assessments. They are accordingly required, on or before the last day of July, to make out two lists,—one including all voters in right of the occupation of premises of 10*l*. yearly value, and the other of all persons entitled by virtue of any other right, except freemen; which lists are to be published and kept for inspection and sale, in the same manner as is directed with regard to the county lists. The list of freemen is made out by the town clerk, and published by being affixed on the town hall, &c. In London the lists of the liverymen are furnished to the returning officers by the clerks of the several companies. Persons whose names are omitted from the lists, and those who have objections to make against persons whose names are inserted, may then send in their notices of claim or of objection to the overseers or town clerk respectively, at any time on or before the 25th of August. Lists of such claimants, and of persons objected to, are then to be published, at the same time and manner as in the case of county lists.

¹ Forms of all the Notices &c. are given in the Schedule to the Act 6 & 7 Vic. c. 18.

Revising Barristers.—In order to correct the registers, and decide on the validity of claims and objections, one or more revising barristers are appointed to revise the lists of each county, and of every city and borough therein. They are appointed yearly by the senior judge of assize when on the summer circuit, except those for the county of Middlesex and the metropolitan cities and boroughs, who are appointed by the lord chief justice of the Court of Queen's Bench. No member of parliament, or person holding any place of profit under the crown, is eligible for this office; and no such barrister can serve in parliament for any place for which he is thus appointed for eighteen months afterwards.

The barristers thus appointed make circuits and hold open courts, for the purpose of revising the registers, between the 15th of September and the last day of October; and when two or more are appointed for any county, they may sit separately, either at the same time and place, or at different times and places, as they may deem most expedient. The lists are laid before them by the clerk of the peace and the town clerks respectively, who, as well as the overseers, must attend and answer all questions on oath. They are then to correct mistakes in the register; to insert the names of all persons who shall be proved to their satisfaction to have been entitled on the preceding 31st of July, and whose claims have been made in due time; and to expunge the names of persons objected to, where the objection shall be made good, and also those of persons deceased.

Parties cannot appear or be attended by counsel at these courts.

In cases of groundless or frivolous and vexatious claims or objections, the revising barrister may order costs not exceeding 20s.

An appeal against the revising barrister's decision on any point of law may be had to the Court of Common Pleas, upon a statement, drawn up by the barrister immediately after his decision, at the instance of the party aggrieved, of the facts proved in evidence, with his decision upon the whole case as well as on the point of law in question, after the manner of a special case to the Queen's Bench upon a decision of a court of quarter sessions; and where several claims or objections depend upon the same point of law, the appeals may be consolidated, and any agreement of the parties as to the expences thereof may be made a rule of court.

The registers, when thus revised, are signed by the revising barrister, and transmitted to the clerk of the peace, or to the town clerk of cities or boroughs, and by them to the returning officer, and continue in force from November to November.

III. PROCEEDINGS AT ELECTIONS.

When a new parliament is summoned, the lord chancellor sends his warrant to the clerk of the crown in chancery, who thereupon issues out writs to the sheriff of every county for the election of all the members to serve for that county, and for every city and borough therein. But after the parliament is assembled, and during its continuance, the House of Commons alone has, by its speaker, the right of issuing the writs to fill up vacancies.

On the receipt of the writ, the sheriff sends his precept under his seal to the returning officers of the cities and boroughs in his jurisdiction, who are to proceed to election within eight days after the receipt of the writ or precept, giving three clear days notice at least, exclusive both of the day of proclamation and the day appointed for the election.¹

But the elections of knights of the shire must be proceeded to by the sheriffs themselves in person. By 25 Geo. III. c. 84, the sheriff, having indorsed on the back of the writ the day on which he receives it, shall, within two days after, cause proclamation to be made at the place where the election ought by law to be held, of a special county court to be there held for the purpose of such election only, on any day (Sunday excepted) not later from the day of making such proclamation than the sixteenth day, nor sooner than the tenth.

One day at least before the election, all soldiers (except those entitled to vote, soldiers in garrison, and the guards at Westminster or Southwark or on duty at a royal residence) are to remove to a distance of at least two miles from the place of election.

No lord of parliament, lord lieutenant of a county, or any person disqualified from voting, is in any manner to interfere in an election. And if any officer of the customs, excise, stamps, or certain other branches of the revenue, presume to intermeddle in any election, by persuading any voter or dissuading him, he forfeits 100*l.*, and is disabled from afterwards holding any office.

No candidate shall, after the date (usually called the teste) of the writ, or after the vacancy, give any money or entertainment to the electors, or promise to give any, either to particular persons or to the place in general, on pain of being incapable to serve for that place in that parliament. And if any money, gift, office, employment, or reward be given or promised to any voter at any time in order to influence him to give or withhold his vote, as well he that takes as he that offers such bribe forfeits 500*l.*, and is for ever disabled from voting, or holding any office in any corporation, unless before conviction he discovers some other offender of the same kind, and then he is indemnified. 7 & 8 W. III. c. 4.²

¹ 3 & 4 Vic. c. 81.

² The 5 & 6 Vic. c. 102, § 20 (reciting that a practice had prevailed in certain places of making payments to voters on behalf of candidates in such manner that doubts were entertained whether the same was bribery) declares and enacts, that the payment or gift of any money or valuable consideration to any voter, or other person on his behalf either before, during, or after any election, on account of such voter having voted or refrained from voting, or being about to vote or refrain from voting, whether under the name of head money or any other name, and whether in compliance with any usage or practice or not, shall be deemed bribery.

And the same act (§ 22), reciting that the 7 & 8 Wm. III. c. 25, had been found insufficient to prevent corrupt treating, enacts, that if any candidate shall, by himself, or by or with any person, or in any manner, directly or indirectly, give or provide, or cause or knowingly allow to be given or provided, wholly or partly at his expence, or pay, wholly or in part, any expences incurred for any meat, drink, entertainment, or provisions to or for any person, at any time, either before, during or after the election, for the purpose of corruptly influencing such person or any other person to give or refrain from giving his vote, or for the purpose of corruptly rewarding such person or any other person for having given or refrained from giving his vote at such election, he shall be incapable of being elected or sitting in parliament for that county, city, or borough, during the parliament for which such election shall be holden.

As treating of voters is regarded as bribery, and therefore illegal, no action can be maintained by an innkeeper against a candidate for the price of provisions &c. furnished to voters at his request.¹

If an estate be conveyed to a party to qualify him as a voter or candidate, with a secret condition for its re-conveyance, such condition cannot be enforced, and the party is entitled to retain such estate.²

On the day of election, the sheriff or other returning officer must first take an oath against bribery, and for the due execution of his office, and then read or cause to be read the Bribery Act. The candidates likewise, if required, must swear to their qualification. If a candidate, upon the request of two electors, or of another candidate, either at the time of election, or at any time prior to the return of the writ, refuse to swear to his qualification (unless rendered unnecessary by any of the exceptions in the statute), his election would be void. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 48.

If no more candidates are nominated than the number of representatives to be chosen, the returning officer has no authority to open a poll, but must return those nominated as duly elected. If more are proposed than the number to be returned, and a poll be duly demanded (either by a candidate or an elector), he has no power to refuse; and if he refuse, the election is void. When a poll is once granted, the sheriff must proceed with it, though the party who demanded it afterwards waive it; but if, after demand, no votes are tendered within a reasonable time, he may return according to the view taken at the nomination.

By the Reform Act (§ 62, 67), the polling at every contested election for counties is to commence at nine o'clock in the forenoon of the next day but two after the day fixed for the election (unless it be Saturday or Sunday, and then on the Monday following), and continue for two successive days, seven hours on the first, and eight on the second day, upon which it is to be closed not later than four in the afternoon. But in cities and boroughs, by the 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 36, the polling is to commence at eight o'clock in the forenoon of the day next following, and continue during such one day only, and not be kept open later than four o'clock. If the day following be Sunday, then the poll is to be taken on the Monday; if Good Friday, on the Saturday; and if Christmas Day, on the day following, not being Sunday.

By the Reform Act and Boundaries Act (c. 64) each county is divided into districts, and a convenient place appointed in each district for taking the poll.³ Polling booths are to be erected at each polling-place,⁴ the expence of which is to be borne by the candidates jointly, who may contract for their erection if they think proper; if not, the sheriff is to erect them, and charge the candidates not exceeding 40*l.* for each polling-place in counties, and 25*l.* in cities or boroughs. Or the sheriff may hire houses &c., instead of erecting booths, if he think proper. The returning officer may appoint deputies to preside at each

¹ Ribbans v. Bickett, 1 Barn. & A. 264.

² See Cases in Chit. Eq. Index, 304.

³ The number of polling-places in any county may be increased by order of the privy council, upon a petition to that effect from the quarter sessions; in which case the justices at sessions are to divide the county into convenient polling districts. 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 102.

⁴ In county elections the sheriff is to erect as many booths as shall allow one for every 450 electors. 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 102. In cities or boroughs not more than 300 electors are to be allowed to each booth; or, on the requisition of any candidate, or of his proposer or seconder, and paying the expences thereof, not more than 100. 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 36.

polling-place, and poll clerks: the former to have two guineas, and the latter one guinea a day, at the expence of the candidates. If any person be proposed as a candidate without his consent, the person nominating him is liable to his share of the expence. No nomination can be made or election holden for any city or borough in any church, chapel, or other place of public worship.

At the time of polling, every person whose name is on the register is entitled to vote, but only at the booth erected for the particular parish, district, &c. The returning officer cannot scrutinize any vote further than by asking the voter (on oath, if he thinks proper) whether he is the person whose name is on the register, and whether he has or has not already voted. And the 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 46, provides that no elector shall be required at any election to take the oaths of allegiance, abjuration, or supremacy.

Any person whose name has been omitted from the register in consequence of the decision of the revising barister may tender his vote, and the returning officer or his deputy must enter all such votes upon the poll book, distinguishing them from the votes admitted. But these votes can be of no avail, except the election be afterwards controverted on a petition to the House of Commons, where only the correctness of the register can be impeached.

At the close of each day's poll the clerks deliver their books, inclosed and sealed, to the returning officer or his deputy; and at the final close the deputies deliver them to the returning officer; who is, the next day but one (except it be a Sunday, and then on the Monday) to cast up the votes, declare the state of the poll, and proclaim the members chosen not later than two o'clock; or he may proceed to make the return immediately after the poll is closed.

In case of riot, either at the nomination of candidates or the taking the polls, the sheriff or returning officer may adjourn the proceedings till the following day. 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 36.

If there be an equality of votes, or the returning officer is doubtful whether the candidate having the majority is not disqualified, he must make a double return; in which case the parties returned are not entitled to sit till the return has been decided on by a parliamentary committee.

Votes given to a candidate disqualified by perjury, bribery, &c., after notice to the electors of such disqualification, are absolutely void; and if, on summing up, the striking out of these bad votes turns the number in favour of another candidate, he becomes duly elected, and no new election is necessary. If, however, the number still remains in favour of the disqualified candidate, as he cannot sit, a new election is necessary. So it is, if the returning officer expresses a doubt of such candidate being disqualified, or votes for him.

The returning officer in boroughs returns his precept to the sheriff with the person elected; and the sheriff returns the whole, together with the writ for the county, and the knights elected, to the clerk of the crown before the day of meeting, if it be a new parliament, or within fourteen days after the election, if it be an occasional vacancy; and this under a penalty of 500*l*. If the sheriff do not return such knights only as are duly elected, he forfeits 100*l*.; and the returning officer in boroughs, for a like false return, 40*l.*; and they are, besides, liable to an action by the candidate aggrieved, who may within twelve months, or within six months after a decision of the House of Commons upon the subject, bring the same, and recover double damages with full costs. 9 Geo. IV. c. 22, § 66. But the members returned are the sitting members, until the House of Commons, upon petition, adjudge the return to be illegal. Any person bribing the returning officer forfeits 300*l.*

¹ After the declaration of the poll, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.—6 & poll books are sealed up, and transmitted to 7 Vic. c. 18, § 93.

A member once duly chosen cannot relinquish his seat, nor be discharged from it, but by operation of law. If a person is elected for two places, which sometimes happens at a general election, he may choose for which he will serve, and a new writ issues for the other. But having once taken his seat, he cannot resign in order to be elected for another place. It is therefore usual, when a member wishes to retire, to obtain an appointment to the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds, or of the manor of East Hendres,—places of no profit, but which, being appointments under the crown, enable members to vacate their seats.

Mode of passing Acts of Parliament.—The two houses of parliament meet principally to make laws, the method being very similar in either house. Each house has a speaker. The speaker of the Lords (commonly called the prolocutor) is the Lord Chancellor: the speaker of the Commons is chosen by the house, and approved by the queen. In each house the majority decide; but in the commons the speaker has, in case of an equality of votes, a casting vote. Forty members at least are required to be present to form a house; and if that number be not present, the house may be adjourned.

Acts of parliament, as before noticed, are either private or public. For a private bill, a petition is presented, stating the grievance, &c.; which is usually referred to a committee; and if their report be favourable, leave is given to introduce the bill. For a public bill, a member moves at once for leave to introduce it; it is read a first and second time, and referred to a committee, which on important bills is one of the whole house, then read a third time and passed; after which it goes up to the Lords, is passed there, and finally receives the royal assent and becomes law. If the Lords make any amendments, the bill is sent back to the Commons; if the latter disagree thereto, a conference follows of members deputed by each house; if both remain inflexible, the bill drops, and the subject cannot be again introduced in that session. The same forms are followed, mutatis mutandis, when the bill begins with the Lords. The royal assent is given either in person or by commissioners of the House of Lords. The act is then placed among the records of the kingdom, and forms part of the law of the land.

Adjournment, prorogation, and dissolution.—Parliaments are, 1*st*, adjourned from day to day, or for a week or month, as at Christmas and Easter—this is the act of each house; 2*o*, prorogued from one session to another—this is by the queen, or her commissioners; and 3*o*, dissolved, or put an end to—this is by the queen's act; by the demise of the crown, or by efflux of time, which is now at the end of seven years, if not sooner dissolved by either of the other modes.

CHAPTER II.

Of the King or Queen, and the Royal Family.

THE supreme executive power is vested in the crown, whether it be possessed by a king or a queen.

The title to the crown is properly hereditary, that is, it descends to the next heir on the death of the last possessor. It is not so jure divino, as has sometimes been urged, but by the constitution of the country. The mode of succession to the crown in England is nearly the same as that to landed estates, though it may be limited or defeated by act of parliament; but after such limitation it still retains the same hereditary quality.

The DUTIES of the crown, as comprised in the coronation oath, are, to govern according to the laws; to cause justice in mercy to be executed; and to maintain and uphold the laws of God, the protestant religion, and the privileges of the church.

The PREROGATIVES of the crown consist in that special pre-eminence which the sovereign hath over and above all other persons, and out of the ordinary course of the common law, in right of the regal dignity.

Prerogatives are direct or incidental. The former are subdivided into those concerning—1. The character or dignity, 2. The authority, and 3. The revenues of the crown.

1. The dignity of the crown.—The attributes of this are sovereignty or pre-eminence. The king, or queen, is superior to all, and amenable to none. “The king can do no wrong,” is an axiom of the constitution; by which is meant, not absolutely that his actions are unimpeachable, but that he is not personally responsible. It is another axiom, that “the king never dies;” that is, king Edward, George, or William, may die, but the crown survives them all in the person of the successor.

2. The authority of the crown.—In this consists the whole executive branch of the government of the kingdom, her majesty being the chief magistrate, and all others her delegates. She is the representative of her people in all intercourse with foreign nations, and as such sends and receives ambassadors, &c., makes treaties and alliances, declares war and peace, and, as incident thereto, issues letters of marque and reprisal, and grants passports.

With regard to domestic affairs, the crown is regarded in a variety of characters. First, her majesty is a constituent part of the supreme legislative power, having power to reject or approve all bills. She has the sole power of raising and regulating all the military and naval forces of the kingdom; though the supplies for supporting them can only be granted by parliament. She erects garrisons, and has the government of all castles and forts; appoints all ports and havens, wharfs and quays; and erects light-houses. To this branch of the prerogative may also be referred the power of prohibiting the exportation of arms and ammunition, and of restraining her subjects from leaving the kingdom by the writ of ne exeat regno.

The crown is the fountain of justice and general conservator of the peace in the kingdom, and alone has the power of erecting courts or justice, one portion of which judicial authority is delegated to and exercised through the various judges and subordinate magistrates. All criminal offences are said to be committed against her majesty, so that she is nominally the prosecutor in all such cases, and has incidentally the power of pardoning all offences. She also issues all proclamations, which are a sort of edicts enforcing and modifying the execution of existing laws.

The crown is the fountain of all titles of honour or dignity, offices, and privileges; can grant place or precedence to private persons, convert aliens into denizens, and erect corporations by letters patent.

The crown also has the general superintendence of commerce and its laws; may establish public markets and fairs, and regulate weights and measures, and has power to declare what metals and coins &c. shall constitute the currency of the realm, and their value, and has the right of coining the same.

Lastly, her majesty is head of the church; and by virtue of this she convenes, prorogues, regulates, and restrains all ecclesiastical synods or convocations, has the right of nominating bishops, and of appointing to certain other preferments; and to her lies the final appeal in all ecclesiastical causes.

We have hitherto been speaking of a QUEEN REGENT or REGNANT, who has, as we have said, all the powers and capacities of a king; and, if married, her husband is her subject. It remains to speak of queens consort and dowager.

A QUEEN CONSORT derives her title by marriage with a king of England. In ordinary cases, as we shall see hereafter, a married woman has very little power or separate existence in legal signification; but a queen consort is, in the eye of the law, distinct from her husband, and has all the qualities which the law attaches to a feme sole, or single woman. She has many exemptions and minute prerogatives; she pays no toll, nor is liable to be amerced; she is, nevertheless, a subject, and not an equal of the king; and has a separate establishment and revenue. By the stat. 25 Edw. III. it is declared treason to compass or imagine the death of the queen, or to violate her person. She is, if accused of any species of treason, entitled to be tried by the peers of parliament, as in the case of Queen Caroline.

A QUEEN DOWAGER, or the widow of a king, enjoys most of the privileges of a queen consort. But no man can marry her without special licence from the crown, on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. Sir Edward Coke says, that this was enacted in the 6th Henry VI.; but the statute is not in print, and cannot be found. Blackstone states, that a queen dowager, when married again to a subject, does not lose her regal dignity, as peeresses dowager do their peerage when they marry commoners.

The eldest son, or heir apparent to the crown, (who is usually made Prince of Wales by special creation and investiture), and his wife, and the princess royal, that is, the eldest daughter, are also protected by law as to life and person in the same manner as we have mentioned respecting a queen consort; and the younger children and grandchildren are regarded in law above other subjects.

CHAPTER III.

Of the Privy Council.

THE COUNCILS of the crown consist of—1. The parliament, as we have already seen; 2. The peers of the realm, who are liable to be called on, and by birthright are entitled to an audience, in order to give their advice in any case of need or emergency (and this may form the basis of their several privileges, as freedom from arrest, &c.); 3. The judges, who are its counsellors in legal matters; and 4. The privy councillors, who form the principal council of the crown.

Privy councillors are made by the nomination of the crown, without either patent or grant. Their number is indefinite; but those only attend who are specially summoned for the particular occasion upon which their assistance at the council is required.

The cabinet council is distinct from the privy council, and is not per se a recognized branch of the constitution. It consists usually of those ministers of state who for the time being are more immediately honoured with the confidence of the sovereign, and are summoned to consult on the executive authority. Their existence depends solely on the pleasure of the crown, each receiving a particular summons for every attendance. These are the really efficient and responsible advisers of the crown.

To be qualified, privy and cabinet councillors must be natural-born subjects; and persons born abroad, unless of English parents, cannot be capable even by act of naturalization.

Their duties, according to their oath of office, are, to give their best advice for the honour and public good of the crown, without bias, and with secrecy; to avoid corruption (an attempt to bribe them is an indictable offence¹); to uphold that which is resolved, and withstand all opponents thereto; and to do and keep all that a good councillor ought to do.

The court of privy council is of great antiquity. The government of England was originally by the king and privy council; though at present they only intermeddle in matters of complaint on sudden emergencies, their constant business being to consult for the public good in affairs of state. Acts of the privy council continued of great authority until the reigns of Charles I. and II.; and by them were controversies sometimes determined touching lands and rights, as well as the suspension of penal statutes. But their authority in that respect was never considered consonant with law, and was formally abolished by statute.

The crown, with advice of the privy council, publishes proclamations which are binding on the subject; but they must be consonant with and in execution of the laws of the land.

The power of the privy council is to inquire into all offences against the government, and to commit the offenders to safe custody, in order to take their trial in some of the courts of law. But their jurisdiction herein is only to inquire, and not to punish; and the persons committed by them are entitled to their habeas corpus by the 16 Car. I. c. 10, as much as if committed by an ordinary justice of the peace. And by the same statute the Court of Star Chamber and the Court of Requests, both of which consisted of privy counsellors, were dissolved; and it was declared illegal for them to take cognizance of any matter of property belonging to the subjects of this kingdom. But in plantation or admiralty causes, which arise out of the jurisdiction of the kingdom, and in matters of lunacy or idiocy (being a special flower of the prerogative), although they may eventually involve questions of extensive property, the privy council continues to have cognizance, being the court of appeal in such cases; or rather, the appeal lies to the queen's majesty herself in council. Whenever also a question arises between two colonies or dependencies of the crown, as concerning the extent of their charter, and the like, the queen in her council exercises original jurisdiction therein, upon the principles of feudal sovereignty. So likewise when any person claims an island or a province in the nature of a feudal principality by grant from the crown, the determination of that right belongs to her majesty in council, as was the case of the Earl of Darby with regard to the Isle of Man in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and the Earl of Cadogan and others as the representatives of the Duke of Montague with relation to the island of St. Vincent in 1764. But from all the dominions of the crown, excepting Great Britain and Ireland, an appellate jurisdiction in the last resort is vested in this tribunal, which exercises its judicial authority in a committee (formerly of the whole privy council), who hear the allegations and proofs, and make their report to her majesty in council, by whom the judgment is finally given.

¹ 4 Burr. 2494; and Com. Dig. tit. Roy, E. 2.

The judicial business of the privy council has been considerably increased, and its constitution as a court of appeal improved, by recent enactments.¹ The 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 41 (after reciting that by the 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 92, the powers of the High Court of Delegates, both in ecclesiastical and maritime causes, had been transferred to his majesty in council; that, by letters patent under the great seal, certain members of the privy council, together with the barons and judges of the superior courts at Westminster, had been from time to time appointed His Majesty's Commissioners for hearing and determining Appeals in Prize Cases; that an appeal lies to his majesty in council from the decisions of various courts of judicature in the East Indies and other dominions of his majesty abroad; that appeals to his majesty in council had been usually heard before a committee of the whole privy council, and it was expedient to make provisions for the more effectually hearing and reporting on appeals and other matters, enacts, "That the President of the Council, the Lord Chancellor, and such of the privy council as shall be Lord Keeper or First Lord Commissioner of the Great Seal, Lord Chief Justice or Judge of the Court of King's Bench, Master of the Rolls, Vice Chancellor, Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, Lord Chief Baron or Baron of the Court of Exchequer, Judge of the Prerogative Court of ¹ For a further extension of the powers of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, see 7 & 8 Vic. c. 69, and 8 & 9 Vic. c. 30.

Canterbury, Judge of the Court of Admiralty, and Chief Judge of the Court in Bankruptcy, and also all members of the privy council who shall have been President thereof or have held the office of Lord Chancellor, or any of the other offices before mentioned, shall form a committee, to be styled 'The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council;' and his majesty may from time to time, by his sign manual, appoint any two other privy councillors to be members of such committee. And all appeals or applications in prize suits and in all other suits in the Admiralty or Vice Admiralty Courts, or in any other court in America or other his majesty's dominions abroad, which before might be made to the High Court of Admiralty in England, or to the Lords Commissioners in Prize Cases, shall be made to his majesty in council, and as such appeals might before have been made to the said Court of Admiralty or to the Lords Commissioners in Prize Cases; and that all appeals, or complaints in the nature of appeals, which may be brought before his majesty or his majesty in council, and appeals then pending and unheard, shall be referred by his majesty to such Judicial Committee, and shall be heard, and the report or recommendation be made in open court; and his majesty may refer to this committee for hearing or consideration any other matters whatsoever." But no matter can be heard, or order or report made but in the presence of at least four members, and by a majority. Her majesty in council, on the recommendation of the committee, on any appeal, may remit the subject matter thereof to the court below to be reheard; and the committee may direct an issue to try any fact in a court of common law, either at bar, before a judge of assize, or at the sittings for trials of issues in London or Middlesex, and either by a special or common jury. The committee may examine witnesses on oath by word of mouth (and either before or after examination by deposition); and the powers of the 13 Geo. III. c. 63, and 1 Wm. IV. c. 22, for the examination of witnesses by commission, are extended to it. The committee may direct depositions to be taken before the registrar, and may refer any matters to be examined and reported on by him, in the same manner as matters are referred by the Court of Chancery to a master; and for these purposes the same powers are given to him as are possessed by a master or examiner of the Court of Chancery or of any court ecclesiastical. Writs of subpoena for the attendance of witnesses and production of deeds &c. are to be issued by the President of the Privy Council in like form, and with the same penalties, as from the Court of Queen's Bench. Costs in the prosecution of appeals, and of issues directed by the committee, are to be paid as the commissioners direct. Orders and decrees are to be enrolled; and the committee have the same power of punishing contempts and compelling appearances, and her majesty in council the same powers of enforcing judgments, decrees, and orders, as the Court of Chancery or Court of Queen's Bench (both in personam and in rem), or as are given to any court ecclesiastical by the 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 93.

The privileges of privy councillors, as such, besides their honorary precedence, consists principally in the security which the law has given them against attempts and conspiracies to destroy their lives. By the 3 Hen. VII. c. 14, if any of the king's household conspire or imagine to take away the life of a privy councillor, it is felony, though nothing be done upon it. This extends only to the queen's menial servants. But the 9 Ann. c. 15 enacts, that any person who shall unlawfully attempt to kill, or unlawfully assault, strike, or wound any privy councillor in the execution of his office, shall be a felon without benefit of clergy.

The dissolution of the privy council is entirely at the queen's pleasure. By the common law it was dissolved ipso facto by the demise of the crown; but now, by the 6 Anne, c. 7, it continues till six months after, unless sooner determined by the successor.

CHAPTER IV.

Of the Revenue of the Crown.

THE constitution has vested in the crown a revenue, in order to support its dignity and power. It is either ordinary, that is, inherent in the crown, or extraordinary. That portion of the revenue devoted to the support of the queen and her personal establishment and dignity is called the civil list; the rest, being rather the revenue of the public, is appropriated to the public service.

The ordinary revenue has for the most part, by lapse of time and the altered state of things, or the express relinquishment of its possessors, long ceased to be of any actual value. In this class was comprised the custody of the temporalities of bishops, that is, all the lay revenues, lands, and tenements (in which is included his barony) belonging to the archbishop's or bishop's fee; and these, upon the vacancy of the bishopric, are immediately the right of the crown, which has the custody and an absolute right to the intermediate profits till a successor is appointed. This, however, can scarcely be called a source of profit in the present day, as the new bishop receives the restitution of his temporalities quite entire. The crown is entitled to a corody, that is, to send a chaplain to be maintained by the bishop and to receive a pension till he is promoted by him to a benefice; this, however, is now disused. The crown has a right to the tithes of extra-parochial places, but under an implied trust that they will be disbursed for the general good of the clergy. So also to first-fruits and tenths, the one being the first year's profits of a spiritual preferment, the other a tenth part of the annual profits of the same. These were first claimed by the Pope in the reign of king John, and afterwards in the time of Henry VIII. annexed to the crown (but with certain exemptions) by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3, and 1 Eliz. c. 4; at length they were applied by Queen Anne to the augmentation of poor livings (2 Ann. c. 11), and called Queen Anne's Bounty. The crown is entitled also to the rents and profits of the demesne lands, which, though formerly extensive, have been almost entirely granted away to private subjects. So to the profits of military tenures, which have been mostly abolished. Also to the rights of purveyance and pre-emption, that is, buying up provisions for the use of the household at a certain settled price; but this is now abolished, and an hereditary tax substituted. So to rine licences; but this was abolished by 30 Geo. II. c. 19, and a sum of 7000*l.* per annum instead was settled on the crown out of the stamp duties. So to the profits of royal forests, now out of date. Again, it had the profits of the ordinary courts of justice; but these having been mostly granted away, return but little to the crown. Next, the crown is entitled to royal fish, that is, to certain parts of the whale and to sturgeons caught near or cast on our coast. Also to ships wrecked on the coast, wherein nothing living escapes; for, to constitute a wreck, this is necessary, as also that the goods should be cast ashore (which distinguishes wreck from either jetsam, flotsam, or ligan—three old and barbarous appellations; the first signifying things cast into the sea, and remaining there; the second, things floating on the surface; and the third, things sunk but marked by a buoy in order to be reclaimed). Wrecks are rendered by this definition very rare; and the owner may, moreover, assert his claim at any time within a year and a day. To prevent an old disgraceful and brutal practice, very severe laws are enacted against the plundering of wrecks, or contributing to damage a vessel; and persons contributing to the saving of the goods or vessel, in cases of wreck, are entitled to salvage.¹ All mines in England of gold and silver were part of the revenue; but this was put an end to by 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 33, and 5 W. & M. c. 6. Treasure trove still belongs to the crown; and secreting such is punished by fine and imprisonment. Goods stolen and thrown away by the thief in his flight, called waifs, belong to the crown; but the goods of a foreign merchant are not (for the benefit of trade) so considered. Estrays, that is, animals wandering without an owner, after proclamation and non-claim for a year and a day, belong to the crown. Another branch of revenue is the forfeiture of lands or goods for certain offences, the particulars of which will be mentioned hereafter.

The forfeiture called deodand, or of any personal chattel which had been the immediate occasion of the death of any reasonable creature, was also originally vested in the crown, though it seems to have been generally granted out to lords of manors. This has been abolished by the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 62, from 1st September, 1846. Escheats, that is, where by a defect of heirs there is no one to inherit, belong to the crown, as the original proprietor of all lands. And lastly, the custody of idiots supplied a part of the revenue of the crown.

Extraordinary Revenue.—From the falling off of the ordinary revenue, it became necessary to raise a revenue by other means, whence it is termed extraordinary. This is done by aids, subsidies, and supplies voted by the House of Commons, who, when they have voted a supply to her majesty, and settled the quantum of it, usually resolve themselves into what is called a committee of ways and means, to consider how it is to be raised.

The chief sources of the public revenue at present are the land tax, the post office, the customs and excise, stamps, assessed taxes, licences for hackney coaches, post horses, hawkers and pedlars, &c. &c.; for the management and collection of which several duties the laws and regulations are so numerous and important, that a separate and detailed consideration of each is indispensable.

¹ See 9 & 10 Vic. c. 99, by which the laws relating to Wreck and Salvage are consolidated and amended.

LAND TAX.

The land tax originated in those monthly assessments which were imposed in the time of the commonwealth, and were occasionally levied in the reign of Charles II. It has been assessed without intermission since the time of William III. It was at first intended as a rate on every species of income or property, and with that view was laid on personal estates as well as real: the profits of public offices and pensions, indeed, are still chargeable; and other personal estates were only relieved from it by an act of the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. The tax was formerly voted annually, and is so still as far as regards personal estates; but the charge on land was made perpetual by the 38 Geo. III. c. 60, for the purpose of being redeemed. The amount of the tax was then estimated at £2,037,527. 9s., of which £47,954. 1s. 2d. was the portion raised in Scotland, being an assessment of 4s. in the pound on a valuation made in the year 1692.

The plan for the redemption of the land tax was brought forward at a time when the public funds were exceedingly depressed; and the government of that day hoped, by enabling persons to discharge their estates from all future assessments of the land tax on payment of certain proportionate sums, to be able to pay off a considerable portion of the national debt. The tax was made subject to redemption either by the owner of the land, or, on failure of redemption by him within a certain period, by any other person: in the one case the land is actually exonerated from the tax, and in the other the tax remains chargeable on the land, but becomes payable to the person purchasing; the first is, therefore, properly, redemption; the latter, purchase. The sums paid for such redemption or purchase are laid out in stock, the purchase money being in all cases so regulated by the price of the funds as to produce an interest 1-11th part more than the amount of the land-tax redeemed or purchased. The plan, however, does not appear to have answered the expectations formed of it; for, five years after the passing of the act,¹ no more than £19,180,587 of the public debt had been redeemed by it, and that amount has not been since much increased.

The method of levying this tax is by charging a particular sum on each county, according to the valuation made in 1692, which is assessed and raised on individuals by commissioners appointed by act of parliament, and who must have been assessed to the tax at the rate of 100l. at least a year before. A receiver-general is appointed for each county by the crown, and the commissioners appoint assessors, collectors, clerks, and other subordinate officers. They also sign the assessment, and warrant to collect it. Parties considering themselves aggrieved may appeal, but to the commissioners alone whose decision is final.

¹ This act has been amended by several subsequent acts, viz. the 42 Geo. III. c. 116, 45 Geo. III. c. 77, 46 Geo. III. c. 133, 49 Geo. III. c. 67, by which more effectual provisions have been made for carrying the measure into effect, and powers given to corporations, tenants in tail, &c. to sell part of their estates for the purpose of exonerating the remainder from the tax. By the 46 Geo. III. c. 133, small livings and the lands of charitable institutions may be exonerated gratis.

The collectors have power to demand the sums assessed of the parties on the premises; and they may levy a distress on refusal to pay, without any further warrant than that of their appointment; and may break open doors in the day time, and chests wherein any goods or effects are secreted. The tax may be levied on wood lands by cutting timber; and the collector may seize tithes, tolls, and other annual profits. The sums due from the last quarterly payment may be levied at any time during the current quarter; but the collector is bound in that case to allow a reasonable time before distress.¹ Tenants having paid the tax may deduct it out of their rent.

The provisions of the 57 Geo. III. c. 93, relating to the costs of distresses under 20*l.* are extended to distresses for the land tax, by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 17.

POST OFFICE.

The acts relating to the regulation of the Post Office were very numerous, but a consolidation of them was effected in the year 1837 by the 1 Vict. cc. 32 to 36. The first act repealed all former acts on the subject; the second, c. 33, provides for the management of the Post Office, granting the exclusive privilege of conveying letters to the postmaster general, his deputies and agents; cc. 34 & 35 regulated the duties of postage and the franking of letters (but these have since been superseded by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96); and the last, c. 36, relates to offences against the Post Office, and the judicial administration of the Post-Office laws.

EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGE OF THE POST OFFICE.—By 1 Vict. c. 33 it is enacted, that wheresoever, within the United Kingdom and other her majesty's dominions, posts or post communications are established, the postmaster-general shall have the exclusive privilege of conveying from one place to another all letters, except in the following cases:—

Exceptions from the Exclusive Privilege of the Post Office.

- Letters sent by a private friend in his way, journey, or travel, so as such letters be delivered by such friend to the party to whom they are directed;
- Letters sent by a messenger on purpose, concerning the private affairs of the sender or receiver;
- Commissions or returns thereof, and affidavits and writs, process or proceedings, or returns thereof, issuing out of a court of justice;
- Letters sent out of the United Kingdom by a private vessel (not being a packet boat);
- Letters of merchants, owners of vessels of merchandize, or the cargo or loading therein, sent by such vessels of merchandize, or by any person employed by such owners for the carriage of such letters, according to their respective directions, and delivered to the respective persons to whom they shall be directed, without paying or receiving hire or reward, advantage or profit, for the same in anywise;
- Letters concerning goods or merchandize sent by common known carriers, to be delivered with the goods which such letters concern, without hire or reward or other profit or advantage for receiving or delivering such letters.

But nothing herein is to authorize any person to make a collection of such excepted letters. And the following persons are expressly forbidden to carry a letter, or to receive or collect or deliver a letter, although without hire or reward:—

Special Prohibitions.

Common known carriers, their servants or agents, (except a letter concerning goods in their carts or waggons or on their pack-horses); and owners, drivers, or guards of stage coaches; ¹ Gibbs v. Stead, 8 B. & Cres. 526.

Owners, master or commanders of ships, vessels, steam boats, passage or packet boats, passing coastwise or otherwise between ports or places within Great Britain or Ireland, or between, to, or from a port or ports within her majesty's dominions or territories out of the United Kingdom, or their servants or agents, except in respect of merchants, owners of ships, or goods on board.

Passengers or other persons on board any such ships, vessels, steam boat, passage or packet boat;

The owners of, or sailors, watermen, or others on board of a ship, vessel, steam boat or other boat or barge passing or repassing on a river or navigable canal within the United Kingdom or other her majesty's dominions.

And by 1 Vict. c. 36, § 1, not only all persons concerned in conveying letters (not exempt from the Post Office privilege) otherwise than by the post, but the senders thereof, are liable to a penalty of 5*l.* for every letter so conveyed, and of 100*l.* for every week during which the practice is continued. The penalty is incurred whether the letter be sent singly or with any thing else; and the onus lies on the party prosecuted to prove that the act was done in conformity to the Post Office laws.

POSTAGE DUTIES.—By the introduction of what has been termed “The Uniform Penny Postage,” (which first received the sanction of the legislature in the year 1839 by the passing of the 2 & 3 Vict.c. 52, which was brought into gradual operation by successive warrants of the Treasury, and has been confirmed and rendered permanent by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96) the whole system of postage duties has been entirely re-modelled. Increased facilities are afforded to the public for the reception and transmission of letters; the mode of charging “double, treble, &c.” postage according to the number of inclosures is altered to one by which the postage is ascertained by weight; the privilege of franking is abolished; and, to facilitate the dispatch of business, adhesive stamps, and stamped envelopes, for the pre-payment of letters, are issued by the Stamp Office, which may be obtained at any post office in the United Kingdom.

Scale of Weight.—All letters transmitted by post, whether inland, foreign, or colonial, and whether by packet or private ship, are charged by weight according to the following scale, without reference to the number of pieces of paper of which they consist, or the number of inclosures they contain:—

If not exceeding half an ounce in weight	.	One Rate of Postage.
If exceeding $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. and not exceeding 1 oz. in weight	.	Two Rates.
“ “ 1 oz. “ “ 2 oz. “	.	Four Rates.
“ “ 2 oz. “ “ 3 oz. “	.	Six Rates.
“ “ 3 oz. “ “ 4 oz. “	.	Eight Rates.

And so on, charging for every ounce above four ounces two additional rates, and the same for any fraction of an ounce.

Inland Letters.—The single uniform rate of postage on all letters passing between one part of the United Kingdom and another (including the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man), whether by the General or the London District or any other local post, and without reference to the distance they may be conveyed, is one penny if prepaid or stamped, and twopence if unpaid. When, therefore, exceeding half an ounce in weight, they become liable to the progressive rates of the above scale, the charge is 2*d.* an ounce for paid, and 4*d.* an ounce for unpaid letters, and the same for any fraction of an ounce.

In the case of letters being insufficiently stamped, double the amount of such insufficiency is chargeable on their delivery.

Letters re-directed and again forwarded by post are charged from the place of re-direction to the place of ultimate delivery at the rate of prepaid letters, whether the original postage was prepaid or not.

No letter exceeding sixteen ounces can be sent by the post between places in the United Kingdom ; but this limitation of weight does not extend to letters to or from places beyond sea. The following also are farther exceptions: 1. Petitions and addresses to her majesty ; 2. Petitions to either House of Parliament ; 3. Printed votes and proceedings of parliament ; 4. Letters to or from the public offices ; 5. Deeds, when sent in covers open at the ends ; and 6. Bankers parcels from London, if delivered at the office in St. Martin's-le-Grand. With these exceptions, all packets above the weight of sixteen ounces are immediately forwarded to the Dead Letter Office.

The 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96 directs, that no letter shall be sent by the post containing any explosive or other dangerous material or substance.

Registration of Letters.—Letters may be registered, in order to secure their safe delivery, on payment of a fee of one shilling in addition to the postage ; which registration fee must always be paid in money. A printed acknowledgment, stamped with the office stamp, is given to the person registering a letter ; and the person to whom the letter is addressed is required, on its delivery, to acknowledge its receipt in writing. This system of registration furnishes a secure mode of transmitting bank notes, bills, drafts, &c.

In the case of foreign, colonial, or ship letters, the registration does not extend beyond the port of dispatch in the United Kingdom. But letters addressed to France, and letters passing through France, are an exception to this rule ; as the French government undertake to provide for the security of registered letters until they shall be delivered if addressed to any place in France, or so long as they remain in the French territory if passing through France. For this purpose, besides the English registration fee of one shilling, and the English rate of postage to France, double the French rate to the place of destination must be paid.

Money Orders.—Persons having occasion to send small sums of money by the post may avoid risk by sending them through the Money Order Office. The commission charged is 3*d.* for any sum not exceeding 2*l.*, and 6*d.* for sums exceeding 2*l.* and not exceeding 5*l.* They may be obtained at every post-town, upon any other post-town.

Foreign and colonial letters, are subject to progressive additional rates according to the same scale of weight as inland letters, but are without limitation as to weight. When sent by private ship, they are called ship letters.

Letters to or from any of the British colonies, when sent by packet, are charged 1*s.* the single rate ; if from one colony to another, through the United Kingdom, 2*s.*

Letters between the United Kingdom and foreign countries by packet-boat vary according to their destination. They are for the most part required to be paid in advance ; and if posted or delivered at any other place than the port of the ship's arrival or departure, they are, in general, subject to an inland postage of 2*d.* the single rate in addition to the packet postage.

If stamps are used for the pre-payment of letters addressed to places out of the United Kingdom, care should be taken that they are to the proper amount. For when insufficiently stamped, they will, if addressed to places to which pre-payment is not compulsory, be charged on delivery as though no stamp had been affixed, and, if addressed to places to which pre-payment is compulsory, they will not be forwarded, but returned to the senders through the Dead Letter Office. This regulation applies also to printed votes and proceedings of parliament, and to newspapers.

Ship Letters.—Letters between the United Kingdom and places beyond the seas when conveyed by private ships (that is, by vessels not being packet-boats), in whatever part of the United Kingdom they may be posted or delivered, are charged eight-pence the single rate, or 1s. 4d. the ounce; those between places beyond seas through the United Kingdom, 1s. 4d. the single rate, or 2s. 8d. the ounce.

Exemptions from Ship-Letter Postage.—The owners, charterers, or consignees of vessels inward-bound, and the owners, consignees, or shippers of goods on board vessels inward-bound, are entitled to have their letters by such vessels free from postage if delivered at the port of arrival—if elsewhere, they are subject to the same duties as prepaid inland letters, provided the letters brought by any one vessel to any one such person shall not collectively exceed six ounces in weight (except in the case of letters brought by vessels coming from Ceylon, the Mauritius, the East Indies, or the Cape of Good Hope, for an owner, charterer, or consignee of the vessel, in which case they may be collectively twenty ounces in weight), and the owner, charterer, or consignee shall be described as such on the address and superscription, and, in the case of owners, shippers, or consignees of goods, it shall also appear by the ship's manifest that they have goods on board the vessel. The persons hereby exempted are entitled to have their letters coming within the above conditions before the master delivers the other letters in his charge to the Post Office.

If any person, with intent to evade the postage, falsely superscribe a letter as being the owner or the charterer or the consignee of a vessel conveying the same, or as the owner or the shipper or the consignee of goods shipped in such vessel, he shall forfeit 10l. for every such offence.

Regulations as to Ship Letters.—Masters of vessels, not being post-office packets, are allowed by the post office 2s. 6d. per 100 for letters and newspapers conveyed between places within the United Kingdom; and masters of vessels outward-bound to the East Indies are allowed 1d. for every letter, and 3d. for every newspaper. In all other cases the uniform sum of 2d. is allowed for each letter, whether outward or inward; the letter to be delivered at the first port.

The master of every vessel inward-bound must cause all letters on board (except those belonging to the owners of the vessel or of goods on board, not exceeding the prescribed weights) to be inclosed in a bag or envelope, sealed up, and addressed to any of her majesty's postmasters in Great Britain or Ireland, that they may be in readiness to be sent on shore by his own boat, or by the pilot boat, or by any other safe and convenient means, and delivered at the first regular post office which can be communicated with; and the master shall sign a declaration, in the presence of the person authorized by the postmaster general at such port, that he has delivered every letter bag, package, or parcel of letters that were on board, except such as are exempted by law. And no collector, comptroller, or officer of the customs shall permit such vessel to report until such declaration be made and produced; and no vessel shall be permitted to break bulk, or to make entry in any port of the British dominions, until all letters on board be delivered to the post office where posts are established, and from whence such letters may be dispatched by post, except such letters, commissions, and other matters as are exempted, and also except letters brought by a vessel liable to the performance of quarantine, which shall be delivered to the persons appointed to superintend the quarantine, that proper precautions may be taken before delivery thereof. And the principal officer of customs at every port shall search every vessel for letters on board contrary to the Post Office acts, and may seize all such, and forward them to the nearest post office; and the officer so seizing and sending them shall be entitled to a moiety of the penalties recovered. And in case an officer of the customs shall find a letter superscribed as the letter of an owner or charterer, or consignee or shipper, exceeding the weight limited, then he shall seize so many of the letters as shall reduce the remainder within the proper weight, and take the same to the nearest post office; and the postmaster of the place shall pay him such sum as is allowed by the postmaster-general, with consent of the Treasury, (not exceeding 2s. 6d.) for every letter so seized.

Every master of an outward-bound vessel refusing to take a post letter-bag delivered to him by any officer of the post office, is liable to a forfeiture of 200*l.*; and every master of a vessel who shall refuse or neglect to make the declaration of having delivered his ship's letters to the post office is liable to forfeit 50*l.* Every collector &c. permitting vessels to report before the above requisites have been complied with is also liable to forfeit 50*l.*

Any master of a vessel inward-bound, or any of the officers or crew, or any passenger, who shall knowingly have in his possession a letter, not exempted from the privilege of the Post Office, after the master shall have sent any part of his letters to the post office, shall forfeit 5*l.* for every letter; and every person who shall detain any such letter after demand made by an officer of customs, or by a person authorized by the postmaster-general to demand ship's letters, shall forfeit 10*l.* for every letter. Whether the letter be in the baggage or on the person of the offender, or otherwise in his custody, it shall be held to be in his possession.

Parliamentary Proceedings.—Printed votes and proceedings of parliament are forwarded by post between places in the United Kingdom, or sent to any of the colonies by packet boat (but not through France, nor to the East Indies by the Mediterranean packet boats viâ Syria or Egypt), and the printed votes and proceedings of colonial legislatures are brought to the United Kingdom by packet boat, at the rate of one penny for every four ounces. If forwarded by private ships, the charge is 2*d.* for the same weight.

Newspapers, &c.—Newspapers by the post from one town to another within the United Kingdom, are delivered free. But if addressed to a person within the limits of a district post, and passing only by that post, they pay 1*d.* each. So also when they go between places in the United Kingdom by private ships, they are charged 1*d.* each.

Newspapers printed in the United Kingdom are sent to the colonies, and newspapers printed in the colonies are brought to the United Kingdom, by the regular packet boats, free; but if by private ships, they are charged 1*d.* each.

Newspapers may be sent from one British colony to another viâ the United Kingdom by her majesty's packets, free of postage; but they pay 1*d.* when sent by private ships.

British newspapers sent to any foreign part, or foreign newspapers brought to the United Kingdom, whether by packet boats or private ships, are charged 2*d.* each. But where British newspapers are allowed to pass by post in a foreign country free, British newspapers addressed to such foreign country are transmitted, and newspapers printed in that country are brought by packet boats free, and by private ships for 1*d.* each.

Newspapers, and printed votes and proceedings of parliament, forwarded by post, must be sent without a cover, or in a cover open at the sides, without any paper or thing inclosed, and without any words or communication printed on the paper after its publication, or any writing or mark upon it or upon the cover, except the name and address of the person to whom it is sent; and in case any of these conditions be not fulfilled, such paper &c. will be liable to treble the duty of letter postage.

Newspapers intended to be sent either to the British colonies or to foreign parts must be put into the post within seven days after the day on which they were published; and foreign newspapers must be printed in the language of the country from which they have been forwarded. On failure of either of these provisions, they will be charged as letters.

In case any person to whom a printed newspaper brought into the United Kingdom is directed shall have removed, it may (provided it has not been opened) be re-directed, and forwarded by post to such person at any other place within the United Kingdom free of charge for such extra conveyance; but if the newspaper has been opened, it shall be charged with the rate of a single letter from the place of re-direction to the place at which it is ultimately delivered.

Soldiers' and Seamen's Letters.—Soldiers and seamen while actually employed in her majesty's service, either at home or abroad, and soldiers while actually employed in the service of the East India Company, may send and receive letters on their own private concerns only, not exceeding half an ounce in weight, for 1*d.* each.

The penny must be paid at the time the letter is put into the post office, or, if posted within the United Kingdom, it may be stamped; and on the letters sent by them must be superscribed the name of the writer, his class or description in the vessel, regiment, corps, or detachment, and the officer having the command must sign his name, specifying the name of the vessel, regiment, corps, or detachment.

Letters sent or received by such persons from parts beyond seas without the said postage of 1*d.* being pre-paid, are charged 2*d.*

Soldiers' and sailors' letters when sent or received by private ships are liable to the ship letter gratuities in addition.

They are not liable to any additional postage on re-direction.

The above privilege does not extend to letters liable to any foreign postage; nor to the letters of commissioned or warrant officers, either in the army or navy, or of midshipmen or master's mates of the navy.

Any act by which an improper evasion of postage duties is attempted through the means of this privilege subjects the party offending to the forfeiture of 5*l.*

Petitions and addresses forwarded by post to her majesty are exempt from postage. And members of either house of parliament may receive by the post petitions and addresses to her majesty, and petitions to either house of parliament, not exceeding 32 ounces in weight, exempt from postage, provided they are sent without covers, or in covers open at the ends. If they exceed 32 ounces in weight, they are charged at the same rate as inland letters.

With these exceptions, all privileges whatsoever of sending letters by the post free of postage, or at a reduced rate, have been entirely determined. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96, § 56.

RECOVERY OF POSTAGE DUTIES.—Duties of postage may be recovered by suit, action, or information in any of her majesty's courts of record, in the same manner as other revenue duties.

And any sum not exceeding 20*l.* due for postage from any person in her majesty's dominions, or from any person employed in the Post Office, or from the sureties of any such, may be recovered, under the warrant of a justice of the peace, by distress and sale of the goods of the person indebted; which warrant the justice is required to grant after having summoned the party before him, and on due proof that the sum is owing. The warrant is to be executed by a constable or other peace officer, who, for the purpose of taking such distress, may break open in the day-time any house or place where any goods of the party may be. And if no sufficient distress can be had, the justice may commit the person indebted to prison until the debt and all charges be paid.

OFFENCES AGAINST THE POST OFFICE.—The Post Office acts contain numerous provisions for the security of letters &c. committed to the Post Office, providing against the misconduct of their own servants as well as of other persons. The following are the most important, from their general application.

Persons employed in conveying Letters &c. misconducting themselves.—The 1 Vict. c. 36 enacts, that every person employed to convey or deliver a post-letter bag or a post letter who shall, whilst so employed, or whilst the same shall be in his care, leave a post-letter bag or a post letter, or suffer any person (not being the guard or person employed for that purpose) to ride in the place appointed for the guard in or upon any carriage used for the conveyance of letters, or to ride in or upon a carriage so used and not licensed to carry passengers, or upon a horse used for the conveyance on horseback of letters; or if any such person shall be guilty of any act of drunkenness, or of carelessness, negligence, or other misconduct, whereby the safety of a post-letter bag or a post letter shall be endangered; or who shall collect or receive, or convey or deliver, a letter otherwise than in the ordinary course of the post; or who shall give any false information of an assault or attempt at robbery upon him; or who shall loiter on the road or passage, or wilfully mis-spend his time, so as to retard or delay the progress or arrival of a letter bag or letter; or who shall not use due care and diligence safely to convey the same at the rate of speed appointed by the regulations of the Post Office, being thereof convicted, shall forfeit 20*l*.

Officers of the Post Office opening or delaying Letters.—Every person employed by or under the Post Office who shall, contrary to his duty, open or procure or suffer to be opened a post letter, or shall wilfully detain or delay, or procure or suffer to be detained or delayed, a post letter, shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall suffer such punishment by fine or imprisonment, or by both, as to the court shall seem meet. But nothing herein shall extend to the opening or detaining or delaying of a post letter returned for want of a true direction, or by reason that the person to whom the same is directed is dead, or cannot be found, or shall have refused the same, or to pay the postage thereof; nor to the opening or detaining or delaying of a post letter in obedience to an express warrant in writing under the hand (in Great Britain) of one of the principal secretaries of state, and in Ireland under the hand and seal of the lord lieutenant of Ireland.

Officers of the Post Office stealing or embezzling Letters, &c.—Every person employed under the Post Office who shall steal, or shall for any purpose whatever embezzle, secrete, or destroy a post letter, shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and shall, at the discretion of the court, either be transported beyond the seas for the term of seven years or be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years; and if any such post letter so stolen or embezzled, secreted or destroyed, shall contain therein any chattel or money whatsoever, or any valuable security, every such offender shall be transported beyond the seas for life.

Stealing Money &c. out of Letters.—Every person who shall steal from or out of a post letter any chattel or money or valuable security shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and shall be transported beyond the seas for life.

Stealing Letter-Bags or Letters.—Every person who shall steal a post-letter bag, or a post-letter from a post-letter bag, or shall steal a post letter from a post office, or from an officer of the Post Office, or from a mail, or shall stop a mail with intent to rob or search the same, shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and shall be transported beyond the seas for life.

And every person who shall steal or unlawfully take away a post-letter bag sent by a post-office packet, or who shall steal or unlawfully take a letter out of any such bag, or shall unlawfully open any such bag, shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and shall be transported beyond the seas for any term not exceeding fourteen years.

Receiving Letters &c. stolen or embezzled.—Every person who shall receive any post letter or letter bag, or any chattel or money or valuable security, the stealing or taking or embezzling or secreting whereof shall amount to a felony under the Post Office Acts, knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, taken, embezzled, or secreted, and to have been sent or to have been intended to be sent by the post, shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory after the fact, or for a substantive felony, and in the latter cases whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice: and every such receiver, howsoever convicted, shall be liable to be transported beyond the seas for life.

Fraudulently retaining or secreting Letters &c.—And every person who shall fraudulently retain, or shall wilfully secrete or keep or detain, or being required to deliver up by an officer of the Post Office, shall neglect or refuse to deliver up a post letter which ought to have been delivered to any other person, or a post-letter bag or post letter which shall have been sent, whether the same shall have been found by the person secreting, keeping, or detaining, or neglecting or refusing to deliver up the same, or by any other person, shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be punished by fine and imprisonment.

Stealing Newspapers, Votes of Parliament, &c.—Every person employed in the Post Office who shall steal, or shall for any purpose embezzle, secrete, or destroy, or shall wilfully detain or delay in course of conveyance or delivery thereof by the post, any printed votes or proceedings in parliament, or any printed newspaper, or any other printed paper whatever sent by the post without covers, or in covers open at the sides, shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall suffer such punishment by fine or imprisonment, or by both, as to the court shall seem meet.

Forging the Handwriting of the Receiver-General.—Every person who shall knowingly or wilfully forge or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be forged or counterfeited, the name or handwriting of the receiver-general for the time being of the General Post Office in England or Ireland, or of any person employed by or under him, to any draft, instrument, or writing whatsoever, for or in order to the receiving or obtaining of any money in the Bank of England or Ireland on account of the receiver-general of the Post Office, or shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any draft, warrant, or order of such receiver-general, or of any person employed by or under him, for money or for payment of money, with intent to defraud any person whomsoever, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be transported beyond the seas for life.

Forging Stamps, Dies, or Envelopes.—In order to carry out the principle of the uniform Penny Postage, it has become necessary to prepare dies for the stamps, and to manufacture a peculiar paper for the envelopes. With respect to the first, it is provided by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96, that every person forging or fraudulently making the dies or plates, or knowingly and without lawful excuse (proof whereof shall lie on the party accused) having in his possession any false dies, paper, &c., or falsely making any paper with such dies, shall, on conviction thereof, be guilty of felony, and be liable to transportation for seven years or imprisonment for any term not exceeding four and not less than two years. Similar precautions have been enacted with regard to the forging &c. of the paper for the stamped envelopes, by the 39th section of the same act; while by the 23d it is enacted, that if any person shall get off or remove the stamps from a letter &c. with intent to use the same on any other letter, or shall so use any such stamps so removed &c., or commit any other fraudulent act, contrivance, or device whatever, with intent to deprive her majesty of any of the postage rates, he shall forfeit the sum of 20*l*.

Recovery of Penalties.—All penalties imposed by the Post Office acts may be recovered, with costs, by any informer in the courts of the United Kingdom, either by action of bill, plaint, or information. And any justice of the peace having jurisdiction where the offence was committed may, within one year after the commission of such offence, hear and determine any offence against the Post Office Acts which subjects the offender to a penalty not exceeding 20*l*.; and, upon conviction of the offender, such justice shall issue his warrant for the penalty adjudged by him, together with costs, to be levied on the goods of the offender. In default of goods sufficient to meet the penalty and costs, the offender may be committed to prison until the same be paid. There is, however, a power of mitigating the full penalty, provided all reasonable costs be paid; and an appeal lies to the quarter sessions from the judgment of such justice. One moiety of the penalties so recovered goes to the crown, and the other to the informer, with full costs.

Accessories, &c.—In the case of every felony punishable under the Post Office Acts, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree; and every accessory after the fact (except only a receiver of any property or thing stolen, taken, embezzled, or secreted) shall, on conviction, be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years. And every person who shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any misdemeanor punishable under the Post Office Acts shall be liable to be indicted and punished as a principal offender. So also as to offences punishable on summary conviction.

And every person who shall solicit or endeavour to procure any other person to commit a felony or misdemeanor punishable by the Post Office Acts shall in England and Ireland be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being thereof convicted shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years.

It may here be observed, that the Post Office is not liable for any property lost or stolen from a letter, and no action will lie against the postmaster-general on account thereof. He does not come under the denomination of a carrier; for he enters into no contract, and has no hire; the postage of letters being an article of revenue, and not a mere reward for the conveyance. And though the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96 contains a clause (sect. 39) by which it is provided that in case the postmaster general shall at any time deem it expedient that any post letter should be registered by the Post Office, and that he may charge for each letter so registered such rate of postage, in addition to any other rates payable under the Post Office Acts, as he shall (with the consent of the Lords of the Treasury) direct, yet it is expressly declared that such registration shall not render the postmaster-general or the Post Office revenue in any manner liable for the loss of any such post letters or the contents thereof. For security it is recommended by the secretary of the Post Office to cut bank notes, drafts, &c., and send one half at a time, waiting till the receipt of one half is acknowledged before the other is sent, as the Bank would never pay the holder of that half which had been fraudulently obtained. When money, rings, lockets, &c. inclosed in a letter by the post are sent from London, care should be taken to deliver the same to the clerk at the window of the General Post Office; and when any such letter is sent from the country, it should be delivered into the hands of the postmaster. With respect to the sending of money by the post, however, the department styled the Money Office, by which parties may send sums of money under 5*l.* to any part of the kingdom without risk, on paying a per-centage, may be resorted to with perfect safety.

To prevent the possibility of letters being surreptitiously obtained from the offices when put in, office-keepers are strictly forbid returning to any persons whatever letters that may be applied for, under whatever circumstances the recovery may be urged. This is, moreover, forbid by the established principle, that the instant a letter is committed to the post it is no longer the property of the sender.

CUSTOMS.

CUSTOMS are duties payable upon commodities on their being imported into or exported from a country. They seem to have existed in England before the conquest ; but the king's claim to them was first established by the stat. 3 Edw. I. These duties were, at first, principally laid on wool, woolfels (sheep skins), and leather, when exported. There were also extraordinary duties paid by aliens, which were denominated parva costuma, to distinguish them from the former, or magna costuma. The duties of tonnage and poundage, of which such frequent mention is made in English history, were customs duties ; the former being a duty paid on wine by the tun, and the latter an ad valorem duty of so much in the pound on all other merchandise.

The various customs duties were for the first time collected in a Book of Rates in the reign of Charles II. A new book of rates was again published in the reign of George II. But as fresh duties were imposed from time to time, sometimes by adding a per-centage to former duties, and at others by charging the commodity according to a new standard of measure, weight, or value, without reference to former imposts, great confusion and inconvenience arose, which was still further increased by the special appropriation of certain of the duties requiring a separate calculation for each. To obviate these inconveniences, Mr. Pitt, in 1787, introduced a Customs Consolidation Act, abolishing the existing duties, and substituting a single duty on each article. Several similar consolidations have since been made. In 1825 the enactments relating to the customs had again accumulated to such an extent, that the statutes and parts of statutes which were repealed for the purpose of a fresh consolidation amounted to about 450. The whole law was then compressed into a few acts, of moderate size, and expressed with great perspicuity. Another consolidation took place in 1833 by the statutes 3 & 4 Wm. IV. cc. 50 to 60. Numerous alterations, however, having been made by subsequent acts, including, among others, an addition of 5 per cent to all the duties by the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 17, the introduction of a new and reduced tariff by the 5 & 6 Vic. c. 47, and the entire abolition of many of the duties, with a still further reduction of others, by the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 12, the whole of that series, with all the amending acts, has been repealed by the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 84, and a fresh consolidation once more effected by the ten subsequent acts of that session (8 & 9 Vic. cc. 85 to 94), which, with a few brief amendments by the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 102, form the present law on the subject.

I. MANAGEMENT OF THE CUSTOMS.

The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 85 empowers her majesty to appoint a Board of Commissioners (not exceeding thirteen) for the management of the customs of the United Kingdom and the British possessions abroad, under the direction of the Lords of the Treasury.

The officers employed in the execution of the various duties connected with the management and collection of the customs, under the commissioners, are very numerous. Their appointment, salaries and allowances, the securities required of them, hours of attendance, &c. are regulated by the lords of the Treasury, or by the commissioners of customs under their authority.

Every officer of customs on his appointment makes a declaration as prescribed by the act.

No commissioner or other officer of customs is liable to serve as a mayor or sheriff, or in any corporate or parochial or other public office or employment, or on any jury or inquest, or in the militia.

The collector at the port of London pays all duties received by him to the receiver-general daily; who pays the same into the Bank of England, retaining 1000*l.* at the close of each day. All debentures, certificates, &c., at the port of London, are paid by the receiver-general; and at other ports by the collector, the comptroller being duly apprised thereof. Forging the name or hand-writing of the receiver-general or controller-general to any instrument for the payment of money, or uttering such, is felony, punishable by transportation for life.

Any officer or person in the customs taking any fee, gratuity, or reward, except as allowed by the Treasury, is to be dismissed from his office; and any person offering or promising such is liable to a forfeiture of 100*l.*

The holidays in the customs are Christmas-day, Good Friday, general fast and thanksgiving days, and her majesty's birth-day; which days are to be kept as holidays by all the dock companies in the United Kingdom.

Where lands or buildings are required for the purposes of the customs, a sale may be compelled at a compensation to be fixed by a jury summoned for that purpose; but the owner may appeal to the Court of Exchequer in England or Ireland, and to the Court of Session in Scotland. It is expressly provided, however, that gardens and pleasure-grounds, and land immediately contiguous to and used as the curtilage, or court-yard, or homestead of any dwelling-house, are exempt from such compulsory sale. Contrary to the common-law right of the landlord as to fixtures, where lands have been leased to the customs, and are re-delivered to the lessor, the buildings erected thereon for the public-service may be removed by the commissioners, on making a compensation to the landlord, unless an agreement were originally made to the contrary.

II. CUSTOMS REGULATIONS.

The act for consolidating the law on this subject is the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 86, which contains a succinct series of regulations touching the importation and exportation of goods, so as to secure the payment of the duties.

INWARDS.—No goods are to be unladen from any ship arriving from beyond seas in the United Kingdom or the Isle of Man, nor bulk broken after arrival within four leagues of the coast, before due report of such ship and entry of the goods have been made, and warrant granted, as hereafter shown, or the goods are forfeited, and if bulk be broken, the master forfeits 100*l*. If, after arrival within such distance, any alteration be made in the stowage of the cargo, so as to facilitate the unloading, or if any part be staved, destroyed, or thrown overboard, or any package opened, it is deemed breaking bulk. But diamonds and bullion,—fresh fish of British taking and imported in British ships,—and lobsters fresh, however taken or imported, may be landed without report, entry, or warrant.—§ 2.

Manifest.—No goods are to be imported in a British ship, unless the master have on board a manifest, made out and dated and signed by him at the places where the goods were taken on board, and authenticated in manner hereafter shown. Such manifest must set forth the name and tonnage of the ship, the name of the master, the place to which the ship belongs, the places where the goods were taken on board, and the places of their destination respectively; and must contain a particular account and description of all the packages on board, with the marks and numbers thereon, and of the sorts of goods and different kinds of each sort contained therein, to the best of his knowledge, and the general denomination of the contents of every package containing cambrics or lawns, leather gloves, manufactures of silk, tobacco, cigars, or snuff, and the particulars of such goods as are stowed loose, and the names of the respective shippers and consignees, as far as the same are known to the master; and to such particular account must be subjoined a general account or recapitulation of the total number of the packages of each sort, describing the same by their usual names, or by such description as they are best known by, and the different goods therein, and also the total quantities of the different goods stowed loose. And all cambrics or lawns, leather gloves, manufactures of silk, tobacco, cigars, or snuff not so manifested, shall be forfeited.—§ 3.

For goods imported from a British possession abroad, the manifest must have been produced to and certified by the customs officer there.

If goods be imported without a manifest, or if any goods contained in the manifest be not on board, the master forfeits 100*l*.—§ 5.

The manifest must be produced to any officer coming on board after arrival within four leagues of the coast, and a copy thereof delivered, under penalty of 100*l*.—§ 6.

Master's Report.—Within twenty-four hours after arrival, and before breaking bulk, the master must make due report of the ship, and subscribe a declaration to the truth of the same, before the collector or comptroller. Such report must contain full particulars of the ship and cargo as in the manifest, and of the places where the goods were taken on board, the burthen of the ship, the country where built, or, if British, the port of registry, the country of the owners, the name and country of the master, the number of seamen &c., stating how many are subjects of the country to which the ship belongs, and how many of any other country; whether and in what cases the ship has broken bulk in the course of her voyage; what part of the cargo (if any) is intended for importation at such port, what part (if any) is intended for importation at another port, what part (if any) is prohibited to be imported except to be warehoused for exportation only, what part (if any) is intended for exportation in such ship to parts beyond the seas, what surplus stores or stock remain on board, and, if a British ship, what foreign-made sails or cordage (not being standing or running rigging) are in use on board, under penalty of 100*l*. Masters of vessels from the coast of Africa must report how many natives they have taken on board there, under penalty of 100*l*.; and the master or owner, at the time of making report, must, under penalty of 200*l*., enter into a bond of 100*l*. to maintain or send back such natives, so as to save harmless any parish.—§§ 7, 8.

Any package intended for exportation in the same ship, and reported “contents unknown,” may be opened and examined by the officers of customs; and if prohibited goods are found therein, they are forfeited.—§ 9.

The master, at the time of making his report, must deliver the manifest to the collector or comptroller of customs, and (if required) produce the bill of lading, or a copy thereof, for every part of the cargo, and answer all questions relating to the ship and cargo, crew, and voyage, truly, under 100*l*. penalty.—§ 10.

If any part of the cargo is reported for importation at another British port, the collector and comptroller are to notify such delivery on the manifest, and return the same to the master.—§ 11.

The ship must come quickly up to the proper place of mooring or unloading, without touching at any other place; and must bring to at stations appointed by the commissioners of customs, and not remove after arrival, except directly to some other proper place, and with the knowledge of the proper officer, under penalty of 100*l*. by the master. The commissioners may appoint places for mooring or unloading ships importing tobacco, where only they shall be moored or unladen; and where the place is not within a dock surrounded with walls, if the ship after having been discharged remain there, or if a ship not importing tobacco be moored at such place, the master shall forfeit 20*l*.—§ 12.

Goods unshipped from the importing vessel contrary to the regulations of the commissioners are declared to be forfeited, together with the craft or other means of conveyance; and a penalty of 100*l*. is imposed upon all persons concerned, or treble value of the goods, at the election of the commissioners.—§ 13.

Officers may board ships, and have free access to all parts, and may seal or secure goods; and any officer superior to a tidesman or waterman may open locks. If any goods are concealed, they become forfeited. If the seal &c. placed by the officer be broken, the master forfeits 100*l*. Provision is also made for ships in her majesty's commission, or of a foreign state, and their liability to search.—§§ 14, 15.

Entry of Goods.—The importer of goods must, within fourteen days after the ship's arrival, make perfect entry inwards of such goods, or entry by bill of sight, and within such time land the same; and in default thereof the officers of the customs may convey the goods to the queen's warehouse. When the cargo is discharged, with the exception only of a small quantity of goods, the officers may convey those remaining, and at any time may convey any small packages, to the queen's warehouse, although the fourteen days have not expired, to wait the due entry thereof during the remainder of the time. If the duties upon goods so conveyed be not paid within three months after such time, together with all charges of removal and warehouse rent, they may be sold, and the produce applied, first to the payment of freight and charges, next of duties, and the overplus to the proprietor.—§ 16.

Where goods remain on board a vessel beyond the time allowed by law, the vessel and goods may be detained until the expenses of guarding the goods have been paid, and if not paid within one month after demand in writing, the same may be sold, and the produce applied first in payment of the freight and charges, next of the duties, next of the expenses of the officer and of the charges of sale, and the overplus (if any) to the proprietor—§ 17.

The person entering goods must deliver to the collector or controller a bill of entry, fairly written in words at length, expressing the name of the ship and of the master, the place from whence they were brought, the description and situation of the warehouse (if they are to be warehoused), the person in whose name the goods are to be entered, the quantity and description of the goods, the number and denomination or description of the respective packages, with the marks and numbers, and pay down any duties payable. He must also deliver at the same time two or more duplicates of such bill, in which sums and numbers may be expressed in figures, and arranged in such form as the collector and comptroller may require; and such bill, being duly signed by the collector and controller, and transmitted to the landing waiter, is the warrant to him for the landing or delivering of such goods.—§ 18.

Unauthorized persons making entries forfeit 100l.—§ 19.

No entry, or warrant for landing goods, or taking goods out of warehouse, is valid, unless it agree with the manifest, report, and other documents, and unless the goods are properly described therein; and any goods taken or delivered out or demanded by virtue of any warrant not properly describing them, are to be deemed goods landed without due entry, and become forfeited.—§ 20.

If the goods pay duty by number, measure, or weight, the number, measure, or weight must be stated; and in the entry of goods ad valorem, a declaration of the value must be made, in a form prescribed by the act; so if it is optional how they are to be charged. Persons not authorized making such declaration forfeit 100l.—§ 21.

If goods are undervalued, officers may detain them for the use of the crown; and if a different rate of duty is charged upon goods according as their value is above or below any particular price, and the goods are valued in the entry so as to be liable to the lower rate of duty, and it appears to the officers that such goods are properly liable to the higher rate, the officers may in like manner take such goods for the use of the crown. The commissioners must thereupon, in any of such cases, cause the amount of the valuation, together with an addition of 10l. per cent, and also the duties paid upon entry, to be paid to the importer or proprietor in full satisfaction for the same, and dispose of the goods for the benefit of the crown. If the produce of the sale exceed the sums so paid and all charges, one moiety of the overplus is to be given to the officer who detained the goods, and the remainder carried to account as duties of customs.—§ 22.

In order that correct accounts may continue to be taken of the value of the imports of certain goods hitherto charged with duty according to their value, but the duties on which have been repealed, the value of such goods is to be stated in the entry, and affirmed by the declaration of the importer or his agent written upon the entry, and attested by his signature; and if false, the person signing forfeits not exceeding 20*l*.—§ 23.

Entry by Bill of Sight.—If the importer or his agent make and subscribe a declaration that he cannot make a full or perfect entry, the collector and comptroller may receive an entry by bill of sight for any packages of goods by the best description which can be given, and may grant a warrant thereupon, in order that the same may be provisionally landed, and examined by such importer in presence of the proper officer; and within three days after they have been landed, the importer must make a full and perfect entry, and either pay down all duties, or duly warehouse the goods according to the purport of the perfect entry. If when full or perfect entry is made for any goods provisionally landed by bill of sight, such entry be not made in manner before required, they are to be deemed landed without due entry, and become subject to forfeiture.—§ 24.

In default of perfect entry within such three days, the goods are to be taken to the queen's warehouse; and if the importer do not, within one month after landing, make perfect entry, and pay the duties on such parts as can be entered for home use, together with the charges of removal and warehouse rent, the goods are to be sold for the payment of such duties (or for exportation, if they be such as cannot be entered for home use, or be not worth the duties and charges) and of such charges, and the overplus paid to the importer or proprietor.—§ 25.

Where goods are entered by bill of sight, a deposit equal in amount to the duties must be made by the importer or his agent, who must make and subscribe a declaration that the deposit is sufficient to cover the duties.—§ 26.

If the deposit be not equal to the amount of duty upon all the goods in any single package, no part shall be delivered until perfect entry be made of the whole of the goods in such package.—§ 27.

Before any goods in respect of which a bill of sight has been granted shall be delivered by the officer, the importer or his agent shall indorse upon the bill of sight a particular account thereof, affixing his signature and place of abode, with the date of such indorsement; and such indorsement shall, upon being signed by the collector and comptroller, become the perfect entry. But this is not to affect any other of the regulations as to bills of entry.—§ 28.

If in any package or parcel landed by bill of sight, any goods or other things be found concealed in any way, or packed with intent to deceive the officers of customs, as well all such goods as the package or parcel and all other things contained therein are forfeited.—§ 29.

Abatement of Duty on account of Damage.—If goods rated to pay duty according to number, measure, or weight, (except certain goods hereafter mentioned) receive damage during the voyage, an abatement of duties is allowed in proportion; provided proof be made that the damage was received after the goods were shipped and before they were landed, and provided claim be made at the time of the first examination. § 30. The officers of customs are to examine such goods, and state the proportion of damage; but if the importer is not satisfied with the abatement made, the collector and comptroller are to choose two indifferent merchants, who shall examine the goods, and declare in what proportion they are lessened in value, and the officers may make an abatement accordingly. § 31. But no abatement of duties is to be made for any damage received by any of the following goods:—

Cantharides	Currants	Jalap	Oranges	Sarsaparilla	Tea
Cocoon	Figs	Lemons	Pepper	Senna	Tobacco
Coculus Indicus	Guinea Grains	Nux Vomica	Raisins	Sugar	Wine.
Coffee	Ipecacuanha	Opium	Rhubarb

Goods re-imported.—Any goods (except as hereafter excepted) may be re-imported from any place in a ship of any country, which have been legally exported from the United Kingdom, and may be entered by bill of store, referring to the entry outwards and exportation thereof, provided the property continue in the person by whom they were exported, and such re-importation be within six years. If the goods so returned be foreign goods which had before been legally imported, the same duties are payable as would at the time of re-importation be payable on the like goods under the same circumstances of importation as those under which they had been originally imported; or such goods may be warehoused as upon a first importation. The following goods, however, may not be re-imported for home use upon the ground that they had been legally exported, but are to be deemed foreign, whether originally such or not, and as if imported for the first time:—

CORN, GRAIN, MEAL, FLOUR, and MALT. HOPS. TEA.

Goods for which any bounty or any drawback of excise had been received on exportation, unless by special permission of the Commissioners of Customs, and on repayment of such bounty or such drawback.

All Goods for which Bill of Store cannot be issued in manner hereinafter directed; except small remnants of British goods by special permission of the Commissioners, upon proof to their satisfaction that the same are British, and had not been sold.

And tobacco re-imported by bill of store is subject to all the restrictions imposed upon tobacco imported.—§ 33.

The person in whose name the goods so re-imported were entered for exportation must deliver to the searcher an exact account of the particulars of such goods, referring to the entry and clearance outwards and to the return inwards, with the marks and numbers of the packages both inwards and outwards; and thereupon the searcher grants a bill of store for the same. If the person in whose name the goods were entered for exportation was not the proprietor, but his agent, he shall declare upon oath on such bill of store the name of the person by whom he was employed; and if the person to whom such returned goods are consigned be not proprietor and exporter, he shall subscribe a declaration on such bill of store of the name of the person for whose use such goods have been consigned to him; and the real proprietor must make and subscribe a declaration upon such bill of store to the identity of the goods, and that he was at the time of exportation and of re-importation the proprietor, and that the same had not during such time been disposed of to any other person. Such declaration must be made before the collectors or controllers at the ports of exportation and of importation respectively; and thereupon the collector or comptroller shall admit such goods to entry by bill of store, and grant a warrant accordingly.—§ 34.

Surplus stores are subject to the same duties and regulations as the like goods when imported by way of merchandize ; but if it appear to the collector and comptroller that the quantity or description be not excessive, they may permit them to be entered for the private use of the master, purser, or owner, or of any passenger to whom they belong, on payment of the duties, or to be warehoused for the use of the ship, although they could not be legally imported by way of merchandize.—§ 35.

Goods from British Possessions, &c.—No goods can be entered as being of or from any British possession abroad, if any benefit attach to such distinction, (except the territories belonging to Fort William in Bengal, Fort St. George, and Bombay) unless the master deliver a certificate, under the hand of the proper officer of the place where such goods were taken on board, of the due clearance of the ship from thence, containing an account of such goods.—§ 36.

And the Treasury may make orders, that a certificate of production shall be required upon the exportation of any goods from any British possession abroad, or upon the importation of such goods into the United Kingdom ; and all goods imported without such certificate when required shall be deemed foreign goods.—§ 37.

Before any sugar, coffee, cocoa, or spirits can be entered as the produce of any British possession in America or of the island of Mauritius, the master must deliver a certificate, under the hand of the proper officer of the place abroad, testifying that proof had been made that such goods are of such produce, stating the name of the place where they were produced, their quantity and quality, the number and denomination of the packages, and the name of the ship and of the master, and also subscribe a declaration that such certificate was received by him at the place where such goods were taken on board, and that the goods are the same as are mentioned therein.—§ 38.

A like certificate and declaration are necessary on the importation of sugar from the East Indies, and of wines from the Cape of Good Hope.—§§ 39, 40, 41.

Goods the produce or manufacture of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark, or Man, may be imported thence without payment of any duty, except such as may fairly countervail any duties of excise, or any coast duty, payable on the like goods the produce of the part of the United Kingdom into which they are imported ; with a similar provision as to certificate and declaration. But such exemption from duty does not extend to any manufactures made from materials the produce of any foreign country, except manufactures of linen and cotton made in and imported from the Isle of Man.—§§ 42, 43.

The Treasury is empowered to permit goods the produce of the British possessions or fisheries in North America, which have been legally imported into the islands of Guernsey or Jersey direct, to be imported from those islands.—§ 44.

Vessels arriving from Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark, or Man, wholly laden with stone the production thereof, need not be piloted by pilots licensed by the Trinity House.—§ 45.

Fish.—Fresh fish of every kind, of British taking and imported in British ships; fresh lobsters, however taken or imported; and cured fish of every kind, of British taking and curing, imported in British ships, are free of all duties. But before any cured fish can be entered free of duty, the master must make and subscribe a declaration that such fish was actually caught and taken in British ships, and cured by the crews or by her majesty's subjects.—§ 46.

A similar declaration is required on the importation of blubber, train oil, spermaceti oil, head matter, or whale fins, and if from a British possession, a certificate from the proper officer there.—§§ 47, 48.

No goods are to be deemed imported from any particular place unless they are imported direct from such place, and have been there laden on board the importing ship, either as the first shipment of such goods, or after they have been actually landed at such place.—§ 49.

Goods the property of the crown are liable, in case of sale after their importation, to the same customs duties as others.—§ 50.

Wrecked Goods.—All foreign goods derelict, jetsam, flotsam, and wreck, and all droits of admiralty, are subject to the same duties as goods of the like kind imported. But the commissioners, or officers of customs acting under their directions, may inquire into the extent of damage, and make abatement of duties accordingly, except on cantharides, cocoa, coffee, coculus Indicus, currants, figs, Guinea grains, ipecacuanha, jalap, lemons, nux vomica, opium, oranges, pepper, raisins, rhubarb, sarsaparilla, senna, spirits, sugar, tea, tobacco, and wine; on which articles no abatement of duty is to be made. If any question arise as to their origin, they are to be deemed of the growth of such place as the commissioners shall determine.—§§ 51, 52. (1)

Exciseable Goods.—No goods subject to regulations of excise are to be delivered out of the charge of the officers of customs (although duly entered, and the full duties paid) until they have also been entered with the officers of excise, and permit granted, nor unless the permit correspond in all particulars with the warrant of the officers of customs. And such entry is not to be received by the officers of excise, nor permit granted, until a certificate is produced of the particulars of the goods and of the warrant under the hand of the officers of customs. And if it appear necessary, the officers of excise may attend the delivery of such goods by the officers of customs, and require that they be delivered only in their presence; and may count, measure, gauge, or weigh such goods, and fully examine the same, and proceed in all respects as they are authorized by any act in force relating to the excise.—§ 55.

To distinguish foreign from British articles subject to duties of excise, the commissioners of customs, after such goods have been entered at the custom-house, and before they are delivered to the importer or his agent, may mark or stamp them in such manner as they may deem proper. Orders for so marking or stamping goods to be published in the London and Dublin Gazettes. A penalty of 200*l.* attaches on forging such stamps.—§§ 56, 57.

¹ By sec. 53, persons having such goods in their possession without giving notice were liable to 100*l.* penalty. And by sec. 54, when such goods were reported to the officers of customs, notice was to be given to the receiver-general of droits of admiralty and the goods placed at his disposal, and if not claimed within twelve months, might be sold without any process from the Court of Admiralty. But by the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 99, so much of this act as relates to goods derelict, jetsam, flotsam, or wreck, and to the disposal of such goods, was repealed, for the purpose of consolidating the laws relating to wreck and salvage. Provisions however, nearly to the same effect, are enacted by that act.

Times and Places for landing Goods.—No goods (except diamonds, bullion, fresh fish of British taking and imported in British ships, and lobsters) may be unshipped from any ship arriving from beyond seas or put on shore on Sundays or holidays, and on other days only in the day-time (that is, from the 1st September to the last day of March between sun-rising and sun-setting, and from the last day of March to the 1st of September between seven o'clock in the morning and four in the afternoon), nor unless in the presence or with the authority of the proper officer of customs. And all such goods must be landed at one of the legal quays, or at some wharf &c. appointed by the commissioners for the landing of goods by sufferance. And no goods, after having been unshipped, are to be transhipped, or, after having been put into any boat to be landed, can be removed into any other boat previously to their being duly landed, without the permission of the proper officer.—§ 59.

If goods imported from foreign parts are removed from any vessel, quay, wharf, or other place previous to their examination by the proper officer, except by his order or authority in writing, and for the purpose therein expressed, every person concerned or assisting in such removal, or who shall knowingly harbour, keep, or conceal, or shall knowingly permit or suffer to be harboured, kept, or concealed any such goods, or into whose hands and possession they shall come, shall forfeit, either treble the value thereof or the penalty of 100*l.*, at the election of the commissioners of customs.—9 & 10 Vic. c. 102, § 6.

The unshipping, landing, and weighing of goods to be at the expence of the importer.—8 & 9 Vic. c. 86, § 60.

Foreign fish to be landed and entered under the regulations of the commissioners, under penalty of forfeiture. § 61.

Timber or wood to be piled at the expence of the importer, so as to enable the officer of customs to measure it; and when measured in bulk, the measurement is to be taken to the full extent of the pile, without any allowance for the interstices. But battens, boards, deals, and planks exceeding 21 feet in length, may be measured by the piece, and the account taken separately.—§ 62.

Prohibitions and Restrictions Inwards—All goods imported or brought into the United Kingdom contrary to the prohibitions or restrictions in the following Table become forfeited. § 63. And all goods subject to restrictions as to package upon importation are subject to the same restrictions when brought into the United Kingdom for exportation in the same ship, on pain of forfeiture.—9 & 10 Vic. c. 102, § 5.

A TABLE OF PROHIBITIONS AND RESTRICTIONS INWARDS.

A List of Goods absolutely prohibited to be imported.

ARMS, AMMUNITION, and UTENSILS OF WAR, by way of merchandize, except by licence from her majesty, for furnishing her majesty's public stores only.
ARTICLES OF FOREIGN MANUFACTURE, and any packages of such articles, bearing any names, brands, or marks purporting to be the names, brands, or marks of manufacturers resident in the United Kingdom.

BOOKS, wherein the copyright shall be subsisting, first composed or written or printed in the United Kingdom, and printed or reprinted in any other country, as to which the proprietor of such copyright or his agent shall have given to the commissioners of customs a notice in writing that such copyright subsists, such notice also stating when such copyright will expire.

PAPER printed on in the English language.

INDECENT or OBSCENE PRINTS, Paintings, Books, Cards, Lithographic or other Engravings, or any other Indecent or Obscene Articles.—9 & 10 Vic. c. 102, § 19.

CLOCKS and WATCHES of any metal, impressed with any mark or stamp appearing to be or to represent any legal British assay mark or stamp, or purporting by any mark or appearance to be of the manufacture of the United Kingdom, or not having the name and place of abode of some foreign maker abroad visible and permanently marked or engraved on the frame and also on the face, or not being in a complete state, with all the parts properly fixed in the case.

COIN, viz.

— False Money, or Counterfeit Sterling.

— Silver, of the realm, or any money purporting to be such, not being of the established standard in weight or fineness.

GOODS FROM THE ISLE OF MAN, except such as be of the growth, produce, or manufacture thereof of the United Kingdom, and except Corn, Grain, Meal, or Flour.

GUNPOWDER, except by licence from her majesty; such licence to be granted for furnishing her majesty's stores only.

MALT.

SNUFF-WORK.

SPIRITS FROM THE ISLE OF MAN.

TOBACCO-STALKS stripped from the leaf, whether manufactured or not.

TOBACCO-STALK FLOUR.

List of Goods subject to certain Restrictions on Importation.

FISH of foreign taking, and all Train Oil, Blubber, Spermaceti Oil, Head Matter, Skins, Bones, and Fins, the produce of fish or creatures living in the sea, (except Anchovies, Eels, Turbots, and Lobsters), unless in vessels which shall have been cleared out regularly with such fish on board from some foreign port.

GOODS of places within the limits of the East India Company's charter, unless into ports approved of by the Lords of the Treasury, and declared by order in council to be fit and proper for such importation.

GLOVES of LEATHER, unless in ships of 60 tons burden or upwards, and in packages each containing 100 dozen pairs of such gloves at least.

HIDES, SKINS, HORNS, or HOOFs, or any other part of Cattle or Beast, her majesty may by order in council prohibit, in order to prevent any contagious distemper.

PARTS OF ARTICLES viz., Any distinct or separate part of any article not accompanied by the other part or all the other parts of such article, so as to be complete and perfect, if such article be subject to duty according to the value thereof.

SILK viz., Manufactures of Silk being the manufactures of Europe, unless into the ports of London, Liverpool, Hull, or Southampton, or ports appointed by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, or into the port of Dublin direct from Bourdeaux, or into the port of Dublin direct from Calais or Boulogne; and unless in ships of 60 tons burden or upwards.

SPIRITS (not being Perfumed or Medicinal Spirits), unless in ships of 60 tons burden at least;

— also unless in casks or other vessels capable of containing liquids, each of such casks or other vessels being of the size or content of 20 gallons at the least, or in glass bottles or stone bottles not exceeding the size of quart bottles [or, if Geneva, in glass bottles containing not more than three pints each, 9 & 10 Vic. c. 102], and being really part of the cargo of the ship in which the same are imported, and included in the manifest or other papers enumerating or descriptive of the cargo thereof.

TEA, unless from the Cape of Good Hope or from places eastward of the same to the Straits of Magellan.

TOBACCO and SNUFF viz.

— unless in ships of 120 tons burden or upwards;

— also unless in hogsheds, casks, chests, or cases containing 300 lbs. weight of Tobacco or Snuff each at least, not being separated or divided in any manner within the cask or package; except that Tobacco of the dominions of the Turkish empire may be packed in inward bags or packages, or separated or divided in any manner, provided the outward package be a hogshedd, cask, chest, or case, containing at least 300 lbs. net weight of tobacco;

— Tobacco and Snuff from the East Indies, unless in hogsheds, casks, chests, or cases, each of which shall contain at least 100 lbs. net weight of Tobacco or Snuff;

— Cigars, unless in packages containing 100 lbs. weight of cigars at least;

- Tobacco the produce of the island of Porto Rico, and Tobacco the produce of Trinidad, or of Mexico, or of South America, or of the islands of Saint Domingo or Cuba, or any Tobacco which can be legally imported from Malta for home consumption, unless in packages each containing at least 80 lbs. net weight of such Tobacco. (8 & 9 Vic. c. 6, as amended by 9 & 10 Vic. c. 102, sec. 2.)
- Negrohead Tobacco the produce of and imported from the United States of America, unless in packages each containing at least 150 lbs. net weight of such tobacco ;
- and unless into the ports of London, Liverpool, Bristol, Lancaster, Cowes, Falmouth, Whitehaven, Hull, Port Glasgow, Greenock, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Leith, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Plymouth, Belfast, Cork, Drogheda, Dublin, Galway, Limerick, Londonderry, Newry, Sligo, Waterford, and Wexford ;
- - - or into some other port or ports which may hereafter be appointed for such purpose by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, such appointments in Great Britain being published in the London Gazette, and in Ireland in the Dublin Gazette ;
- - - But any ship wholly laden with Tobacco may come into the ports of Cowes or Falmouth to wait for orders, and there remain fourteen days, provided due report of such ship be made by the master with the collector or comptroller of such port.

But goods of any sort may be imported to be warehoused, although prohibited to be imported for home use, except the following :—

Goods prohibited on account of the package in which they are contained, or the tonnage of the ship in which they are laden.

ARMS, AMMUNITION, or UTENSILS OF WAR.

GUNPOWDER.

INFECTED HIDES, HORNS, HOOFs, SKINS, or any other part of any cattle or beast.

COUNTERFEIT COINS or TOKENS.

BOOKS wherein the copyright shall be subsisting, first composed or written or printed in the United Kingdom, and printed or reprinted in any other country, as to which the proprietor of such copyright or his agent shall have given to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs a notice in writing that such copyright subsists, such notice also stating when such copyright will expire.

COPIES of PRINTS first engraved, etched, drawn, or designed in the United Kingdom.

COPIES or CASTS of SCULPTURES or MODELS first made in the United Kingdom.

CLOCKS or WATCHES, being such as are prohibited to be imported for home use.—8 & 9 Vic. c. 86. § 64.

ARTICLES of FOREIGN MANUFACTURE, and any packages of such articles, bearing any names, brands, or marks purporting to be the names, brands, or marks of manufacturers resident in the United Kingdom.—9 & 10 Vic. c. 102, § 8.

If goods be such or so imported that they may not be used in the United Kingdom, they shall not be entered except to be warehoused, and it must be declared upon the entry that they are entered to be warehoused for exportation only.—8 & 9 Vic. c. 86, § 65.

OUTWARDS.—No goods are to be shipped for exportation beyond seas, before due entries of the ship and of the goods outwards have been made, and cocket granted, and the goods have been duly cleared for shipment; and no stores are to be shipped for the use of the ship, except such as are borne upon the victualling bill, on pain of forfeiture. § 66. And no ship, on board of which any goods or stores have been shipped, shall depart until the ship has been duly cleared outwards, under forfeiture of 100*l.* by the master. § 67. A victualling bill for the shipment of stores may be obtained by the master on application to the searcher.—§ 68.

Entry of Ship outwards.—Before any goods are taken on board, the master must deliver a certificate of the clearance inwards or coastwise of the last voyage, specifying what goods were reported inwards for exportation; also an account, signed by himself or his agent, of the entry outwards, setting forth the name and tonnage of the ship, the name of the place to which she belongs if a British ship, or of the country if a foreign ship, of the master, of the place where she is bound if any goods are to be shipped for the same, and of the place in such port at which she is to take in her lading; and if the ship have commenced her lading at some other port, the master must state the name of the port at which any goods have been laden, and produce a certificate from the searcher that the cockets for such goods have been delivered. If any goods be taken on board before such entry, the master forfeits 100*l.*; but if it be necessary to lade any heavy goods before the whole of the inward cargo is discharged, a stiffening order is issued for the purpose.—§ 69.

Entry of Goods outwards.—The person entering outwards any goods for exportation must deliver to the collector or comptroller a bill of the entry thereof, and pay down the duties; whereupon the collector and comptroller cause a cocket to be written, certifying that the goods have been so entered.—§ 70.

If any drawback or bounty be allowable, or any duty payable, or any exemption from duty claimed, or if the goods be exportable only according to some particular regulation, they must be entered and cleared as such.—§ 71.

The person intending to enter outwards any foreign goods for drawback, or any foreign goods to be exported from the warehouse, or any foreign goods upon which the duties inwards are required to be paid before exportation, must first deliver to the collector or controller of the port where the goods were imported or are warehoused, two or more bills (as the case may require) of the particulars of the importation and of the entry outwards intended to be made; and the collector and comptroller finding such bills to agree with the entry inwards, write off such goods, and issue a certificate of such entry for warehousing or payment of duties, as the case may be, with such particulars as are necessary for the computation of the drawback, or for the delivery from the warehouse, setting forth in such certificate the destination of the goods, the person in whose name they are to be entered for exportation, and the ship in which they are to be exported, if they are to be exported from the port where such certificate is issued, but if from another port then only the name of such other port; and such certificate, together with the bills, being delivered to the collector or comptroller of the port from which the goods are to be exported, is the entry outwards of such goods, and a cocket is delivered of such goods as before directed.—§ 72.

No drawback shall be allowed on any tobacco which is not wholly manufactured from tobacco on which the full duty on importation has been paid, nor on any tobacco mixed with dirt or rubbish or other ingredients. And every person who shall enter or ship, or cause to be entered or shipped, or produce or cause to be produced to any officer of customs to be shipped, for exportation or for stores, any tobacco not entitled to drawback, with intent unduly to obtain any drawback thereon, or any greater drawback than he would otherwise be entitled to, shall, over and above all other penalties, forfeit treble the amount of drawback sought to be obtained, or 200*l.*, at the election of the commissioners; and all such tobacco shall be forfeited, and may be seized by any officer of customs or excise.—§ 73.

No drawback shall be allowed upon the exportation of any goods entered for drawback, or as stores, which shall be of less value than the amount of drawback claimed ; and all such goods so entered shall be forfeited, and the person who caused them to be entered shall forfeit the sum of 200*l.*, or treble the amount of drawback claimed, at the election of the commissioners.—§ 74.

Upon the entry outwards of any goods, except wine, upon which a drawback is allowed, and before cocket is granted, the person in whose name they are entered shall give bond in double the value of the goods, with one surety, that such goods shall be duly shipped and exported, and landed at the place for which they are entered outwards, or otherwise accounted for to the satisfaction of the commissioners of customs, within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the commissioners with reference to the place of exportation. Such bonds to prevent the re-landing of plate are subject only to the same stamp duty as other customs bonds.—§§ 75, 76.

No cocket can be granted for the exportation of coals to any British possession in a foreign ship, until the exporter give bond in double the amount of duty, that they shall be landed there, and to produce certificate of such landing. Bonds not liable to stamp duty.—§ 77.

Clearance of Goods.—Before any part of the goods for which a cocket is granted can be shipped, they must be duly cleared with the searcher ; and before they can be so cleared, the particulars must be indorsed on the cocket, together with the number and denomination or description of the respective packages, with the respective marks and numbers delineated in the margin, and subjoined to each, in words at length, an account of the total quantities of each sort of goods, and the total number of each sort of packages, distinguishing such as are to be cleared for any bounty or drawback, such as are subject to any duty on exportation or entitled to any exemption, and such as can only be exported under any particular restriction. All goods shipped, or waterborne to be shipped, not duly cleared, become forfeited. The cocket so indorsed being produced to the searcher, together with a shipping bill, or copy of such indorsement, he orders the shipment of the goods.—§§ 78, 79.

Coals brought coastwise, or any part of them, may be entered outwards for parts beyond sea without being first landed, provided the customs officers are satisfied that the quantity left on board does not exceed the quantity so entered outwards.—§ 80.

Upon the clearance of goods the produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom, and also upon the clearance of foreign goods formerly charged with duty according to value, but the duties on which have been repealed, an account, containing an accurate specification of their quantity, quality, and value, with a declaration to the truth of the same, signed by the exporter or his known agent, must be delivered to the searcher ; and if such declaration be false, the person signing it forfeits 20*l.* And the searcher may call for the invoice, and such other documents as he may think necessary for ascertaining their true value. If the exporter or his agent make a declaration that the value of the goods cannot be ascertained in time for the shipment, a further time of three months may be allowed for the delivery of such separate shipping bill ; on failure whereof such exporter or agent shall forfeit 20*l.*—§ 81.

No drawback of excise can be allowed unless a proper document under the hand of the officer of excise, containing the necessary description of the goods, is produced to the searcher at the time of clearing.—§ 82.

The excise officer, if he see fit, may attend the examination, and mark or seal the packages, and keep joint charge of them with the searcher, until finally delivered to be shipped and exported.—§ 83.

If goods subject to any duty or restriction in respect of exportation, or goods which are to be shipped for any drawback or bounty, be brought to any wharf &c. to be shipped, and they do not agree with the indorsement on the cocket, or with the shipping bill, they are forfeited; and if any goods prohibited to be exported be found in any package so brought, such package and every thing contained therein are forfeited. The searcher may open any package; but if correct, he must repack at his own charge.—§§ 84, 85.

Clearance of Ship.—Before any ship can be cleared outwards for parts beyond the seas with goods on board, the master must deliver a content to the searcher, containing the particulars of ship and cargo; and the cockets of the goods shipped must be finally delivered by the respective shippers. The searcher then files the cockets, attaching a label thereto to show the number, compares the particulars of the goods in the cockets with the content, and attests the correctness by his signature on the label to the file of cockets, and on the content. The master must also declare to the truth of the content, and answer all questions relating to the ship and cargo, before the collector or comptroller, who thereupon clears the ship, notifying such clearance and the date thereof upon the content, upon the label to the file of cockets, and also in the book of ships' entries outwards. The content, cockets, and victualling bill being then transmitted to the searcher, he delivers the file of cockets and the victualling bill to the master as his authority for departing from the port with the several goods and stores on board agreeing therewith.—§§ 86, 87.

The master of a ship departing in ballast, having no goods except the stores borne upon the victualling bill, or any goods reported inwards for exportation, must, before departure, answer all questions touching her departure and destination, and the collector or comptroller notifies the clearance on the victualling bill, which is kept by the master as the clearance of the ship. Slate or slates and chalk to be deemed ballast.—§§ 88, 89.

If there be on board any goods of the inward cargo which were reported for exportation, the master must, before clearance outwards, deliver to the searcher a copy of such report certified by the collector or comptroller; which, being found to correspond with the goods on board, is the authority to the searcher to pass the ship, and, being signed by the searcher and filed with the cockets, is the clearance of the ship for those goods.—§ 90.

If there be any passengers on board, the master may enter their baggage in his own name; and if there be no other goods except baggage only, such ship shall be deemed to be in ballast.—§ 91.

If the master and crew of a foreign ship departing in ballast are desirous to take on board chalk rubbish by way of ballast, or to take with them for their private use any small quantities of goods of British manufacture, it shall be lawful for the master, without entering such ship outwards, to pass an entry in his name, and receive a cocket free of any export duty for all such goods under the general denomination of British manufactures not prohibited to be exported, being for the use of the master and crew, and not being of greater value than 20*l.* for the master, 10*l.* for the mate, and 5*l.* for each of the crew, and stating that the ship is in ballast.—§ 92.

Officers may board ships after clearance, and goods not found on cockets are forfeited; and for goods on cockets not on board, the master forfeits 20*l.*, and for cockets falsified, 100*l.* § 93.

Ships departing must bring to at appointed stations.—§ 94.

Debenture Goods.—No drawback or bounty shall be allowed upon exportation, unless the goods have been entered in the name of the real owner at the time of entry and shipping, or of the person who had actually purchased and shipped the same in his own name and at his own liability and risk on commission. The owner must make oath on the debenture, that the goods are actually exported; and if he has not purchased the right to the drawback, must declare the person entitled to it. Owners resident twenty miles from the port of shipment may appoint an agent to act for them; and any joint stock company may do the same. The property of persons residing abroad, and consigned to an agent in the United Kingdom, may be exported by him on account of the owners, and he may receive the drawback.—§ 98.

No drawback to be allowed unless the goods are shipped within three years after payment of the duties inwards; and no debenture to be paid after the expiration of two years from the date of the shipment.—§ 99.

For the purpose of computing and paying the drawback or bounty, a debenture is prepared by the collector and comptroller, certifying the entry outwards of the goods; and after they have been duly exported, and a notice thereof, containing particulars of the goods, has been delivered by the exporter to the searcher, the shipment and exportation are certified upon the debenture by the searcher; whereupon the debenture is computed and passed, and delivered to the person entitled to it.

Licensed lightermen only to ship debenture or warehoused goods.

If warehoused or debenture goods which have been cleared to be exported be not duly exported, or be relanded, or carried to Guernsey, Jersey, &c., without due entry for such places, they are forfeited, together with the ship; and any person concerned therein forfeits three times the value of the goods.—§ 103.

A drawback of the duties is allowed on wine shipped on board her majesty's ships of war for the use of the officers, if shipped at certain ports, and not exceeding the following quantities in any one year:—For an admiral, 1260 gallons; for a vice-admiral, 1050; for a rear-admiral, 840; for a captain of the first and second rate, 630; for a captain of the third, fourth, or fifth rate, 420; for a captain of an inferior rate, 210; for every lieutenant and other commanding officer, for every marine officer, (and for every master, surgeon, and purser, 9 & 10 Vic. c. 102, § 12) 105 gallons. Persons entering such wine and claim for drawback must state in the entry, and declare on the debenture, the name of the officer, and of the ship in which he serves.

On officers leaving the service or ship, such wine may be transferred, or re-landed and warehoused for future re-shipment, or, the duties being paid back, delivered for home use.—§§ 104—106.

Pursers of her majesty's ships of war may ship tobacco for the use of the crew free of duty, on giving bond that no part shall be re-landed. If the purser be removed from one ship to another, he may tranship such tobacco, with permission of the collector. But no greater quantity can be allowed to any ship than will serve for six months, at the rate of two pounds per month for each of the crew.—§§ 107—109.

If goods liable to forfeiture for being shipped for exportation be exported without discovery by the officers of customs, the person having caused such goods to be exported forfeits double the value.—§ 111.

Prohibitions and Restrictions Outwards.—The goods enumerated in the following Table are either absolutely prohibited to be exported, or can be exported only under the restrictions therein mentioned, on pain of forfeiture.

TABLE OF PROHIBITIONS AND RESTRICTIONS OUTWARDS.

CLOCKS AND WATCHES, viz.

Any outward or inward Box, Case, or Dial Plate, of any metal, without the Movement in or with every such Box, Case, or Dial Plate, made up fit for use, with the Clock or Watchmaker's name engraved thereon.

LACE, viz.

Any Metal inferior to Silver, which shall be spun, mixed, wrought, or set upon Silk, or which shall be gilt, or drawn into wire, or flattened into plate, and spun or woven, or wrought into or upon, or mixed with Lace, Fringe, Cord, Embroidery, Tambour-work, or Buttons, made in the Gold or Silver Manufactory, or set upon Silk, or made into Bullion Spangles, or Pearl, or any other Materials made in the Gold or Silver Lace Manufactory, or which shall imitate or be meant to imitate such Lace, Fringe, Cord, Embroidery, Tambour-work, or Buttons; nor shall any person export any Copper, Brass, or other Metal, which shall be silvered, or drawn into wire, or flattened into plate, or made into Bullion Spangles, or Pearl, or any other Materials used in the Gold or Silver Lace Manufactory, or in imitation of such Lace, Fringe, Cord, Embroidery, Tambour-work, or Buttons, or of any of the Materials used in making the same, and which shall hold more or bear a greater proportion than three pennyweights of fine Silver to the pound avoirdupois of such Copper, Brass, or other Metal.

Any Metal inferior to Silver, whether gilt, silvered, stained, or coloured, or otherwise, which shall be worked up or mixed with Gold or Silver in any Manufacture of Lace, Fringe, Cord, Embroidery, Tambour-work, or Buttons.

A List of Goods which may be Prohibited to be Exported by Proclamation or Order in Council.

ARMS, AMMUNITION, and GUNPOWDER.

ASHES, Pot and Pearl.

MILITARY STORES, and NAVAL STORES, and any Articles (except Copper) which Her Majesty shall judge capable of being converted into, or made useful in increasing the quantity of Military or Naval Stores.

PROVISIONS, or any sort of Victual which may be used as food by man.

COASTING TRADE.—All trade by sea from one part of the United Kingdom to another, or from one part of the Isle of Man to another, is called coastwise, and no part is deemed beyond the seas. The lords of the Treasury may regulate what shall be deemed a trading by sea under this act.—§§ 113, 114.

No goods are to be laden in any ship to be carried coastwise until all goods brought in such ship from beyond seas have been unladen. And if any goods be taken into or put out of any coasting ship at sea or over the sea, or if any coasting ship touch at any place over the sea, or deviate from her voyage, unless forced by unavoidable circumstances, or if having so touched at any place over the seas, the master do not declare the same in writing to the collector or comptroller, he forfeits 200*l.*—§ 115.

Before lading or unlading any coasting vessel, a notice must be given to the collector or controller, signed by the master, owner, wharfinger, or agent, stating the name and tonnage of the ship, the name of the master, the port to which she belongs, the port to which she is bound or from which she has arrived, and the wharf &c. where she is to be laden or discharged; which notice is entered in a book kept by the collector for the information of all parties interested. Such notice for unlading must be delivered within twenty-four hours after arrival, under penalty of 20*l.* on the master. A notice for lading must always state the last voyage of the ship; and if from beyond seas, a certificate must be produced from the proper officer of the discharge of all goods and of her due clearance inwards.—§§ 116, 117.

On the arrival of a coasting ship in Great Britain from Ireland, or in Ireland from Great Britain, the master must, within twenty-four hours, attend and deliver the notice, signed by him, to the collector; and if there be on board goods subject to any duty of excise, or goods which have been imported from beyond seas, the particulars thereof with the marks and numbers of the packages, are to be set forth in the notice; and if there be no such goods on board, the notice must state that fact; and the master must answer all questions relating to the voyage by the collector or controller, under 100*l.* penalty.—§ 118.

After notice given of lading, the collector is to grant a general sufferance, which is sufficient authority for lading any sort of goods at the wharf or place expressed in such sufferance, except such (if any) as are expressly excepted therein. But before a sufferance can be granted for goods prohibited to be exported, or subject to any export other than an ad valorem duty, the master, owner, or shipper must give bond with one surety in treble value for the due landing of such goods.—§ 119.

The master of every coasting vessel must keep a cargo book, stating the name of the ship and master, the port to which she belongs, and the port to which she is bound on each voyage; and in which shall be entered at the port of lading an account of all goods taken on board, and the names of their respective shippers and consignees, and at the port of discharge the days on which goods are delivered out, and also the times of departure and arrival. Such book must be produced to the coast-waiter or other proper officer whenever demanded, who may make any remarks therein. If the master do not keep such book correctly, or produce it when required, or if any goods be found on board not entered therein, or if goods entered therein as laden and not delivered out be not on board, he forfeits 50*l.*; and if any package be entered as containing foreign goods which are not therein, or if any package contain foreign goods which are not entered, the same are forfeited.—§ 120.

Before leaving the port of lading, an account, with a duplicate thereof, signed by the master, must be delivered to the collector, of all foreign goods, and of all goods subject to any export other than an ad valorem duty, and of all corn, grain, meal, flour, or malt laden on board, and generally whether any or no other British goods be on board, or whether such ship be wholly laden with other sorts of British goods; one of which duplicates the collector shall retain, and the other, signed by him, shall be the clearance of the ship for the voyage, and the transire for all goods expressed therein. If any such account be false, or do not correspond with the cargo book, the master forfeits 50*l.*—§ 121.

The transire is to be delivered to the collector at the port of discharge before unloading; and if there be any goods subject to duty, the master, owner, wharfinger, agent, or consignee must deliver a bill of entry of the particulars thereof in words at length, with a copy in which sums and numbers may be expressed in figures, and pay down all duties, or produce a permit in respect of duties of excise; and thereupon the collector grants an order for the landing thereof in the presence of a coast-waiter.—§ 122.

Collectors may grant a general transire, to continue in force for not exceeding a year, for coasting vessels regularly trading between places in the river Severn eastward of the Holmes; or between places in the river Humber; or between places in the Firth of Forth; or between places to be named in the transire, and carrying only manure, lime, chalk, stone, gravel, sand, or any earth not being fullers earth. And the commissioners may grant general transires, under such regulations and for such time as they may see fit, for the lading of any goods, and for clearing the ship, and for unloading at the place of discharge; the same to be written in the cargo-book.—§ 123.

Coast-waiters, landing-waiters, or searchers, may go on board and examine coasting ships, and demand all necessary documents.—§ 124.

Similar regulations as to the times and places of landing and shipping goods are made for coasting vessels, as for outward-bound ships. The island of Malta and its dependencies to be deemed in Europe.—§ 125—8.

General Regulations.—Duties &c. to be reckoned in British currency, and according to imperial weights and measures.—§ 129.

All bonds (except for securing the due exportation of goods, or for payment of duty upon goods warehoused) to be taken by the collector and comptroller for the use of her majesty, and after three years from their date, or the time limited therein, to be void, if no prosecution has been commenced.—§ 130.

For ascertaining the strength of spirits imported, the same instruments, tables and scales of graduation, and rules, are to be used as are directed by law to be used by the excise.—§ 132.

Vinegar or acetous acid above proof to pay duty according to the quantity it would make if reduced to proof, that is, such strength that 100 parts by weight will saturate or neutralize 14½ parts of crystallized sub-carbonate of soda.—§ 133.

Spirits or strong waters mixed with any ingredient, and though thereby coming under some other denomination, shall nevertheless be deemed spirits, and subject to duty as such.—§ 134.

Officers may take samples of goods for ascertaining the duty.—§ 135.

If it be necessary to determine the precise time at which any importation or exportation took place, that of importation shall be the time at which the ship actually came within the limits of the port, and that of exportation the time at which the goods were actually shipped on board. A ship's arrival to be deemed the time at which what warehouses are to be deemed of special security, and in what cases security by bond is to be given in respect of any warehouse. Warehouses of special security to be so stated on their appointment; and warehouses connected with wharfs and within walls to be deemed warehouses of special security without any appointment or order. Commissioners to provide warehouses for tobacco at the ports into which tobacco may be legally imported; the rent to be fixed by the Treasury. Treasury commissioners have power to revoke warrants or orders. All such orders of the commissioners to be published in the London Gazette.—§§ 2—7.

The proprietor or occupier of any warehouse for which security is required may give general security by bond, with two sureties, for payment of the duties on all goods to be warehoused therein, or for their due exportation; but if he be not willing to give such general security, the different importers must give security on each importation.—§ 8.

If goods lodged in a warehouse are the property of the occupier, and are bonâ fide sold by him, and upon such sale there is a written agreement signed by the parties, or a written contract of sale made by a broker or other person legally authorized, and the amount of the price has been actually paid or secured to be paid, such sale is valid, although the goods remain in the warehouse, provided the transfer has been entered in a book kept for that purpose by the officer of customs having charge of the warehouse.—§ 9.

The occupier of any warehouse is liable to a forfeiture of 5*l.* if the goods are not stowed so that easy access can be had to every package or parcel; and if any goods are taken out without due entry with the proper officers, he is liable to the payment of the duties. Occupiers of warehouses are to produce on demand all goods deposited therein to the officer of the customs, or forfeit 5*l.* Goods fraudulently concealed in or removed from the warehouse are forfeited; and any importer or proprietor, or person in his employ, opening the warehouse or gaining access to the goods, except in the presence of the proper officer, forfeits 500*l.*—§§ 10—12.

Persons assisting in the removal of goods entered for the warehouse and not deposited in a warehouse according to the entry, and all persons to whose possession such goods shall knowingly come, shall forfeit treble the value thereof, or a penalty of 100*l.*, at the election of the commissioners.—§ 13.

Within one month after tobacco has been warehoused, and upon the entry and landing of any other goods to be warehoused, the officer of customs is to take a particular account of the same, and mark the contents on each package, and the word Prohibited on packages containing goods prohibited to be imported for home use; and no alteration is to be made in the packing of any goods, except as hereinafter provided.—§ 14.

The goods must be carried to the warehouse under care of the proper officer, and as he shall direct, on pain of forfeiture.—§ 15.

All warehoused goods must be duly cleared, either for exportation or home use within three years, and all surplus stores of ships within one year, from the day of the first entry; and goods not so cleared may be sold by the commissioners, and the produce applied to the payment of warehouse-rent and other charges, and the overplus to the proprietor. Such goods, when sold, are subject to all the conditions to which they were subject previous to such sale, except that a further time of three months is allowed to the purchaser for clearing them from the warehouse; and if not duly cleared within that time, they become forfeited.—§ 16.

If any goods entered to be warehoused, or entered to be delivered from the warehouse, be lost or destroyed by any unavoidable accident, either on shipboard, or in the landing or shipping, or in the receiving into or delivering from the warehouse, the commissioners may remit or return the duties on the quantity so lost or destroyed.—§ 17.

And they may remit the duties on the whole or any portion of goods lost or destroyed by any unavoidable accident in the warehouse. And the duties payable upon the following articles deposited in warehouses of special security, viz. nines, currants, raisins, figs, hams, and cheese, when taken out of the warehouse for home use, shall be charged only upon the quantities actually delivered.—§ 18.

No goods can be delivered from the warehouse except upon due entry and under care of the proper officers for exportation, or upon due entry and payment of the duties for home use; except goods delivered to the searcher to be shipped as stores, which may be so shipped without entry or payment of duty for any ship of 60 tons burthen, bound upon a voyage to foreign parts, the probable duration of which, out and home, will be not less than forty days, provided such stores be duly borne upon the victualling bill. Rum of the British plantations may be so delivered to be shipped as stores for any ship; as may also the surplus stores of a ship, to be re-shipped as stores for the same ship, or for the same master in another ship; such rum or surplus stores being duly borne upon the victualling bill. If the ship be broken up or sold, such stores may be delivered for the use of any other ship belonging to the same owners, or may be entered for payment of duty and delivered for the private use of the owners, or of the master or purser.—§ 20.

Upon the entry of goods to be cleared from the warehouse, if for home use, the person entering must deliver a bill of the entry, and a duplicate thereof, as directed in the case of goods entered to be landed, and at the same time pay down the full duties without any abatement on account of deficiency, except as hereafter provided; and if the entry be for exportation, or for removal to any other warehouse, and any of the packages or parcels be deficient in quantity, a like entry inwards must also be passed in respect of the quantities deficient, and the full duties paid on the amount thereof, before such packages or parcels are delivered for exportation or removal, except as by this act is otherwise provided. If goods so deficient be such as are charged to pay duty according to value, the value is to be estimated at the price for which the like sorts of goods of the best quality were last sold.—§ 21.

The duties upon tobacco, spirits, and sugar, are to be charged only on the quantities actually delivered; except that no further abatement is to be made for deficiency in any sugar warehoused in a warehouse not of special security, than after the rate of three per cent for the first three months, and one per cent for every month after and for spirits (other than British plantation rum) in a warehouse not of special security, no greater abatement than at the following rates :—

SPIRITS :—For every hundred gallons, hydrometer proof, viz.

For any time not exceeding six months	-	-	One gallon.
— exceeding six, and not exceeding eighteen months	-	-	Three gallons.
— exceeding eighteen months, and not exceeding two years	-	-	Five gallons.
— exceeding two years and not exceeding two years and a half	-	-	Six gallons.
— exceeding two years and a half and not exceeding three years	-	-	Seven gallons.
And for every additional year	-	-	Two gallons.

But no abatement is to be made in respect of any deficiency occasioned by leakage, and not by natural evaporation, in whatever warehouse, except as by this act is otherwise specially provided.—§ 22.

And in respect of wheat, barley, rye, or oats, the following allowances to be made for natural waste :—

WHEAT, BARLEY, and RYE , (except as hereafter provided) which has been in warehouse
One month and less than three months, there shall be allowed	-	-	1½ per cent.
Three months and less than six months	-	-	2 per cent.
Six months and less than twelve months	-	-	2½ per cent.
Twelve months and upwards	-	-	3 per cent.
OATS (except as hereafter provided) which have been in warehouse—
One month and less than three months, there shall be allowed	-	-	2½ per cent.
Three months and less than six months	-	-	3 per cent.
Six months and less than twelve months	-	-	4½ per cent.
Twelve months and upwards	-	-	5 per cent.

But only half the above allowances shall be made upon Spanish wheat, barley, and oats, and upon wheat and barley kiln-dried abroad ; and no allowance on kiln-dried rye. And no allowance shall be made unless there be an actual deficiency in the quantity of wheat, rye, barley, and oats originally warehoused.—§ 23.

The importer may enter goods for home use or for exportation, although not actually warehoused.—§ 24.

Removal of Goods for the purpose of being re-warehoused.—Goods may be removed to other ports to be re-warehoused ; but twelve hours notice in writing must be given to the warehouse officer, specifying the particular goods, the marks, numbers, and description of the packages, in what ship imported, when and by whom entered inwards, and if subsequently re-warehoused, when and by whom re-warehoused, and to what port the same are to be removed. Tobacco the produce of the British possessions in America or of the United States of America, and purchased for the use of her majesty's navy, may be removed by the purser of any ship of war in actual service to the ports of Rochester, Portsmouth, or Plymouth, to be there re-warehoused in the name of such purser, in a warehouse approved by the commissioners.—§ 25.

Before removal of the goods due entry must be made, and a proper bill of such entry, with duplicates, delivered to the collector or comptroller, containing the before-mentioned particulars and an exact account of the quantities of the different sorts of goods ; and such bill, signed by the collector and comptroller, is the warrant for the removal. The person removing the goods must, at the time of entering the same, give bond, with one sufficient surety, for the due arrival and re-warehousing of the goods within a reasonable time, which may be taken by the collector and comptroller either of the port of removal or the port of destination. If taken at the port of destination, a certificate thereof under the hands of the collector or comptroller must, at the time of entering, be produced to the collector or comptroller of the port of removal. Such bond is not discharged, unless the goods are duly re-warehoused at the port of destination within the time allowed, or otherwise accounted for, nor until the full duties due upon any deficiency have been paid; nor until fresh security has been given as hereinafter provided, unless the goods are lodged in some warehouse in respect of which general security is given by the proprietor or occupier, or in some warehouse in respect of which no security is required. Goods when so re-warehoused may be entered and shipped for exportation, or entered and delivered for home use, as the like goods may be when first warehoused upon importation; and the time when such goods shall be allowed to remain re-warehoused at such port shall be reckoned from the day when they were first entered to be warehoused. If, upon arrival of the goods at the port of destination, the parties are desirous forthwith to export the same, or to pay duty thereon for home use, without actually lodging the same in the warehouse, the officers, after the formalities of entering and examining have been duly performed, may consider the goods constructively re-warehoused, and permit them to be entered and shipped for exportation, or to be entered and delivered for home use upon payment of the duties.—§§ 26—30.

Goods warehoused in the port of London may, with permission of the commissioners, be removed to any other warehouse in the same port in which the like goods may be warehoused; and in other ports a similar privilege is allowed with permission of the collector and comptroller.

Goods removed from one warehouse to another, and the proprietors, continue subject in all respects to the same conditions as if they had remained in the original warehouse.—§ 32.

When goods in warehouse are sold, the new owner may give bond, and release the original bonder.—§ 33.

If the person removing goods from one port to another, and who has given bond in respect thereof, continue interested in them after they have been duly re-warehoused, and such goods have been re-warehoused in some warehouse in respect of which security is required, and the proprietor or occupier whereof has not given general security, the bond for re-warehousing continues in force until a fresh bond is given by some new proprietor or other person. § 34.

Goods in warehouse may be sorted, separated, packed, or repacked, and such lawful alterations made, as are necessary either for their preservation, or to the sale, shipment, or legal disposal of the same; provided they are repacked in the same packages in which they were imported, or in packages of entire quantity equal thereto, or in such other packages as the commissioners may permit (not being less in any case, if the goods are to be exported or to be removed to another warehouse, than may be required by law for the importation). It shall be lawful also to draw off any wine, or any rum of the British plantations, into reputed quart or pint bottles, for the purpose only of being exported; and to draw off any such rum into casks containing not less than twenty gallons each, for the purpose of being disposed of as stores for ships; and also to draw off any other spirits into reputed quart bottles for the purpose only of being exported; and also to draw off and mix with such wine, any brandy secured in the same warehouse, not exceeding ten gallons of brandy to one hundred gallons of wine; and also to fill up any casks of wine or spirits from other casks of the same secured in the same warehouse; and also, in any warehouse of special security, to rack off any wine from the lees, and to mix any wines of the same sort, crasing from the casks all import brands; and also to take such moderate samples of goods as may be allowed by the commissioners, without entry or payment of duty, except as the same may eventually become payable on a deficiency.—§ 35.

But no such alterations can be made in goods or packages, nor wine, rum, or spirits bottled &c., nor samples of goods taken, except according to the regulations of the commissioners.—§ 36.

After goods have been repacked, the commissioners may, at the request of the proprietor, permit any refuse, damaged, or surplus goods to be destroyed; or, if they are such as may be delivered for home use, on the duties being immediately paid upon such surplus, they may be delivered for home use accordingly; but if they are such as may not be so delivered, such surplus is to be disposed of for the purpose of exportation as the commissioners direct; and thereupon the quantity contained in each of the proper packages is to be marked upon the same, and the deficiency ascertained by a comparison with the total quantity first warehoused; and the proportion which such deficiency may bear to the quantity in each package is also to be marked on the same, and added to such quantity, and the total shall be deemed the imported contents of such package, for which it is to be held subject to the full duties, except as otherwise provided by this act. But the commissioners may accept the abandonment for the duties of any quantity of tobacco, coffee, cocoa, pepper, or lees of wine, and also of any whole packages of other goods, and permit the same to be destroyed, and deduct such quantity in computing the amount of the deficiency.—§ 37.

No foreign casks, bottles, corks, packages, &c., are to be used in repacking, &c., except such wherewith some goods have been imported and warehoused, or whereon the duties have been paid.—§ 38.

Commissioners may permit goods to be taken out of warehouse without payment of duty, for any purpose they may think expedient, under security by bond for their return within the time appointed.

No warehoused goods which were imported in bulk can be delivered except in the whole quantity of each parcel, or in a quantity not less than one ton weight, unless by special leave of the officers. And no warehoused goods can be delivered unless the same, or the packages containing them, have been marked as the commissioners deem necessary.—§§ 40, 41.

Commissioners may approve of premises, in the ports of London, Liverpool, Bristol, Hull, Greenock, or Glasgow, or any other port approved of by the Lords of the Treasury, as bonded sugar houses for the refining of sugar for exportation only.—§ 42.

And on approval of such premises, officers of customs may deliver without duty any quantity of foreign sugar, or sugar the produce of any British possession, for the purpose of being there refined under the locks of the crown for exportation only. The order of approval may be revoked.—§ 43.

Bond to be given by the refiner, in a penalty of double the amount of the duties upon a like quantity of sugar of the British plantations, that the sugar shall be refined upon the premises within four months from its date.—§ 44.

The lords of the Treasury may direct what abatement of duty shall be made for deficiencies upon the exportation of goods liable to waste from natural decrease. If such goods, however, are lodged in warehouses of special security, no duty is chargeable for any deficiency on the exportation thereof, except it be suspected that part has been clandestinely conveyed away; nor are such goods (unless wine or spirits) to be measured, counted, weighed, or gauged, for exportation, except in cases of suspicion. § 45. But for wine, spirits, coffee, cocoa nuts, or pepper, lodged in warehouses not of special security, the following allowances for natural waste are to be made upon the exportation; viz.

WINE, upon every cask, viz. for any time not exceeding one year	-	One gallon.
— exceeding one and not exceeding two years	-	Two gallons.
— exceeding two years	-	Three gallons.
SPIRITS, upon every hundred gallons hydrometer proof, viz.
For any time not exceeding six months	-	One gallon.
— exceeding six and not exceeding twelve months	-	Two gallons.
— exceeding twelve and not exceeding eighteen months	-	Three gallons.
— exceeding eighteen months and not exceeding two years	-	Four gallons.
— exceeding two years	-	Five gallons.
COFFEE, COCOA NUTS, PEPPER, for every 100 lb.	-	Two pounds.

If any embezzlement, waste, spoil, or destruction be made in any warehoused goods through the misconduct of any officer of customs or excise, it is a misdemeanor; and if he be prosecuted to conviction by the importer, consignee, or proprietor, no duty shall be payable or forfeiture incurred in respect of any deficiency caused thereby, and the damage shall be made good by the commissioners of excise or customs. But this is not to extend to any loss or damage by fire.—§ 47.

Upon the entry outwards of any goods to be exported from the warehouse to parts beyond the seas, and before a cocket is granted, the person entering must give security by bond in double the value, with one sufficient surety, that they shall be duly landed at the place for which they are entered outwards.—§ 48.

All goods removed from warehouse for shipment are to be under the direction of the proper officer. Not to be exported in ships under 60 tons burthen.—§§ 49, 50.

Goods landed in docks, and lodged in the custody of the proprietors of such docks under the provisions of this act, (except goods forfeited) are subject to claims for freightage as before landing; and, upon due notice given, are to be detained until such freightage be paid, together with the rates and charges to which they are subject, or until a deposit to the amount be made by the owners or consignees of the goods.—§ 51.

IV. SMUGGLING.

The laws for the prevention of smuggling are consolidated by the act 8 & 9 Vic. c. 87, the substance of which is as follows:—

Vessels and Boats.—If any vessel not being square-rigged, or any boat, either belonging in the whole or in part to her majesty's subjects, or having half the persons on board subjects of her majesty, shall be found or discovered to have been within 100 leagues of the coast of the United Kingdom ; or if any vessel either belonging in the whole or in part to her majesty's subjects, or having half the persons on board subjects of her majesty, or if any foreign vessel not being square-rigged, or any foreign boat, in which there shall be one or more subjects of her majesty, shall be found or discovered to have been within four leagues of that part of the coast which is between the North Foreland and Beachy Head, or within eight leagues of any other part of the coast ; or if any foreign vessel or boat shall be found to have been within one league of the coast of the United Kingdom ; or if any vessel or boat shall be found to have been within one league of either of the Channel Islands, or within any bay, harbour, river, or creek of such islands ; any such vessel or boat so found or discovered having or having had on board or in any manner attached thereto, or conveying or having conveyed in any manner, any spirits not being in a cask or other vessel capable of containing at least 20 gallons, or any tea exceeding 6 lb. weight in the whole, or any tobacco or snuff not being in a cask or package containing 300 lb., or being separated or divided in any manner within any cask or package, or any tobacco stalks, or any cordage or other articles adapted and prepared for slinging or sinking small casks, or any casks or other vessels whatever of less size or content than 20 gallons, of the description used for smuggling spirits, all such spirits, tea, tobacco, or snuff, and tobacco-stalks, casks, packages, cordage, and other articles, and also the vessel or boat, shall be forfeited.—§ 2.

And any vessel or boat arriving or found to have been within any port of the United Kingdom or of the Isle of Man, not being driven by stress of weather or other unavoidable accident, having or having had on board or attached thereto, or conveying or having conveyed in any manner within any such port, any spirits, tobacco, or snuff, in improper packages &c. (as described in the preceding section), or any tobacco stalks, the same, together with the vessel or boat, become forfeited. Provided, that if it be made appear that the same were on board without the knowledge of the owner or master, the commissioners may deliver up the vessel or boat.—§ 3.

But the act does not extend to render any vessel of 100 tons or upwards liable to forfeiture on account of any tobacco or snuff coming direct from the East Indies, and being in packages containing 100 lbs. weight at least, or on account of cigars being in packages of 100 lbs. weight at least, or on account of any tobacco the produce of Mexico, Columbia, the continent of South America, St. Domingo, or Cuba, coming direct from those places, or from any British possession in America, in packages of 80 lbs. each at least, or of Negrohead tobacco from the United States of America in packages of 150 lbs. weight, or on account of any tobacco of the dominions of the Turkish empire which may be separated or divided in any manner within the outward package, such outward package being a hogshead, cask, chest, or case containing 300 lbs. weight at least ; nor to render any vessel of 60 tons liable to forfeiture on account of tea or spirits in glass or stone bottles not exceeding the size of quart bottles, all such goods being really part of the cargo, and included in the manifest ; nor to render any vessel liable to forfeiture on account of any spirits, tea, or tobacco really intended for the consumption of the seamen and passengers during their voyage, and not being more than is necessary for that purpose; nor to render any vessel liable to forfeiture if really bound from one foreign port to another, and pursuing such voyage, wind and weather permitting.—§ 4.

British vessels or boats within 100 leagues of the coast not bringing to upon signal from any vessel or boat in her majesty's or in the revenue service, and during chase throwing overboard or destroying any part of the lading, are likewise forfeited. Persons escaping therefrom during the chase to be deemed British subjects, unless proved to the contrary.—§ 5.

Every vessel not being square-rigged, and every boat, belonging in whole or in part to her majesty's subjects, or having one or more such on board, found within four leagues of the coast between the North Foreland and Beachy Head, or within eight leagues at any other part, from which any part of the lading shall have been thrown overboard, or destroyed on board, become forfeited.—§ 6.

Vessels liable to examination or seizure not bringing to after proper signal from a revenue boat may be fired into; and if death ensue, the revenue officers &c. are indemnified.—§ 7.

Vessels having been in port with a cargo on board, and afterwards found light or in ballast, and the master unable to give a due account of the cargo, become forfeited.—§ 8.

British vessels or boats sailing from Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, or Sark without a clearance paper, or, having a clearance, if found light, or with part of the cargo discharged, are forfeited.—§ 9.

To prevent any mistake as to signals, all vessels and boats are prohibited from using, without the queen's warrant &c., the union jack, pendant, or any flags used in the navy, under penalty of 500*l.* and forfeiture of such flags, which the officers may seize.

All vessels and boats made use of in the removal or conveyance of any goods liable to forfeiture are themselves forfeited.

All boats belonging to British vessels are to have the name of the vessel and of the port to which she belongs painted on the outside of the stern, and the master's name withinside the transom, in white or yellow paint on a black ground, in Roman letters not less than two inches in length, on pain of forfeiture. Boats not belonging to any vessel are to have the name of the owner and the port painted thereon in like form. Vessels and boats used in piloting or fishing are to be painted black, and not like the Preventive boats, on pain of forfeiture, unless the commissioners of customs allow it to be otherwise. Vessels and boats with double sides or bottoms, or with secret places for concealing goods, are forfeited; so are all goods concealed in any boat or vessel.

Vessels under certain dimensions are not to carry arms for resistance above a certain quantity, without licence from the commissioners of customs, § 16; and § 17 fixes the numbers of the crews of different sized vessels. Every licence to contain a description of the vessel, name of the owner, his place of abode, the manner and limits in which it is to be employed, and, if armed, the numbers and description of the arms and ammunition. Owner to give bond not to employ the vessel for smuggling purposes. Bond not to exceed 1000*l.* penalty. Bonds given by minors valid. Vessels not to be used in any other manner than mentioned in the licence, which must be produced on demand. But nothing herein as to licences is to extend to any vessel, boat, or lugger belonging to the royal family, the navy, victualling, ordnance, customs, excise, or post-office, whale or fishery-boats, boats belonging to a square-rigged vessel in the merchant-service, life-boats, tow-boats belonging to licensed pilots, and boats used solely in inland navigation. Forging a licence is 500*l.* penalty, &c.

Goods forfeited.—If goods liable to duty are unshipped without the duties being paid or secured, or prohibited goods imported, or warehoused goods illegally removed, they become forfeited, together with all horses, carriages &c. used in their removal.

If goods subject to duty, or to any restriction in respect of importation, are concealed on board any vessel or boat, they are forfeited, with all goods packed therewith.

Spirits and tobacco found removing without a permit, when a permit is required by law, to be deemed goods liable to and unshipped without payment of duty, unless the party in whose possession they are found prove to the contrary. So all goods the importation of which is restricted, for the purpose of proceeding for penalties or forfeiture.

If goods prohibited to be exported are shipped, or waterborne with such intent, they become forfeited, with all goods packed therewith.

Powers of Seizure.—All vessels and boats, and all goods whatsoever, liable to forfeiture, may be seized in any place, either upon land or water, by any officer of the army, navy, or marines, duly employed for the prevention of smuggling and on full pay, or by any officer of customs or excise, or by any person having authority to seize from the commissioners of customs or excise.

The powers given to officers of excise by 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 25, as to the seizure of private stills, are extended to officers of customs. Any officer making a collusive seizure, or taking a bribe, forfeits 500*l.*, and the person offering the same forfeits 200*l.*

Officers may board vessels within the limits of a port, and search for prohibited or uncustomed goods; they may also search any persons on board, or who have landed therefrom, if they have reason to suppose such persons have uncustomed or prohibited goods about them; and any obstruction incurs a forfeiture of 100*l.* But if such persons desire it, they may, before being searched, be taken before a justice of the peace, collector, comptroller, or other superior officer, who may direct the search to proceed or discharge them. Females are to be searched only by a female duly authorized by the commissioners. On the officer's neglect to comply with the above desire, or causing a search without sufficient grounds, he forfeits 10*l.* If passengers on board vessels &c. have forfeited goods in their possession, and deny the fact to officers on inquiry, they forfeit the goods and treble the value thereof.

Officers may, with writs of assistance from the Court of Exchequer, take a constable &c. of the place with them, and enter houses and search for forfeitable goods, and in case of resistance may break open doors, chests, &c.; such writs to remain in force during the whole reign in which they are issued, and six months after. Police officers finding such goods are to take them to the custom-house warehouse; and the goods so seized may be detained till trial.

Officers of customs or excise may upon reasonable suspicion stop carts and conveyances, and search for smuggled goods. Drivers refusing to stop, to forfeit 100*l*. Police officers and persons seizing goods subject to forfeiture are to carry them to the custom-house warehouse within 48 hours after seizure. Goods taken by a police officer on suspicion of being stolen, to be taken to the police office, there to remain until the trial of the offender. The officer is to give notice to the commissioners of customs of his having so detained them, and, after trial of the offenders, goods to be taken to the custom-house, or the officer to forfeit 20*l*. Commissioners of treasury or customs may restore seizures, and mitigate or remit punishments and penalties.

Penalties.—Persons unshipping or assisting to unship goods prohibited, or for which the duties have not been paid or secured, or knowingly harbouring or concealing such goods, or any goods illegally removed from the warehouse, and every person into whose hands such prohibited or uncustomed goods shall knowingly come, shall forfeit either treble value or 100*l*. at the election of the commissioners.

Every person insuring the delivery of goods without payment of the duties, or prohibited goods; and every person delivering or causing the same to be delivered; and every person agreeing to pay for such insurance, forfeit 500*l*. besides any other penalty.

Offering goods for sale under pretence that they are run or prohibited (whether they are such or not) incurs a penalty of 100*l*. or treble value at the election of the commissioners, and the goods become forfeited.

Persons found or having been on board vessels liable to forfeiture for being within certain distances of the coast (as previously described, § 2) shall, upon conviction before two justices, be imprisoned and kept to hard labour. And any officer in the army, navy, or marines, employed for the prevention of smuggling and on full pay, or any officer of customs or excise, may detain such persons for the purpose of being taken before a justice of peace. But any such person proving to the satisfaction of the justice that he was only a passenger, and had no interest in the vessel or cargo, shall be forthwith discharged.

Persons unshipping, carrying, or concealing any spirits or tobacco liable to forfeiture, or assisting therein forfeit 100*l*., and may be detained in like manner.

Persons unshipping, carrying, or concealing tea, or assisting therein, forfeit treble value, and are liable to be detained in like manner, but may be admitted to bail on giving security in treble the amount of the goods seized.

Persons being or having been on board vessels liable to forfeiture for having been within the limits of a port with contraband articles &c. (as previously described, § 3) not having been driven by stress of weather, forfeit 100*l*. and may be detained in like manner. But such persons are not liable to any penalty or detention unless there are reasonable grounds to believe that they are the owners of the goods, or were concerned in the bringing in or concealing them, nor on account of any spirits or tobacco being stores, or being in vessels or packages permitted by law.

Persons assembled to the number of three or more for the purpose of unshipping, carrying, or concealing spirits or tobacco, or any tea or silk to the value of 20*l.* liable to forfeiture; and every person hiring or procuring others to assemble for the purpose of landing, carrying, or concealing prohibited or uncustomed goods; and persons obstructing officers in the seizing of goods liable to forfeiture, or rescuing any goods seized, or destroying goods to prevent their seizure, shall upon conviction before two justices, be adjudged to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for not less than six nor more than nine months for a first offence, for not less than nine nor more than twelve months for a second offence, and for twelve months for a third or any subsequent offence.

Justices may proceed summarily to the conviction of smugglers without information or an order from the Board of Customs in certain cases (as where the spirits do not exceed a gallon, or the tobacco six pounds, for which they are detained), and adjudge them to forfeit 5*l.* or in default commit them to gaol for not exceeding one month.

When persons are brought before a justice of peace for offences against the customs law, he may order them to be detained for a reasonable time, to be afterwards brought before two justices.

If a person liable to be detained for any offence be not detained at the time, or if being detained he make his escape, he may afterwards be arrested and taken before a justice.

Persons making signals to smuggling vessels at sea may be detained, and on conviction are liable to forfeit 100*l.*, or, at the discretion of the court, may be committed to the common gaol, and kept to hard labour for one year. The burden of proof of such signal not being made with intent and for the purpose of smuggling, is upon the defendant. Any person may lawfully prevent such signals, and enter upon any lands for the purpose.

Felonies.—Three or more armed persons assembled to assist in the illegal landing of any goods, or in the rescuing of goods seized, shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of felony, and be transported for life or not less than fifteen years, or be imprisoned for not exceeding three years. Persons shooting at any boat belonging to the navy, or in the service of the revenue, are also guilty of felony, punishable in the same manner.

Any person, in company with more than four others, having goods liable to forfeiture, or with one person within five miles of the sea-coast, or of any navigable river leading therefrom, and carrying arms, or being disguised, to be deemed guilty of felony, and subject to transportation for seven years.

Persons assaulting officers in the execution of their duties, to be transported for seven years, or imprisoned and kept to hard labour for not exceeding three years.

The remainder of the act relates to the rewards to be given to officers &c. in cases of seizure, and to proceedings for the recovery of penalties and forfeitures for breach of the customs laws.

EXCISE.

Excise duties were first projected during the reign of Charles I., but never assessed in a regular way till after his death. The long parliament, in 1643, laid a duty on the makers and venders of ale, beer, cider, and perry, though under an express protestation that it should be discontinued when the public peace was restored. Experience, however, proved it to be too valuable a source of revenue to be relinquished; and when the nation had been accustomed to it for a few years, the parliament declared, in 1649, that it was "the most easy and indifferent levy that could be laid upon the people." At the Restoration it was placed on a new footing; and, notwithstanding Blackstone says, that "from its first original its very name has been odious to the people of England," it has continued progressively to gain ground, and is at this moment imposed on a variety of most important articles, and furnishes a very considerable proportion of the entire public revenue of the kingdom. The prejudice in the public mind, to which Blackstone alludes, seems to attach more to the regulations connected with these duties, than to the amount to which they have been carried. The frauds that might be committed upon the revenue unless a very strict watch were kept, have led to the enactment of many severe regulations. The officers are empowered to enter and search the houses of such individuals as deal in excisable commodities at any time of the day, and in most instances also of the night; and the proceedings in case of transgression are such that persons may be convicted in a few days time in very heavy penalties by the summary judgment of three commissioners of excise, or two justices of the peace, without the intervention of a jury.

I. EXCISE LAWS IN GENERAL.

These were consolidated by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 53, which repealed all previous acts inconsistent therewith, but has since been amended by the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 51, and 4 & 5 Vic. c. 20.

Commissioners of excise, not exceeding thirteen, are appointed by her majesty, three¹ of whom may sit as a board for the management of the revenue of excise throughout the United Kingdom, besides four assistant commissioners for Scotland and Ireland. They cannot be members of parliament; and they and all other officers of excise are incapacitated, under 500*l.* penalty, from voting or interfering at elections, from holding any other office, and from dealing in excisable articles; they are also exempt from serving as mayor or sheriff, or in any corporate or parochial or other public office, or on any inquest or jury, or in the militia.² A penalty of 500*l.* and future incapacity to hold office under the crown are imposed on officers taking money or

¹ 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 51, § 2.

² The keeper of an excise office is not, as such, an officer of excise within the meaning of the act, and therefore not subject to the restrictions, or entitled to the privileges of such.—4 & 5 Vic. c. 20, § 4.

reward, or entering into any collusive agreement, contrary to their duty; and 500*l.* penalty on any person offering or suggesting the same; but either party first giving information is indemnified.

The commissioners sit at the head office of excise in London, which includes under its immediate jurisdiction all the parishes within the bills of mortality, with those of St. Marylebone and St. Pancras. There are also chief offices at Edinburgh and Dublin, with one or more commissioners and assistant commissioners at each. Persons are appointed by the commissioners to hold offices of excise at every market-town in the United Kingdom. The chief offices are open from eight in the morning till three in the afternoon, and the other offices from eight till two. No holidays are kept, except Christmas-day, Good Friday, general fast or thanksgiving days, the restoration of Charles II., and the coronation-day and birthday of her majesty.

England and Wales (exclusive of the bills of mortality) are divided into upwards of 50 collections, each having an officer called a collector. Every collection is again divided into districts, having a supervisor; and each district into outrides and footwalks, in each of which is a gauger or exciseman. Excisemen are chosen from persons regularly instructed in the duties of the office by experienced officers, with whom they attend and make surveys; and when the instructor certifies that they are competent, they are called expectants, having to wait till a vacancy happens.

The supervisor's duty is continually to survey the houses &c. of all persons within his district liable to excise duties, and to see that the excisemen do their duty and make proper entries; to keep diaries of all matters, and transmit them to the commissioners; and especially to make entries as to the conduct of the inferior officers, who are reprimanded or punished by the commissioners, if need be.

The business of a collector is to go his rounds once every six weeks, and in the mean time to assist in prosecuting offenders. He is also to peruse the supervisor's diaries, and to investigate the conduct of inferior officers who have been complained of, &c.

Acts required to be done by a surveyor of excise may, within the limits of the chief office, be done by a collector or supervisor.

For neglect of duty or other misbehaviour, officers are reduced a grade lower. If discharged, they are sometimes restored; but twice discharged, they are never restored again.

The salaries and superannuation allowances of commissioners or officers of excise are not assignable or transferable in any manner whatsoever, nor subject to any attachment, execution, or other proceeding, before they are paid.

Licences.—For the carrying on of any manufacture, or dealing in any article connected with the revenue of the excise, a licence is necessary, renewable annually. The duty on these licences varies according to the particular business or dealing for which they are required, as will be more particularly shown when we treat of the laws relating to particular articles and traders.

The licences are granted, within the limits of the chief office, by the commissioners, or persons employed by them; and elsewhere, by the collectors and supervisors.

The licence only permits the party to carry on the trade in one place, except auctioneers, maltsters subject to the lowest rate of duty, and licensed beer-dealers, the latter being allowed to retail beer &c. at fairs or races.

Partners (except auctioneers) need not take out more than one licence.

An excise licence need not be taken out in order to sell excisable commodities in bond in an import warehouse, provided that not less than one entire cask or package is sold.

Licences to brewers, distillers, and publicans expire on the 10th October, and all other excise licences on the 5th July yearly; and every person intending to renew his licence must give twenty-one days notice to the collector or supervisor previous to such expiration. Persons commencing business, on taking out a licence at any other time of the year, pay a proportional part of the duty, including always the whole of the current quarter; except persons who have previously had a licence for the same trade or business, on the same or any other premises, who are not entitled to such deduction unless two years have elapsed from the expiration of their former licence.

In case of death or removal, the licence may be transferred, on indorsement by commissioners &c., to the executors, wife, or child, or to an assignee who has purchased the business, who may carry it on for the residue of the term, provided a fresh entry of the premises be made in the name of such person.

Persons licensed under the excise laws, and required to make entry of their premises, must cause to be painted, in letters at least one inch long, their names at full length (or, where there are partners, the name of the firm or partnership), and the word Licensed, with words necessary to express the purpose for which the licence is granted, in some conspicuous place on the outside of the front of the premises, over the principal outward door or gate, and not more than three feet from the top, and renew the same as often as necessary, on pain of forfeiting 20*l*. Any person not licensed putting up such words forfeits 20*l*.

Any licensed person not producing his licence when demanded by an officer of excise, is liable to a penalty of 30*l*.

Entries.—Every person required to make entry of any building, place, vessel, or utensil, must deliver such entry, with his signature thereto, to the officer of excise in whose survey the building &c. is situate, who copies the same in the General Entry Book.

No entry is legal unless by and in the name of a person who has attained the age of twenty-one, and who is the real owner of the trade or business;¹ but any person acting as visible owner, or having the principal management of the business, is, notwithstanding his minority, liable to all forfeitures. The entry must distinguish and describe every building, vessel, and utensil by a particular letter or number; which must be painted in a large and distinct character upon a conspicuous part of the wall or door of every such building, and on ¹ In the case of joint stock companies or corporations, entry must be made by the managers or directors, or, if the number exceeds four, by four of them at least, who shall be jointly and severally liable to all forfeitures and penalties. — 4 & 5 Vic. c. 20, § 6.

A married woman, whose husband has become insane or idiot, or otherwise incapable, or whose husband is separated from her or out of the kingdom, may, with consent of the commissioners, make entry; and bonds entered into by her are effectual, notwithstanding her coverture. — Ib. § 7.

every such vessel or utensil; and where any fixed pipes are employed in any such entered place, they must be painted with a distinct oil colour, and a drawing or description thereof delivered, stating the course, direction, and use of such pipes and of every branch thereof, and of every cock therein, together with every place, vessel, and utensil from or to or with which they lead or communicate; and all pipes used for the same purpose must be painted of the same colour. An omission of any of these particulars incurs a penalty of 100*l*.

Specimen books may be left by officers upon entered premises, for recording minutes of the state of the manufactory and of the survey thereof, to which they shall always have free access, with liberty to take away the same. Persons removing, concealing, or withholding such book, or altering or obliterating any entry therein, forfeit 200*l*.

Persons found employed in or about any private or unentered place, where goods liable to excise duties are being manufactured, or where there are materials in preparation for such manufacturing, are severally liable for the first offence to a penalty of 30*l*., or on nonpayment to three months imprisonment; and for the second offence to a penalty of 60*l*. or six months imprisonment.

All stills, backs, vats, coppers, presses, machines, and vessels and utensils, of which entry is by any law of excise required to be made, and which shall not be duly entered, and all goods and commodities found therein, or in any house, warehouse, storehouse, room, or place required to be entered, and not duly entered, are forfeited.—4 & 5 Vic. c. 20, § 5.

Payment of Duties.—Persons carrying on any trade or business subject to the excise must clear off the duties charged when called upon to do so, or in default thereof they forfeit double the value. And justices of peace, on information for the recovery thereof, have no power of mitigation, but must convict in the full penalty of double the value of the duties neglected to be paid. (4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 51, § 20.) But no person carrying on trade or business in a market-town is compelled to go out of such town for the purpose of paying any duty, or of making an entry (other than the entry of any building, &c.); and persons carrying on business out of a market-town are not required to go farther for such purposes than the nearest market-town.¹

In case of any overcharge or overpayment of duties, complaint may be made within twelve months to the commissioners, or to two justices, within their respective jurisdictions. Before any complaint can be heard by the commissioners, it must be entered in a book kept for that purpose by the solicitor of excise for the summary jurisdiction at the chief office, stating the particulars, with the name and residence of the complainant; upon which a notice is given him of the time and place of hearing, when if he do not appear the complaint is dismissed. And before any such complaint can be heard before justices of peace, eight days notice of the time appointed for hearing is to be given to the collector or supervisor. Payment of the duties, or any proceeding for their recovery, is not to be delayed by reason of such complaint being depending.

¹ But no place is to be deemed a market-town for such purpose unless it were such at the time of the passing of the act 7 & 8 Geo. IV.—4 & 5 Vic. c. 20, § 1.

But the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 40 enacts, that no such complaint shall be made to the commissioners or justices where the subject matter is a question whether any goods or commodities are such as are liable to duty, or are liable to a higher or lower rate of duty, or as to the mode or manner of charging the duty. But if the person charged shall, within six days after the return of the officer, give notice to the commissioners, or to the collector or supervisor, of his objections, and the grounds thereof, he shall not be concluded by the charge of the officer, but shall be at liberty, upon proceedings taken against him, to dispute the same, and his liability to the payment thereof.

All goods subject to excise duty, and all materials, vessels, and utensils for making thereof, are liable for arrears of duties owing, and for all forfeitures incurred by the owner while they are in his custody, or in the custody of any other person for his use, and continue so liable, into whose hands soever they may afterwards come, or by what conveyance or title soever they may be claimed.

Goods fraudulently removed or secreted in order to evade the duty are forfeited, together with all casks, vessels, and packages, and every boat, cart, carriage, or other conveyance, and all horses and other cattle and things used in the removal, or for the deposit or concealment thereof; and every person assisting in such removal, deposit, or concealment forfeits treble the value, or 100*l.*, at the election of the commissioners or persons suing for the same.

PERMITS.—For the removal of some excisable articles, a permit, or licence from the officers of excise, is necessary. The regulations relating to permits were consolidated by the 3 Wm. IV. c. 16, which came into force on the 5th April, 1832.

The commissioners are empowered to provide moulds and frames for making paper for permits, having the words "Excise Office" in the substance thereof, and plates and types for printing the same. The counterfeiting or imitating, or having in possession without lawful excuse, any such moulds, frames, plates, types, or paper, is felony, punishable by transportation for seven years, or imprisonment for not less than two years. And the counterfeiting or forging, or making use of or knowingly receiving any forged permit, is a misdemeanor, punishable by transportation for seven years, or fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court.

No permit is to be granted by any officer until a request note is delivered by the person requiring it; and every permit granted without a request note is void, and will not protect the goods mentioned therein.

The request note must contain the date, the name of the place from and to which the commodities are to be carried, and the mode of conveyance, likewise the christian and surname and place of abode of the persons sending them, and to whom they are to be sent, and, in case of a company or copartnership, the name of the firm, together with such other particulars as the commissioners shall from time to time direct, or as shall be required by any acts relating to the commodities in respect of which the permit is required; and every such note must be signed by the person requiring the permit, or by his known clerk or servant. No permit is to be granted on any request note which is not so signed, and does not contain the several particulars aforesaid. The request note is not liable to any stamp duty.

Permits are to be made out in conformity with the request note, and in such form as the commissioners of excise direct. Every permit must express as well the time during which it is to be in force for removing the goods from the stock of the person taking it out, as also the time within which they are to be delivered and actually received into the stock of the person to whom they are permitted to be sent. Permits not actually used must be returned within the time limited. If any permit be not so returned, and there shall not be a sufficient decrease in the person's stock out of which the goods were to be removed to answer such removal, such person shall forfeit the like quantity of goods, and the same may be seized by any officer of excise; and in case the goods specified in any permit are removed, and shall not within the time limited be actually delivered and received into the stock of the person to whom they are to be sent, such goods shall be deemed to be removed without permit, and be forfeited and seized accordingly. But in case the goods are prevented from being delivered in time by any unavoidable accident or necessity, the court or jurisdiction where an information is brought may direct them to be restored.

Removing goods for which a permit is required without a permit, or having obtained a permit and not removing the goods accordingly or returning the permit within the time, or receiving goods without a permit, subjects to a forfeiture of 200*l.* and of the goods so removed; and any carrier, master of a vessel, boatman, or other person assisting in the removal of commodities for which a permit is required without a proper permit, forfeits 200*l.*

In any action or suit on any bond, bill, note, or other security, or contract or agreement, where any part of the consideration is for goods which have been removed without a permit, the defendant may plead that such goods were so removed, and the jury shall find a verdict for defendant; and if the money has been paid for goods removed without a permit, the purchaser may recover back the same within twelve months from the seller by action of debt or on the case in any court of record.

Forging request notes, fraudulently procuring or altering permits, or knowingly receiving such with any commodities, or using permits for any other than the purpose for which they were granted, subjects the party to a penalty of 500*l.* and forfeiture of the goods.

Whenever any commodities are forfeited for breach of any of the regulations relating to permits, all packages, horses, carts, vessels, boats, &c. employed in their removal, are also forfeited.

If a private person have occasion to remove commodities for the removal of which a permit is necessary, he must make a declaration that the duties have been fully paid, and, if the goods be intended to be delivered to any other than the person requiring the permit, that they have not been sold or disposed of to such person; when, upon a request note being delivered to the officer authorized to grant permits, a permit will be granted for their removal. If the declaration be untrue in any particular, the person making it forfeits 100*l.*

Powers of Officers, Seizures, &c.—Any officer of excise, with his assistants, may enter any building or other place used for carrying on any trade or business subject to the excise, either by day or by night (but if between eleven at night and five in the morning, then upon request, and in the presence of a constable), and remain as long as he may think fit, and inspect such building, &c.

Upon an officer making oath that he has cause to suspect that goods forfeited under the excise acts are deposited in any private house or place, two commissioners of excise or one justice of peace may grant a warrant to the officer to enter such house or place (if in the night time, in the presence of a constable) to search for and seize such forfeited goods; and any person opposing, molesting, &c. any officer of excise in the execution of his duty forfeits 200*l*.

Officers of excise and customs have like powers of seizing foreign goods, or British spirits, forfeited under the laws of excise.

All justices, mayors, bailiffs, constables, &c. are required to assist the officers of excise in the execution of their duty; and any constable declining to go with an excise officer forfeits 20*l*. A constable having begun to assist an excise officer in any place where he has jurisdiction, and being required to continue his assistance in any other place, shall have jurisdiction accordingly.

All persons molesting, obstructing, or hindering any officer of excise in the search, examination, seizure, detention, or removal of any goods &c. forfeited, or in the due execution of his duty, forfeit 200*l*. Officers assaulted or resisted may oppose force to force; and if any person so assaulting or resisting be wounded, maimed, or killed, the officer may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence. Any person convicted of such violent assault or resistance may be imprisoned with hard labour for three years.

Officers making any seizure of exciseable goods are to give notice at the next office of excise, or to the supervisor or other superior officer, who shall take a particular account thereof; and the same are not to be removed without a permit (when a permit is in ordinary cases necessary for the removal of such goods) on pain of forfeiture.

Goods prohibited, or subject to excise duty, which are stopped by any police or peace officer or other person within the limits of the chief office are to be lodged at such chief office, and elsewhere at the nearest office of excise. But if they are stopped on suspicion of having been stolen, they may be conveyed to the nearest police office, or other convenient place directed by a justice of the peace, and notice thereof is to be given at the chief or other excise office respectively; and when the person charged with stealing the same shall have been tried, the goods are to be conveyed to the chief or other excise office, that proceedings may be taken for their condemnation, or that they may be restored upon payment of duty, or as the commissioners may think fit. If they be not so conveyed, they become forfeited; and the person in whose possession they may be, refusing to convey them, forfeits 20*l*.

When a seizure is made of goods exceeding 15*l*. in value, and no person applies to claim them, the officer making the seizure, if within the limits of the chief office, must cause a notice in writing, signed by the solicitor for the summary jurisdiction, to be affixed on a conspicuous part of the outside of the chief office of excise, signifying the day when the commissioners will hear the matter of such seizure; and if in any other part, a notice, issued by a justice of the peace within whose jurisdiction the seizure was made, is to be affixed on the outside of the nearest excise office during the next or some subsequent market-day after the expiration of six days from the seizure, specifying the day when the justices will proceed to the hearing of such matter.

But where the goods seized do not exceed 15*l.* in value, if not claimed within a month, they become absolutely forfeited, as if condemned by the Exchequer; but if claimed within that time, proceedings may be taken as in other cases—4 & 5 Vic. c. 20, § 32.

When horses or other cattle, or any goods of a perishable nature, are seized, the commissioners may order them to be delivered up to the claimant, upon his entering into a bond of double the value thereof, to be void upon payment of their appraised value on condemnation.

If no claimant appear, or if he refuse to enter into such bond, the commissioners, at any time after fourteen days from the seizure, may order them to be sold by public auction. But if such horses, cattle, or goods are afterwards ordered to be restored, or if the decision be in favour of the claimant, the appraised value, or the proceeds of the sale, at his election, shall be paid to him, together with such further sum by way of compensation as the commissioners may deem fit.

For the protection of officers and others acting in their aid in execution of the excise laws, no writ, summons, or process is to be sued out, nor any action brought against them, until one month after notice has been given, setting forth the cause of action, the time when and the place where it arose, the name and place of abode of the person intending to bring it, and of his attorney or agent; and for the preparing and serving of such notice a fee of 20*s.* is allowed. The defendant may, at any time within the month, tender amends, or after issue joined may pay money into court. The action must be commenced within three months, and in the proper court, and the plaintiff shall not be allowed to give evidence of any cause of action except such as was contained in the notice, nor recover a verdict unless it be proved that such notice was given; and the defendant may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence; and if the jury find that sufficient amends were tendered, or the plaintiff otherwise fail in his action, the defendant shall have treble costs.

If, on the trial of any information, a verdict be given for the claimant, and the judge certify that there was a probable cause of seizure, the officer or other person assisting shall not be liable to any action; and if an action be brought, and a verdict be given against the defendant, if the court certify in like manner that there was probable cause of seizure, the plaintiff, besides the goods seized or the value thereof, shall not be entitled to more than twopence damages, nor to any costs, and the defendant shall not be imprisoned, nor fined more than one shilling.

Prosecutions.—All penalties may be sued for, and all goods seized as forfeited may be returned for condemnation, in the Courts of Exchequer at Westminster, Edinburgh, and Dublin respectively, within three years after the commission of the offence. But no action, bill, plaint, or information can be commenced or exhibited, or any writ of appraisement for condemnation of goods seized can be issued, except by order of the commissioners of excise and customs, and in the name and at the suit of an officer of excise or customs, or by and in the name and at the suit of the attorney or solicitor general, or of the lord advocate or solicitor general in Scotland. But this does not extend to any summary proceeding at the instance of an officer of excise or customs for the conviction or immediate arrest of any person under any act relating to the excise or customs.

No claim can be entered in the Court of Exchequer to any goods seized, but within the time limited by the practice of the court, and in the real name of the proprietor, describing his residence, business, and profession; and oath must be made that such goods were really and truly the bond fide property of such person, and a bond of 100*l.* given with two sureties to pay the costs occasioned by such claim.

There is, however, a more summary way of proceeding for penalties and forfeitures under the excise laws, namely, before three commissioners of excise in London, if the offence was committed, or the offender found, or the goods were seized within the limits of the chief office; and if elsewhere, before two justices of the peace. The information in such cases must be exhibited within four months, and a notice given to the party within one week afterwards. The commissioners or justices are to summon the party against whom the information is exhibited, or any person who may claim the goods, to appear and plead; which summons must be served fourteen days before the time appointed, except where the information is for the recovery of double the value of any duty, when it is sufficient if within twenty-four hours of the time appointed.

Two or more justices of the peace are to meet once in every three months to receive and determine all matters brought before them relating to the revenue of excise. But no assistant commissioner or officer of excise can act as such justice of peace; nor can any trader subject to the excise laws act as a justice of peace in any case which relates to his particular trade or business.

Witnesses summoned, and having their reasonable expences tendered, neglecting to appear, or refusing to give evidence, forfeit 50*l.* Any officer of excise is a competent witness, although he may be entitled to a share of the penalty.

The commissioners of excise may mitigate or entirely remit penalties; but justices of peace have no power of mitigation, except it be specially given them by the act imposing the penalty. 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 51, § 20.

No writ of certiorari, or other writ or process, is to be issued, at the suit of any defendant, out of any court, to supersede, stay, remove, or in anywise affect any information or judicial proceeding before the commissioners of excise or a justice of the peace.

Appeals.—Formerly, under the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 53, commissioners of appeal were appointed by the Treasury, three of whom constituted a court, to which parties dissatisfied with the judgment of the commissioners of excise might appeal. But this part of the act has been repealed by the 4 & 5 Vic. c. 20; which, in lieu thereof, enacts, that in case any officer of excise who has exhibited an information, or any person against whom an information has been exhibited, or who claims any goods &c. alleged to be forfeited, shall feel aggrieved by the judgment of the commissioners of excise, he may appeal to the barons of the Exchequer; and all the provisions of the said acts relating to appeals shall apply to appeals before the said barons. The registrar of excise to be the registrar to the barons as such judges of appeal; and with whom all notices are delivered or lodged, and by whom summonses are issued for the attendance of witnesses. Witnesses refusing to attend or give evidence forfeit 50*l*.

When the information has been exhibited before justices of peace, appeal may be made to the next general quarter sessions.

But no appeal can be allowed unless the party give notice, immediately after judgment, to the commissioners of excise or to the justices, and also to the adverse party, and lodge such notice at the office of the registrar, or with the clerk of the peace, respectively; and seven clear days notice in writing must be given on the part of the appellant to the respondent, of the time and place when and where the appeal is to be heard.

When the judgment appealed against is a conviction in any penalty, the party must within three days deposit in the hands of the commissioners, or of the collector or supervisor, the amount of the penalty; and when it is either for or against the condemnation of goods, the goods must be left with the commissioners, or with the collector or supervisor.

If judgment be given for the condemnation of the goods, the commissioners of excise or justices may apply the penalty deposited as above; and, if not sufficient, may grant a warrant for the sale of the goods; and if for any penalty, may grant a warrant to an officer of excise to levy the same upon the goods and chattels of the party, which may either be detained in the place where found, or removed to the nearest office of excise. When there are not sufficient goods whereon to levy a distress, a warrant may be issued to an officer of excise to arrest the person of the party, and convey him to gaol, there to remain until the judgment be satisfied, or until he be ordered by the commissioners to be liberated. And if any goods belonging to such person be afterwards found, a fresh warrant may be granted for the levying so much of any penalty, charges, and expences as remain unpaid.

All goods condemned are to be sold by public auction. But no goods upon which the duty has not been paid are to be sold for less than the amount of duty. Goods for which a price cannot be obtained equal to the duty, and all condemned goods the importation whereof is prohibited, are to be destroyed, or sold for exportation, or disposed of for the public service, as the Treasury may direct.

All penalties and forfeitures, after deduction of expences, are to be distributed one moiety to her majesty and the other to the officer or other person informing or suing for the same, unless there has been any collusion or negligence on the part of the officer &c., in which case the whole goes to the crown.

If a capias or other writ for the arrest of any person for any offence against the excise laws be sued out of the Court of Exchequer, and indorsed by a solicitor of excise, the sheriff &c. to whom it is directed shall grant a special warrant to the persons named in such indorsement for the apprehension of the party, and shall be indemnified against any escape between the apprehension and committal to prison.

For the necessary subsistence of any poor person imprisoned by virtue of any exchequer process, or warrant, or writ of extent, the commissioners of excise may cause an allowance to be made, not exceeding 8*d.* per day.

If in any case it appears that any penalty or forfeiture has been incurred without any intention of fraud, the attorney-general or lord advocate, after prosecution commenced, may stop proceedings by entering a noli prosequi. And the commissioners of excise may, in any such case, forbear to order any prosecution, upon such terms as they may direct, and restore the article seized; or they may, at any time before judgment is entered up, compromise such prosecution by the acceptance of any sum they may deem reasonable. And the commissioners of the Treasury may direct the seizure or any part thereof to be restored, whether condemned or not, and may mitigate or remit any penalty, either before or after judgment, upon such terms as may appear reasonable. But no person accepting such terms shall be entitled to maintain any action or suit for recompence or damages on account of such seizure.

II. LAWS RELATING TO PARTICULAR ARTICLES AND TRADERS.

Auctioneers.

The excise duties on sales by auction were wholly repealed by the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 15 from the passing of that act (8th May, 1845); and all bonds and regulations relating thereto are abolished.

By the same act, instead of the former duty of 5*l.*, an increased duty of 10*l.* is imposed upon auctioneers' licences, dispensing with the necessity for taking out, as formerly, any additional licence for selling certain articles, as wine, spirits, plate, patent medicines, &c. All former duties and every act of excise, previously in force, relating to auctions or to auctioneers, are repealed, save only the 6 Geo. IV. c. 81 (Excise Licences Act), so far as not altered by this act.

The licence must be taken out by every person carrying on the business of an auctioneer in any part of the United Kingdom, and renewed annually ten days at least before its expiration on the 5th of July, under a penalty of 100*l.*

Certain exceptions, however, as to the necessity of a licence are made by sec. 5, which provides, that it shall not be necessary for any person selling goods or chattels by auction in any of the cases hereinafter mentioned to take out the licence by this act required; namely, Any person selling goods or chattels by auction under distress for nonpayment of rent or tithes to less amount than twenty pounds; or under authority of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 18 (for the recovery of small debts in Scotland), or of the acts 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 57, and 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vic. c. 43 (for the recovery of small debts by civil bill in Ireland), or of the act 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vic. c. 41 (for the recovery of small debts in the sheriff courts in Scotland), or of any other act now in force in which the like exemption is given to the proper officer of court executing the process of such court to sell the effects seized by him by auction without taking out a licence as an auctioneer, provided the sum for which such process is enforced is under twenty pounds.

Sec. 6 repeals so much of the act 6 Geo. IV. c. 81 as required every auctioneer, over and above the licence to him granted as an auctioneer, to take out such licence as is required by law to sell any goods or commodities for the dealing in or retailing, or vending, trading in, or selling of which an excise licence is specially required, before he should sell such goods or commodities by auction, and so much of any other act or acts by which it was required that a separate and distinct licence should be taken out by an auctioneer selling by auction gold or silver plate or patent medicines, or any other articles. And any auctioneer having at the time in force a licence under this act may sell by auction any such property, goods, or commodities, without taking out any other licence in such respect.

By sec. 7, every auctioneer, before beginning an auction, shall affix or suspend, or cause to be suspended, a ticket or board containing his true and full christian and surname and residence, painted, printed, or written in large letters publicly visible and legible, in some conspicuous part of the room or place where the auction is held, so that all persons may easily read the same, and shall also keep such ticket or board so affixed or suspended during the whole time of such auction, under a penalty of 20*l*.

And by sec. 8, if any person acting as an auctioneer, and by this act required to take out a licence, does not, at the time of any sale by auction, on demand of any officer of excise or customs, or any officer of stamps and taxes, produce and show to such officer a proper licence to him granted under this act, and then in force, or does not immediately deposit with such officer the sum of ten pounds, every such person may be arrested and detained by any officer of the peace as hereinafter mentioned. And every officer of the peace shall, at the request of any such officer as first aforesaid, at the termination of such sale, or sooner if convenient, arrest and convey such person before some one of her majesty's justices of the peace for the county or place where such sale has been held; and such justice shall examine into the fact or facts charged, and upon proof, either by confession of the party offending or by the oath of one or more credible witnesses, that the person so brought before him did act as an auctioneer, and did not produce such licence, or deposit such sum of money as aforesaid, shall commit such offender to the common gaol or house of correction for any time not exceeding one calendar month. No such imprisonment, nor the deposit of such sum of money, shall in any manner prejudice or affect any proceedings afterwards instituted for recovery of the penalty incurred for acting as an auctioneer without a licence. But if any person having so deposited such sum of money, at any time before the expiration of one week from the date of such sale, produces to the officer with whom he deposited the same a proper licence to him granted and in force as an auctioneer before and at such sale, such officer shall immediately thereupon repay to such person the full sum so deposited; if otherwise, such officer shall, at the expiration of the said week, account for all such money to the commissioners of excise, or such person as they may appoint to receive the same.

By the 6 Ann. c. 16, brokers in the city of London are obliged to take out a particular licence, and be admitted as such by the court of aldermen, under a penalty of 25*l.*; but it has been held, that the selling of goods by auction there by an auctioneer who has paid the auction licence duty, does not subject him to that penalty, although he is not licensed as such broker.

Licensed auctioneers acting as appraisers are also exempt from the Stamp Office licence duty payable yearly by all other persons acting as such, which, by 8 & 9 Vic. c. 76, is now 2*l.*

Brewers and Retailers of Beer, Ale, Cider, &c.

There are at present no excise duties on beer, ale or cider; having been taken off by the 1 Wm. IV. c. 51, from the 10th October, 1830. The hereditary duties of excise on beer and ale, granted to Charles II. and his successors, are not repealed by that act, but merely suspended.

The cautionary survey on brewers was abandoned from the 15th October, 1835, with a reservation of the right of inspection when deemed requisite, to check the use of other than legal ingredients, and to assess the rate of the annual licence.

On the exportation of ale or beer to foreign parts, a drawback of 5*s.* is allowed for every barrel of 36 gallons. Before any debenture can be paid, the exporter or his principal clerk or manager must make oath that such beer or ale was put on board the exporting ship as merchandise to be sent beyond the seas, and no part thereof for the ship's use; that the same has been brewed wholly from malt, for which the full duty has been paid, specifying when and where and by whom brewed; and that the quantity of malt used was not less than two bushels for every 36 barrels of such beer or ale. Persons making false statements forfeit 200*l.*, and the debenture is void. 1 Wm. IV. c. 51, § 11.

The licences required to be taken out by brewers and by retailers of beer, under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 81, are as follows; to which is to be added the additional 5 per cent by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 17:—

	£.	s.	d.
Every Brewer of Table Beer only for sale, if the quantity of beer brewed within the year ending the 10th October previous to taking out such licence, shall not exceed 20 barrels	0	10	0
Exceeding 20 and not exceeding 50 barrels	1	0	0
50 — — 100 — —	1	10	0
100 barrels	2	0	0
Every Brewer of Beer other than Table Beer, for sale, if the quantity brewed within the year ending the 10th October shall not exceed 20 barrels	0	10	0
Exceeding 20 and not exceeding 50 barrels	1	0	0
50 — — 100 — —	1	10	0
100 — — 1000 — —	2	0	0
1000 — — 2000 — —	3	0	0
2000 — — 5000 — —	7	10	0
5000 — — 7500 — —	11	5	0
7500 — — 10,000 — —	15	0	0
10,000 — — 20,000 — —	30	0	0
20,000 — — 30,000 — —	45	0	0
30,000 — — 40,000 — —	60	0	0
40,000 barrels	75	0	0

Every person who shall first become a Brewer of Beer for sale, on taking out a licence for that purpose, shall pay the sum of 10*s.*, and within ten days after the 10th October next, pay such further sum as with the said sum of 10*s.* shall amount to the duty herein mentioned, according to the number of barrels of beer brewed within the preceding year or period for which such licence was granted.

As, when the duties on beer were removed, the account of beer brewed ceased to be taken by the officers of excise, the 1 Wm. IV. c. 51 enacts, that, for the purpose of determining the rate of duty, every Brewer is to be deemed to have brewed one barrel of beer for every two bushels of malt used by him.

Every Brewer of Beer for sale, who shall retail such beer to be consumed elsewhere than on his or her premises	5	5	0
Every person, not being a Brewer, who shall sell Strong Beer only in casks containing not less than 4½ gallons imperial standard gallon measure, or in not less than two dozen reputed quart bottles at one time, to be drank or consumed elsewhere than on his or her premises	3	3	0
Every person who shall be duly licensed to keep a common inn, alehouse, or victualling-house, and who shall sell Beer, Cider, or Perry, by retail, to be drank or consumed in his or her premises, if the dwelling-house, at the time of taking out such licence, shall not, together with the offices, courts, yards, and gardens, be rated at a rent of 20 l. per annum or upwards, or shall not be rented or valued at such rent or annual value	1	1	0
If rated at 20 l. per annum or upwards	3	3	0
Licences to sell beer by retail, by 1 Wm. IV. c. 64 and 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 89—
If to be drunk on the premises	3	3	0
If not to be drunk on the premises	1	1	0

Brewers are not now required, as formerly, to give bond on taking out a licence.

The regulations for the making of ale and beer are, since the abolition of the duties, very few and simple. They consist chiefly in taking out a licence, entering the premises, and abstaining from the use of any article other than malt.

By 1 Wm. IV. c. 51, every brewer must make entry at the nearest excise office of every store, building, room, and place intended to be used for brewing or keeping of worts or beer, specifying therein every place in which he intends to keep the malt and hops to be used in the brewing of beer. Any brewer using any place or mash tub for brewing of beer without having made such entry, or storing or keeping any malt or hops in any place not so specified, or using any malt or hops other than such as have been stored in a place so entered, forfeits or every offence 200*l.*; and all worts and beer found in any place or mash tub not entered, with the casks, and all malt and hops found in any place entered for the brewing of beer which have been taken from any place other than the places so entered and specified, are forfeited, and may be seized by any officer of excise.

Obstructing officers from entering buildings or places used by brewers for the purpose of inspecting and taking an account of beer or malt therein, subjects to a forfeiture of 100*l.*

To prevent the adulteration of beer, the 56 Geo. III. c. 58 enacts, that if any brewer, or dealer in or retailer of beer, shall have in his possession or use any liquor, extract, calx, or other preparation for the purpose of darkening the colour of beer, other than brown malt, as commonly used in brewing; or shall receive or have in his possession, or put into any worts or beer, any molasses, honey, liquorice, vitriol, quassia, coculus indicus, grains of paradise, guinea pepper, or opium, or any extract or preparation of those articles, or any article or preparation whatever as a substitute for malt or hops, he shall forfeit 200*l.* and all such articles, and the worts and beer, with all casks, &c.

And any druggist or chemist, or other person, selling or delivering to any licensed brewer, or dealer in or retailer of beer, or to any other person for his use, any such improper ingredients, forfeits 500*l.*

And, by 1 Wm. IV. c. 51, no brewer is to have any raw or unmaltd corn or grain upon his premises, under 200*l.* penalty, and forfeiture thereof.

Retailers of Beer.—Previous to the year 1830, the retail sale of beer was principally confined to persons having a magistrates' licence to "keep a common inn, alehouse, or victualling house," who, in addition to such licence, were, and are still, required to take out an excise licence. But in that year the 1 Wm. IV. c. 64 was passed (since amended by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 85, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61), by which the trade in beer has been thrown open; and any person may now sell beer by retail, on obtaining an annual licence from the excise, which if for the sale of beer to be drank on the premises costs three guineas, but if not to be drank on the premises only one guinea. The following are the chief provisions of these acts.

By 1 Wm. IV. c. 64, any householder (except sheriff's officers, persons executing the process of any court of justice, or persons not being assessed to the poor of the parish) may apply for and obtain an excise licence for selling beer, ale, and porter by retail. Every such application must specify the christian and surname of the person applying, a description of the house, together with the names, occupation, and residence of the persons proposed as his sureties. And, by the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 85, if the application be for a licence to sell beer or cider by retail to be drunk in the house or on the premises, it must be accompanied by a certificate from six inhabitants of the parish, township, or place, rated to the poor at not less than 6*l.* per annum each (none of whom shall be maltsters, common brewers, or persons licensed to sell, or owners or proprietors of a house licensed for the sale of spirituous liquors, beer, or cider by retail), stating that the person applying to be licensed is of good character; which certificate must also be signed by one of the overseers of the parish &c., certifying that such six persons are inhabitants so rated. This certificate is to be produced annually, and deposited with the person authorized to grant licences; but it is only required when the application is for a licence to retail beer or cider to be drunk or consumed in the house or on the premises; and not in any case as to a house situate in the cities of London or Westminster, or within the bills of mortality, or within any city or town corporate, or within the distance of one mile from the polling place for the election of members of parliament where the population exceeds 5000.

The 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, however, further enacts, that no licence to retail beer shall be granted to any person but the real resident holder and occupier of the dwelling-house in which he shall apply to be licensed; nor shall any licence be granted in respect of any dwelling-house rated at less than 15*l.* per annum within the bills of mortality or in places containing 10,000 inhabitants; or at less than 11*l.* per annum in places containing more than 2500 inhabitants, or at less than 8*l.* per annum in all other places. And every person applying to be so licensed shall produce a certificate in writing from the overseer of the place in which he shall reside, certifying that the applicant is the real resident holder and occupier of the said house, and also the true rent or annual value at which the same is rated; which certificate must be left with the proper officer of excise, as well as a duplicate thereof with the clerk of the peace for the county &c. In extra-parochial places such certificate may be signed by two inhabitant householders. Any overseer wrongfully refusing such certificate, or certifying falsely, is liable to forfeit 20*l.* Any person forging such a certificate shall forfeit 50*l.*, and be disqualified from obtaining a licence. Every person convicted of felony, or of selling spirits without a licence, is also disqualified from obtaining or holding a licence under these acts.

The licence is granted, within the limits of the chief office of excise in London, under the hands and seals of two commissioners of excise, or persons authorized by them, and elsewhere under the hands and seals of the collectors and supervisors of excise of the district. At the time of receiving it, the party enters into a bond (not subject to stamp duty) with one surety in the penalty of 20*l.*, or two sureties of 10*l.* each; but no person is competent to be such surety, who is licensed to sell beer under the provisions of this act, or who is not a householder assessed to and paying poor's rates within the parish. The licence is dated on the day it is granted, and expires at the end of twelve calendar months after.

Persons licensed to sell beer or cider under these acts must make entry with the officers of excise of every house, cellar, room, and place for storing, keeping, or retailing beer or cider, as required by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 53, and 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 51, on penalty of 200*l.*, and forfeiture of all the beer and cider found in any unentered place. And every such licensed person must have painted, in letters three inches at least in length, in white upon a black ground, or in black upon a white ground, publicly visible, upon a board to be placed over the door of the house in which he is licensed to sell beer by retail, his christian and surname at full length, with the words "Licensed to sell Beer by retail," adding the words, "To be drunk on the Premises," or "Not to be drunk on the Premises," as the case may be.

Persons in partnership need not take out more than one licence for the same house or premises.

If any person not duly licensed shall sell beer or cider either to be consumed upon the premises or off the premises where sold, or if any person shall sell beer or cider to be consumed upon the premises where sold without being licensed so to do, every such person shall, in addition to any excise penalty to which he may become subject, forfeit 5*l.* The sale of any quantity less than 4½ gallons is a selling by retail. And if any person licensed to sell beer not to be drunk on the premises shall carry, or permit any person to carry, any beer or cider from his premises for the purpose of being sold on his account, or for his benefit or profit drunk in any other house, or in any tent, shed, or other building of any kind belonging to him, the same shall be deemed to be drunk on the premises.

Every person licensed to sell beer by retail shall sell (except in quantities less than a half pint) by the gallon, quart, pint, or half-pint measure, sized according to the standard; or, in default, shall forfeit the illegal measure, and pay not exceeding 40*s.*, together with the costs of the conviction, to be recovered within thirty days before two justices; and such penalty is over and above all penalties to which the offender may be liable under any other act.

Every seller of beer by retail under this act, who shall permit drunkenness or disorderly conduct in his house shall for the first offence forfeit not less than 40*s.* nor more than 5*l.*, for the second offence not less than 5*l.* nor more than 10*l.*, and for the third offence not less than 20*l.* nor more than 50*l.*; and the justices before whom any conviction for the third offence shall take place may adjudge that such offender shall be disqualified from selling beer by retail for two years, and also that no beer shall be sold by retail by any person in the house of such offender.

And if any person so licensed shall knowingly sell any beer made otherwise than from malt and hops, or shall mix any drugs or other pernicious ingredient with beer, or shall fraudulently dilute or in any way adulterate it, he shall for the first offence forfeit not less than 10*l.* nor more than 20*l.*, and for the second shall be adjudged to be disqualified from selling beer for two years, or forfeit not less than 20*l.* nor more than 50*l.*; and if any offender convicted of such offence shall during two years sell any beer, either in the house or premises mentioned in the licence of such offender or in any other place, he shall forfeit not less than 25*l.* nor more than 50*l.*; and if any person shall at any time, during any term in which it shall not be lawful for beer to be sold by retail on the premises of any offender, sell any beer by retail on such premises, knowing that it was not lawful to be sold, he shall forfeit not less than 10*l.* nor more than 20*l.*

The hours during which houses licensed under these acts are to be kept open used to be regulated once a year by the justices of peace in petty sessions; but by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, § 15, it is enacted, that no person licensed under that or the former acts shall keep open his house for the sale of beer or cider, or shall sell beer or cider, or suffer the same to be drank in his house, at any time before five o'clock in the morning or after twelve at night, in the cities of London and Westminster, or the boroughs of Marylebone, Finsbury, the Tower Hamlets, Lambeth, and Southwark, nor after eleven o'clock in any place within the bills of mortality, or in any place where the population shall exceed 2500, or within one mile from a polling place of any parliamentary borough of the like population, nor after ten o'clock in any other place; nor before one o'clock in the afternoon, or at any time during which the houses of licensed victuallers shall be closed, on any Good Friday, Christmas day, or day of public fast or thanksgiving. A breach of these regulations entails a penalty of 40*s.* and every sale is deemed a separate offence.

Constables and police officers may enter into any house licensed to sell beer or spirituous liquors to be consumed on the premises, whenever they think proper; and any licensed person, or his servant or other person by his direction, refusing to admit them, shall for the first offence forfeit not exceeding 5*l.* with the costs of the conviction, to be recovered within twenty days before one justice, and for a second offence may be adjudged by two justices to be disqualified to sell beer &c. by retail for two years.

In case of complaint against any licensed person, two justices of peace may require the production of his licence; and on refusal or neglect to produce it, he shall forfeit not exceeding 5*l.* The summons or order of a justice of peace under these acts must be served by a constable, special constable, or police or other peace officer.

One justice acting for a county or place where any riot or tumult has taken place, or two or more justices where any riot or tumult may be expected to happen, may order every such licensed person within their jurisdiction, in or near the place of such riot, to close his house.

The provisions of the Mutiny act as to billeting soldiers extend only to persons licensed to sell beer or cider to be drunk on the premises.

Licences to sell cider only by retail are granted under the same regulations, on the payment of 1*l.* 1*s.* duty; but persons licensed to retail beer may also retail cider without any other licence.

A person licensed under these acts is not thereby authorized to sell wine, spirits, sweets or made wines, or mead or metheglin; and if he suffer any such to be brought into his entered premises, he forfeits 50*l.* over and above any excise penalty. And any officer of excise may enter the premises not only of persons licensed under these acts, but also of persons selling table beer at 1*sd.* or any less rate per quart, and make search for and seize all wines, spirits, and sweets therein, and also all beer on the premises of the latter which by law they are not entitled to sell.

The provisions of the 56 Geo. III. against using or having in possession ingredients for the adulteration of beer, apply to all dealers in beer as well as to brewers.

Bricks and Tiles.

The excise regulations for the manufacture of bricks are contained in the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 24. The duties by that act are as follows; adding the 5 per cent by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 17:—

	£.	s.	d.
For every 1000 bricks, not exceeding 150 cubic inches each brick, made in Great Britain, or brought from Ireland into Great Britain	-	-	0 5 10
— exceeding the above dimensions	-	-	0 10 0

The whole of which duties are drawn back upon exportation to foreign parts or to Ireland.

Brick-makers must make entry with the excise of their brick-fields, sheds, work-houses, &c., on penalty of 100*l.*; and officers may enter and examine every place, kiln, stove, or clamp thereon, under a like penalty on the maker, if hindered or obstructed.

Bricks are to be charged with duty whilst in the operation of drying or hardening, and before being removed to the kilns or clamps for burning; and in charging the duties the officer is to allow 10 out of every 100 for waste. A penalty of 50*l.* is imposed on the maker if the officer is obstructed in examining or taking account of them, or if they are not placed in such form that the officer may readily take such account, or if they are removed to the kiln &c. for burning before the account is taken, unless the officer have failed to attend after three days notice, in which case the maker shall deliver an account of the number and sizes of the bricks removed to the officer on his next visit.

Bricks not charged are to be kept separate from charged bricks, on penalty of 20*l.* And makers fraudulently concealing or conveying away bricks with a view to evade the duties forfeit 100*l.*

The officer is to deliver an account, at the end of every six weeks, of all the bricks made during that time, and of the duty payable, which must be paid within six weeks, or in default the maker is liable to forfeit double the amount.

A pattern mould is to be kept by every maker, adapted for forming a brick ten inches long, three inches thick, and five inches wide, and stamped with the word "Excise;" by which, in case of dispute, is to be ascertained whether any bricks are to be subject to the higher or lower rate of duty, by the officer taking indifferently three of them, and if the clay be, in two cases out of three, more than sufficient to fill the mould, the whole of such bricks shall be charged with the higher duty.

All bricks, of whatever form or in whatever manner soever made, are to be deemed bricks within the meaning of this act, and chargeable with duty.

But any person may make bricks for the sole purpose of draining wet and marshy land without being charged with duty, provided they have the word "Drain" distinctly stamped or moulded in the centre thereof; but any person selling or using such bricks for any other purpose incurs a penalty of 50*l*.

The duties on tiles were repealed by the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 11, from the 20th May, 1833; but, to prevent evasion of the duties by bricks being denominated tiles, nothing shall be deemed a tile which when turned out of the mould shall not be a perfect square (except tiles for covering houses or draining lands), or which shall be in any part more than $1\frac{7}{10}$ inch thick if under 8 inches square, or more than $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches thick above that size, or which shall have any incisions therein so as to allow of being easily divided.

Candles.

The duties on candles, and on the licences required to be taken out by the makers thereof, were repealed by the 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 19, from the 1st January, 1832.

Coffee, Tea, Cocoa Nuts, Chocolate, and Pepper.

Every person trading in coffee, tea, cocoa nuts, chocolate, or pepper, must take out an annual excise licence, the duty on which is 1*l*s.

Every druggist, grocer, chandler, or coffee-house keeper, chocolate-house keeper, and other persons dealing in coffee, tea, or cocoa nuts, or making or selling chocolate, must have his storehouse and manufactories entered with the Excise, under penalty of 200*l*. and forfeiture of the goods; and the premises of roasters of coffee must be entered in like manner, under a penalty of 50*l*.

Every person keeping a public house, shop, cellar, or other warehouse for selling brandy or other spirituous liquors, who shall have in his custody, for his use, any coffee, tea, chocolate, or cocoa nuts, above 6*lb*. weight of any kind, shall be deemed a dealer in such commodities.

Manufacturing any thing in imitation of tea subjects the offender to 5*l*. penalty, or from six to twelve months imprisonment; and leaves &c. in the possession of any person for such purpose may be seized and destroyed.

Roasted beans and rye reduced to powder have frequently been used to adulterate ground coffee; and the possession of such substitutes for coffee was formerly an offence punishable by the forfeiture of the articles and a penalty of 100*l*. But by the 3 Geo. IV. c. 53, persons who are not dealers in coffee may take out a licence for roasting and selling corns, peas, beans, and parsnips, labelling the parcels with their names, and conforming to the various regulations in the act.

By the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 101, the excise duties on tea ceased from the 22d April, 1834, customs duties being imposed in lieu thereof; and the Treasury were empowered to discontinue the practice of requiring and issuing permits for the removal of tea, and establish any other regulations, either of customs or excise, as should appear necessary for the security of the revenue. Tea permits, and the survey of the excise, were accordingly abolished under Treasury authority, dated March, 1836.

Glass.

All the duties on glass, and on the licences in respect of any glass-maker or glass-house, were repealed by the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 6, from the 5th April, 1845.

Hops.

An excise duty of 2*d.* per lb. is imposed on all hops produced in Great Britain,¹ to which is added an additional 5 per cent by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 17. By 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 53, one moiety of the duty is payable on the 1st March next after it is charged, and the other on the 1st October in each year; and defaulters in payment forfeit double the sum due. The whole duty is drawn back upon exportation.²

By the 9 Ann. c. 12, hop planters are required to give notice to the excise office at the next market town, on or before the 1st August in each year, of the number of acres they have in cultivation, on penalty of 40*s.* per acre; and the officer is to make entry of the same within five days, on penalty of 2*l.* No oasthouse, storehouse, or other place, or kiln, is to be used without notice, under 50*l.* penalty; and hops are to be brought to such oast, storehouse, &c. in six weeks after gathering, on pain of forfeiting 5*s.* per pound. The usual powers are given to the officers to enter such places.

By the 6 Geo. I. c. 21, and 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 81, hop-planters are to give twenty-four hours notice previous to bagging and weighing, and the time for doing so must be between four o'clock in the morning and five in the afternoon; and, by 9 Anne, the officer is properly to mark the bags.

The planter or owner of the hops is to keep scales for weighing them for the officer's use, and assist in the weighing, under penalty of 50*l.*

By the 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 81, owners are to mark bags with their names and places of abode before packing the hops, under 20*l.* penalty, (and with no other name &c., by 54 Geo. III. c. 123); and the bags must not weigh more than 10 lb. to every 112 lb. gross weight of bags and hops, under a similar penalty. The officer is also to mark the gross weight, with the year of the growth, and the progressive number, according to the number of bags charged to each owner for that season. The counterfeiting such marks incurs 100*l.* penalty; and defacing them, 20*l.* If hop-owners &c. pack different qualities &c. of hops in the same bag, they are liable to a penalty of 10*l.* per bag.

Hops are not to be removed from the weighing place before twelve hours, unless weighed by the supervisor, on penalty of 50*l.*

¹ 42 Geo. III. c. 69; 45 Geo. III. c. 94.

² 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 100.

Pickers of hops carrying off hops forfeit 5s. per pound, or may be sent to hard labour; and a similar consequence ensues for obstructing officers in their duty.

The mixing with hops any drug or other ingredient, to colour or alter the scent, subjects the party to 5*l.* penalty for every cwt. so altered.

The malicious cutting or destroying hop plantations is felony, punishable by transportation for life or seven years, or imprisonment and hard labour in a common gaol for not exceeding seven years.

Leather, &c.

The duties on hides and skins tanned, tawed, or dressed in oil, and on vellum and parchment, were repealed by the 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. c. 16, from the 5th July, 1830. But so much of the 48 Geo. III. c. 60, as prohibited tanners &c. from carrying on the business of a shoemaker, currier, &c. was left unrepealed.

Maltsters and Malt.

The duty on the licence required to be taken out by maltsters under the 6 Geo. IV. is according to the following scale, with the additional 5 per cent by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 17:—

	£. s. d.		£. s. d.
If the Malt made within the year ending 5th July shall not exceed 50 quarters	0 7 6	Not exceeding 300 quarters	2 5 0
Not exceeding 100 quarters	0 15 0	" " 350 —	2 12 6
" " 150 —	1 2 6	" " 400 —	3 0 0
" " 200 —	1 10 0	" " 450 —	3 7 6
" " 250 —	1 17 6	" " 500 —	3 15 6
		" " 550 —	4 3 6
		If exceeding 550 —	4 10 0

Every person who shall first become a Maltster, on taking out such licence, must pay the sum of 7*s.* 6*d.*, and, within ten days after 5th July next, pay such further sum as with the 7*s.* 6*d.* shall amount to the duty hereinbefore mentioned, according to the quantity of Malt made within the preceding year.

The principal act now in force regarding this extensive branch of trade is the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 52, since explained and amended by the 11 Geo. IV. c. 37, and the 1 Vict. c. 49. The first of these acts provides for the entry of premises with the excise in the usual manner, under 100*l.* penalty and forfeiture of all malt made in places unentered; and the 11 Geo. IV., referring to the first section of that act, provides that the same room may be used for keeping malt and other grain, provided the malt be separated therefrom; and also that any grain not intended for making into malt may be dried on a kiln entered as for making malt, if twenty-four hours notice be given in writing to the officer. The form and construction of cisterns and couch frames are regulated by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV.; and maltsters are required to obtain a certificate from the supervisors of excise of the due construction of cisterns, upon pain that wetting or steeping any grain in a cistern not so certified is to be deemed a wetting and steeping without notice, and subject to a penalty accordingly. The usual power is given to officers to enter at any time into the premises, to take account of malt and grain, and leave a specimen book, the removal or obliteration of which subjects the maltster to 200*l.* penalty. Obstructing officers in the execution of their duty is 300*l.* penalty.

Twenty-four hours notice is to be given of wetting corn to be made into malt; and wetting or steeping corn without such notice subjects to 100*l.* penalty. If the maltster does not proceed pursuant to notice within three hours of the time mentioned, the notice is void ; and he must not begin to wet at any other time than between eight in the morning and two in the afternoon, under 100*l.* penalty. The grain is to be kept in the cistern covered with water for at least forty hours, under 100*l.* penalty : but the water may be once drained off during the steeping, on due notice being given to the officer, provided the grain be again covered with water within an hour's time. After an account is taken, no grain can be added to that in steep, under 200*l.* penalty. Corn is to be emptied from the cistern between seven in the morning and four in the afternoon, under 100*l.* penalty. All cisterns in the same house are to be emptied at the same time, or in three hours from the commencement of emptying, under 200*l.* penalty ; and after the last emptying of any cistern, 200*l.* penalty attaches for taking corn out of any cistern under the same roof within 96 hours afterwards, unless on the day on which such 96 hours would expire, and after seven in the morning. The penalty on so conveying corn from the cistern that it cannot be gauged is 200*l.* Maltsters are to empty all grain from the cisterns into the couch frames, and to level the same therein, not above 30 inches in depth. Corn may be emptied from the couch frame at the expiration of 27 hours, but, for the purpose of gauging, it is to be deemed in couch for 30 hours. A penalty of 100*l.* attaches on treading or forcing together corn in the cistern or couch frame ; and the officer, on suspicion thereof, may turn it over, and level and re-gauge it ; and if the increase amounts to 5 bushels in 100 when the corn or grain has not been emptied 8 hours from the cistern, or to 6 bushels in 100 if emptied 8 hours and not 16, or to 7 bushels in 100 if emptied 16 hours or upwards, it shall be deemed conclusive evidence of the corn or grain having been trodden or forced together. The maltster is to assist the officer in re-measuring, if required, under 100*l.* penalty. Grain that has been steeped 50 hours, if there be no other grain on the premises which has been steeped for a less time, may be sprinkled at the expiration of six days, or 144 hours, after it has been emptied from the cistern, on giving twenty-four hours notice to the officer. Maltsters are not to have more than six floors, including the couch frame and kiln, from one cistern, or not more than one cistern emptied into the same couch frame, under 200*l.* penalty. But floors may be divided for working grain separately. The floors must be so placed and constructed, that the officer may with convenience be able to gauge the grain thereon. The penalty for mixing grain of different steepings is 200*l.* ; for dampening malt after it is taken from the kiln, 100*l.* ; and for fraudulently concealing or carrying away or receiving malt before an account is taken by the officer, 200*l.*

The officers are to make a return of the duties charged on the maltster every six weeks ; and the amount is to be paid by the maltster in six days afterwards, on pain of forfeiting double the amount, unless security is given by bond in double value for the due payment of all duties at the end of every eighteen weeks.

Servants or workmen beginning to wet corn or empty cisterns at illegal hours &c., with intent to injure their masters, are liable to imprisonment from three to twelve months, with hard labour ; and the masters are spared the penalties, provided they prosecute the parties to conviction within a month, and obtain a certificate thereof.

Paper, Pasteboard, Scaleboard, Millboard, &c.

There were formerly two classes of paper in the eye of the excise laws. All writing, coloured, and wrapping paper, cardboards, and pasteboards, came under the denomination of first class paper, and paid 3*d.* per lb. duty, unless manufactured wholly of tarred ropes, without the tar being previously extracted, in which case the paper was denominated second class, and paid 1½*d.* per lb.; and millboards and scaleboards made of the same materials as second class paper, paid 2½*d.* per lb., or 2*l.*s. the cwt. But by the 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 52, since superseded by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 23, the duty was reduced to 1½*d.* per lb. on all paper, glazed paper, sheathing paper, button paper, and on all button-board, millboard, pasteboard, and scaleboard, of whatever kind or description, made in the United Kingdom, without reference to the kind of materials employed in the manufacture thereof; to which is added the additional duty of 5 per cent by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 17.

A drawback of the whole duty is allowed on the exportation of paper, and of printed books, and account books, whether bound or unbound; also of 2*d.* for every dozen square yards of paper printed, painted, or stained in the United Kingdom.

Also, in favour of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, of those of Scotland, of Trinity College, Dublin, and of the queen's printers in England, Scotland, and Ireland, an allowance is made of the whole duty on all paper used in printing Bibles, Testaments, Psalm Books, Common Prayer Books, or works in the Latin, Greek, Oriental, or Northern languages. A drawback of the duty is also allowed on all glazed boards or other press papers used by clothiers and hot-pressers in the pressing woollen cloths and stuffs.

Every maker of paper &c. is required, on penalty of 100*l.*, to take out a licence, renewable annually, for which the duty is 4*l.*

The commissioners of excise are bound to prepare and deliver to all makers requiring the same, through the supervisors, labels to be used by the makers in tying up paper and boards. These labels are marked with the number or letter of each mill for which they are supplied, and the makers are bound to deliver them on demand to the supervisor. A refusal to comply with such demand, or any destruction or sale of the labels, or the use of them for any other purpose than that of tying up paper &c., subjects the maker to a penalty of 10*l.* in respect of each label.

Every maker is required to make up all paper and boards into reams, half reams, or parcels; each of which must be inclosed in a wrapper, on which is to be affixed, by paste or otherwise, a label, so that the same shall be on the top thereof. Every ream &c. is then to be secured by string, and the contents, denomination, and weight thereof are to be written or printed on such wrapper. A neglect of any of these requisites entails a penalty of 10*l.* in each case, as well as the forfeiture of the paper &c. Each ream of paper (other than glazed, sheathing, or button paper) must consist of twenty quires, and each quire of twenty-four sheets, except printing paper, which may consist of any number of sheets short of 516 sheets per ream. A parcel of glazed paper, sheathing paper, button paper, button board, mill-board, paste-board, and scaleboard, must consist of even dozens of sheets, not less than twenty-four nor more than seventy-two. All paper and parcels which are not made up in these quantities are liable to forfeiture. If, however the maker is desirous of making up any paper, other than glazed, sheathing, or button paper, in less quantities than a ream or half ream, he may do so, if he specify the exact number of sheets on the label, and provided that the packets so made up shall not weigh less than twenty pounds. The edges of paper &c. may be cut before it is tied up; and paper may be made into quires without being folded up, if the quires are separated by slips of coloured paper.

If the mill is in a city or market town, twenty-four hours notice of weighing must be given by the maker to the excise; elsewhere forty-eight hours notice is required. All the paper and boards intended to be charged must be then produced, made up and tied, and with the particulars above stated; and the maker shall, on each ream, half ream, or parcel, which is weighed, write the progressive number thereof, and the quarter and year, according to the number made at the mill during the current quarter, to be computed from the 5th of January, the 5th of April, the 5th of July, and the 10th of October in each year. After this, the officer shall write upon each lot the day of the month and year, and sign the same with his christian and surname, and stamp the same in various places with a stamp to be provided for that purpose by the commissioners of excise. All paper so weighed is to be kept separate, and may not be removed for twenty-four hours, under a penalty of 50*l.*, in order that the supervisor may have an opportunity of re-weighing the same; and if any extra weight be found, the duty shall be paid upon the result of the re-weighing. No weight is to be used below 1 lb. and the turn of the scale is to be given to the crown; but in consideration thereof 2 per cent is allowed to the maker.

The maker is prohibited altering the label affixed to any paper or parcel of boards after the same has been charged; neither may he open them, or take anything therefrom, or in any respect make any alteration therein, on pain of forfeiting 20*l.* in each case, as well as the paper or parcel itself.

Paper may be tied up, charged with duty, and sent out, in single sheets on the rollers, without cutting and making it up into reams, if the true weight of such rollers be written in legible letters on the end thereof. The paper is to be tied up in wrappers and labelled as in other cases; and when weighed and charged, the officer may deduct the weight of the roller from the gross weight, provided the end of the roller whereon the weight thereof purports to be shall be distinctly visible.

Makers of paper are to enter daily in a book an account of all paper &c. delivered from their mills, and the progressive number, quarter and year, of every ream, half-ream, and parcel respectively, as well as the date of the delivery, and the place and conveyance to and by which the same was sent. This book is to be open to the inspection of the officers; and any maker neglecting to comply with these particulars, or in any way obliterating the entries in the said book, incurs a penalty of 200l. Any maker sending out paper &c. without the proper labels forfeits 20l. and the paper &c. so sent. Every ream or parcel differing from the marked weight is liable to forfeiture; and if any be sent out before the duty is charged thereon, the maker incurs a penalty of 300l. Any papermaker or other person forging any stamp or label &c. directed to be used by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 23, or knowingly having any such in his possession, or selling any ream &c. with such forged stamp &c. thereon, shall forfeit 1000l. for every such forged stamp &c., and 500l. for every such ream &c. as well as the paper itself.

Paper may be removed, before it is charged with duty, from one mill to another to be finished, on 48 hours notice to the officer of excise, who, after taking an account of the quantity &c., shall grant a certificate thereof, and of the mills from and to which it is to be removed. Every maker who shall receive into his possession paper &c. which has been charged with duty elsewhere, or has been returned to him from a customer, must mark the same with the particulars of such previous charge, or with the word "Returned," as the case may be, and shall keep the same separate from all other paper, and give notice thereof to the officer at the next survey; and before the same shall be sent out again, he must mark thereon the number of his own mill, on pain of forfeiting 50l. in each case.

Makers of pasteboard, not being makers of paper, are prohibited from using any paper not duty charged in their manufacture of pasteboard, on pain of forfeiting the implements of their trade and 100l; and they must produce all the paper before it is so used, in order to have an account taken thereof, under a similar penalty.

Every officer of excise is required to make a return of duty within his district to the collector of excise every six weeks, and also to leave a copy thereof with the maker, who is bound to pay the same within six days, or he will forfeit double the amount.

No person is allowed to carry on the trade of a stationer or dealer in paper &c. at any mill; nor can any maker carry on or be concerned in any such trade in any premises within one mile of his mill by the nearest road, on pain of forfeiting 200l.

The usual entry of the mill &c. is to be made with the excise, under a penalty of 200l.; and where two or more mills belonging to one person are not more than one mile apart, and the paper is removed from one to the other to be finished, they may be worked as one mill.

Persons desirous of receiving the drawback on exporting paper must give a twelve hours packing notice to the excise, specifying the time, place, and owner; and they must produce all the paper intended to be exported to the officer, who shall weigh and mark the same after having destroyed the labels thereon, and make returns to the office. There is a penalty of 200l. for any fraudulent increase of weight, as well as the forfeiture of the paper.

Exporters must give a shipping notice six hours before the intended shipment; and a declaration must be made, that the packages produced are the same as have been previously weighed and packed as above. The exporter must also give bond in double the amount of drawback, conditioned for the speedy exportation of such packages, which shall afterwards be shipped in the presence of an officer.

All persons detected in fraudulently obtaining drawbacks, forfeit 200*l.* over and above all other penalties to which they are liable in respect of the transaction, as well as the paper &c.

Upon proof on oath, before justices, of the loss or damage of paper by fire or wreck, the owner may recover the amount of duty paid by him on account of paper so lost or damaged.

All persons, on opening reams of paper, are required to write upon the label the word "Opened," or cross it with ink, or otherwise permanently cancel and deface the same, so as to prevent it from being again made use of, under a penalty of 10*l.* for every label found in his possession not so written upon, crossed, or defaced.

No stationer &c. is to receive paper into his possession from any mill in less quantities than a ream, half-ream, or parcel, and inclosed in a wrapper with all the proper marks, under a penalty of 50*l.*

Printed, Painted, or Stained Paper.

The excise duties on paper printed or stained, the drawbacks on such paper exported, and the duties on licences formerly required to be taken out by the printers, painters, and stainers of paper, were repealed by 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 52, from the 5th July, 1836.

Printed, Painted, or Stained Calicoes, Muslins, Linen, and Stuffs.

The duties on these goods, and on the licences formerly required by the printers, painters, or stainers thereof, were repealed by the 1 Wm. IV. c. 17, from the 1st March, 1831.

Plate.

This branch of the revenue was formerly under the management of the excise, but is now transferred to the commissioners of stamps.

Persons trading in or selling articles of gold or silver plate, in which the gold exceeds 2 dwts., or the silver exceeds 5 dwts., are required to take out a licence, renewable annually on the 31st July,* for which they pay as follows; namely,—Persons dealing in articles in which the gold does not exceed 2 oz., or the silver 30 oz., a duty of 2*l.* 6*s.*; those dealing in articles of greater weight, and all pawnbrokers taking in or delivering out pawns of such plate, and every refiner of gold or silver, a duty of 5*l.* 15*s.* The penalty for vending without a licence is 20*l.*, one half to the crown and the other to the informer; but the penalty may be mitigated by justices.

For dealing in gold and silver lace, gold and silver watches, or any article containing less than 2 dwts. of gold, or 5 dwts. of silver, no licence is necessary.

A single instance of selling plate by one private individual to another, has been held not to subject the seller to the necessity of taking out a licence.

The licence extends to the house and shop for which it is granted and places thereunto belonging, and to sales at fairs and markets. Partners in one house need only take out one licence.

Assay offices are established in different places; and any one selling any article previous to its having been assayed and marked forfeits 50*l.* (24 Geo. III. c. 56.) No plate is passed at the assay offices unless it be of the fineness of the old standard of 11 oz. 2 dwts., or of the new standard of 11 oz. 10 dwts.

Gold plate (except gold watch-cases) pays a duty of 17s. per oz.; and silver plate, a duty of 1s. 6d. But silver watch-cases, chains, tip-pings, mountings, collars, bottle tickets, tea-spoons, &c. are exempted.

Counterfeiting the dies for marking, or the marks on gold or silver wares, or transposing the marks from one article to another, is felony, punishable by transportation from seven to fourteen years, or imprisonment for three years. And dealers having such articles in possession are liable to a penalty of ten pounds; unless, without having any guilty knowledge of their being counterfeit, they discover the actual manufacturer, or person from whom they bought the same.—7 & 8 Vic. c. 22.

Soap.

The duties on soap were reduced by the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 16, from the 31st May, 1833, to 1½d. per lb. on all hard, and 1d. per lb. on all soft soap; to which is added an additional 5 per cent by 3 & 4 Vic. c. 17; and the same duties are continued by 3 & 4 Vic. c. 49, an act “to consolidate and amend the laws for collecting the duties of excise on soap made in Great Britain.”

A drawback of the whole duties is allowed on exportation.

Allowances are also made on soap used in certain manufactures, namely,—In preparing or finishing any manufacture from flax or cotton, or in the process of throwing, printing, or dyeing silk, the whole duty is allowed; and in making cloth, serges, kerseys, baize, stockings, or other manufactures of sheep or lamb's wool only, or manufactures whereof the greatest part of the value of the materials is wool, or in the finishing the manufactures or preparing the wool, the allowances were, before the late reduction in the duties, 2½d. for all hard soap, and 1d. for all soft soap used therein, but are now reduced one-half, that is, in the same proportion with the duties.

Every soap-maker is required to take out a licence, to be renewed annually, for which he pays 4l.; and no person is permitted to make soap within the limits of the head office of excise, unless he occupies a tenement of 10l. a year and is assessed to and pays the parish rates, nor elsewhere unless he is assessed and pays the church and poor rates.

Soap-makers are required to provide sufficient wooden covers for all coppers and other utensils wherein they boil hard soap; which covers are to be locked and sealed down by the officer whenever any soap is left in the same; and the furnace door cover, and the ash-hole door, are also to be locked and sealed at all times, except when the same are at work. Regulations are also made for preventing the use of any private conveyance or pipes, empowering officers to break up the ground to search for the same, and cut them up if found; if none be found, the officers must make compensation for the injury done.

On cleansing or taking soap out of the coppers, the makers are required to give notice; and certain spaces of time are limited for completing the cleansing and taking out the soap, according to the kind of soap and the number of frames into which the same is put. Coppers and other utensils must be cleansed once in every month. The frames used in making hard soap, for cleansing and putting it into when taken out of the vessel in which it is boiled and prepared, must be either square or oblong, with the bottom, sides, and ends thereof two inches thick, and not more than 45 inches long and 15 inches broad, and marked and numbered at the expence of the soap-maker.

Every maker of hard soap is required, as soon as the same is cleansed or taken out of the vessel in which it has been made, to add and put into the copper or vessel all the fob and skimmings taken out of the same, and also grease, in the proportion of at least 100 cwt. of grease for every ton of soap which the copper or vessel shall be by the officer computed to boil or make, and immediately remelt such grease in the presence of the officer of excise, on pain of forfeiting 100l.

For the purpose of calculating the weight by gauge for the charge of duty, 28 cubic inches of hard soap when hot, and 27·14 when cold, or if made in a high-pressure boiler 26·76 cubic inches when hot, and 25·91 when cold, shall be deemed a pound of hard soap made of the usual materials only; but if any silicious or earthy matter be added, then 24·04 cubic inches when hot, and 23·30 when cold, shall be deemed a pound. Formerly, in charging the duties, an allowance of one pound in ten of all hard soap was allowed for waste; but now the full quantity is charged without deduction, except on mottled soap.

Soap-makers increasing the weight of soap by adding water, lees, lye, or any liquor or matter thereto, after it has been taken an account of and charged with duty in the frames by the officer, and before it is sent out from the premises where manufactured, incur a penalty of 100l. and forfeiture of all the soap so increased in weight.

No lees fit for the making of soap may be manufactured for sale. Hard soap can only be removed in bars not more than 15 inches long.

Every barrel of soft soap must contain 256 lbs. avoirdupois, every half barrel 128 lbs., every firkin 64 lbs., and every half firkin 32 lbs., besides the weight and tare of the cask. Soap-makers must keep scales and weights, and assist the excise officers in the use of them, and must weigh their materials for making soap before the officer, on penalty of 100l.

Spirits.

The licences required by distillers, rectifiers, and retailers of spirits, are as follows, by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 81, with an additional 5 per cent by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 17:—

	£.	s.	d.
Every Distiller or Maker of Low Wines or Spirits	10	0	0
Every Rectifier or Compounder of Spirits	10	0	0
Every Dealer in Spirits, not being a Retailer thereof	10	0	0
Every Retailer of Spirits (except Retailers in Ireland after mentioned)—
If his dwelling-house be not, together with the offices, courts, yards, and gardens, rated at a rent of 10l. per annum or upwards, or be not rented or valued at such rent or annual value	2	2	0
If at £10 and under £20	4	4	0
20 — 25	6	6	0
25 — 30	7	7	0
If at £30 and under £40	8	8	0
40 — 50	9	9	0
50 per ann. or upwards	10	10	0
Every Retailer of Spirits in Ireland, being duly licensed to trade in Coffee, Tea, Cocoa Nuts, Chocolate, or Pepper, and not selling Spirits in any greater quantity at one time than two quarts, or any Spirits to be consumed in the house or premises—
If the dwelling-house be not, together with the offices, courts, yards, and gardens, rated at a rent of 10l. per annum or upwards, or be not rented or valued at such rent or annual value	9	9	0

Distillers.

111

£. s. d.			£. s. d.
If at £25 and under £30		10 10 0	If at £40 and under £50	12 12 0	0
	30 — 40	11 11 0		13 13 0	0
Every Maker of Stills in Scotland or Ireland			50 and upwards	0 10 0	0
Every person in Scotland or Ireland (not being a Distiller, Rectifier, or Compounder of Spirits) who shall keep any Still for carrying on the trade of a Chemist or any other business requiring the use of a Still
				0 10 0	0

By 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 75, additional duties were imposed on the licences of retailers of spirits, varying from one guinea to four guineas according to the rent of their premises; from which, however, those not consuming more than 30 gallons in the year were exempted by 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 39. But now, by 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 72, these additional duties are altogether repealed from the 10th October, 1836.

The principal act in force relating to the excise on the subject of spirits is the 6 Geo. IV. c. 80.

Distillers.—No person whatever is to keep a still for making spirits without a licence under 500*l.* penalty, and forfeiture of utensils, spirits, &c.; and no person can have such licence, unless he occupies a tenement of 20*l.* per annum and pays poor rates, nor unless the manufactory is situate within a quarter of a mile of a city or town containing 500 inhabited houses, unless he were so licensed before the commencement of the act (4th April, 1825), nor unless the still without the head contains 400 gallons; and unless the still without the head contains 3000 gallons, no distiller can keep more than two wash stills and two low wine stills, under 100*l.* penalty for every further still, and forfeiture thereof. Persons having any wash fit for distilling, and a still, in their custody are deemed distillers, and liable to the provisions of the act. No still may be used on a Sunday, under 50*l.* penalty.

The usual entries are to be made of the manufactories and utensils, under 200*l.* penalty, and forfeiture of those unentered. A description of the different utensils is given in §§ 15 to 25. There must not be any alteration made in the position or size of any vessel without notice, under 200*l.* penalty; and, under a similar penalty for refusal, the officer may at any time order the water to be drawn off from the worm-tub for examination of the worm and tub. The quantity that every moveable vessel is capable of holding is to be marked thereon with the name and address of the manufacturer, as also on all utensils and stores, under 50*l.* penalty. A drawing and description of the premises, showing the course of every fixed pipe, is to be given; and pipes for different purposes are to be painted with different colours, according to § 32.

Houses for rectifying or compounding spirits are not to be used within a mile of any still house, nor vice versâ, or of another distillery kept by the same person, under penalty of 500*l.* per week. No distiller or rectifier or compounder is to be a maker of beer, sweets, vinegar, cider, or perry, or a refiner of sugar &c., under 200*l.* penalty.

Licensed distillers &c. are to place a board over their distillery gate; expressive thereof, in manner directed by § 38, under 50*l.* penalty; and the like penalty is imposed on any unlicensed person doing so.

If an officer suspects there is a private still in any house, he may obtain a special warrant from a justice of the peace, and, if necessary, break open doors to search for and seize the same; and any person obstructing him forfeits 200*l.* Utensils found are forfeited, if not owned in ten days; and if the owner be found, he is liable to 200*l.* penalty.

Every reasonable facility and assistance are to be given to officers in the execution of their duty, under 100*l.* penalty; and 200*l.* penalty attaches on refusing them admission into a distillery. On declaring their names and business, they may break up the ground &c. to search for private pipes &c.

A distiller is not to distil from grain and from sugar or other materials at the same time, or within less than a month, and then only on giving notice of intending to do so, under 200*l.* penalty. He is in the first instance to give notice which material he means to brew or make wort or mash from; and if afterwards he uses, or has in the distillery ready for working, the other kind, 200*l.* penalty attaches. In § 49 general directions are given as to the mode and course in which wash &c. are to be conveyed through the different utensils; and a penalty of 200*l.*, or 20*s.* for every gallon not so conveyed, is imposed on acting contrary thereto.

A distiller, under 500*l.* penalty, must brew and distil at distinct periods, allowing twelve hours to intervene; and, under 50*l.* penalty, he is to give six hours notice in writing of his intention to mash or brew, and, under 300*l.*, must keep the produce of each brewing separate; and, within six hours after finishing such brewing, is to enter the true quantity &c. of materials used, on 50*l.* penalty. Saccharometers prescribed by the commissioners of excise are to be used, and the degrees of specific gravity of wort &c. are ascertained in the mode pointed out by § 53. A true declaration is to be made of the quantity and gravity of wort when collected in the fermenting back, under 200*l.* penalty; and if any increase of the strength or gravity takes place above five per cent, the penalty is 200*l.* Regulations as to making composition for exciting fermentation are contained in § 57.

The distiller, before distilling, must declare that all wort and wash are collected in fermenting backs, under 200*l.* penalty, and must give eight hours notice before moving the wash to the wash charger, under a like penalty. The officer may, if he please, distil a sample of the wash; and if the produce exceeds the proportion of $1\frac{1}{4}$ gallon of proof spirits for every five degrees of gravity attenuated, the same penalty attaches. So also if wash is removed before the whole contents of one back are conveyed to the still. So if notice is not given for removing low wines or spirits from receiver. So if those produced from the wash are not kept separate till an account is taken.

The duties are chargeable in manner directed by §§ 67, 68, 69, on the wash or wort; and if after gauging, but before distilling, an accident happen whereby the wash is lost, the duty is still payable, though the party may be relieved by the treasury upon proper application.

Mixing any material with spirits to prevent the strength being ascertained, is 200*l.* penalty; and, under the like penalty, distillers are to make entry at the end of every distilling period, by declaring the true quantity of wash distilled and spirits made in each brewing and distilling period, and once a quarter the quantity of malt used; and they are not to receive into their stocks any spirits but those distilled at their own distillery. The usual directions are given as to keeping weights &c., assisting officers, and the powers of officers to take samples &c.

Not less than 80 gallons at a time can be removed from a distillery; and the same must be accompanied with a permit, stating the strength &c., under 200*l.* penalty.

Section 101 fixes the denomination of the different spirits, and provides that the proof that spirits removed are of the denomination mentioned in the permit shall lie upon the owner.

By the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 71, sect. 10, distillers are allowed to warehouse spirits in casks containing not less than 20 gallons.

Rectifiers.—No person may carry on the business of a rectifier, who has not at least one still of 120 gallons; and a penalty of 200*l.* attaches for having conveyances to and from stills contrary to the act (§ 140), or not paying for locks and fastenings for securing the charge and discharge cocks, or for breaking or opening locks &c.; and 100*l.* penalty, if they do not charge their stills as provided by the following section, or work them off in 26 hours, or if they do not cause the heads to be taken off their stills as soon as they cease work; and 500*l.* penalty for buying spirits from unlicensed persons. The usual directions are given as to the officer's duty of entering premises, and taking an account &c. They, as well as dealers and retailers, are to mark the strength of spirits on casks, &c. They may send out spirits compounded at a strength not exceeding 17 per cent. under proof, and also spirits of wine, but not less than two gallons at a time. Spirits of wine are to be 43 per cent over proof at least, and are to be permitted and stocked accordingly, on 200*l.* penalty.

Any rectifier or compounder having in his custody wort &c., or distilling the same into low wines or spirits, or receiving spirits without a permit, is liable to 200*l.* penalty; and for a second offence he forfeits his licence, and is incapable of taking out another for three years.

Removing spirits without a permit incurs a penalty of 20*s.* per gallon and forfeiture of spirits.

Dealers in Spirits.—All persons (not being licensed distillers, rectifiers, or compounders) having more than 80 gallons of spirits in their possession are deemed dealers, and are liable to the laws affecting such dealers. Casks used by dealers or retailers of spirits are to be entered, on penalty of 100*l.* and forfeiture of casks and liquors; and they are to have the contents marked thereon, under 50*l.* penalty.

Dealers in British spirits are prohibited from selling or having in their possession any plain British spirits (except spirits of wine) of any strength exceeding the strength of 25 per cent above hydrometer proof, or of any strength below 17 per cent under hydrometer proof; or any compounded spirits (except shrub) of any greater strength than 17 per cent under hydrometer proof, upon pain of forfeiting all such spirits, with the casks &c.

But so much of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 80 as prohibited retailers of British spirits from having in their possession more than ten gallons of spirits of wine at one time is repealed by the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 75, § 11.

Dealers in foreign and British spirits are to keep them separate, in cellars or places specially entered for that purpose, under a heavy penalty; and any person mixing, selling, or sending out any British spirits mixed with foreign or colonial spirits, forfeits 100*l.* for every such offence.

By 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 75, sect. 14, dealers in spirits, not being retailers, may keep or sell, or send out to any person not being a retailer, foreign or colonial spirits of any degree of strength.

No retailer of spirits, or any other person, licensed or unlicensed, shall sell or send out from his stock or custody any quantity of spirits exceeding one gallon, unless the same be accompanied by a true and lawful permit, under pain of forfeiting 200*l.* ; and any rectifier, compounder, or dealer in spirits receiving the same into his stock, or allowing any one else to receive it, and any carrier, boatman, or other person knowingly carrying the same, shall forfeit the sum of 200*l.*, and the boat, horses, cart, &c. used in the carriage. Not producing a permit to an officer on demand is 100*l.* penalty ; and if a permit, where required, is not delivered to the buyer, the goods delivered are forfeited to the buyer, and double the price (including the duties) to the excise.

Retailers are not to be concerned in any distillery or rectifying house, under 200*l.* penalty.

No licence is to be granted for retailing spirits within gaols, houses of correction, or workhouses for parish poor ; nor are spirits to be used there, except medicinally and when prescribed by a regular physician, surgeon, or apothecary. The penalty for a first offence by gaolers &c. is 100*l.* ; and for a second, the forfeiture of their office.

Persons hawking spirits forfeit them and 100*l.* ; and if the penalty be not immediately paid, they may be committed to the house of correction for three months, if not sooner paid. If an offending party inform against another, his penalty is remitted. Any person is authorized to carry the offender before a justice. Persons resisting an officer are guilty of felony, and liable to seven years transportation ; and if a constable refuse to do what the act requires, he forfeits 20*l.*

Sweets or Made Wines, and Mead or Metheglin.

The excise duties on sweets or made wines, and mead or metheglin, and on the licences required by the makers of those articles, were repealed by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 77, from the 10th of October, 1834.

But nothing therein is to affect the duty on the licences required by the retailers of sweets or made wines, or of mead or metheglin. And every person who shall or sell or send out any liquor made by infusion, fermentation, or otherwise from fruit or sugar, or from fruit or sugar mixed with any other materials, commonly called sweets or made wines, or any mead or metheglin, in any less quantity than a whole cask containing 15 gallons, shall be deemed a retailer of sweets, and take out an annual licence, the duty on which, by 6 Geo. IV. c. 81, is one guinea.

Starch, Hair Powder, and Stone Blue.

The excise duties on starch, and on the licences required by makers, were repealed by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 77, from 10th October, 1834.

And all the laws and regulations of excise relating to stone blue and hair powder were repealed by the same act from 14th August, 1834.

Sugar manufactured from Beet-Root, &c.

By the 1 Vic. c. 57 an excise duty of 24*s.* per cwt. was imposed on all sugar manufactured from beet root in the United Kingdom, extended, by 3 & 4 Vic. c. 57, to all sugar manufactured in the United Kingdom, whether from potatoes, rice, or any other material. And all sweets and saccharine matter resembling or being in the form or imitation of sugar, or capable of being used as a substitute for sugar, shall be deemed sugar within the meaning of this act.

The duty is now reduced, by 8 & 9 Vic. c. 13, to 14*s.* per cwt.

Manufacturers are required to make entry of every sugar-house, warehouse, store-room or place, cylinder or mill, press, vat, copper, cistern, pan, or other vessel or utensil, distinguishing each by numbers or letters, on penalty of 100*l*. Officers of excise may enter premises by day or night; and obstructing them incurs a penalty of 200*l*.

Every syrup cistern, vat, copper, and pan, is to be gauged and labled by the proper officer before it is used, on penalty of 20*l*. a day; and any alteration afterwards in the size, position, or level, without proper notice in writing, incurs a penalty of 100*l*.

Before the manufacturer begins to rasp, grind, or mash any beet root, he must give four hours notice to the officer, on forfeiture of 100*l*. And when any juice or syrup is clarified or run into the syrup cistern, he must deliver a declaration, specifying the particular cistern, the quantity of juice or syrup, and its gravity to the officer, who must then attend and take an account thereof; and no part is to be drawn off until two hours after the delivery of such declaration, or until the officer has taken such account, on penalty of 100*l*. The officer may take samples at any time, for ascertaining the gravity.

After the officer has taken such account, or at the expiration of two hours from the delivery of the declaration, the juice or syrup is to be run off into the sugar pan; and no other juice, syrup, or sugar is to be mixed therewith, on penalty of 100*l*.

Within two days after the manufacture of the sugar is completed, the maker must give a notice in writing to the officer, signifying when it will be ready to be weighed; and if he neglect to give such notice, or if any part of the sugar be removed before it is weighed, he forfeits 200*l*.

For every gallon of juice or syrup run into the syrup cistern, the officer is to charge the proper quantity of sugar, in proportion to its gravity, according to tables prepared by the commissioners of excise. And when he shall have weighed any sugar after it is finished, he is to charge the full quantity, exclusive of waste or drainings.

At the end of every six weeks, the officer delivers to the collector of excise an account of the quantity of sugar for which the manufacturer has become liable, and in such return he is to charge according to whichever mode shall produce the highest amount of duty. A copy of such account is left with the manufacturer; who must pay the duty within six days, or in default he forfeits double the amount.

Proper scales and weights are to be kept, on penalty of 100*l*.; and keeping false scales or weights, or using any art to deceive the officer in taking a true account, subjects the manufacturer to a forfeiture of 300*l*., together with all the sugar weighed at the time. The manufacturer and his servants must assist the officer in weighing sugar, on penalty of 100*l*.

Sugar not charged with duty is to be kept separate from that which has been weighed, on penalty of 100*l*. Concealing or removing sugar, or juice or syrup, to evade the duties, incurs a forfeiture of 500*l*.

Stone Bottles.

By the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 77, § 8, all the duties and drawbacks of excise on stone bottles were repealed from the 14th August, 1834.

Tobacco and Snuff.

The duties on the licences required to be taken out, by manufacturers of and dealers in tobacco and snuff are, by 6 Geo. IV. ^{c.} 81, as follow, with an additional 5 per cent by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 17:—

	£.	s.	d.
Every Manufacturer, if the quantity of leaf or unmanufactured tobacco received by him within the year ending the 5th of July previous has not exceeded 20,000 lb. in weight	-	-	5 0 0
If exceeding 20,000 lb. and not exceeding 40,000 lb.	-	-	10 0 0
40,000 — — — 60,000 — — —	-	-	15 0 0
50,000 — — — 80,000 — — —	-	-	20 0 0
80,000 — — — 100,000 — — —	-	-	25 0 0
100,000 lb. weight	-	-	30 0 0
Every Dealer in or Seller of Tobacco and Snuff	-	-	0 5 0

Every person, on first becoming a Manufacturer of Tobacco or Snuff, pays the sum of 5l. on taking out his licence, and, within ten days after the 5th July next, such further sum as with the said 5l. shall amount to the duty before mentioned.

The acts now in force for regulating the manufacture and sale of tobacco and snuff are the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 18, and the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 93.

By the former act, all manufacturers of, dealers in, and retailers of tobacco or snuff, are required to make entry of their premises with the excise, on pain of forfeiting 100*l.*; and officers may enter at any time, but if between ten o'clock in the evening and six in the morning accompanied by a peace officer. Any concealment of tobacco or snuff from, or obstruction of the officer, incurs a penalty of 200*l.*

No manufacturer may receive into his possession any leaf or unmanufactured tobacco otherwise than from the customs warehouse, and in the same chest or package in which it was cleared (except samples duly ticketed and certified by the proper customs officer), nor without a permit accompanying it, which is to be delivered to the excise officer on his next visit, on pain of forfeiture of the same and 200*l.*

No leaf or unmanufactured tobacco can be removed from one place to another without a permit, under the penalties in the 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 16. And no tobacco stalks or returns of tobacco can be removed in a less quantity than 50 lbs., nor without a proper certificate firmly pasted or glued on the package, on forfeiture of the same and 100*l.* by the manufacturer sending out or receiving it, and 50*l.* by any person removing the same.

Every manufacturer, on the day on which he receives any leaf or unmanufactured tobacco, or any stalks or returns of tobacco, must enter the particulars thereof in a book furnished by the excise, which is to be kept in an open part of his premises for the inspection of the officer; and any neglect to enter such particulars, or obstructing the officer in making any minute in such book or extract therefrom, or concealing or making away with it, or tearing out any leaf, or fraudulently altering any entry or making a false entry therein, is subject to a forfeiture of 200*l.* and of all tobacco not duly entered.

The manufacturer, on applying for a renewal of his licence, must produce the said book, with the quantities duly cast up and brought into totals, and make a declaration in writing that it contains a full and just account of all leaf or unmanufactured tobacco, tobacco stalks, and returns of tobacco of every description received by him in the year preceding; and his licence duty is to be paid according to the amount of tobacco shown by the entries in the said book and by the permits to have been received by him in the year previous.

With respect to the adulteration of tobacco and snuff, the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 18 contained a clause (sect. 11) against the manufacture of counterfeit tobacco, imposing a penalty of 100*l.* on any person who should cut, colour, stain, or manufacture any leaves of trees, herbs, or plants (not being tobacco leaves) into the form of or to imitate tobacco, or mix any such with tobacco, or sell or have them in possession; but there was no express prohibition of that species of adulteration which consists in the addition of sugar, molasses, honey, and other ingredients, under the pretext of flavouring it, and which had been prohibited under former acts,—though ineffectually it would seem, for these adulterations had been carried to such an extent by some portions of the trade as to have given rise to complaints on the part of others as to the hardship and inequality of the law. It became therefore a question, when that act was passed, whether this system of adulteration should be wholly suppressed by increased exertions on the part of the excise and more stringent penalties, or whether it should be thrown open to the trade generally; and the latter alternative was adopted. After a short trial, however, this plan was not found to work well; and accordingly the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 93 has been recently passed, in order to put down every species of adulteration by the most severe penalties.

This act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 93), after reciting that the practice had greatly increased of introducing in the manufacture of tobacco and snuff various articles either as substitutes for or to increase the weight thereof, by which the duties were greatly injured, and the revenue further diminished by drawbacks being obtained on adulterated tobacco, enacts, that no manufacturer shall, in manufacturing tobacco, make use therewith of any other ingredient than water only, or, in manufacturing snuff, of any other ingredient therewith than water, or water and salt, or alkaline salts only, or lime water in Welch or Irish snuff, under pain of forfeiting 300*l.* But no manufacturer or dealer is liable to such penalty for scenting or flavouring snuff, if essential oils usually made use of for that purpose are used, nor any manufacturer for using oil in making up spun or roll tobacco.

And any manufacturer or dealer selling, sending out, or delivering, or having in possession, any tobacco or snuff to which any ingredient other than as above stated has been added, is liable to forfeit 200*l.*; and all such adulterated tobacco or snuff, wherever found shall be forfeited.

This act came into operation on the 10th August, 1842, so far as relates to making use of adulterating ingredients in the manufacture of tobacco or snuff; but, in order to afford manufacturers and dealers an opportunity of disposing of any adulterated stock made previous to that period, the penalty for having in possession or selling such adulterated tobacco did not come into force till after the 1st day of November, 1842, nor with respect to snuff or snuff-work manufactured or in the course of manufacture before the passing of the act, until the 10th August, 1843; but the proof of the same having been so manufactured previously is laid on the manufacturer or dealer in whose possession it may be found.

By sec. 5 of the same act, no manufacturer shall have in his possession any sugar, treacle, molasses, or honey, (except for the necessary use of his family, the proof whereof shall lie with such manufacturer), nor any commings or roots of malt, or any ground or unground roasted grain, ground or unground chicory, lime, sand (not being tobacco sand), umbre, ochre, or other earths, sea-weed, ground or powdered wood, moss, or weeds, or any leaves or any herbs or plants (not being tobacco leaves or plants) respectively, nor any substance or material, syrup, liquid, or preparation, matter, or thing, to be used or capable of being used as a substitute for or to increase the weight of tobacco or snuff, on pain of forfeiting the same and 200*l*.

By sect. 6 provision is made for the case of persons who had carried on the business of a manufacturer of tobacco, and also that of a grocer, before the 1st of June, 1842.

Officers of excise may take samples at any time of tobacco or snuff, paying for the same, if demanded, at the current wholesale price.

The same act also contains more stringent provisions against the manufacture of counterfeit or spurious tobacco. By sect. 8, every person who shall cut, grind, pound, colour, stain, dye, or manufacture any leaves, or any herb or plant, moss or weed, or any wood, chicory, commings or roots of malt, or any other vegetable or other matter or material, to imitate or resemble tobacco or snuff, or who shall prepare any of the said articles to be mixed with or added to tobacco or snuff, or who shall have them in his custody or possession so manufactured or prepared for the purpose of being mixed with or added to tobacco or snuff, or intended to be so manufactured or prepared, or who shall sell, dispose of, or deliver to any manufacturer of tobacco any leaves, herbs, plants, moss, or weeds, ground or powdered wood, chicory, commings or roots of malt, or other vegetable or other matter, or any preparation or mixture thereof, or any syrup, liquid, or preparation, to be used in the manufacture of tobacco or snuff, or to be added to or mixed therewith, shall forfeit 200*l*. ; and all such articles, together with all machines, tools, materials, vessels, and utensils for cutting, grinding, pounding, colouring, staining, dying, manufacturing, or preparing the same, shall be forfeited.

No person shall hawk or sell, or offer for sale, any tobacco or snuff in any house or premises, or in or about the streets or highways or other places, or in any other manner or place whatsoever, except as a licensed manufacturer of or dealer in or retailer of tobacco in his entered premises, on pain of forfeiting all the tobacco and snuff in his possession, and 100*l*. Any officer of excise or customs may arrest and detain any person so hawking tobacco or snuff, and convey him before a justice of the peace, who, on proof of the offence, may convict him to pay 100*l*., or some mitigated amount, not being less than one-fourth part thereof; and if the penalty be not forthwith paid, may commit him to any gaol or prison of the county, there to be kept to hard labour for three calendar months. Provided always, that nothing herein shall extend to make liable to the said penalty any servant or person duly employed by a licensed manufacturer of or dealer in tobacco or snuff to travel for orders, and producing samples, in the due and ordinary course of business.

Roasted Malt.

By the 56 Geo. III. c. 58, brewers were prohibited from colouring their beer with any other material than brown malt, or malt made brown by being more highly dried on the kiln in the process of malting. It has been found, however, that roasted malt, or malt roasted in cylinders after the process of malting has been completed, is a preferable material for improving the colour of beer or ale; but as, from the difficulty of distinguishing roasted unmaltered grain from such roasted malt, great frauds might be committed on the revenue if the indiscriminate use of it were allowed, the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 30 was passed to place the manufacture and sale thereof under the supervision of the excise.

Every roaster of malt, and every dealer in roasted malt, are required to take out an excise licence, renewable yearly, for which the former pays 20*l.* and the latter 10*l.*, under a penalty of 100*l.*; and also to make entry with the excise of all premises, utensils, &c. employed, under penalty of 200*l.* and forfeiture of all malt found in any unentered place. And the officers of excise are to have free access at all times to such premises, to examine the same, and to take an account of the malt there kept, and samples thereof, under a penalty of 200*l.* for any obstruction.

A roaster of malt is not to receive into his possession any corn or grain other than unroasted malt from a licensed maltster or a malt factor; nor a dealer in roasted malt, any corn or grain other than roasted malt from a licensed roaster, with a certificate as hereafter mentioned, under a penalty in either case of 300*l.*

A malt book is furnished by the excise, in which every roaster of malt must enter the particulars relative to all malt received, roasted, or sent out, and every dealer the particulars as to all roasted malt received or sent out, under a penalty of 200*l.* The said book is to be kept in a public part of the premises, open to the inspection of the officers; and any neglect in entering the particulars required, refusing inspection thereof, destroying the same or any part thereof, making a false or fraudulently altering any entry therein, subjects to a penalty of 200*l.* And, under a like penalty, every roaster or dealer receiving any malt must produce to the excise officer on his next visit the bill of parcels or invoice or delivery note, or in case of a dealer the certificate accompanying it, and show the malt, or so much as may be remaining, to the officer, who is thereupon to indorse the invoice &c. or certificate with his name and the date of his inspection, or in the case of a certificate may retain it if he think fit.

Roasters of malt, when required, are to level and cast all malt, roasted or unroasted, (not being in sacks) into such regular form that the officers may gauge and take an account thereof; and dealers are to do the same with the roasted malt in their possession. And if any excess or deficiency exceeding ten per cent. in the stock of any roaster, or of three per cent. in the stock of any dealer, be found, they are respectively liable to a penalty of 200*l.* A like penalty is imposed on obstructing the officer in taking an account.

No malt is to be roasted between seven in the evening and five in the morning from the 31st March to the 1st of September, nor between seven in the evening and six in the morning during the rest of the year, under penalty of 100*l.* and forfeiture of the malt so roasted or roasting.

A certificate book is delivered by the excise to every roaster and dealer in roasted malt; and no roasted malt is to be sent out without a certificate properly filled up and cut out progressively from such book, and a corresponding entry made in the counterpart thereof, under a penalty of 200*l.* The same penalty is payable for not leaving the certificate with the person to whom the malt is delivered, making use of one a second time, hindering the officers from examining the book, destroying it or any part thereof, or making any false or fraudulently altering any entry therein. And all roasted malt sold, sent out, or delivered, or removed or removing, or received, without such certificate, is forfeited.

Brewers using roasted malt must make a special entry with the excise of a deposit room or rooms for depositing all the roasted malt they shall receive, and in which no other kind of malt is to be kept; and they are not to receive any roasted malt without a proper certificate, to be delivered up to the excise officer on his next visit, who may examine such roasted malt, and take samples therefrom. And all roasted malt received by any brewer unaccompanied by a certificate, or found in any other place than such deposit room (except in the mill or mill room for grinding, or in the mash tub) is forfeited, with 200*l.* penalty.

No brewer is to receive any roasted malt from any other person than a licensed roaster or dealer in roasted malt, on pain of forfeiting 100*l.* and all the malt so received.

No roaster of malt is to send out any unroasted malt; and all roasted malt sent out by any roaster or dealer is to be whole and unground, upon penalty of 100*l.* and forfeiture of the malt.

The business of a roaster or of a dealer in roasted malt is not to be carried on by any maltster or malt factor within one mile of his malt-house, or of any premises in which he shall make or keep malt, nor by any druggist or vender of drugs, or any grocer. But where a maltster or malt factor or dealer had carried on such business within the prohibited distance before the 1st April, 1842, the commissioners of excise may permit the same business to be continued under regulations to be prescribed by them.

Roasters and dealers in roasted malt are prohibited from selling, or receiving into their possession, any of the articles (except roasted malt) prohibited to be received by brewers &c. by the 56 Geo. III. c. 58, on pain of being subject to the same penalties and forfeitures. (See ante, p. 96.)

Vinegar, Acetous Acid, Verjuice.

By 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 52, § 10, the excise survey on dealers in vinegar is discontinued; and so much of the 58 Geo. III. c. 65 as required them to make entry of their places for keeping vinegar, and to enter in a book all vinegar sent out exceeding ten gallons at a time, and accompany the same with a certificate, is repealed.

The duty on vinegar was repealed by the act 7 & 8 Vic. c. 25, from the 4th July, 1844.

But nothing therein is to affect the licences required to be taken out by makers of vinegar or acetous acid for sale. And every person who shall make, prepare, extract, distil, rectify, purify, or sell any liquors prepared or capable of being used or applied for the purposes of vinegar or acetous acid made for sale (not being a dealer in, retailer, or seller of such only), shall be deemed a vinegar maker, and take out the licence required by law, the duty on which is 5*l.* by 6 Geo. IV. c. 81, and an additional 5 per cent. by 3 & 4 Vic. c. 17.

Makers of vinegar must make entry of every house, building, room, place, still, vessel, and utensil used for making or keeping vinegar or acetous acid for sale; and stills upon such entered places must be used only according to the regulations of the excise, under penalty of 100*l.* 7 & 8 Vic. c. 25.

Concealing or adulterating vinegar &c. subjects to a penalty of 100*l.*

No vinegar maker (except from malt or corn) is to be a distiller or rectifier of spirits within two miles of the same premises.

Wine.

The licences to be taken out by dealers in wine are as follow; with an additional 5 per cent by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 17:—

	£.	s.	d.
Every Dealer in Foreign Wine, who shall not have an excise licence for retailing Spirits, and a licence for retailing Beer	10	0	0
Every Retailer of Foreign Wine, who shall have a licence for retailing Beer, but not an excise licence for retailing Spirits	4	4	0
Every Retailer of Foreign Wine, who shall have taken out excise licences for retailing Beer and Spirits respectively	2	2	0

By the 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 39, so much of any act as requires dealers in or retailers of wine to make entry of their premises, and the officers of excise to keep an account of and to survey the stocks of wine in their possession, and the premises in which the same are kept, and as relates to permits for the removal of wine, were repealed from the 31st August, 1835. But nothing herein is to affect the duties on licences required to be taken out by dealers in and retailers of wine, which are to be taken out as heretofore. And where any dealer in or retailer of wine shall also be a retailer of foreign or British spirits in the same premises, or in any other premises within 500 yards, he shall continue to make entry of every house, room, cellar, vault, or place used by him for the keeping or storing of or dealing in or retailing wine, on pain of forfeiting 50*l.* for every unentered place, together with all wine and other liquors found therein; and any officer of excise may enter and examine all wine therein at any time.

The commissioners of excise may grant retail licences to persons to sell beer, spirits, and wine in any theatre, whether established under royal patent or licensed by the lord chamberlain or a justice of the peace, without the production of a magistrate's licence for keeping a common inn, &c.

A dealer in wine must signify over his warehouse that he is licensed to sell foreign wines by wholesale, or by retail, as the case may be.

No dealer in wines can be a justice of the peace.

Wire.

The duties &c. on wire were repealed by the 7 Geo. IV. c. 53, from the 5th July, 1826.

¹ Attorney-General v. Green, 4 Price, 224; and Id. v. Haulgrave, 11 Price, 217.

STAMP DUTIES.

THE Stamp Duties are under the management of a Board of Commissioners, whose appointment, powers, and duties are regulated by the 9 & 10 Wm. III. c. 25. There were formerly separate boards and different duties for Great Britain and Ireland; but the boards were consolidated by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 55, and the duties assimilated by 5 & 6 Vic. c. 82. The following is a list of the Stamp Duties now in force by 55 Geo. III. c. 184, as amended by subsequent acts.

TABLE OF STAMP DUTIES.

	£.	s.	d.
Admission to act as Advocate in any Ecclesiastical Court, or High Court of Admiralty in England, or in courts of justice in Scotland, or to the degree of a Barrister at law in England	50	0	0
Admission to act as Attorney, Solicitor, Proctor, Sworn Clerk, Side Clerk, Clerk in Court, or other Clerk or Officer in any court in England, or as Writer to the Signet, Solicitor, Agent, Attorney, or Procurator, or other Clerk or Officer in the Scotch Courts, whose employments depend upon being retained	25	0	0
And when any person is admitted to act as a Solicitor or Agent in the Court of Sessions, Justiciary, or Commission of Teinds in Scotland, who has not served five years under regular articles or indentures of clerkship, a further duty of	60	0	0
And when any person is admitted to act as a Procurator or Solicitor in the High Court of Admiralty in Scotland, the Commissary Court at Edinburgh, or any inferior court in Scotland, who has not served an apprenticeship under regular indentures, the further duty of	30	0	0
Admission as Master in Chancery, one of the Six Clerks, or one of the Cursitors of the Court of Chancery in England; or as a Sworn Clerk, Clerk in Court, or other Clerk or Officer employed to do certain official business, and whose employments are so far certain; when the salary and emoluments of the office do not amount to 50 l. per annum	2	0	0
Under £100	£4	0	0
200	6	0	0
300	12	0	0
Under £500	25	0	0
750	35	0	0
1000	50	0	0
Under £1500	75	0	0
2000	100	0	0
3000	150	0	0
Amounting to £3000 or upwards	200	0	0
Admission to be a Member of either of the four Inns of Court in England	25	0	0
Admission as a Fellow of the College of Physicians in England or Scotland	25	0	0
Admission to be a Member of either of the Inns of Chancery	3	0	0
Admission or Licence by the College of Physicians in England or Scotland to exercise the faculty of physic or practise as a Licentiate	15	0	0
Admission or Matriculation in either of the English Universities	1	0	0
Admission to the degree of B. A. in the same Universities, if conferred in the ordinary course	3	0	0
If conferred by special grace, royal mandate, by reason of nobility, &c.	5	0	0
Admission to any other degree in the same Universities, if conferred in the ordinary course	6	0	0
If conferred by special grace, &c.	10	0	0
Admission to the degree of M.D. in either of the Universities in Scotland	10	0	0
Admission to any Corporation or Company, in any city, borough, burgh, or town corporate on any other ground than birth, apprenticeship, or marriage	3	0	0
In respect of marriage	1	0	0
(Admissions of persons entitled to take up their freedom by birth or servitude are exempt from stamp duty by the 1 & 2 Vic. c. 35.)

EXEMPTIONS.—Advocates, Attorneys, or Solicitors, admitted in one court, on being admitted to another, the latter admission is free from duty. Members of any one of the four Inns of Court on being admitted to another. (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 64.) Where officers are admitted annually, every admission after the first is free of duty. Also Craftsmen having previously entered Freemen, on being admitted into corporations. But in all cases not expressly exempted, the proper duty is to be paid on every admission of the same person.

Admissions upon Grants or Appointments to Office herein otherwise charged.

Members of Inns of Court in England, on being admitted into the Society of King's Inn in Dublin are allowed the stamp duty charged on admission in England.—5 & 6 Vic. c. 79.

£. s. d.

ADVERTISEMENT contained in or published with any Gazette or Newspaper, or other Periodical Literary Work or Paper, printed and published in Great Britain 0 1 6

A copy of every Periodical Literary Work or Paper (not being a Newspaper) containing any Advertisement liable to stamp duty, must be taken within six days after the publication, if published in the cities of London, Edinburgh, or Dublin, or within twenty miles thereof, to the Head Office of Stamps at those places respectively (or if published elsewhere, to the head distributor of stamps for the district, within ten days of publication), together with all advertisements published therewith, and the title thereof, and the christian and surname of the printer and publisher, with the number of advertisements, and the stamp duty payable in respect thereof registered, and the duty paid for the same to the proper officer. 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 76.

AFFIDAVIT, not made for the immediate purpose of being filed in court, on every sheet of paper, parchment, or vellum 0 2 6

EXEMPTIONS.—Affidavits required by law before justices of peace, commissioners of any board of revenue, or officers acting under them, or commissioners appointed by act of parliament.—Affidavits by persons applying for Probates of Wills and Letters of Administration.—Affidavits at the Bank of England to identify or prove the death of any proprietor of stock &c.; or relating to the loss &c. of any Bank post bill.—Affidavits relating to the sale and redemption of the Land Tax.

AGREEMENT, or any Minute or Memorandum of an Agreement, made in England under hand only, or in Scotland without any clause of registration, and not otherwise charged, for matters of the value of 20*l.* or upwards, whether the same be only evidence of a contract, or obligatory upon the parties from its being a written instrument. (Reduced, by 7 & 8 Vic. c. 21, to) 0 2 6

EXEMPTIONS.—Memorandums of heads of insurances to be made by the Royal Exchange and London Assurance Corporations—of Agreements for Lease or Tack at rack rent under £5—for the hire of any labourer, artificer, or servant—relating to sales of goods—of Agreements between ship-masters and sailors for wages on coasting voyages—Letters by post containing evidence of agreement in respect of merchandize between merchants residing 50 miles from each other.

Agreements relating to sea apprentices.—5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 19, § 35.

Agreement or Memorandum between the master and mariners of a ship, for either wages or service 0 2 0

ALMANACKS.—The stamp duties on Almanacks or Calendars and Dublin Directories were repealed by the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 57

APPOINTMENT of a Chaplain, which qualifies to hold two benefices 2 0 0

Appointment, in execution of a power, of land and other property, when made by any writing not being a deed or will 1 15 0

And for every 1080 words after the first 1080 1 15 0

Appointment of a Gamekeeper 1 15 0

APPRAISEMENT of estate or effects, when the value does not exceed 50*l.* 0 2 0

Not exceeding £100 0 5 0 | Not exceeding £300 0 15 0

200 0 10 0 | Above £500 1 0 0

EXEMPTIONS.—Appraisements of property for the purpose of ascertaining the legacy duty. But appraisements made for the return or increase of probate duty must be stamped.

Appraisements by order of any Court of Admiralty or Vice-admiralty, or of Appeal therefrom.

APPRENTICESHIP.—Indentures or other instruments relating to the services of persons learning a profession, trade, or employment, except Articles to Attorneys and others specially charged, when the value given does not amount to £30 1 0 0

Under £50 £2 0 | Under £400 £20 0 | Under £800 40 0 0

100 3 0 | 500 25 0 | 1000 50 0 0

200 6 0 | 600 30 0 | £1000 or upwards 60 0 0

Where there is no such consideration, if the Indenture does not contain more than 1080 words 1 0 0

If the same contain more than that quantity 1 15 0

Indentures of apprentices bound to serve at sea in the merchant service (4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 89) 0 2 0

The duty on Indentures for transferring apprentices by assignment or turn-over to a new master are the same as at first, in proportion to any new consideration. If no consideration, and the indenture contains no more than 1080 words, the duty of £1. is paid; if more words £1. 15*s.* If duplicates be made, the same duty is charged for each, when it does not exceed 35*s.*; if the duty exceed that, only one part is charged with the ad valorem duty, and the other part with 35*s.*

The Indentures of Parish and Charity Apprentices are exempt.

ARTICLES OF CLERKSHIP , or Contract whereby any person becomes bound to serve as a Clerk in order to admission as an Attorney or Solicitor in any of her majesty's courts at Westminster, or as a Sworn Clerk in the office of the Six Clerks in the Court of Chancery, or as a Sworn Clerk, Clerk in Court, or Side Clerks in the office of Pleas, or of the Remembrancer in the Court of Exchequer in England, or as a Proctor in the High Court of Admiralty in England, or in any of the Ecclesiastical Courts in Doctors Commons			120	0	0
In any of the Courts of Great Sessions in Wales, or of the counties palatine of Chester, Lancaster, or Durham, or in any other court of record in England holding pleas to the amount of 40s.			60	0	0
As a Procurator or Solicitor in the High Court of Admiralty, the Commissary Court of Edinburgh, or any other inferior court in Scotland			30	0	0
— When, in consequence of the death of the master, or of the contract being vacated, fresh articles are entered into for the residue of the term			1	10	0
— When any person having been before bound as a Clerk, and not having completed his service, becomes bound afresh for a new term of years for the same purpose, the same duty as is payable on any original Articles. But in this case the stamp on the first Articles would be allowed as a spoiled stamp on being delivered up to the commissioners within six months after the execution of the new Articles.
— And for any Counterpart or Duplicate of any of the above			1	10	0
ASSIGNATION or ASSIGNMENT of property, real or personal, not otherwise charged or expressly exempted			1	15	0
If containing 2160 words, for every entire 1080 after the first 1080			1	5	0
Assignment or Assignment upon the sale of any property. See CONVEYANCE.
Assignment of a Mortgage, Wadset, Heritable Bond, &c. See MORTGAGE.
AWARD in England, and Award or Decreet Arbitral in Scotland			1	15	0
If containing 2160 words, for every entire 1080 after the first 1080			1	5	0
BARGAIN AND SALE (or LEASE) for a year, for vesting the possession of lands or other hereditaments in England, and enabling the bargainee to take a release of the freehold upon the sale or mortgage thereof—
Where the purchase or consideration money does not amount to £20			0	10	0
Under £50 . . . £0 15 0 Under £150 . . . £1 0 0 £150 or upwards			1	15	0
Bargain and Sale (or Lease) for a year, upon any other occasion			1	15	0
Bargain and Sale (to be enrolled) of any estate of freehold in lands, &c. upon any other occasion than the mortgage or sale thereof			5	0	0
— Where any Bargain and Sale, together with any schedule, receipt, &c., contains 2160 words, then for every entire 1080 after the first 1080			1	0	0
Bargain and Sale (to be enrolled) of any estate of freehold in lands or other hereditaments in England, upon the sale thereof, or by way of mortgage. See CONVEYANCE, MORTGAGE.
BILLS OF EXCHANGE. — Inland Bill of Exchange, Draft, or Order for payment to bearer or to order, either on demand or otherwise—

			Not exceeding Two Months after date, or Sixty Days after sight.		Above Two months
Amounting to 40s. and not exceeding £5. 5s.			0	1	0
Exceeding £5. 5s.		£20	0	1	6
20	—	30	0	1	6
30	—	50	0	2	0
50	—	100	0	2	6
100	—	200	0	3	6
200	—	300	0	4	6
300	—	500	0	5	0
500	—	1000	0	6	0
1000	—	2000	0	8	6
2000	—	3000	0	12	6
3000 and upwards			0	15	0
			1	5	0
					1 10 0

Inland BILL, though not made payable to bearer or to order, if delivered to the payee, or some person on his behalf, the same duty as on an Inland Bill of Exchange for the like sum payable to bearer or order.

Inland BILL, for the payment of any sum of money weekly, monthly, or at any stated periods, if made payable to bearer or to order, or if delivered to the payee or some person on his behalf, where the total amount of the money thereby made payable is specified therein, or can be ascertained therefrom, the same duty as on a Bill payable to bearer or order for a sum equal to such total amount.

And where the total amount of the money thereby made payable is indefinite, the same duty as on a Bill on demand for the sum therein expressed only.

Penalty for post-dating Bills of Exchange, 100l.

NOTE.—The following Instruments are deemed Bills within the meaning of this Schedule:—Drafts or orders for payment of any sum by a Bill or Promissory Note, or for the delivery of any such bill or note in payment or satisfaction of any sum of money, where such drafts or orders require the payment on delivery to be made to the bearer or to order, or are delivered to the payee or some person on his behalf.

Receipts given by any banker or other person for money received, which entitle the bearer to receive the like sum from a third person.

Bills, Drafts, or Orders for the payment of any sum out of a particular fund which may or may not be available, or upon any condition or contingency which may or may not happen, if the same are made payable to bearer or order, or if delivered to the payee or some person on his behalf.

EXEMPTIONS.—Bills of exchange or Bank post bills issued by the Bank of England.—Bills, Orders, &c. by officers of the navy &c. on the Navy Pay Office; or by Commissioners of the Navy or Victualling Office, Transport Service, or Sick and Wounded, upon the Treasurer of the Navy.—Bills for the pay and allowances of her majesty's land forces by paymasters, &c.

Drafts or Orders for the payment of a sum of money to the bearer on demand, and drawn in any part of Great Britain upon any Banker, or person acting as a Banker, who resides or transacts the business of a Banker within fifteen miles of the place where such drafts or orders are issued, are exempted from any stamp duty; provided the place where such drafts or orders are issued are specified therein, and provided the same bear date on or before the day on which the same are issued, and provided they do not direct the payment to be made by bills or promissory notes. 9 Geo. IV. c. 49.

But by the 55 Geo. III. c. 184, if any person shall make and issue any bill, draft, or order for payment of money to the bearer on demand upon any Banker, dated subsequent to the day of its being issued, or which shall not truly specify the place where issued, unless the same be duly stamped as a bill of exchange, he shall forfeit £100. And any person knowingly receiving any such bill, draft, or order in payment of or as security for the sum therein mentioned shall forfeit £20. And any Banker paying such, knowing of the post-dating, shall forfeit £100, and shall not be able to recover the sum so paid in his account against the drawer or his representatives.

£. s. d.

Foreign BILL OF EXCHANGE (or Bill of Exchange drawn in but payable out of Great Britain), if drawn singly, and not in sets,—the same duty as on an INLAND BILL.

Foreign BILL OF EXCHANGE , drawn in sets according to the custom of merchants, for every bill of each set, where the sum does not exceed £100										0	1	6
Not exceeding £200	£0	3	0	Not exceeding £2000	0	7	0
500	0	4	0	3000	0	10	0
1000	0	5	0	Exceeding £3000 and upwards...	0	15	0

BILL OF LADING of or for any goods, merchandize, or effects to be exported or carried coastwise (5 & 6 Vic. c. 79.)

0 0

Every Bill of Lading in a set must be stamped, and before execution. Signing a Bill of Lading not duly stamped incurs a penalty of 50*l.* 5 & 6 Vic. c. 79, § 21.

BILL OF SALE absolute. See CONVEYANCE. Bill of Sale as a Security. See MORTGAGE.

BOND in England, and Personal Bond in Scotland, given as a security for the payment of any definite and certain sum, not exceeding £50

Under £100	£1	10	Under £1000	£5	0	Under £5,000	1	0	0
200	2	0	2000	6	0	10,000	12	0	0
300	3	0	3000	7	0	15,000	15	0	0
500	4	0	4000	8	0	20,000	20	0	0

Amounting to £20,000 or upwards

25 0 0

Bond in England, and Personal Bond in Scotland, given as a security for the payment of any sum of money, to be thereafter lent or paid, or which may become due upon an account current, where the total amount is uncertain and without limit

25 0 0

Where limited to a given sum, the same as on a Bond for such sum.

Bond in England, and Personal Bond in Scotland, given as a security for the transfer or re-transfer of stock, the same duty as on a Bond for a sum equal in value to the stock.

Bond in England, and Personal Heritable Bond in Scotland, given as security for the payment of any annuity or sum of money at stated periods, for term of life, or any other indefinite period; where the annuity does not amount to £10 per annum

Under £50	£2	0	Under £400	£6	0	Under £1500	1	0	0
100	3	0	500	7	0	2000	15	0	0
200	4	0	750	9	0	Amounting to £2000	20	0	0
300	5	0	1000	12	0	or upwards	25	0	0

Bond commonly called Counter-Bond in England, and Personal Bond of Relief in Scotland

1 15 0

Bond in England, and Personal Bond in Scotland, for the due execution of an office, and to account for money received by virtue thereof

1 15 0

Bond in respect of any duties of customs or excise, or for preventing frauds or evasions thereof, or for any other matter relating thereto (except Bonds exempted by acts for encouragement of the fisheries, or relating to the exportation of tobacco, or to carrying goods coastwise)

0 5 0

Bonds to prevent the re-landing of plate are liable only to the same stamp duty as bonds for the duties of customs or for preventing frauds or evasion thereof.

Bonds given with relation to the drawback of any duties of customs or excise upon the exportation of goods, or for obtaining a debenture or certificate for entitling any person to receive such drawback, are exempted by 7 & 8 Vic. c. 21.

Bond on obtaining letters of administration in England, or a confirmation of a testament in Scotland	1	0	0
Bond in England, and Personal Bond in Scotland, of any kind whatever not otherwise charged or exempt	1	15	0
—Where any Bond, together with any schedule, receipt, or other matter indorsed or annexed, contains 2160 words, then for every entire quantity of 1080 words after the first 1080, a further duty of	1	5	0

GENERAL DIRECTIONS RESPECTING BONDS.—Where a bond is given as a security for the payment of a sum of money and also of a share in the public stocks or funds, or of an annuity, or both, or for the payment of an annuity and also of a share in any of the said stocks or funds, the proper ad valorem duty is charged in respect of each.

And where any bond is given as a security for the payment or transfer to different persons of separate and distinct sums of money, or annuities, or shares in any of the said stocks or funds, the proper ad valorem duty is charged in respect of each separate sum or annuity or share, and not upon the aggregate amount.

And where any bond in England is given as a security for the performance of any covenant or agreement for the payment or transfer of any sum of money or annuity, or any share in any of the said stocks or funds, such Bond is charged with the same duty as if given for the payment or transfer &c.

And where any Bond for the payment or transfer of any sum of money, or annuity or share in the funds, is contained in the same deed or writing with any other matter or thing in this schedule specifically charged with duty (except a Declaration of Trust of the money, annuity, &c.), such deed or writing is charged as if the bond and other matter were contained in separate deeds. But a Bond for the performance of any covenant or agreement, other than for the payment or transfer of any sum of money or annuity, or share in the stocks or funds, though contained in the same deed or writing with any other matter or thing, is not so charged separately, but considered as only one deed, and charged accordingly under its proper denomination.

EXEMPTIONS.—Bonds of Royal Exchange or London Assurance Corporations, exempted by 6 Geo. 1.—Bonds exempted by the 26 Geo. 111. and other acts for the encouragement of the fisheries.—Bonds exempted by the 28 & 29 Geo. 111. and other acts relative to the exportation of wool, tobacco, &c.—Bonds for carrying goods coastwise.—Bonds exempted by the acts for the encouragement of friendly societies.—Bonds for making playing cards, and selling or using stamps for newspapers, and for securing the payment of the duties on the advertisements therein.—Bonds given by collectors of Assessed Taxes; by seamen's relations; and by persons administering, when the property does not exceed £20.

CARDS, for every pack	0	1	0
CERTIFICATES taken out yearly by Attorneys, Solicitors, Proctors, Notaries Public, Sworn Clerks, Clerks in Court, &c.; also by Members of Inns of Court acting as Conveyancers, Special Pleaders, Draftsmen in Equity, in England; by writers to the Signet, Solicitors, Agents, Attorneys, or Procurators, in Scotland—
If of three years standing, and residing in London or within the limits of the Twopenny Post, or within the city or shire of Edinburgh	12	0	0
If not of so long standing	6	0	0
If residing elsewhere, and having been admitted or in possession of his office for three years	8	0	0
If not of so long standing	4	0	0

But no one person is obliged to take out more than one certificate, although he may act in more than one of the capacities, or in several of the courts aforesaid.

EXEMPTIONS.—Serjeants at Law and Barristers.—Attorneys, Solicitors, Proctors, Notaries Public, &c. acting by virtue of any office or appointment, having taken out certificates in those characters.—Public Officers preparing deeds &c. in the course of their official duty only.

Certificate of the Registration of a Design under the Copyright of Designs Act (6 & 7 Vic. c. 65), by 6 & 7 Vic. c. 72.	5	0	0
Certificate of Admission to degrees in the universities. See TESTIMONIAL.
Certificate of Marriage (except of a common Seaman, Marine, or Soldier)	0	5	0
Certificate of any person having received the Holy Sacrament	0	5	0
Certificate of any goods, wares, or merchandise having been duly entered inwards, which shall be entered outwards for exportation, when issued for enabling any person to obtain a Debenture	0	4	0
CHARTER of Resignation, of Confirmation, or of Novodamus, or upon apprising, or upon a decret or adjudication of sale of any lands or other heritable subject of Scotland, holden of any subject superior	0	9	0
If containing 2160 words, then for every 1080 words after the first 1080	0	9	0
CHARTERPARTY, or any Agreement or Contract for the charter of any ship or vessel, or any memorandum, letter, or other writing relating to the freight, &c.	0	5	0
COLLATION or Appointment by any Archbishop or Bishop to any cathedral, prebend, dignity, office, or honorary canonry, having no endowment or emolument attached or belonging thereto (5 & 6 Vict. c. 79)	2	0	0
Collation to any other ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, &c. in England (Ibid.)	7	0	0
—And where the net yearly value shall amount to £300, then for every £100 over and above the first £200 a further duty of	5	0	0
These duties are payable in respect of every collation to an ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, or promotion in England, whether by an archbishop or bishop, or by any other ordinary or competent authority.—6 & 7 Vic. c. 72.

£. s. d.

Collation, Institution, or Admission to any ecclesiastical benefice in Scotland	2	0	0
Commission to any officer in the army, or in the corps of Royal Marines	1	10	0
Commission by the Admiralty to any officer in the navy	0	5	0
Commission, or Deputation, by the Commissioners of Excise	1	0	0
Commission appointing Receiver-General of the Land and other Taxes for any county or district in Great Britain	25	0	0
Commission appointing any Manager or Director of any Lottery	20	0	0
Commission to act as a Notary Public in Scotland. See FACULTY.
COMPOSITION DEED between debtors and creditors	1	15	0
If containing 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080	1	5	0
CONVEYANCE, whether Grant, Disposition, Lease, Assignment, Transfer, Release, Renunciation, or of any other kind whatsoever, upon the sale of any lands, tenements, rents, annuities, or other property, real or personal, or of any right, title, interest, or claim in or to such; that is, for the principal deed whereby the lands &c. are granted, leased, assigned, transferred, released, renounced, or otherwise conveyed to or vested in the purchaser—
Where the consideration money does not amount to £20			0 10 0
Under £50 £1 0	Under £4000 £35 0	Under £15,000 130 0 0
150 1 10	5000 45 0	20,000 170 0 0
300 2 0	6000 55 0	30,000 240 0 0
500 3 0	7000 65 0	40,000 350 0 0
750 6 0	8000 75 0	50,000 450 0 0
1000 9 0	9000 85 0	60,000 550 0 0
2000 12 0	10,000 95 0	80,000 600 0 0
3000 25 0	12,000 110 0	100,000 800 0 0
Amounting to £100,000 or upwards			1000 0 0

—And where any freehold lands or hereditaments in England are conveyed by a Deed of Feoffment (with or without a Letter of Attorney to deliver or receive seisin) or by a Deed of Bargain and Sale enrolled, such Deed of Feoffment or Bargain and Sale, unless accompanied with a Lease & Release, is charged with a further duty as follows:—If the consideration money is under 20*l*.

Under £50..... £0 15 0	Under £150..... £1 0 0	£150 or upwards ... 1 15 0
------------------------	------------------------	----------------------------

But if there shall be both a Feoffment and a Bargain and Sale enrolled, then the said further duty shall not attach on either.

—Where the principal deed with schedule and indorsements contains 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080, a further progressive duty of

Conveyance of any kind not otherwise charged	1 0 0
If containing 2160 words, then for every 1080 words after the first 1080	1 15 0
	1 0 0

NOTE.—The purchase money is to be truly set forth in words at length upon every principal or only Deed of Conveyance.

As to what is to be deemed the principal deed:—Where lands or hereditaments are conveyed by Bargain and Sale enrolled, and also by Lease and Release, or by Feoffment, the Release or Feoffment is deemed the principal; and where by Lease and Release, and also by Feoffment, the Release is deemed the principal, and the other deeds are charged only with the duty on deeds in general.

In conveyances of copyhold or customary estates, the Surrender or Voluntary Grant is the principal instrument. Grants of copyhold or customary estates for lives are charged with the ad valorem duties as well as those of a greater interest.

Where, upon the sale of any Annuity or other right not before in existence, the same is not created by actual grant or conveyance, but only secured by Bond, Warrant of Attorney, Covenant, Contract, or otherwise, the Bond or other instrument is liable to the same duty as an actual Grant or Conveyance.

In the case of Leases or Tacks, where a yearly rent of £20 or upwards is reserved as part of the consideration, there is charged a further duty; for which see LEASE.

Where there are several deeds or instruments for completing the title, such of them as are not liable to the ad valorem duty are charged with the duty to which they are liable under any general or particular description of them in this schedule.

Where there are duplicates of any deed chargeable with the ad valorem duty, one of them only is charged therewith, and the other with the ordinary duty on deeds or instruments of the same kind not upon a sale.

Where any deed operating as a conveyance on the sale of any property also operates as a conveyance of any other property by way of settlement or otherwise, or contains any other matter or thing besides what is incident to the sale and conveyance of the property sold, or the title thereto, it is charged with such further duty as a separate deed containing the other matter would be chargeable with, exclusive of the progressive duty.

EXEMPTIONS.—Transfers of shares in any of the Government or Parliamentary Stocks or Funds are exempted from all stamp duties.

Transfers of shares of Bank Stock, South Sea, or East India Stock;—Surrenders &c. relating to Copyhold or Customary estates under 20*s*. yearly value; Voluntary Grants by a lord of a manor of copyhold or customary estates for lives for a pecuniary consideration; Leases or Tacks in consideration of a fine or grassum for not exceeding three lives by whomsoever granted, or in consideration of a fine for not exceeding twenty-one years by ecclesiastical corporations, are exempted from the above duty on Conveyances upon sale, but are herein otherwise charged.

£. s. d.

COPY of any Agreement, Contract, Bond, Conveyance, or other Deed, attested to be a true copy, for the purpose of being given in evidence, when made for the use of any person being a party to or having any benefit or interest therein, the same duty as for the original instrument; and where any copy is offered in evidence, it is deemed to have been made for that purpose.

Where such copy is made for the security or use of any person not having an immediate interest under the deed 0 1 0

And for every entire quantity of 720 words after the first 720 0 1 0

COPY or Extract of any Memorial, or of the Registry thereof 0 5 0

And for every piece of vellum, parchment, or paper, after the first 0 5 0

COPY or Extract of any Deed, not falling under the description of LAW PROCEEDINGS, taken from the rolls or records of any of the courts at Westminster 0 2 0

And for every piece of vellum, parchment, or paper, after the first 0 2 0

COPY, attested or authenticated, or made for the purpose of being given in evidence as a true copy of any original Will, Testament, or Codicil, or any Probate, Letters of Administration, &c. 0 1 0

And for every 720 words after the first 720 0 1 0

OFFICE COPY or Extract of any Will or Codicil deposited in any Ecclesiastical Court in England 0 1 0

And for every 90 words after the first 90 0 1 0

EXEMPTIONS.—Copies or Extracts of Protests upon Bills or Promissory Notes under 40s.—Certified copies of proceedings and interlocutors in cases of appeal to the House of Lords.

COPYHOLDS—Surrender, Admittance, or Licence to demise, made or granted out of court, or Memorandum thereof respectively; and Copy of Court Roll of any Surrender, Admittance, or Licence to demise, made in court, where the clear yearly value exceeds 20s. 1 0 0

Where it does not exceed 20s. 0 5 0

If the same contain 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080 1 0 0

COPY of Court Roll of the several Surrenders, Admittances, and other acts in court for perfecting a common recovery, if the value of estate exceed 20s., for five times 1 0 0

When it does not exceed 20s. for five times 0 5 0

Voluntary Grant by a Lord or Steward of the Manor, or Memorandum thereof, value of estate above 20s., twice 1 0 0

When the value is not above 20s., twice 0 5 0

If the above Instrument or Copy contain 2160 or more words, then for every 1080 words after the first 1080 1 0 0

EXEMPTIONS.—Surrenders to the use of a will, or to a trustee for the uses and purposes of a will.

DEBENTURE, or CERTIFICATE, for entitling any person to receive any drawback or bounty of customs or excise; where the value to be received does not exceed 100l. 0 5 0

Exceeding £100 and not exceeding £200 0 10 0

200 — — 500 1 0 0

500 2 0 0

EXEMPTIONS.—Debentures or Certificates on the exportation of Linen or Sail Cloth.

DECLARATION of a Use or Trust, made by any writing not being a deed or will, nor otherwise charged 1 15 0

If containing 2160 words or upwards, for every 1080 words after the first 1080 1 5 0

DECLARATION made by Deed. See DEED.

DEED of any kind, not otherwise charged nor exempted 1 15 0

If containing 2160 words or upwards, for every 1080 words after the first 1080 1 5 0

DEPUTATION or Appointment of a Gamekeeper 1 15 0

DICE, for every pair 1 0 0

DISPENSATION for holding two ecclesiastical dignities or benefices, where either of them is above the yearly value of 10l. in the queen's books 40 0 0

And in all other cases 20 0 0

Dispensation of any other kind from the Archbishop of Canterbury or the Master of the Faculties 40 0 0

DUCQUET, on passing under the great seal any Grant, Letters Patent, Exemplification, Constat, &c. 0 2 0

DONATION or Presentation by her Majesty, or her heirs or successors, of or to any ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, or promotion in England (5 & 6 Vic. c. 79) 5 0 0

—And where the net yearly value shall amount to £300, then for every £100 over and above the first £200 a further duty of (Ibid) 5 0 0

These duties are payable upon ALL donations or presentations to an ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, or promotion in England, by whomsoever made or granted.—6 & 7 Vic. c. 72.

£. s. d.

EXCHANGE.—Any Deed or Instrument of Exchange, whereby lands or other hereditaments are to be exchanged for other lands &c., where no sum, or a sum under 300*l.* is paid for equality of exchange . . . 1 15 0

When 300*l.* or upwards is to be paid, the same ad valorem duty as for a Conveyance on a sale of lands for an equal sum.

If 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080, if the deed be liable in the first instance to a duty of 1*l.* 5*s.* . . . 1 5 0

If liable to a higher duty in the first instance . . . 1 10 0

And a duplicate of any such deed is charged with the same duty; and if the Exchange be effected by separate conveyances by distinct deeds, each deed is charged with the same duty.

And in case there is more than one deed for completing the title, the principal deed only is charged under the head of Exchange, and any subordinate or collateral deed is charged with the duty to which it may be liable under any other description.

EXEMPLIFICATION or CONSTAT, under the great seal, of any Letters Patent or Grant of any honour, deputy, promotion, liberty, or privilege, for every skin, sheet, or piece of parchment or paper . . . 5 0 0

EXEMPLIFICATION, under the seal of any court of law or equity, of any Record or Proceeding therein . . . 3 0 0

FACULTY, from the Archbishop of Canterbury or the Master of the Faculties for the time being, &c. not otherwise charged . . . 30 0 0

Faculty, Licence, or Commission, for admitting or authorizing any person to act as a Notary Public in England . . . 30 0 0

— in Scotland . . . 20 0 0

FEOFFMENT, not on Mortgage or Conveyance, or not otherwise charged . . . 1 15 0

And where the same contains any Letter of Attorney to deliver or receive seisin, a further duty of . . . 1 15 0

If containing 2160 words or upwards, for every 1080 words after the first 1080 . . . 1 5 0

Feoffment of lands or other hereditaments upon the sale or mortgage thereof.

See CONVEYANCE, MORTGAGE.

GIFT of the vacant Stipend of any parish in Scotland, when the presentation belongs to the crown . . . 1 10 0

GRANT, or LETTERS PATENT under the great seal, &c., of the honour or dignity

Of a Duke . . . £350 0 0 | Of a Viscount . . . 200 0 0

Of a Marquis . . . 300 0 0 | Of a Baron . . . 150 0 0

Of an Earl . . . 250 0 0 | Of a Baronet . . . 100 0 0

GRANT of a Congé d'Elire to any Dean and Chapter for the Election of a Bishop or Archbishop . . . 30 0 0

— of the Royal Assent to such Election, or of the Nomination by her Majesty in default of such Election . . . 30 0 0

— of the Restitution of the Temporalities to any Archbishop or Bishop . . . 30 0 0

— of any other honour, dignity, or promotion, or of any franchise, liberty, or privilege to any person, or body politic or corporate . . . 30 0 0

Where two or more honours or dignities are granted by the same Letters Patent to the same person, such Letters Patent are charged with duty in respect of the highest only.

And where granted to any persons in remainder, are charged with such further duty in respect of every remainder as an original grant.

And where contained in more than one skin, sheet, or piece of parchment or paper, for every skin &c. after the first. . . 20 0 0

Grant or Warrant of Precedence, under the sign manual . . . 100 0 0

Grant or Licence under the sign manual to use a Surname and Arms, in compliance with any will or settlement . . . 50 0 0

Upon any voluntary application . . . 10 0 0

Grant of Arms or Armorial Ensigns only, under the sign manual, or by any of the Kings of Arms . . . 10 0 0

Grant of the custody of the person or estate of a Lunatic . . . 2 0 0

Grant, out of the Civil List, or out of any other fund not appropriated by Parliament, of any certain defined Sum of Money—

Under £100... £1 10 | Under £500... £10 0 | Under £1000 . . . 30 0 0

150.....4 0 | 750.....20 0 | £1000 or upwards, 5*l.* per cent. . .

— of any Annuity or Pension, not amounting to £100 . . . 1 0 0

Under £200... £4 0 | Under £600... £20 0 | Under £1000 . . . 40 0 0

400... 10 0 | 800.....30 0 | £1000 or upwards . . . 50 0 0

But when made in confirmation or renewal of a former Grant of the like amount and description . . . 1 10 0

Where distinct Annuities are made to different persons by the same instrument, the proper duty is charged in respect of each; but where the Grant is of any Annuity or Pension for the benefit of two or more persons jointly, the duty is charged in respect of the whole.

£. s. d.

Grant or Appointment by her Majesty, or any other person, body politic or corporate, of or to any office or employment; where the salary, fees, and emoluments do not amount to 50 l. per annum												2	0	0
Under £100 ...	£4	0	0	Under £500 ...	£25	0	0	Under £1500	75	0	0
200 ...	6	0	0	750 ...	35	0	0	2000	100	0	0
300 ...	12	0	0	1000 ...	50	0	0	3000	150	0	0
Amounting to £3000 or upwards											200	0	0

EXEMPTIONS.—Letters Patent and Grants of Offices, where, on the demise of the crown, the successor appoints.

On the promotion of any person in the Customs to any other employment therein, the ad valorem duty is payable in respect of the increase of the salary &c., unless the amount of increase is equal to the original salary, in which case the full ad valorem duty is payable. 3 Geo. IV. c. 117.

Grant, Lease, or Tack, from her Majesty, of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, which her Majesty is entitled to dispose of in right of the crown, or of any goods, chattels, or personal estate (not otherwise charged), when intended to operate as a Gift, for every skin, sheet, or piece of parchment or paper 30 0 0

When such Grant, Lease, or Tack is of lands or other hereditaments vested in her Majesty by escheat for want of heirs of any person who was a bare trustee thereof, or seized into the hands of the crown upon outlawry in a civil action at the suit of a subject 1 15 0

And if such Grant, Lease, or Tack, charged with a duty of 1*l.* 15*s.*, together with any schedule &c., contains 2160 words, then for every 1080 after the first 1080 1 5 0

— When any such Grant, Lease, or Tack is made for a full and adequate consideration, as also when made of any lands &c. the private property of her majesty, the same duty as if made by a subject.

Grant upon the sale of any property not belonging to the Crown. See CONVEYANCE.

INDENTURES or CHIROGRAPH of a fine levied in any court, for each part or indenture 0 10 0

INSTITUTION granted by any Archbishop, Bishop, Chancellor, or other Ordinary, or by any Ecclesiastical Court, to any ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, or promotion in England, where the same shall proceed upon a presentation 2 0 0

— When upon the petition of the patron to be himself admitted and instituted 7 0 0

— And if in the latter case the net yearly value amount to £300, then for every £100 above the first £200 a further duty of 5 0 0

NOTE.—The value is to be ascertained by the certificate of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. Two or more benefices episcopally or permanently united to be deemed one benefice only.

Institution to Ecclesiastical Benefices in Scotland. See COLLATION.

INSURANCE. See POLICY.

LAND-TAX, Instruments relating to the redemption and sale thereof are exempted from stamp duty.

LEASE or TACK of any lands, hereditaments, or heritable subjects, at a yearly rent, without any sum of money by way of fine, premium, or grassum, where the yearly rent shall not amount to 20*l.* 1 0 0

Under £100 £1 10 Under £400 £3 0 Under £800 5 0 0

200 2 0 500 4 0 1000 6 0 0

Amounting to £1000 or upwards 10 0 0

Lease or Tack of any lands, hereditaments, or heritable subjects granted in consideration of a sum of money by way of fine, premium, or grassum, without any yearly rent, or with a yearly rent under 20*l.*, the same duty as for a Conveyance on the sale of Lands (except Leases for a life or lives not exceeding three, or for a term of years determinable with a life or lives not exceeding three, by whomsoever granted, and except Leases for a term absolute not exceeding 21 years by ecclesiastical corporations, aggregate or sole.)

Lease or Tack of any lands &c. granted in consideration of a sum of money by way of fine and also of a yearly rent amounting to 20*l.* or upwards,—both the ad valorem duties payable for a Lease in consideration of a fine only, and for a Lease in consideration of a rent only, of the same amount (except the Leases herein-before excepted)

Lease or Tack of any other kind, not otherwise charged 1 15 0

And for the counterpart or duplicate of any Lease or Tack with a duty not exceeding 1*l.*, the same duty as on the Lease or Tack.

And for the counterpart or duplicate of any other Lease or Tack 1 10 0

And when the Lease or Tack, together with any schedule &c. contains 2160 words for every 1080 words after the first 1080 1 0 0

EXEMPTIONS.—Leases of waste or uncultivated land to poor persons for not exceeding three lives or ninety-nine years, when the fine does not exceed 5*s.*, nor the reserved rent one guinea per annum.

Leases or Tacks of land &c. belonging to her Majesty. See GRANT. £. s. d.

Lease (or Bargain and Sale) for a year. See BARGAIN AND SALE.

Legacies, and the Succession to personal and moveable estate upon intestacy ;—

For every legacy (specific or pecuniary), and also for the clear residue when devolving to one person, or for every share of the clear residue when devolving to two or more persons (whether accruing by will or intestacy), amounting to 20*l.* or upwards, after deducting debts, funeral expences, legacies, and other charges first payable thereout—

For the benefit of a child, or any descendant of a child of the deceased, or for the benefit of a father or mother, or any lineal ancestor, a per centum duty of 1 0 0

For the benefit of a brother or sister, or any descendant of a brother or sister of the deceased, a per centum duty of 3 0 0

For the benefit of a brother or sister of the father or mother, or any descendant of a brother or sister of the father or mother of the deceased, a per centum duty of 5 0 0

For the benefit of a brother or sister of a grandfather or grandmother, or any descendant of a brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother of the deceased, a per centum duty of 6 0 0

For the benefit of any person in any other degree of collateral consanguinity to the deceased than above described, or any stranger in blood, a per centum duty of 10 0 0

All gifts of annuities, or by way of annuity, or of any other partial benefit or interest, out of any such estate or effects, are deemed Legacies within the meaning of this schedule. And where any Legatee takes two or more distinct legacies or benefits under any will, which together amount to the value of £20, each is charged with duty, though each separately may be under the value of £20.

As to certain gifts by will or testamentary instrument, respecting the liability of which to legacy duty doubts had been entertained, see 8 & 9 Vic. c. 76.

EXEMPTIONS.—Legacies and residues &c. for the benefit of the husband or wife of the deceased, or any of the Royal Family; also, all Legacies exempted from duty by the 39 Geo. III. c. 73, for exempting certain legacies given to corporate bodies.

LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION without a Will annexed, to be granted in England, or INVENTORY to be exhibited and recorded in any Commissary Court in Scotland, of the estate and effects of any person who shall have died intestate,—where the estate and effects exclusive of what the deceased was possessed of or entitled to as a trustee and not beneficially, are above the value of £20 and under £50

Under £100	£1	Under £10,000	£270	Under £100,000	2,025 0 0
200	3	12,000	300	120,000	2,250 0 0
300	8	14,000	330	140,000	2,700 0 0
450	11	16,000	375	160,000	3,150 0 0
600	15	18,000	420	180,000	3,600 0 0
800	22	20,000	465	200,000	4,050 0 0
1000	30	25,000	525	250,000	4,500 0 0
1500	45	30,000	600	300,000	5,625 0 0
2000	60	35,000	675	350,000	6,750 0 0
3000	75	40,000	785	400,000	7,875 0 0
4000	90	45,000	900	500,000	9,000 0 0
5000	120	50,000	1010	600,000	11,250 0 0
6000	150	60,000	1125	700,000	13,500 0 0
7000	180	70,000	1350	800,000	15,750 0 0
8000	210	80,000	1575	900,000	18,000 0 0
9000	240	90,000	1800	1,000,000	20,250 0 0
Amounting to £1,000,000, or upwards					22,500 0 0

EXEMPTIONS.—Letters of Administration &c. of the effects of any common Seaman, Marine, or Soldier dying in the service of her majesty.

Letter or Power of Attorney, made by a petty officer, seaman, marine, or soldier serving as a marine, or by the executors or administrators of any such, for receiving prize money 0 1 0

Letter or Power of Attorney for the sale, transfer, acceptance, or receipt of dividends of any of the Government or Parliamentary stocks or funds and for receiving wages 1 0 0

EXEMPTIONS.—Letters of Attorney for the receipt of any definite and certain share of such funds producing a yearly dividend of not less than £3. Letters of Attorney for voting at any election of the Directors of the East India Company. (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 64.)

Letter or Power of Attorney, or other instrument, made for the sole purpose of appointing a Proxy to vote at a meeting of the proprietors or shareholders of a Joint Stock Company, or other Company, whose stock or funds are divided into shares, and transferable 0 2 6

Such letters of attorney are available only to enable the Proxy to vote upon any matter at one meeting (the time of holding whereof must be specified in the instrument), or at any adjournment of such meeting. They cannot be stamped after execution. Penalty for signing an unstamped power, £30.

	£.	s.	d.
Letter or Power of Attorney of any other kind, or Commission or Faculty in the nature thereof	1	10	0
If containing 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080	1	0	0
Letter of Licence from creditors to a debtor	1	15	0
If containing 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080	1	5	0
Letters of Marque and Reprisal	5	0	0
Letters Patent. See GRANT.
LICENCES.— Appraiser (not being an Auctioneer) yearly	2	0	0
Banker or other person re-issuing notes payable to the bearer on demand, yearly	30	0	0
Makers of Playing Cards and Dice , yearly	0	5	0
Notary Public . See FACULTY.
Physic , to exercise the faculty of. See ADMISSION.
Hackney Coach Proprietors &c. See post, art. HACKNEY CARRIAGES.
Hawkers . See post, art. HAWKERS AND PEDLARS.
Pawnbrokers , in London and Westminster, or within the limits of the London District Post, yearly	15	0	0
— in any other place, yearly	7	10	0
Plate :—Persons dealing in Gold or Silver Plate in which any quantity of gold exceeding 2 dwts. and under 2 oz., or of silver exceeding 2 dwts. and under 30 oz., is in one piece (except watches) yearly	2	6	0
— Persons dealing in articles of greater weight; and every Pawnbroker taking in or delivering out pawns of such plate; and every Refiner of Gold or Silver, yearly	5	15	0
. But Gold or Silver Lace is not deemed Plate.
Postmasters . See post, art. POST HORSES.
Quack Medicines, Dealers in , within London and the limits of the London District Post, annually	2	10	0
— in Manchester, Birmingham, or Sheffield	0	10	0
— elsewhere	0	5	0
Stage Coach Proprietors &c. See post, art. STAGE CARRIAGES.
Licence for Marriage, in England, if special	5	0	0
If not special	0	10	0
Licence to hold a Perpetual Curacy, not proceeding upon a nomination	3	10	0
Licence for the non-residence of a clergyman upon his living (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106)	1	0	0

EXEMPTIONS.—Licences to Stipendiary Curates in England, wherein the annual amount of the stipend is specified; and Licence for non-residence upon the ground of there being no fit house of residence.

Licence of any kind not otherwise charged, under the seal of any archbishop, bishop, chancellor, or other ordinary, or of any ecclesiastical court in England, or granted by any presbytery or other ecclesiastical power in Scotland

MEMORIAL, to be registered pursuant to any act of parliament for the public registering of deeds and conveyances, in England

And for every piece of vellum, parchment, or paper, upon which any such memorial shall be written, after the first, a further duty of

MEMORIAL, to be registered or enrolled pursuant to act of parliament, of any deed or instrument whereby any annuity is granted or secured in England

And for every piece of vellum, parchment, or paper upon which such Memorial is written after the first MORTGAGE, Conditional Surrender by way of mortgage, Further Charge, Wadset, and Heritable Bond; Disposition, Assignment, or Tack, in security; and Eik to a Reversion; of or affecting any lands, estate, or property, real or personal, heritable or moveable whatsoever; also any Conveyance of any lands, estate, or property whatsoever in trust, to be sold or otherwise converted into money, which is intended only as a security, and is redeemable before the sale or other disposal thereof, either by express stipulation or otherwise (except where such Conveyance is made for the benefit of creditors specified, who shall accept the provision made for payment of their debts in full satisfaction thereof, or who shall exceed five in number); also any Defeazance, Letter of Reversion, Back Bond, Declaration, or other Deed or Writing for defeating or making redeemable, or explaining or qualifying any conveyance, disposition, assignment, or tack, of any lands, estate, or property whatsoever, which shall be apparently absolute but intended only as a security; also any Agreement, Contract, or Bond, accompanied with a deposit of title deeds for making a Mortgage, Wadset, or any such other security or conveyance as aforesaid, of any lands, estate, or property comprised in such title deeds, or for pledging or charging the same as a security ;

£. s. d.

- Where the same is made as a security for the payment of any definite and certain sum of money, advanced or lent at the time or previously due and owing, or forborne to be paid, being payable—

Not exceeding £50	£1 0 0	Not exceeding £3000	7 0 0
100	1 10 0	4000	8 0 0
200	2 0 0	5000	9 0 0
300	3 0 0	10,000	12 0 0
500	4 0 0	15,000	15 0 0
1000	5 0 0	20,000	20 0 0
2000	6 0 0	Exceeding £20,000	25 0 0

If the total amount secured be uncertain and without limit 25 0 0

- Where made as a security for the re-payment of money to be thereafter lent, advanced, or paid, or which may become due upon an account current, together with any sum already advanced or due, or without, as the case may be (other than and except any sums advanced for the insurance of any property comprised in such Mortgage &c. against damage by fire, or to be advanced for the insurance of any life or lives, pursuant to any agreement in a deed whereby any annuity is granted or secured for such life or lives)—

- - - If the total amount secured, or to be ultimately recoverable thereupon, shall be uncertain and without any limit 25 0 0

- - - But if the total amount be limited not to exceed a given sum, the same duty as on a Mortgage for such limited sum.

- And where any Mortgage, Wadset, &c., together with any schedule, receipt, &c., contains 2160 words or upwards, for every 1080 words after the first 1080, a further duty of 1 0 0

Where any such Mortgage is made as a security for the transfer or re-transfer of any share in the Government or Parliamentary, Bank, East India, or South Sea Stock, in consideration of stock or money advanced or lent at the time, or previously due and owing, the same as on a Mortgage for a sum equal in value to the stock or fund secured on the day of the date, or on either of the ten days preceding.

And if made as a security for the payment of a sum of money and also for the transfer or re-transfer of such stock, the ad valorem duty is charged in respect of each.

And if made as a security for the payment or transfer to different persons of separate and distinct sums or shares, the ad valorem duty is charged in respect of each separate and distinct sum, and not on the aggregate amount.

Where several distinct deeds or instruments falling within the description of any of the instruments hereby charged with the ad valorem duty on Mortgages, are made at the same time for securing the payment or transfer of one and the same sum of money or share in the said stocks, or where there are Duplicates of any deed or instrument chargeable with the ad valorem duty on Mortgages &c., such ad valorem duty, if exceeding 2*l.*, is charged only on one of them, and the rest are charged with the duty to which they are liable under any more general description thereof in this Schedule; and, if required for the sake of evidence, the rest of such deeds may be stamped with a particular stamp denoting the payment of the ad valorem duty, on all of them being produced duly stamped at the Stamp Office.

Where any deed shall operate as a Mortgage hereby charged with the ad valorem duties, and also as a Conveyance of the equity or right of redemption or reversion of any lands, estate, or property therein comprised, to or in trust for, or according to the direction of a purchaser, it is also chargeable with the ad valorem duty on Conveyances upon sale. But where the equity or right of redemption &c. is thereby conveyed or limited in any other manner, it is charged only as a Mortgage.

And in all other cases when a Mortgage charged with the ad valorem duty is contained in the same deed with any other matter except what is incident to such mortgage, it is charged with the same duties (except the progressive duty) as such Mortgage and other matter would have been charged with if contained in separate deeds.

MORTGAGE, &c.—Any Transfer, Assignment, Disposition, Assignment, or Reconveyance of any Mortgage &c., if no further sum of money or stock be added to the principal money or stock already secured 1 15 0

And where any such Transfer or Assignment, together with any schedule, receipt, &c. contains 2160 or more words, then for every 1080 after the first 1080, a further duty of 1 5 0

But if any further sum of money or stock be added to the principal money or stock already secured, the ad valorem duty on Mortgages for such further sum of money or stock is charged. (3 Geo. IV. c. 117.)

NEWSPAPERS.—(By 7 Wm. IV. c. 76, from 15th Sept. 1836). For every sheet 0 0 1

If containing a superficies on one side (exclusive of the margin of the letter-press) exceeding 1530 inches, an additional 0 0 0½

If containing a superficies &c. exceeding 2295 inches, an additional 0 0 1

Supplements containing a superficies &c. not exceeding 765 inches 0 0 0½

	£.	s.	d.
NOMINATION, by her Majesty or any other patron, to a perpetual curacy in England	1	10	0
NOTARIAL ACT, any whatsoever, not otherwise charged	0	5	0
And for every sheet or piece of paper or parchment after the first	0	5	0
PAMPHLETS.—The duty on Pamphlets was repealed by the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 23, from 5th July, 1833.
PARTITION.—Any deed whereby lands or other hereditaments are conveyed, or copyhold or customary lands are covenanted to be surrendered, in order to effect a partition or division thereof among coparceners, joint tenants, tenants in common, or other joint proprietors:—
If no sum, or under 300 l. is paid for equality of partition or division, the ordinary duty of	1	15	0
If 300 l. or upwards is paid or agreed to be paid, the same ad valorem duty as for a Conveyance on the sale of lands.
And if it contain, together with any schedule, receipt, &c. indorsed thereon or annexed thereto, 2160 words, for every 1080 after the first 1080—
--- If the deed be liable in the first instance to a duty of 3 s.	1	5	0
--- If liable to a higher duty in the first instance	1	0	0
Any Duplicate of such Deed of Partition is charged with the same duty.
If there be more than one deed for completing the title, the principal deed only is charged under this head of Partition, and any subordinate or collateral deed is charged with the duty to which it is liable under any other description in this Schedule.
PASSPORT	0	5	0
PLATE of GOLD, made or wrought (with the exception of Gold Watch-cases) and marked &c. in Great Britain, for every ounce	0	17	0
PLATE of SILVER, made or wrought and marked in Great Britain, per oz.	0	1	6
POLICY of Assurance or Insurance, made upon any LIFE or LIVES , or upon any event or contingency relating to or depending upon any life or lives—
Where the sum insured shall not exceed £50 (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 64.)	0	2	6
--- Exceeding £50 but not exceeding £100 (1 bid.)	0	5	0
--- If exceeding £100, but
Not amounting to £500	1	0	0
" " " 1000	2	0	0
" " " 5000	4	0	0
" " " 5000 or upwards	5	0	0
Not amounting to £3000	3	0	0
Policy of Insurance of any building, goods, wares, merchandize, or other property, from loss or damage by FIRE only , by any public company or other persons duly licensed pursuant to 22 Geo. III. c. 20, or by the Royal Exchange or London Assurance Corporations	0	1	0
And also in addition, for every sum of £100, for every year; and in proportion for any greater or less sum, and for any fractional part of a year	0	3	0
Note.—Detached buildings, or goods contained in detached buildings, occasioning a plurality of risks, are not to be valued together and insured in the same policy, under pain of the insurance being void, and 100 l. penalty on the insurers, except where an average clause is contained in such Policy.—(9 Geo. IV. c. 13.)
EXEMPTIONS.—Insurances on public hospitals, and on property in a foreign country in amity with England.—Insurances on agricultural produce, farming stock (live or dead), and implements of husbandry, upon any farm in Great Britain or Ireland, provided the same be effected by a separate policy relating solely thereto, are exempted by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 23.
Policy of Insurance, pursuant to 50 Geo. III. c. 35, by any person not licensed pursuant to 22 Geo. III. c. 28, upon any buildings, goods, wares, merchandize, or other property in her majesty's colonies in the West Indies or elsewhere beyond the seas, from loss or damage by FIRE, for any time not exceeding twelve calendar months	0	2	6
And also the further duty, viz. If the whole sum insured do not exceed £100	0	5	0
--- If it exceed £100, for every £100 and also for any fractional part of £100	0	5	0
Policy of Assurance or Insurance, or other instrument, whereby an insurance shall be made upon any SHIP or VESSEL, or upon any goods, merchandize, or other property on board of any ship or vessel, or upon the freight of any ship or vessel, or upon any other interest in or relating to any ship or vessel which may lawfully be insured, for or upon any voyage whatever , the following duties where the whole sum insured shall not exceed £100, and where the whole sum insured shall exceed £100, then for every £100; and also for any fractional part of £100, whereof the same shall consist:—
Where the premium or consideration paid, given, or contracted for shall not exceed the rate of 10 s. per centum on the sum insured	0	0	3
--- Exceeding 10 s. and not exceeding the rate of 20 s. per centum	0	0	6
--- Exceeding 20 s. and not exceeding the rate of 30 s. per centum	0	1	0
--- Exceeding 30 s. and not exceeding the rate of 40 s. per centum	0	2	0
--- Exceeding 40 s. and not exceeding the rate of 50 s. per centum	0	3	0
--- Exceeding the rate of 50 s. per centum	0	4	0

£. s. d.

Policy of Assurance or Insurance, or other instrument, whereby any such insurance as aforesaid shall be made for any certain term or period of time, the following rates or sums for every £100, and also for any fractional part of £100, whereof the same shall consist :—

Where made for any term or period not exceeding six calendar months . . . 0 2 6
 --- Exceeding six calendar months . . . 0 4 0

Policy of Assurance or Insurance, or other instrument, by whatever name the same shall be called, whereby any insurance commonly called a Mutual Insurance shall be made, or whereby divers persons shall insure or agree to insure one another, without any premium or pecuniary consideration, from any loss, damage, or misfortune that may happen or to any ship or vessel, or any goods, merchandize, or other property on board of any ship or vessel, or the freight of any ship or vessel, or any other interest in or relating to any ship or vessel which may lawfully be insured, upon any voyage whatever, and not for any period of time :—For every sum of £100, and also for each and every fractional part of £100 . . . 0 2 6

Policy whereby any other lawful insurance whatsoever, not hereinbefore charged, is made against loss or damage of any kind :—For every £100, and also for every fractional part of £100 :—

Where the premium does not exceed 20s. per cent. on the sum insured . . . 0 2 6

Where the premium exceeds the rate of 20s. per cent. or where the insurance is made for any other than a pecuniary consideration . . . 0 5 0

Note.—If the separate interests of two or more distinct persons are insured by one policy, the per centum duty is charged, in every kind of insurance, in respect of every fractional part of 100l. as well as of every full sum of 100l. upon every separate and distinct interest.

Signing a policy of assurance not duly stamped, or any contrivance to evade the duties, subjects the assurer to a penalty of 100l.—7 & 8 Vic. c. 21.

Although a policy of insurance produced at the trial of an action have a sufficient stamp, evidence will be received that it had no such stamp when it was effected; in which case it is a mere nullity; for the Commissioners of Stamps are forbidden by the 35 Geo. III. c. 63, to stamp such instruments after execution, and they are not authorized by the 37 Geo. III. c. 136, § 2, which extends only to such instruments as could before be legally stamped after they were executed.—Roderick v Hovill, 3 Campb. 103.

PROBATE of a Will, and Letters of Administration with a Will annexed, to be granted in England, or INVENTORY to be exhibited and recorded in any Commissary Court in Scotland, of the estate and effects of any person deceased after the 10th October, 1803, and who has left any testamentary disposition; where the estate and effects for which such Probate &c. is granted, exclusive of what the deceased shall have been possessed of or entitled to as a trustee and not beneficially, shall be above the value of 20l. and under 100l.

Under £200	£	Under £12,000	£200	Under £120,000	£	s	d
300	5	14,000	220	140,000	1,500	0	0
450	8	16,000	250	160,000	1,800	0	0
600	11	18,000	280	180,000	2,100	0	0
800	15	20,000	310	200,000	2,400	0	0
1000	22	25,000	350	250,000	2,700	0	0
1500	30	30,000	400	300,000	3,000	0	0
2000	40	35,000	450	350,000	3,750	0	0
3000	50	40,000	525	400,000	4,500	0	0
4000	60	45,000	600	450,000	5,250	0	0
5000	80	50,000	675	500,000	6,000	0	0
6000	100	60,000	750	600,000	7,500	0	0
7000	120	70,000	900	700,000	9,000	0	0
8000	140	80,000	1050	800,000	10,500	0	0
9000	160	90,000	1200	900,000	12,000	0	0
10,000	180	100,000	1350	1,000,000	13,500	0	0
				£1,000,000 & upwards	15,000	0	0

EXEMPTIONS.—Probate of a Will, Letters of Administration, and Inventory of the effects of any common Seaman, Marine, or Soldier dying in the service of her majesty.

PROCURATION, deed or other instrument of . . . 1 10 0

If containing 2160 words or upwards, for every 1080 words after the first 1080 . . . 1 0 0

PROMISSORY NOTE, for payment of any sum of money to the Bearer on demand—

Not exceeding £1.	1s.	0 0 5	Not exceeding £20	0 2 0
"	2 2	0 0 10	"	30
"	5 5	0 1 3	"	50
"	10 0	0 1 9	"	100

These notes may be re-issued after payment thereof, as often as may be thought fit, by any person who has taken out a licence as a Banker. But any person re-issuing such notes without being duly licensed forfeits 100l. for every offence. 55 Geo. III. c. 184, § 27.

By the 7 Geo. IV. c. 6, the issuing of bank notes or promissory notes, payable on demand, under five pounds, either by the Bank of England or any licensed English bankers was prohibited after the 5th April, 1820, under a penalty of 20*l*.

No Banker or other person shall issue any note for payment to bearer on demand, liable to stamp duty, with the date printed thereon, under penalty of 50*l*.

By the 9 Geo. IV. c. 23, bankers (except in London, or within three miles thereof) may issue unstamped Promissory Notes and Bills of Exchange (not being under 5*l*., and not exceeding seven days after sight, or twenty-one days after date) on taking out a licence for that purpose, which costs 30*l*. for each place at which such bills or notes shall be issued (but not more than four licences are required for any number of places), and entering into a bond to keep a regular account of all Bills and Notes issued, and of the amount in circulation on a given day (Saturday) in every week, and to deliver such account half-yearly, and pay a composition at the rate of 3*s*. 6*d*. for every 100*l*. of the average amount. The act imposes a penalty of 100*l*. on post-dating any such notes or bills.

Promissory Note, for payment of any sum of money in any other manner than to Bearer on demand; or if exceeding 100*l*., whether to Bearer on demand or otherwise,—the same duty as on BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

•• These Notes are not to be re-issued after being once paid.

Promissory Note for the payment of any sum of money by instalments, or for the payment of several sums of money at different days or times, so that the whole sum to be paid is definite and certain, the same duty as on a Promissory Note payable in less than two months after date for a sum equal to the whole amount.

NOTE.—The following Instruments are deemed Promissory Notes within the meaning of this Schedule.—All notes promising the payment of any sum out of a particular fund which may or may not be available, or upon any condition or contingency which may or may not happen, if the same be made payable to Bearer or to Order, or if the same be definite and certain, and do not amount in the whole to 20*l*.

And all Receipts for money deposited in any bank, or in the hands of any banker, containing an agreement or memorandum that interest shall be paid for the money so deposited.

If any person shall make, sign, or issue, or shall accept or pay any Bill, Draft, or Order, or Promissory Note, liable to duty, without being duly stamped, he shall forfeit 50*l*. 55 Geo. III. c. 184, § 10.

And if any person shall make or issue any Bill of Exchange, Draft, Order, or Promissory Note for the payment of money at any time after date or sight, which shall bear date subsequent to the day on which it is issued, so that it shall not become payable in two months (if payable after date), or in sixty days (if payable after sight) from the time of issuing, unless stamped with the higher duty, he shall forfeit 100*l*. 1*d*. § 12.

EXEMPTIONS.—All notes promising the payment of any sum out of a particular fund which may or may not be available, or upon any condition or contingency which may or may not be performed or happen, where the same is not made payable to Bearer or to Order; and also when made payable to Bearer or to Order, if it amount to 20*l*., or is indefinite.—And all other Instruments bearing the form of Promissory Notes, but which in law are deemed Special Agreements, except those hereby expressly directed to be deemed Promissory Notes. But such instruments are nevertheless liable to the duty which may attach thereon as Agreements or otherwise.—Promissory Notes of the Bank of England are exempted, the Bank paying an annual composition on account thereof.

annual composition on account thereof.			£.	s.	d.
PROTEST of any Bill of Exchange or Promissory Note for any sum of money not amounting to £20
Under £100.....	£0 3 0	Under £500.....	£0 5 0	£500 or upwards ...	0 10 0
Protest of any other kind					0 5 0
And for every sheet or piece of paper, parchment, &c. after the first					0 5 0
RECEIPT or discharge given for or upon the payment of money, amounting to £5 and not amounting to £10
Under £20... £0 0 6	Under £200... £0 2 6	Under £1000	0 0 3
50.....0 1 0	300.....0 4 0	Amounting to £1000 }	0 7 6
100.....0 1 6	5000 5 0		or upwards.....
When the sum is acknowledged to be received in full of all demands					0 10 0

NOTE.—Any note, memorandum, or writing given to any person upon the payment of money, whereby any sum, debt, or demand, or part thereof therein specified, amounting to 5*l*. or upwards is expressed or acknowledged to be paid, settled, balanced, or otherwise discharged or satisfied, and whether signed or not by any person, is a Receipt within the meaning of this schedule.

And any receipt given upon the payment of money containing any general acknowledgment of any debt, account, claim, or demand, whereof the amount is not therein specified, having been paid, settled, balanced, or otherwise discharged, or whereby any sum therein mentioned is acknowledged to be received in full, or in discharge of such debt, &c. and whether signed with the name of any person or not, is chargeable as a Receipt in full of all demands, with the duty of 10*s*. And all receipts, discharges, and acknowledgments of such description, given for or upon payment by any bills of exchange, drafts, promissory notes, or other securities for money, are deemed Receipts given upon the payment of money within the meaning of this schedule.

The stamp is to be paid by the person giving the receipt, except when the money is paid for the use of her majesty. And any person refusing to give a receipt, or to pay the amount of the stamp, is liable to the penalty of 10*l*. And any person writing or signing, or causing to be written or signed, any receipt without the same being first duly stamped, or upon a stamp of a lower denomination than is required, shall forfeit 10*l* if the sum paid be under 100*l*.; and 20*l*. if amounting to 100*l*. or upwards. 35 Geo. III. c. 55.

EXEMPTIONS.—Receipts exempted from stamp duty by any act relating to the Assessed Taxes.—Receipts given by the Treasurer of the Navy.—Receipts on account of the pay of the Army or Ordnance.—Receipts given by any officer, seaman, marine, or soldier, or their representatives.—Receipts for the consideration money for the purchase of any parliamentary stocks or funds, and for any dividend paid on any share of the said stocks or funds.—Receipts on Exchequer bills.—Receipts given for money deposited in the Bank of England, or in the hands of any banker, to be accounted for on demand, provided the same be not expressed to be received of or by the hands of any other than the person to whom the same is to be accounted for. But if with interest, see PROMISSORY NOTE.—Receipts written upon Promissory Notes, Bills of Exchange, Drafts, or Orders for the payment of money.—Receipts given upon bills or notes of the Bank of England.—Letters by the General Post acknowledging the safe arrival of any bills of exchange, promissory notes, or other securities.—Receipts indorsed upon any Bond, Mortgage, or other security, or any conveyance whatever.—Releases or discharges for money by deeds duly stamped.—Receipts or discharges for the return of duties of Customs.—Receipts indorsed upon Navy bills.—Receipts upon Victualling and Transport bills.—Receipts given solely for the duty on insurances against fire.

£. s. d.

RECOGNIZANCE, Statute Merchant, and Statute Staple, entered into as a security for the performance of any covenant, contract, or agreement; or for the due execution of any office or trust; or for rendering a due account of money received or to be received; or for indemnifying against any matter or thing	1	15	0
If containing 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080	1	5	0
Recognizance, Statute Merchant, and Statute Staple, as a security for the payment of any sum of money, or annuity, or transfer of any share in the funds, where not already secured by a Bond or Mortgage, same duty as on a Bond.
And where such payment or transfer is already so secured	1	0	0
RELEASE and Renunciation of lands or other property, real or personal, heritable or moveable, or of any right or interest therein, any deed or instrument of, not otherwise charged, nor expressly exempted from all stamp duty	1	15	0
If containing 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080	1	5	0
Release upon the sale of any property. See CONVEYANCE .
REVOCATION of any use or trust, of or concerning any estate or property, real or personal, where made by any writing not being a deed or will	1	15	0
If containing 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080	1	5	0
SCHEDULE, Inventory, or Catalogue of any lands, hereditaments, or heritable subjects, or of any furniture, fixtures, or other goods or effects; or containing the terms and conditions of any proposed sale, lease, tack, &c., or the conditions and regulations for the cultivation or management of any farm, lands, or other property leased or agreed to be leased; or containing any other matter of contract or stipulation, which shall be referred to in, or by, and be intended to be used in evidence as part of or as material to any Agreement, Lease, Bond, Deed, &c., yet separate and distinct therefrom	1	5	0
If containing 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080	1	0	0
SETTLEMENT.—Any deed or instrument, whether voluntary or gratuitous, or upon any good or valuable consideration other than a bonâ fide pecuniary consideration, whereby any definite and certain principal sum or sums of money, or share or shares in the public stocks or funds, are settled upon any person, either in possession or reversion, absolutely or conditionally, or in any other manner:—If such sums, or the value of such shares in all or any of the said stocks or funds, or both, do not amount to 1000 l .	1	15	0
Under £2000 £2 0 0 Under £5000 £5 0 0 Under £12,000 ...	12	0	0
3000 3 0 7000 7 0 15,000 ...	15	0	0
4000 4 0 9000 9 0 20,000 ...	20	0	0
Amounting to £20,000 or upwards	25	0	0
If containing 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080	1	5	0
And for any duplicate of any such instrument, the same duty or duties.

EXEMPTIONS.—Bonds, Mortgages, and other securities operating as Settlements, if chargeable with the ad valorem duties on Bonds and Mortgages.—Deeds of Appointment or Apportionment in execution of powers given by any previous Settlement, Deed, or Will, to or in favour of persons specially named as the objects of such powers.—Deeds or instruments merely declaring the trusts of any money or stock pursuant to any previous Settlement, Deed, or Will, or for securing any gifts or dispositions made by any previous Settlement, Deed, or Will.—Wills, Testaments, and Testamentary Instruments, and Dispositions mortis causâ of every description.

SPECIFICATION, to be enrolled or recorded, of any Discovery or Invention for which a Patent is obtained	5	0	0
If containing 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080	1	0	0
SURRENDER upon the sale of lands or other property. See CONVEYANCE .
Surrender of copyhold lands or tenements. See COPYHOLD and MORTGAGE .
Surrender (not otherwise charged nor expressly exempted) of any term or terms of years, or of any freehold or uncertain interest in any lands, hereditaments, or heritable subjects, not being of copyhold or customary tenure	1	15	0
If containing 2160 words, for every 1080 words after the first 1080	1	5	0

	£.	s.	d.
TESTIMONIAL or Certificate of the admission of any person to the degree of a Bachelor of Arts, in either of the Universities in England	3	0	0
Of any person to any other degree in either of the said Universities	10	0	0
TRANSFER of any share in the stock and funds of the Bank of England, or of the South-Sea Company, whether upon a sale or otherwise	0	7	6
Transfer of any share in the stock and funds of the East India Company, whether upon sale or otherwise	1	10	0
Transfer of any share in the stock and funds of any other corporation, company, or society whatsoever, not otherwise charged under the head of Mortgage, or of Conveyance upon the sale of property.	1	10	0
Transfer upon the sale of any other property. See CONVEYANCE.
EXEMPTIONS.—Transfer of Shares in any of the Government or Parliamentary Stocks or Funds are exempt from stamp duty.
WARRANT OF ATTORNEY (with or without a Release of Errors), to enter up a judgment for the payment of money or transfer of stock; where such payment or transfer is not already secured by a Bond, Mortgage, or other Instrument charged with the ad valorem duty,—the same as on a Bond.
Where such payment or transfer is already secured by a Bond, Mortgage, or other security which has paid the ad valorem duty; or where the same is given for securing any sum for which the person is in custody under an arrest, or for any other purpose not otherwise charged	1	0	0
Warrant or Order beneficial, under the sign manual of her majesty, except where the same is for the service of the navy, army, or ordnance	1	10	0
Where the same is for the service of the navy, army, or ordnance	0	12	6
Where several persons are separately and distinctly (and not jointly) benefited by one Warrant, the proper duty is charged in respect of each person.
WRIT of Covenant for levying a fine	2	0	0
Writ of Entry for suffering a common recovery	2	0	0
Writ of Error	1	0	0

GENERAL EXEMPTIONS FROM STAMP DUTIES.

All Bonds, Contracts, Mortgages, Conveyances, Deeds, &c. exempted by the 17 Geo. III. c. 53, or other acts for promoting the residence of the clergy.

All Affidavits, Contracts, Mortgages, Conveyances, &c., exempted from stamp duty by the 42 Geo. III. c. 116, or other acts for the redemption and sale of the Land Tax.

All Transfers of Shares in the Government or Parliamentary Stocks or Funds.

All Grants, Leases, Conveyances, &c. exempted from stamp duty by any acts relating to the Land Revenues of the Crown.

All Bonds, Contracts, and Assignments relating to the transportation of Convicts.

Bill of Sale, Conveyance, Assignment, or other instrument, for the sale, transfer, or other disposition, either absolutely or by way of mortgage, of a ship or vessel, or any part, interest, share, or property of or in any ship or vessel. 6 Geo. IV. c. 41.

Advertisements, Agreements, Awards, and Powers of Attorney under the Tithe Commutation Act, 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 71.

Powers of Attorney for Transfer of Stock, Receipts, Bonds, or other securities, Drafts or Orders, Assurances, Appointments of Agents, Certificates of Revocation thereof, and other instruments required under the Friendly Societies Act, 10 Geo. IV. c. 56.

Powers of Attorney under the Savings Banks Act, 9 Geo. IV. c. 92.

The duties on Proceedings in Courts of Law, Equity, and Bankruptcy, contained in the Second Part of the Schedule to the 55 Geo. III. c. 184, were repealed by the 5 Geo. IV. c. 41, from the 10th October, 1824.

What Instruments require Stamps.—Acts of parliament imposing stamp duties are so construed as not to make any instrument liable to them, unless manifestly within the intent of the legislature, being liberally construed in favour of exemption. Thus, a memorandum, “Mr. T. has left in my hands £200,” was held to be neither an agreement to repay, nor a receipt, but like an I O U, and not requiring a stamp to render it admissible in evidence in an action to recover the money.¹ So a document in the following form—“I have this day received a bill of exchange, which I hold as your attorney, to recover the value from the parties, or to make such other arrangements for your benefit as may appear to me in my professional capacity reasonable and proper,” was held to be a mere acknowledgment of the duty which the party took upon himself to perform, and therefore ad

¹ Tomkins v. Ashby, 6 B. & C. 541.

missible in evidence without a stamp.¹ So a paper, stating that the party signing it had received certain bills in his hands which he had to get discounted, or to return on demand, was held not to require an agreement stamp.² So a note sent by a broker to his principal, of a purchase he had made, was admitted as evidence, without being stamped as a minute or memorandum of an agreement, though the subject of the purchase was above 20*l.* value, and it did not come within the terms of any exemption from the stamp duty.³ So, in an action for work and labour, a proposal on the part of the defendant which was not finally acceded to, but containing an estimate of the amount of the work, was allowed to be read in evidence for the defendant, although not stamped.⁴

But if an acknowledgment be expressed in such a form as to bear the purport also of an instrument requiring a stamp, it will not then be admitted in evidence even as an acknowledgment. Thus, the 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, in requiring that an acknowledgment or promise, in order to take a debt out of the Statute of Limitations, must be in writing, expressly exempts the same from any stamp duty. Yet, in the case Singleton v. Ballot, a book containing a written entry signed by the defendant was adduced to prove the defendant's admission of a debt due, but, being in the terms of a promise to pay, it was rejected for want of a stamp.⁵ So a cognovit, which merely gives the defendant time, need not be stamped.⁶ But if it contain any terms of agreement, as to take the debt by instalments, it must have an agreement stamp.⁷ So a mere attornment need not be stamped; yet if any engagement to pay the rent be added, it requires an agreement stamp.⁸ The notice of a dissolution of partnership, inserted in the London Gazette, may be read in evidence without a stamp.⁹ But in May v. Smith, where the form of dissolution was, that "J. S. & M. M. had agreed to dissolve the partnership," &c., it was not allowed to be read in evidence, as being an agreement which required a stamp.¹⁰ So where a written paper was delivered by an auctioneer to the bidder to whom lands were let by auction, containing the description of the lands, the terms for which they were let to the bidder, and the rent payable, but it was not signed by the auctioneer or any of the parties; this was held not to be such a minute of the agreement as required to be stamped, nor such a writing as would exclude parol evidence.¹¹ But in another case, where a paper signed by the auctioneer was delivered to the bidder to whom lands were let by auction, containing the description of the lands, the terms for which they were to be let, and the rent payable, it was held that it should be stamped, though it was evidence only of part of the contract.¹²

¹ Langdon v. Wilson, 2 Man. & Ry. 10; 7 B. & C. 640. But see Cott v. Howard, 3 Starkie, 3.

² Mullet v. Hutchinson, 7 B. & C. 639; 1 M. & R. 522.

³ Joseph v. Pebrer, 1 C. & P. 341.

⁴ Penniford v. Hamilton, 2 Stark. 475.

⁵ Tyrr, 409.

⁶ Per Abbott C. J., Jay v. Warren, 1 C. & P. 532.

⁷ Reardon v. Swaby, 4 East. 188. Ames v. Hill, 2 B. & P. 150.

⁸ Cornish v. Searell, 8 Barn. & Cres. 471; 1 Man. & Ry. 703.

⁹ Jenkins and another v. Blizard and another, 1 Stark. 448.

¹⁰ May v. Smith, 1 Esp. 283.

¹¹ Ramsbottom and another v. Tunbridge, 2 M. & S. 434.

¹² Ramsbottom v. Mortley, 2 M. & S. 445

Neither do the stamp laws in general require that a contract shall be in writing when it is not by any other law (as by the Statute of Frauds) made a requisite towards its validity; they only impose the necessity for a stamp when the parties themselves think fit to have written evidence of the contract. But when a contract is in writing, there are many acts which require that the true state of the transaction should be stated, in order that the proper stamp may be placed on it; and if this is not duly observed, the instrument is often declared to be absolutely void. Where premises were held under a written agreement unstamped, the landlord was not allowed to prove the demise by parol evidence.¹ And where an agreement on unstamped paper had been destroyed, parol evidence was not allowed to be given of its contents, even though it had been destroyed by the wrongful act of the party who took the objection.²

With regard to appraisements, the 46 Geo. III. c. 43, § 8, expressly provides that they shall be in writing.

Almost all instruments made in England, though to take effect abroad, must be stamped, or they cannot be enforced here. But, in general, instruments made abroad do not require stamps, unless in the British plantations or settlements, where they are requisite if by the law of such places a stamp is necessary. Thus, articles of a foreign ship, made abroad or on the high seas, regulating wages of sailors, &c.; or foreign bills, as a bill drawn at Antwerp, and filled up and accepted here; or a bond for foreign stock, signed at Paris but issued in England, do not require English stamps. An agreement, however, made in a foreign country cannot be received in evidence here, if it appear that by the laws of that country the instrument would not be available there for want of a stamp; but until the law of such country is distinctly proved, it will be presumed that no stamp is necessary.

Where a bill of exchange was drawn in Jamaica upon a stamp of that island, with a blank for the payee's name, and transmitted to England, where a bonâ fide holder filled in his own name as payee, it was considered that an English stamp was not necessary.³ But if a bill be drawn in England, though dated in some foreign place, such bill cannot be enforced here without an English stamp.⁴

Of the Description of Stamps on particular Instruments. — The stamps for different instruments vary in form; and as the courts considered it necessary, where the distinction could be ascertained, that it should be observed, there was formerly sometimes great difficulty in determining what was the proper stamp. But now, to remedy this difficulty, it is provided by the 55 Geo. III., that all instruments for or upon which any stamp shall have been used of an improper denomination or rate of duty, but of equal or greater value in the whole than the stamp or stamps which ought regularly to have been used thereon, the same shall be deemed valid and effectual in law, "except in cases where the stamp used on such instrument shall have been specially appropriated to any other instrument, by having its name on the face thereof," as is the case with respect to bill and receipt stamps.

¹ Brewer v. Palmer, 3 Esp. 213.

² Rippiner v. Wright, 2 B. & A. 478.

³ Crutchley v. Mann, 1 Marsh, 29.

⁴ Jordaine v. Lashbrooke, 7 T. R. 601.

Every instrument should be stamped according to its legal operation. Thus, an instrument purporting to be a conveyance of land, but which not being under seal could not operate as such, was held to operate as an agreement, and therefore required an agreement stamp.¹ So a bill of exchange expressing the terms of an agreement between a landlord and an incoming tenant, was held not admissible to prove such terms without an agreement stamp.²

When several Stamps are requisite.—In general, distinct contracts require distinct stamps; and if several things requiring distinct stamps (as several demises to several tenants) are written on the same paper with only one stamp, the contract is void, and cannot be made good by annexing distinct stamps on separate papers. So, if the terms of an agreement which is stamped and executed be altered, and the alteration be indorsed on the same paper, a new stamp is necessary. But if a contract is signed by one party, and previously to the accession of the other a new stipulation is inserted, the agreement is single and entire, and requires but one stamp.³

But many cases go to show that several subjects of contract may be included in one instrument, impressed with one stamp, if the whole be manifestly one transaction, and no fraud is intended. Thus, a lease containing two demises at distinct rents was held to be sufficient if stamped according to the aggregate amount of rent. As, in Boase v. Jackson,⁴ where the plaintiff demised a slate-pit at S., and stone-quarries at M., under an indenture of lease, to hold the one from Lady-day 1815, and the other from Michaelmas 1817, for the several terms of fourteen years from the respective dates thereof, at the yearly rent of 70*l.* for the slate-pit, and 130*l.* for the quarries; it was held, that all the premises might be demised by one indenture of lease, and that one ad valorem stamp on the aggregate amount was sufficient, as the letting must be considered as one transaction, there being no evidence of an intent by the parties to defraud the revenue. So where a bond for the performance of covenants or agreements (other than for the payment or transfer of any sum or annuity, or share in the stocks or funds) is contained in the same deed with other matter, it is only once chargeable; and the deed indorsed on a former deed as a further security for advances under the first deed, is exempted under the 48 Geo. III. c. 149 from an ad valorem duty, provided the first deed is properly stamped according to the value. But where a bond and mortgage are executed on the same day, for securing the same sum of money, but bearing different dates, an ad valorem duty on each is requisite.⁵ So several letters may be offered in evidence to prove an agreement between parties who shall have written them, if one of them be stamped with a duty of 1*l.* 15*s.*, they being considered as one transaction.

Where there are several parties to an instrument, whose interests relate to the same thing, a single stamp is sufficient. As, where several persons enter into an agreement to refer a cause to arbitration, such agreement and the award require each but one stamp. So in the case of an agreement relative to prize shares, though several as to each, one stamp only is required.

¹ Rex v. Ridgwell, 6 B. & C. 665.

² Nicholson v. Smith, 3 Starkie, 138.

³ Knight v. Crockford, 1 Esp. 189.

⁴ 6 Moore, 3 B. & B. 185.

⁵ Wood v. Merton, 4 M. & R. 673.

If a paper be produced with a single stamp, and it appear to have contained originally two distinct agreements, one of which is erased, the stamp is primâ facie sufficient, and it lies upon the opposite party to show that both agreements were on the paper at the time the stamp was affixed.¹ If two persons, by agreement in writing, lay a wager, and then, by another agreement indorsed on the first, agree that the bet shall be doubled, it requires two stamps.² But if there be one stamp only, the instrument is evidence of the first wager.³

Time and Manner of Stamping.—Deeds, agreements, and writings in general may be stamped at any time after execution, on payment of 5*l.* penalty (37 Geo. III. c. 136); and if within twelve months, the commissioners may remit the penalty, on sufficient reasons being stated to them by affidavit. But if a deed has been stamped and executed, and is found to require a further progressive duty, the penalty on such further stamp is 10*l.*⁴ Where the stamp is affixed after execution, the solicitor to the commissioners must first authenticate it. Agreements (formerly liable to a 20*s.* stamp, but now by 7 & 8 Vic. c. 21, to a duty of 2*s.* 6*d.*) may be stamped within fourteen days after they have been made or entered into; but after that time, only upon payment of a penalty of 10*l.* besides the duty. Soldiers' and sailors' powers may be stamped within three months without a penalty. Receipts may be stamped within fourteen days after execution, on payment of the duty and 5*l.* penalty; and within one calendar month on payment of the duty and 10*l.* But the stamp on bills and promissory notes must be affixed before writing the document. So also bills of lading, charterparties,⁵ policies of insurance, powers of attorney for the appointment of proxies to vote at meetings of railway or other companies,⁶ cannot be stamped after execution.

Consequences of Instruments not being duly Stamped.—In general, the stamp acts do not render instruments void which are not properly stamped, but merely subject the parties to penalties, to enforce the duties, and prohibit the instruments being used as evidence unless stamped; neither can parol evidence be given, so as to get over the difficulty. In the case of a bill or promissory note, the original debt may in general be recovered. But a note given for an apprentice fee cannot be enforced, if the indentures are void for want of a stamp, even though the master has supported the apprentice for a time.

¹ Waddington v. Francis, 5 Esp. 182.

² Robson v. Hall, Peake's N.P.C. 127.

³ Id. ib. Reed v. Deere, 7 B & C. 264.

⁴ In case of accumulated penalties, one penalty of 10*l.* may be taken.—37 Geo. III. c. 136, § 2.

⁵ 5 & 6 Vic. c. 79, § 21. Any person making or signing a bill of lading not duly stamped incurs a forfeiture of 50*l.* And the Commissioners of Stamps are prohibited from stamping any bill of lading, or any charterparty, or any agreement, contract, memorandum, letter, or other writing chargeable as a charterparty, after the same shall have been executed or signed by any party; except that if a charterparty, or an instrument chargeable as a charterparty, be brought to the Head Office within fourteen days after it shall bear date, and shall have been executed or signed by the party thereto who shall have first executed or signed the same, it shall be lawful for the commissioners to stamp the same upon payment of the duty, without any penalty; or if brought after that time and within one calendar month, upon payment of the duty and a further sum of 10*l.* by way of penalty.

⁶ 7 & 8 Vic. c. 21, § 7. The Commissioners of Stamps are prohibited from stamping any such power of attorney, appointing on nominating a proxy, after the same shall have been signed by any person. And any person making or signing any such power or unstamped paper, and any person voting or attempting to vote as a proxy in pursuance thereof, are liable to a penalty of 50*l.*; and every vote so given is void.

Where the original debt is resorted to, if in attempting to give parol evidence of it, it turn out that there has been a written contract not duly stamped, the plaintiff will be nonsuited.

Any unstamped document may, however, be sometimes used as evidence of collateral facts.

Spoiled stamps are in general allowed for at the Stamp Office, and others, or their value in money, given in lieu thereof.

The days for the allowance of spoiled stamps at the Head Stamp-office are Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, from 12 to 2 o'clock. If parties reside within ten miles of London, application must be made within six calendar months from the time the stamps became spoiled, when not upon executed instruments; and when upon such instruments, within six months from their date. If parties reside beyond the said limit of ten miles, the application must also be made within six months from the date, when the stamps are upon executed instruments; but in all other cases within twelve months from the date of the stamps becoming spoiled. The affidavit in support of the application, when not made before a commissioner at Somerset-house, must be upon a stamp of 2s. 6d., and made before a master extraordinary in chancery. The deeds executed in lieu of the spoiled ones should be produced.

Bill stamps signed by the drawer are not allowed for, unless upon oath that they have not been presented for acceptance.

Sale of Stamps.—To prevent the extensive forgeries of stamps that formerly took place, the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 97 provides, that the commissioners may grant a licence, free of expence, to any person to sell stamps, on such person entering into a bond (exempt from duty) in 100l. penalty not to sell stamps other than those received from the head offices at Westminster or Edinburgh, or from some duly appointed distributor. Such licence to be revocable at the pleasure of the commissioners. One licence and one bond are sufficient for any number of partners. The licence to contain the christian and surname and place of abode of the person to whom it is granted, and a description of his house or shop; but not to authorize the party to deal in stamps at any other places than such as are specified therein.

And no person (other than a distributor or sub-distributor) can deal in stamps in any part of Great Britain without such licence, under 20l. penalty for every offence, and double the penalty if the stamps are forged, together with all other legal consequences of selling, uttering, or having in possession false, forged, or counterfeit stamps. But any person employed to prepare, write, or engross any instrument liable to stamp duty may charge his employer with the amount of the stamps thereon, without having a licence to vend stamps.

Licensed venders must have their names at full length painted in Roman capital letters (one inch at least in height, and of a proportionate breadth) in front of their shop, together with the words Licensed to Sell Stamps, under a penalty of 10l. But, in the case of several persons in copartnership, it is sufficient if the name of one of them is so painted. Unlicensed persons affixing such notice forfeit 10l. a day.

¹ By a recent arrangement, spoiled stamps can be recovered on application to the distributors of stamps at Liverpool, Manchester, Chester, Hull, Birmingham, Nottingham, York, Leicester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Bristol, and Norwich, who are empowered to administer affidavits on unstamped paper, free of expence.

Premises of licensed dealers may be searched for counterfeit stamps by any officer of the stamp duties, under warrant of the commissioners.

Any person hawking stamps (whether licensed to deal in stamps or not) at any place other than the house or shop in which he resides or bonâ fide carries on trade or business, forfeits 20*l.* above any penalty to which he is liable for dealing in stamps without a licence; and any person, without any other warrant than this act, may apprehend any person so hawking, and take him before a justice of the peace having jurisdiction where the offence is committed; and if he shall not immediately pay the penalty, the justices shall commit him to prison for not less than one or more than three calendar months, unless the penalty be sooner paid; and all stamps found in his possession are forfeited, and are to be delivered over to the commissioners.

The allowance on the purchase of stamps at the Head Office is 30*s.* per cent to persons purchasing to the amount of 30*l.* at one time; but no discount is allowed in respect of stamps impressed upon paper which has been previously written upon. On receipt stamps the allowance is 7*l.* 10*s.* per cent on taking to the amount of 5*l.* at one time at the Head Office, or of one pound at a time of any distributor or sub-distributor at a distance of ten miles from the Head Office; and no charge is made by the commissioners for the paper upon which receipt stamps are printed. Persons desirous of having their own paper or parchment stamped with receipt stamps, on which any special form is printed, may have the same allowance made on taking it to the Head Office to be stamped in quantities not less than 5*l.* at a time. No person selling receipt stamps is to charge for the paper on which the same are printed, or under any pretence to charge more than the amount of the stamp duty, under penalty of 10*l.* But this is not to prevent any person from making a charge for any bound book of receipts, or for any folio sheet of paper containing not more than one stamp, or for any skin or piece of vellum or parchment whereon such stamp is impressed. 9 Geo. IV. c. 27.

The execution of the stamp laws is in general entrusted to justices of the peace, who have power to hear and determine all cases arising out of them, and generally to mitigate the penalties to a certain degree; but the party convicted may appeal to the next sessions. Forgery of stamps is felony, and was formerly punishable with death; but by the 2 Wm. IV. c. 66. and the 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 123, the punishment is commuted to transportation for life. Persons knowingly having forged dies or stamps in their possession, or fraudulently affixing stamps cut or torn from parchment or paper, or erasing names, dates, sums, or other matter, with intent to use the same again, are guilty of felony, and liable to transportation for seven years or for life, or to be imprisoned for two years or not exceeding four.¹ And the houses of persons suspected of being concerned in the forging of dies or stamps, or other felonious acts, may be searched by a warrant of a justice of peace.² Other frauds against this department of the revenue are punishable on conviction by indictment or information, at the discretion of the court where the party is tried.³

¹ 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 97, § 12.

² Id. § 13.

³ See generally Chitty's Stamp Acta.

STAGE CARRIAGES.

THE duties on stage carriages are under the management of the Commissioners of Stamps, and are deemed stamp duties. By the 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 120, as amended by 5 & 6 Vic. c. 79, the following duties are imposed and regulations enacted:—

Duties on Stage Carriages. —(5 & 6 Vic. c. 79.)		£.	s.	d.
For every Original Licence taken out yearly by the person who shall keep, use, or employ any Stage Carriage in Great Britain, that is to say,—
For every such Stage Carriage		3	3	0
And for every Supplementary Licence for the same carriage, taken out in any of the cases provided for during the period for which such Original Licence is granted
		0	5	0
And for every Mile which such Stage Carriage is licensed to travel
		0	0	1½

Duty in respect of Passengers conveyed by Carriages upon RAILWAYS.

For and in respect of all passengers conveyed for hire upon or along any Railway, a duty at and after the rate of 5*l.* for 100*l.* upon all sums received or charged for the hire, fare, or conveyance of all such passengers.

Every carriage used for conveying passengers for hire to or from any place in Great Britain, and which travels at the rate of *four*¹ miles or more in the hour, is, without regard to the form or construction thereof, to be deemed a stage carriage, provided the passengers or any of them are charged separate fares.

Commissioners of stamps, or their officers in the country, may grant licences, renewable annually, to any person of the age of 21; and with every licence a pair of plates is delivered. Persons in arrear for duties or penalties are not entitled to a fresh licence until payment of arrears.

A person applying for a licence must sign a requisition, in a form provided by the commissioners, containing the names and places of abode of the applicant and all the proprietors. Omitting the name of a proprietor in such requisition subjects the party to a penalty of 10*l.* and inserting a false name &c. is a misdemeanor.

The licence specifies the name and place of abode of every proprietor, the number on the plates, the extreme places from and to which the carriage is authorized to go, the route, the distance between such places, the number of journeys, and the total number of miles upon which the duty is assessed (either separately or in conjunction with other licensed carriages) within the day, week, or month, as the commissioners think fit, the days of the week on which it is to be used, and the greatest number of outside and of inside passengers.

Licences are in force till the first Monday in October following their date. But persons desirous of discontinuing may give notice to the commissioners &c., and, on giving up the licence and plates, will be no longer chargeable with duty. Plates must also be delivered up on the expiration of the licence, or the duties continue payable.

If any alteration takes place in the proprietorship of the carriage, in the number of its journeys, or the days of performing the same, or in the route, a supplementary licence must be obtained.

The duties may be compounded for by the day, week, or month; and in such case the amount is specified in the licence.

¹ 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 65. It was three miles under the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 140.

Commissioners may make an allowance of duties for journeys not performed; but the penalty for rendering a false account is 50*l*.

Persons keeping stage carriages without a licence are liable to the duties over and above the penalty. A separate licence is required for every pair of plates. Persons using stage carriages contrary to their licences, or with improper plates, are deemed to use them without a licence. But the representatives of persons licensed may use stage carriages for thirty days without further licence. New plates are delivered in lieu of defaced or lost plates, upon payment of 10*s*. for each pair.

The penalty on plying for hire with carriages not having plates thereon, is 20*l*. if the owner, and 10*l*. if a driver merely. Offenders may be conveyed before a justice of the peace, and the carriages taken to the green-yard or other place for safe custody, as with hackney coaches.

On each side of every stage carriage must be painted, in letters at least one inch in length, the name of a proprietor and the places from and to which it is licensed to travel, under a penalty of 5*l*. And, by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 79, there must also be painted, in words at length, and in letters at least one inch in height, on the outside at the back, and also in the inside, and if constructed to carry passengers in different compartments, then in each such compartment, the number of passengers it is constructed to carry in the whole, and on the outside and in the inside thereof respectively, and in each such compartment, under a penalty of 10*l*. on the proprietor for the omission, or for stating a greater number than the carriage is constructed to carry, according to the regulations of the act; which require, that for every passenger there shall be allowed on an average a space convenient for sitting of 16 inches, measuring in a straight line lengthwise on the front of each seat. And for carrying a greater number, the driver and conductor or guard are liable to a penalty of 5*l*. Children in the lap under five years of age are not reckoned. Any constable or other peace officer at any time, and any person travelling or having immediately before travelled by a stage carriage, may measure the seats, in order to ascertain the number of passengers the carriage is constructed to carry; and any person obstructing is liable to a penalty of 5*l*.

No stage carriage the top or roof of which is more than 8 feet 6 inches from the ground, or the bearing of which on the ground is less than 4 feet 6 inches from the centre of the track of the right or off wheel to the centre of the track of the left or near wheel, is allowed to carry more than the number of outside passengers hereinafter mentioned, viz. not more than five outside passengers, where it is constructed to carry not exceeding nine passengers in the whole; not more than eight outside, when constructed to carry in the whole exceeding nine and not exceeding twelve passengers; not more than eleven outside, when constructed to carry in the whole exceeding twelve and not exceeding fifteen passengers; not more than twelve outside, when constructed to carry in the whole exceeding fifteen and not exceeding eighteen passengers; and not more than two additional outside for every three additional passengers which it is constructed to carry in the whole. And if any greater number of outside passengers be carried than is here allowed, the driver and the conductor or guard thereof shall respectively forfeit the sum of 5*l*.

The enactments respecting the inscriptions, outside passengers, and luggage, do not extend to mail coaches carrying not more than four outside passengers.

The driver of any stage carriage drawn by three or more horses quitting the box or horses without delivering the reins into the hands of some fit person, or before some person is placed at the horses' heads; or such person leaving the horses before the driver has returned; or the driver of any stage carriage permitting any other person to drive, or quitting the box without occasion, or concealing or misplacing plates; or the guard discharging fire-arms unnecessarily; or the driver or guard neglecting to take care of luggage, asking more than the proper fare, refusing to account to their employer, or assaulting or using abusive language to any person, or endangering passengers or property through negligence, intoxication, or wanton or furious driving, are liable respectively to a penalty of 5*l.* for every such offence.

METROPOLITAN STAGE CARRIAGES.—Under this designation, certain provisions were made by 1 & 2 Vic. c. 79, which have been since replaced by 6 & 7 Vic. c. 86, for the regulation of the London omnibuses and short stages near town.

Metropolitan stage carriage, as defined by the last-mentioned act, includes every stage carriage except such as shall on every journey go to or come from some place every part of which is beyond the distance of ten miles from the General Post Office. The proprietor of every such carriage is required to keep distinctly painted, both on the outside and inside of the same, in such a manner and in such a position as shall from time to time be directed by the registrar, the words "Metropolitan Stage Carriage," or such other words as the registrar shall direct, together with the number of the Stamp-office plate relating to such carriage; and shall also, on the inside of every such carriage, keep distinctly painted in a conspicuous manner a table of fares to be demanded of passengers; and the fares therein specified shall be deemed to be the only lawful fares, and may be recovered by the driver or conductor, as in the case of hackney carriages, in a summary way before any justice of the peace. And every proprietor making default in the premises shall forfeit 20*s.* for every offence.

A variety of provisions are then made for the regulation of the drivers and conductors of these vehicles, who are required to take out a licence annually, which costs 5*s.*, and to wear metal tickets or badges; but as these provisions apply also to the drivers of hackney carriages, we shall refer to them more particularly under that head. See post, 145.

HACKNEY CARRIAGES.

The regulations as to hackney carriages in and near London were consolidated by the 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 22, all former acts being repealed. The collection of the duties is placed under the management of the Commissioners of Stamps, and the same are declared to be stamp duties.

A hackney carriage within the meaning of this act is defined to include every carriage with two or more wheels used for the purpose of standing or plying for hire in any public street or road at any place within the distance of five miles from the General Post Office, whatever be the form or construction, or the number of persons it may be calculated to convey, or the number of horses by which it shall be drawn; but not to extend to any stage coach used for the purpose of standing or plying for passengers to be carried for hire at separate fares, and duly licensed for that purpose, and having thereon the proper numbered plates required by law.

No hackney carriage is to be used without a licence from the Commissioners of Stamps, and a plate with a number corresponding with the licence received from the Stamp Office affixed thereon, under 10*l.* penalty on the driver if he is also the owner, and 5*l.* if not the owner; who may be carried before a magistrate by a peace officer, and the carriage and horses driven to any livery stable &c. for custody. If the party be the owner, they may be detained and held liable for all expences and penalties; and if such are not paid within five days, may be sold to defray the same. If he be the driver merely, he is, in default of payment of the fine &c., liable to three months imprisonment; and if the expences be not then paid, the carriage &c. may in like manner be sold to pay them. Similar rules apply to leaving coaches in the street unattended; but in such cases the penalty is 20*s.* A penalty of 5*l.* attaches for preventing any person by any means from seeing the number.

The commissioners may refuse licences to those whose former licence they have revoked, or who are in arrear for duties, or are under twenty-one years of age, or have been convicted of felony or of knowingly receiving stolen property. Licences may be granted without limitation as to number.

In the requisition for a licence, the party must state the names of all the proprietors and their residences, under 10*l.* penalty; and in case of a change of abode, notice is to be given within seven days, under 2*l.* penalty. The price of the licence is 5*l.*; and the duty 10*s.* per week, to be paid in advance on the first Monday of every month. Upon discontinuing to use any carriage, the proprietor is to give notice in writing to the commissioners, and at the time appointed must give up the plates, under 10*l.* penalty. The carriage, horses, and harness are liable to be seized for arrears of duties, whether in the party's hands or in those of others.

Drivers may be compelled to go any distance not exceeding five miles from the General Post Office or from the place where they are hired, under 2*l.* penalty; and hackney coaches standing in the street, though not on the stand, may be compelled to take a fare. If they are summoned for refusing, and they prove that they were actually engaged at the time by another fare, and rejected the first with civility, they are to receive compensation for loss of time. Drivers may ply on Sundays; and if they do, must take whatever fares may offer, as at other times.

The fares for hackney coaches drawn by two horses are, 1*s.* for the first mile or under, and 6*d.* for every other half mile or under. By time, they are 1*s.* for the first half hour or under, and 6*d.* for every other quarter of an hour or under. Cab fares are two thirds of the above.

The price of the fare may be reckoned, at the option of the driver, either by the time or distance. The driver can under no circumstances demand more than the legal fare, but an agreement to take less is binding on him. If desired to wait at any place, the driver cannot refuse, but may demand a reasonable deposit; and he is bound to wait no longer than the time for which the deposit is equivalent.

As to back fares, if a coach be discharged at any place beyond the limits of the metropolis (a circle of three miles radius from the General Post Office) after eight in the evening and before five in the morning, the full fare to the nearest point of the limits, or to any stand beyond the limits where the coach was hired, at the option of the fare, is to be paid in addition to the regular fare. If discharged at any other time of the day, half back fare is to be paid, if the distance is four miles or more beyond the limits. Persons refusing to pay the fare, or doing any damage to the coach, are liable to a month's imprisonment with hard labour.

Property found in coaches is to be taken within four days to the Stamp Office; and if claimed, the expences are to be paid, and the coachman rewarded. If not claimed within a year, it is given up to the coachman, on application within a month, or sold.

Check strings are to be provided and held by the driver, under 20s. penalty; and the same penalty attaches if the driver takes up any other person against the consent of the fare. No two coaches are to stand by the side of each other (except in Palace-Yard), or across the street, or within eight feet of the curb stone, under 20s. penalty; and, under the like penalty, ten clear feet are to be left after every fourth coach on a stand. Improper conduct or even rudeness in the driver subjects him to 5*l.* penalty, or two months imprisonment; and it endangers the proprietor's licence, if he is to blame.

DRIVERS, CONDUCTORS, AND WATERMEN. — By 1 & 2 Vic. c. 79, since replaced by 6 & 7 Vic. c. 86, further regulations have been made for the regulation of hackney carriages and metropolitan stage carriages, and especially for licensing the drivers and conductors thereof, and the watermen employed at the coach-standings.

For the purpose of granting such licences, a public officer, styled "The Registrar of Metropolitan Public Carriages," is provided. On each licence is imposed a stamp duty of 5*s.*; and with the licence is delivered a metal ticket, to be worn by the person licensed at all times during his employment, and whenever he is required to appear before a justice of peace, on pain of forfeiting 40*s.*

No person shall act as the driver of a hackney carriage within the limits of this act,¹ or as the driver or the conductor of a metropolitan stage carriage,¹ or as a waterman, without having a licence for such purposes respectively. And every person acting as such driver, conductor, or waterman, without a licence, and every licensed waterman acting at any other standing or place than those mentioned in his licence, and any person lending his licence or ticket, shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of 5*l.*; and if any proprietor employ any

¹ The limits of the act include the city of London and the liberties thereof, and the Metropolitan Police District; and the term metropolitan stage carriage in this act includes every stage carriage except such as shall on every journey go to or come from some place beyond the said limits.

unlicensed person, he shall forfeit 10*l*. In cases of unavoidable necessity, however, any competent person, though not licensed, may be employed for a time not exceeding twenty-four hours.

Licences continue in force till the 1st of June next after their date, except sooner revoked or suspended; and on their expiration must, with the tickets, be delivered up to the registrar. Using a ticket after the expiration of the licence, or neglecting for three days to deliver it up, or wearing one without having a licence in force, or any thing resembling one, for the purpose of deception, subjects to a forfeiture of 5*l*.; and any peace officer may seize the same.

If a ticket be defaced or lost, a new one may be had on payment of 3*s*. Using a ticket on which the number is obliterated or defaced subjects the party to a forfeiture of 40*s*.

Forging or counterfeiting, or uttering any forged or counterfeited licence or ticket, or knowingly having such in possession, is a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or by both, in the common gaol or house of correction, and with or without hard labour, as the court shall think fit. Any person may detain any such forged or counterfeited licence or ticket, and any peace officer may seize and take away the same, for the purpose of being produced in evidence against the offender.

The proprietors of hackney carriages or metropolitan stage carriages are to hold the licences of the drivers or conductors, and produce them to any justice of the peace before whom a complaint is made against them, or they are liable to a forfeiture of 3*l*.; and the justice may make an indorsement upon the licence, stating the nature of the offence of which the driver or conductor is adjudged guilty, and the amount of the penalty inflicted.

A justice of the peace may revoke or suspend the licence of any driver, conductor, or waterman, convicted of any offence under this act or any other law. The licence so suspended or revoked, with the ticket belonging thereto, is to be thereupon delivered up to the justice, to be transmitted to the registrar, who may, at the expiration of the period for which it is suspended, re-deliver it to the person licensed. Any proprietor, driver, conductor, or waterman refusing to deliver up a licence or ticket when required, incurs a forfeiture of 5*l*.

If the driver of any hackney carriage or of any metropolitan stage carriage shall be guilty of any wanton or furious driving, or shall, by negligence, wilful misbehaviour, or other misconduct, cause any hurt or damage to any person or property upon any street or highway, or if any driver, conductor, or waterman shall during his employment be drunk, or make use of any insulting or abusive language, or any insulting gesture, or any misbehaviour, he shall for every such offence forfeit any sum not exceeding 3*l*.; or the justice, instead of inflicting such penalty, may forthwith commit him to prison for not exceeding two calendar months, with or without hard labour. And where any such hurt or damage shall have been caused, the justice may award that the proprietor shall pay such a sum not exceeding 10*l*. as shall appear a reasonable compensation to the person ^{or persons}aggrieved or injured, which such proprietor shall be entitled to recover from the driver in a summary manner before a justice of the peace.

Every driver of a hackney carriage who shall ply for hire elsewhere than at some standing, or who by loitering or any wilful misbehaviour shall cause any obstruction in any public street, road, or place; and every driver or conductor of a metropolitan stage carriage who by loitering or any wilful misbehaviour shall cause any obstruction in any public street, road, or place, or shall improperly delay such carriage on any journey, or wilfully deceive any person in respect to the route or destination thereof, or who shall refuse to admit and carry at the lawful fare any passenger for whom there is room, and to whose admission no reasonable objection is made, or who shall demand more than the legal fare for any passenger, or who, for the purpose of taking up or setting down a passenger, or, except in case of accident or other unavoidable necessity, shall stop such carriage opposite to the end of any street, or upon any place where foot passengers usually cross the carriage way, or who shall ply for hire or passengers by blowing a horn or using any other noisy instrument within the limits of the metropolis as defined by 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 22; and every conductor who shall allow any person besides himself to ride upon the steps, or in the place provided for him; and every driver of a hackney carriage, whether hired or unhired, who shall allow any person besides himself, not being the hirer nor any person employed by such hirer, to ride on the driving-box; and every driver or conductor of a metropolitan stage carriage who shall smoke whilst acting in such capacity, after an objection taken by any person riding in or upon that carriage, shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of 20s.

In cases of complaint against a driver or conductor, which must be made within seven days after the offence committed, any justice of peace may summon the proprietor to produce the driver or conductor, and in default may inflict a fine not exceeding 40s., and so from time to time until he produce such driver or conductor. But the justice, if he think proper, instead of issuing a second summons, may proceed to hear and determine the complaint. And any penalty inflicted upon the driver or conductor shall be paid by the proprietor who has failed to produce him, but it may be recovered back from such driver or conductor in a summary manner before a justice of peace.

On the nonpayment of any penalty together with all costs and expenses, the justice may either adjudge the person convicted to be imprisoned for two months in the common gaol or house of correction, or may issue a warrant for levying the same by distress and sale of his goods; and if sufficient goods be not found, may then imprison him as before mentioned. Proceedings before justices are final, and not removable to a superior court.

Justices may award reasonable compensation for costs and loss of time of himself and witnesses, to any driver, conductor, waterman, or proprietor, summoned before them by any person other than an officer of stamps and taxes, or a police constable, when the complaint is withdrawn or dismissed, or the defendant is acquitted.

Waggons, carts, &c. driven in the public streets within five miles of the Post Office, must have the names and places of abode of the proprietors painted thereon, under 5l. penalty.

POST HORSES.

Duties on HORSES LET FOR HIRE, and on LICENCES to let the same.

Duties on HORSES LET FOR HIRE, and ON EXCHANGES for the same.		£.	s.	d.
For every Licence, to be taken out yearly by every person who shall let any horse for hire		0	7	6
And for every Horse let by the mile, at the rate charged for horses travelling post; that is to say, for every mile		0	0	1½
And for every Horse let to go no greater distance than 8 miles		0	1	9
And for every Horse let to go no greater distance than 8 miles, where he shall not bring back any person, and shall not deviate from the usual line of road		0	1	0
And for every Horse let for hire or used for less than 28 successive days, or in any other manner than as aforesaid;	} One fifth of the sum charged for every letting for hire.
And also for every Horse let for hire for 28 successive days or longer, where he is returned in less time than 28 successive days and is not exchanged for another horse
Or, in lieu of such one fifth part,
For every day not exceeding 3 days		0	2	6
For every day exceeding 3, and not exceeding 13		0	1	9
For every day exceeding 13 and less than 28		0	1	3

These duties were formerly under the management of the Commissioners of Stamps, but were transferred to the Commissioners of Excise by the 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 44. They are payable, by the 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 120, upon every horse let for hire, used either as a saddle horse or for drawing any carriage or vehicle conveying any person, or for drawing any mourning-coach or hearse; but not for horses used in drawing licensed stage carriages, hackney carriages in London, or carriages employed for the conveyance of fish.

Horses used for drawing hackney carriages in any city, town, or place except London, in lieu of and as a composition for the duties on horses let to hire, are charged as follows, viz., 5s. per week for the horses used in drawing such hackney carriage if drawn by two horses, and 3s. if drawn by one horse only, provided the proprietors take out a licence for that purpose, and paint their names &c. on the carriages. But horses so used are not exempt from the post-horse duties, unless the carriages are regularly used for plying; and they must not go a greater distance than five miles from the general post office of such city or place, or they become chargeable to the post-horse duty.

Licences to let horses for hire are granted by the Commissioners of Excise, or their collectors or supervisors; and they continue in force from the day of the date until the 31st January ensuing. Persons letting horses for hire without having a proper licence are liable to a penalty of 10*l.* for every horse. No licensed postmaster can let horses at more than one place by virtue of one licence, under a penalty of 20*l.* And the words "Licensed to let Horses for hire" must be painted on a sign or board, under penalty of 5*l.* On the death &c. of a licensed postmaster, his representatives may act under the licence for thirty days.

Carriages kept to be let with horses are to be numbered, and have the name &c. of the postmaster painted thereon, under penalty of 10*l.*

Postmasters and toll-gate keepers are supplied by the commissioners or their officers with proper tickets, to be delivered with the hire of horses on penalty of 10*l.*; and no person need pay for more miles than are expressed in the ticket. The penalty for not filling up the ticket truly is 10*l.* The tickets are to be delivered at the first toll-gate, and check tickets received. Persons not producing tickets pay

1s. 9d. for every horse. Toll-gate keepers, for neglecting to demand tickets, or for other improper conduct relative to such tickets, forfeit 10l.; and the same penalty is imposed on persons neglecting to deliver tickets, or falsely alleging hired horses to be their own.

Horses kept beyond the period for which they are hired are deemed to be retained on a new hiring.

Postmasters receive from the commissioners papers intituled "Excise Office Weekly Accounts;" in which they must insert the day of the month, the month, and year on which every horse is let for hire, and from and to what place it is hired to go, the number of every carriage furnished therewith, the christian and surname of every postilion or driver employed, the sum charged for the hire where the postmaster elects to pay one-fifth thereof for the duty on such letting, the time for which let for hire or used, the number of horses let, and the number of miles the same are hired to go, or such of the particulars aforesaid as are applicable to each letting, and the duty payable for every horse. Whenever the postmaster lets any horses for hire for twenty-eight days or more, he must insert in his weekly account the number of horses so let, the day of the month, the month, and year on which the hiring commences, the number of every carriage furnished therewith, the christian and surname of every driver employed, the time for which the same are hired, and the name and place of abode of the person hiring the same. He must also insert in such account a notice of every horse let for hire by him for twenty-eight days or more and which was returned to him before the expiration of the time for which it was let, the day of the month on which it was so returned, and the duty payable. Penalty for neglect, 20l. Such entries are to be made on the day the horses are let or returned, or on the next day, on penalty of 40s.

Every postmaster residing within five miles of the Head Office must deliver his weekly accounts, and pay the duties there, at the time appointed; and every other, to the collector at the market town nearest to his place of residence, under penalty of 20l. The allowance to postmasters out of money duly accounted for and paid is 3d. in the pound.

Persons letting horses are chargeable with the duty. Postmasters who cannot furnish horses must give tickets for horses furnished by others, and receive the duty.

Neither farmers of the duties, nor collectors, are disqualified from voting at the election of members of parliament.

The consent of the Commissioners of Excise is requisite to sue for penalties under this act. But penalties not exceeding 20l. are recoverable before one justice of the peace; one half to her majesty, and the other to the person suing. Officers of stamp duties are not disqualified from being witnesses.

HAWKERS AND PEDLARS.

HAWKERS are itinerant traders, who go about from place to place, carrying with them and selling wares. Pedlars are hawkers of small wares. The expediency of the laws respecting these persons arises from their being less beneficial to the state, and their character less known, than local traders; and in order to suppress them as much as possible, and at the same time to turn such suppression into a branch of revenue, the laws have charged certain taxes upon them.

They are, by the 50 Geo. III. c. 41, obliged to take out an annual licence of 4*l.*, and an additional licence of 4*l.* for every horse &c. with which they travel. A single act of selling a particular parcel of goods in this manner does not require a licence; but all itinerant dealers who sell by retail, how extensive soever their transactions may be, must take out a licence. But it does not extend to a traveller who goes about and takes orders, and afterwards conveys the goods to the persons who give the order.

In order to obtain a licence, the party must produce to the Commissioners of Stamps at Somerset House, or their deputies appointed in other parts of the country, a certificate of character and fitness, signed by the clergyman and two reputable inhabitants of the place where he usually resides, in a form prescribed by sec. 13 of the act.

The packages with which they travel must be marked "Licensed Hawker," together with the name and number of the licence, on penalty of 10*l.* for each offence. Persons not licensed using such marks forfeit the like sum.

A licensed auctioneer going from town to town by a public stage coach, sending goods by a public conveyance, and selling them on commission by retail or auction, is a trading person within the 50 Geo. III. c. 41, § 6, and must take out a hawker's and pedlar's licence.

Any goods may, however, be exhibited for sale in a public market; and printed papers licensed by authority, or fish, fruit, or victuals, or goods bonâ fide manufactured by the trader or his known agents &c., and the manufactures of Scotland by wholesale, may be vended without licence. So tinkers, coopers, plumbers, glaziers, harness-menders, and other persons usually trading in such matters and carrying about the materials for so doing, do not require a licence. Nor need any wholesale vender of the manufactures of Great Britain. Neither are coals, or, it should seem, turf, wood, &c., prohibited from being sold without a licence.

A licensed hawker, like a soldier, may set up any trade in his place of residence without having been apprenticed thereto.

Hawkers are prohibited from hawking any spirituous liquors, tea, tobacco, or snuff, under any circumstances, on pain of forfeiting them and 100*l.*, or of three months imprisonment; and they may be detained by any person, and carried before a justice for that offence. Trading in goods smuggled or dishonestly procured forfeits the licence, and incapacitates them from ever after taking out another. Neither can they sell by outcry, or by any kind of auction, except in the place of their residence, under 50*l.* penalty. Hawking without a licence subjects the party to 10*l.* penalty; and a party having a licence should always carry it with him, since if he refuses to produce it to any person he is liable to the same penalty.

Lending or borrowing a licence subjects the party to 40*l.* penalty, and forfeiture of the licence, with future incapacity to trade, unless it be to his bonâ fide servant; and forging a licence is 300*l.* penalty. If a constable or other peace officer refuse to assist in the execution of these laws, he forfeits for each offence 10*l.*

ASSESSED TAXES.

THESE consist of the duties on windows (and until recently on houses), on male servants, carriages, horses and mules, dogs, horse-dealers, hair powder, armorial bearings, and game certificates; and are by 43 Geo. III. c. 99, under the management of the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes.

Subordinate, however, to the principal board, district commissioners are appointed throughout the kingdom, who must, in all cases, be inhabitants of the district where they are appointed to act. In London and the circumjacent places, each must swear that he possesses property to the amount of 5000*l.* clear of all incumbrances, specifying wherein it consists. They meet annually, on or before the 10th April, in order to elect clerks and assistants, who remain in office for one year, unless there be cause for their earlier removal.

Assessors are appointed by the district commissioners, whose duty it is to make out the assessments, which, when duly approved and signed by the commissioners, are transmitted to the Tax Office.

Collectors are also nominated and sworn in by the commissioners, who, in addition to the security to the commissioners, may be required by the parish to give security, because, in case of their default, the parish is liable to be re-assessed to pay any deficiency. 43 Geo. III. c. 99, § 45. These, as well as the assessors, are liable to a fine of 20*l.* for any neglect or breach of duty.

Where collectors and assessors are not appointed by the commissioners, justices may appoint them; and persons so appointed refusing the office forfeit 20*l.*

Collectors are empowered to give receipts, but may take nothing beyond the assessment, except for the receipt stamp. They are remunerated by 3*d.* in the pound on all moneys paid in by them, except upon the duties under Schedule L. A demand for the assessed taxes should be made within ten days after they are due.

Inspectors and surveyors are also appointed, whose principal duty is to certify to the commissioners, and give notice to the parties to be affected thereby, of charges which have been omitted. These are denominated surcharges, and though omitted for the first half year may be afterwards made for the whole year. If a surveyor or inspector be guilty of vexatious charges or corrupt practices, he forfeits his office and 100*l.* In case the surcharge is verified, double duty is payable; but if, on receiving the notice, the party make out a true list of all things for which he is chargeable, and deliver it to the surveyor or inspector, together with a declaration containing a satisfactory excuse, attested by a credible witness, for the non-insertion of the articles in respect of which he is chargeable in the return, the double duty may be avoided; other means of doing so are pointed out in the rules contained in 50 Geo. III. c. 105.

For the purpose of preparing the assessments, lists are left annually by the assessors at every dwelling house; which must be duly filled up and returned by all persons liable. If a person has two places of residence, he must make a return at each place, though he is only chargeable in one, except to the window tax.

¹ The 9 & 10 Vic. c. 56 provides forms of proceedings for assessed taxes as well as for the property and income tax.

Persons may compound for their assessed taxes; and in such case they are not liable to any additional assessment, although they increase their establishment in the mean time.

Appeals.—By 43 Geo. III. c. 99, § 24, persons having ground of complaint against either the assessment or surcharge may appeal to the commissioners, on giving ten days notice to the surveyor or assessor; and by 48 Geo. III. c. 141, No. III, Rule 6, all appeals against the first assessment in every year are to be heard between the 20th August and the 20th September; and by No. IV., Rule 2, appeals against surcharges between the 20th January and the 20th February following. No assessment is to be altered till the appeal is heard; and if clerks or others alter them improperly, 50*l.* penalty attaches.

No alteration of an assessment is to be made, unless the party verify his grounds of reduction to the satisfaction of the commissioners, and give a true list, also verified, of all that he is chargeable with. The surveyor or inspector may attend to support the assessment.

No person in the law is allowed to plead on behalf of another person before the commissioners; whose determination is final, except where the party shall demand that a case shall be stated for the opinion of a judge.

Distress for Taxes.—Collectors having allowed a reasonable time to elapse after making a formal demand for the taxes, may distrain by the 43 Geo. III. c. 99, § 34; but if they do not allow such reasonable time, they may be liable to an action of trespass.¹ And by 48 Geo. III. c. 141, No. V., Rule 6, if a collector advance the money to pay the taxes for the party liable, he may distrain in like manner within six months, though not afterwards. The distress is to be kept four days; and if the taxes are not then paid, the things distrained are to be sold.

The collector, having a warrant from the commissioners, and a constable with him, may break open the house, in the day-time, if admission is refused; and if sufficient property cannot be found, the party may be committed to prison. If parties remove to another district, leaving taxes unpaid in their former district, the commissioners of the district where the taxes are due certify the same to the commissioners of the place where they remove to, and the latter are empowered to distrain on them there.

A distress for taxes has precedence over all other kinds of execution, unless the party issuing the latter process pay one year's taxes, if so much is due. Landlords are, however, excepted, whose distress for rent is good for one year's arrear. It seems that for arrears of taxes on houses or windows the goods of any person on the premises may be taken; but on horses, carriages, dogs, and others mentioned in Schedule C to K, only the goods of the person can be taken, except in the instances specially provided for.

Additional 10 per Cent.—By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 17, an addition of 10 per cent, or 2*s.* for every 20*s.*, is made to all assessments of the duties under the following Schedules from the 6th April, 1840.

¹ Gibbs v. Stead, 8 Barn. & C. 528.

I.—WINDOWS. (SCHEDULE A.)

For every dwelling-house, of the value of 5 l. per annum or upwards, containing seven and not more than eight windows or lights												£. s. d.
												0 16 6
Windows.	L.	s.	d.	Windows.	L.	s.	d.	Windows.	L.	s.	d.	Windows.
9	1	1	0	23	6	17	6	37	12	15	3	90 to 94	26	12	3
10	1	8	0	24	7	5	9	38	13	3	6	95 - 99	27	14	9
11	1	16	3	25	7	14	3	39	13	12	0	100 - 109	29	8	6
12	2	4	9	26	8	2	9	40 to 44	14	8	9	110 - 119	31	13	3
13	2	13	3	27	8	11	0	45 - 49	15	16	9	120 - 129	33	18	3
14	3	1	9	28	8	19	6	50 - 54	17	5	0	130 - 139	36	3	0
15	3	10	0	29	9	8	0	55 - 59	18	3	0	140 - 149	38	8	0
16	3	18	6	30	9	16	3	60 - 64	19	17	9	150 - 159	40	12	9
17	4	7	0	31	10	4	9	65 - 69	21	0	3	160 - 169	42	17	9
18	4	15	3	32	10	13	3	70 - 74	22	2	6	170 - 179	45	2	6
19	5	3	9	33	11	1	6	75 - 79	23	5	0	180	46	11	3
20	5	12	3	34	11	10	0	80 - 84	24	7	6	And for every window
21	6	0	6	35	11	18	3	85 - 89	25	10	0	above 180, ls. 6 d.
22	6	9	0	36	12	6	9

RULES FOR CHARGING THE DUTIES ON WINDOWS.

All exterior windows, however constructed, are chargeable; as are all skylights, and windows in staircases, garrets, cellars, passages, and all other parts of dwelling-houses; also every window in any kitchen, cellar, scullery, buttery, pantry, larder, wash-house, laundry, bakehouse, brewhouse, and lodging room, belonging to any dwelling-house, whether within or contiguous to or disjoined from the body of the house.

Every window extending so far as to give light into more rooms, landings, or stories than one, is charged separate. When a partition or division between two or more windows fixed in one frame is of the breadth of twelve inches, the window on each side is charged as a distinct window.

Every window which, including the frame, partitions, and divisions thereof, by admeasurement of the whole space on the aperture of the wall of the house on the outside, exceeds in height 12 feet, or in breadth 4 feet 9 inches, is chargeable as two windows; except—1. Windows which are not more than 3 feet 6 inches in height, although above 4 feet 9 inches in breadth; 2. Windows which were made of greater dimensions previous to the 5th of April, 1785; 3. Windows in shops, workshops, and warehouses employed solely for the purpose of trade or as warehouses, provided no person dwells in the same; 4. Windows in the coffee-room, tap-room, or other public room of any house licensed to sell wine, ale, &c.; and, 5. Windows or lights in farm-houses or dwelling houses exempt from the inhabited house duty.—If the windows in any dwelling-house cannot be conveniently numbered or measured without passing through such house, the assessors are authorized to pass through the house, and externally to view and measure the windows; and in case of any dispute, the proof lies with the occupier.

The duties are charged yearly, from the 5th of April, upon the occupier.

Where any change in the occupation takes place after the assessment is made for the year, the duties are to be paid by the occupier, landlord, or owner for the time being. But where a tenant quits on the termination of a lease or demise, and has given notice to the assessor, the duty is discharged for each entire quarter that the house remains unoccupied. Any house from which the occupier has bona fide removed, and which is wholly unfurnished at the time of making the assessment, is to be considered as unoccupied, although left in the care of a person; but if such house becomes occupied within the year of assessment, it is to be charged for such part of the year during which it may be occupied.

Where any dwelling house is let in different apartments, the landlord or owner is deemed the occupier; but if he do not reside within the limits of the collector, the duties may be levied on the occupier, who is to be allowed the same out of the rent.

Every house left to the care of a servant is chargeable as if inhabited by the owner.

Chambers in inns of court, universities, or public hospitals, are liable as an entire house; and if containing less than seven windows are chargeable at the rate of 1s. 9*d.* per window.

Every tenement of a house divided into different tenements, is chargeable as an entire house; and if containing less than seven windows, at the rate of 1s. 9*d.* for each window.

No window is exempt from duty by reason of its being stopped up, unless it be effectually done with the same materials as the outside wall chiefly consists of. Nor is any window to be opened or made, or stopped up, unless six days notice is given to the surveyor.

If any window is opened after the commencement of the year's assessment, and notice thereof is given to the assessor, the duty for such window is only to be charged for the remainder of the year, commencing from the end of the quarter preceding the opening of the window; but in default of notice being given to the assessor, the duty is charged for the whole of the year.

EXEMPTIONS FROM THE DUTIES ON WINDOWS.

Houses belonging to her majesty or any of the royal family; and public offices.

Hospitals, charity schools, and poor-houses, except such apartments as are occupied by the officers or servants; and any room of a dwelling-house licensed for divine worship, and used for no other purpose. Where an exemption is claimed in respect of hospitals, charity schools, poor-houses, or licensed chapels, notice must be given, under the 43 Geo. III. c. 161, § 17.

Every farm-house bona fide used for the purposes of husbandry only, and occupied by the tenant of a farm at rack-rent of less than 200*l.* a year, or by a person occupying an estate on any other tenure than as tenant at rack-rent, or occupying any such other estate and also a farm at rack-rent, the value of the whole being less than equivalent to a farm at the rack-rent of 200*l.* a year (reckoning the value of every estate occupied on any other tenure as equivalent to double the amount of the hire at rack-rent), is exempt from the duties on windows, provided the occupier does not derive an income exceeding 100*l.* a year from any other source.—4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 73, § 2.

The windows in any dairy or cheese-room belonging to and occupied with any dwelling-house, provided the windows are made with splines or wooden laths, or iron bars or wires, and wholly without glass, and the words Dairy or Cheese-Room are painted on the outer door, and on the outside of the windows, in large Roman letters. And by 57 Geo. III. c. 23, one glazed window or light in every dairy in a farm-house. And by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 7, one glazed window or light shall be allowed in any cheese-room distinct from such dairy; but the exemption shall not be claimed for more than two such windows in any one farm-house.

Windows in any room used wholly for the purpose of carrying on any manufacture, and not having any internal communication with the dwelling-house, although adjoining thereto.—56 Geo. III. c. 101.

Windows in any shop or warehouse (not exceeding three) in the front and on the basement story of a dwelling-house occupied by any person in trade who shall expose to sale any goods or merchandize. 4 Geo. IV. c. 11.

Tenements, though formerly occupied as dwelling houses, are not to be charged when used for the purposes of trade only, or as warehouses or shops or counting-houses, no person dwelling therein except in the day-time, and the owner having a distinct place of residence. But all such tenements must be brought into the assessment of the current year, although discharged for the preceding year; and persons claiming relief must give notice to the assessor, who, on request made, shall be admitted in the day time, to inspect such tenements.—57 Geo. III. c. 25, § 1, 7.

Mills, places of manufacture, or warehouses not attached to a dwelling-house, are not liable, though a servant is appointed to watch and guard the same in the night time, provided such servant be named in a licence to be obtained from the commissioners of the district.—Id. § 4.

Poor persons occupying houses containing more than seven windows may claim exemption from payment of the duties on giving notice in writing to the assessors, stating their poverty, and annexing a certificate of inability from the minister or overseers or churchwardens &c.

II.—HOUSES. (SCHEDULE B.)

These duties were repealed by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 19, from 5th April, 1834.

III.—MALE SERVANTS. (SCHEDULE C.)

						£.	s.	d.
For 1	Servant	.	.	1	4	0
2	ditto	.	each	1	11	0
3	ditto	.	.	1	18	0
4	ditto	.	"	2	3	6
5	ditto	.	"	2	9	0
6	ditto	.	"	2	11	6
For 7	Servants	.	each	2	12	6
8	ditto	.	"	2	16	0
9	ditto	.	"	3	1	1
10	ditto	.	"	3	6	6
11	ditto and above	.	"	3	16	6

Bachelors pay 1*l.* additional for each Servant.

For every Male person (not being a Servant) employed in any of the capacities mentioned in Schedule C, No. 1, if the employer be otherwise chargeable to the duties on Servants, or for a Carriage, or for more than one Horse . . . 1 4 0

--- But if not so chargeable . . . 0 10 0

For every Gardener, where the constant labour of one is necessary . . . 1 4 0

For every Waiter in any tavern, coffee-house, inn, ale-house, hotel, or eating-house (except occasional waiters) . . . 1 10 0

For every Servant kept by a Stable-keeper to look after race or running horses . . . 1 0 0

For every person employed as an Under-keeper under a Game-keeper . . . 0 10 0

For every Coachman, Groom, &c. kept to be let to hire for less than one year . . . 1 5 0

(The duty is paid by the person letting to hire; but if the person hiring do not make a return thereof, then the progressive duty payable on servants shall be charged in respect of every such servant on the person hiring and making default, according to the number of servants retained by him, and he shall also forfeit for such default 50*l.*)

EXEMPTIONS FROM THE DUTIES ON MALE SERVANTS

Butlers, manciples, cooks, gardeners, or porters employed by any of the Royal Family, or in either University, or in the colleges of Westminster, Eton, or Winchester, or in Christ's Hospital, St. Bartholomew's, Guy's, St. Thomas's, Bridewell, Bethlehem, or the Foundling.

Servants employed in any trade, manufacture, or calling, or in husbandry, to earn a livelihood or profit, and not in any capacity already chargeable.

Riders or travellers, clerks, book-keepers or office-keepers,—stewards, bailiffs, overseers, or managers, and clerks under stewards, bailiffs, overseers, or managers,—shopmen, warehousemen, porters, or cellarmen,—and grooms, stable boys, or helpers in the stables, solely employed in their respective occupations by any livery stable keeper, horse-dealer, postmaster or other person licensed to let post-horses or carriages for hire.—3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 30. And where any licensed victualler as in the acts described employs one male person only bona fide and generally to carry out beer, ale, or other liquors to customers, such person shall be considered a porter hereby exempt from duty, although employed occasionally to wait on the guests.

Waiters and helpers in the stables of persons licensed to sell ale, wine, or other liquors by retail, or of stage-coach proprietors.

Drivers employed by any person duly licensed to let horses for hire, whether licensed as an hackneyer or not.—6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 63.

Servants being the sons of the master, under 21 years of age.—11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. c. 35. The duties on Stage Coachmen and Guards were repealed by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 30, from 5th April, 1842.

Any male servant under the age of eighteen employed by a person residing in the parish or place in which such servant has a legal settlement, provided the exemption be duly claimed.—4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 73.

Roman Catholic clergymen who have taken and subscribed the oaths and declarations required by law, are exempt from the additional charge as bachelors, provided the exemption be duly claimed.—4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 73, § 4.

Officers serving in any regiment of horse or dragoons, or in any regiment of artillery, infantry, royal marines, royal garrison battalion, or corps of engineers, for so many servants (being soldiers in the same regiment) as may be allowed by the regulations of the service, in whatever capacity employed, and without regard to any other servants kept by them; provided all such servant be returned and the exemption duly claimed. 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 84. And this exemption is extended by 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 65, to general officers and officers of the staff.

Officers of the navy, of whatever rank, in actual employ, for any number of servants borne upon the ship's books, in whatever capacity employed, and without regard to any other servants kept by them; provided all such servants be returned and the exemption duly claimed.—5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 64.

Disabled officers on half-pay may keep one servant duty free.

Under Gamekeepers are not to be assessed as additional servants, but to be charged at 10s. each per annum.

IV.—CARRIAGES. (SCHEDULE D.)

CARRIAGES WITH FOUR WHEELS.

For 1 Carriage	6 0 0	For 6 Carriages	each £8 4 0
2 ditto	6 10 0	7 ditto	" 8 10 0
3 ditto	7 0 0	8 ditto	" 8 16 0
4 ditto	7 10 0	9 ditto and upwards	" 9 1 6
5 ditto	7 17 6

And for every additional body used on the same carriage or wheels 3 3 0

For every Carriage with four wheels, each of less diameter than 30 inches, drawn by ponies or mules between twelve and thirteen hands high (11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. c. 35) 3 5 0

For every Carriage with four wheels, drawn by one horse, &c. 4 10 0

For every Coach, Diligence, Chaise, &c. with four wheels or more, used as a public Stage Coach 5 5 0

For every four-wheel Carriage kept for letting to hire for a period less than a year, so that the Stamp Office duty is not payable at such letting 6 0 0

--- If drawn by one horse only (6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 65) 4 10 0

For every Carriage with two or more wheels kept for the purpose of being let for hire by a person duly licensed to let post-horses, and solely used so that the post-horse duty is payable in respect of the horses used therewith (3 & 4 Vict. c. 71) 3 0 0

For Common Carriers' Carts, although sometimes carrying passengers, but not paying the stamp office duty 2 10 0

--- If less than four wheels (11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. c. 35) 1 5 0

CARRIAGES WITH LESS THAN FOUR WHEELS.

For every Carriage with two wheels, whether kept for a person's use or to be let out to hire, if drawn by one horse 3 5 0

--- If drawn by two or more horses 4 10 0

And for every additional body used on the same carriage or wheels 1 11 6

EXEMPTIONS.

Carriages of the Royal Family; hackney coaches duly licensed; carriages kept by any maker of carriages for sale or for being lent to any person during the time such person's carriage of the same description is under repair, and not employed for his own use, or let to hire, or lent otherwise than as aforesaid.

Carriages with four wheels of less diameter than 30 inches, or with three wheels, and drawn by ponies or mules under twelve hands high, or oxen or asses, if built according to the regulations prescribed for taxed carts, and not exceeding the value of 15*l*. and without springs.

Carriages with less than four wheels, each of less diameter than 30 inches, kept by a person for his own use and not for hire, and drawn by a pony or mule not exceeding 12 hands in height. 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. c. 35.

Carriages with less than four wheels, kept by any person for his own use, and not for hire or profit (except for the conveyance of prisoners or paupers, as hereinafter mentioned), and drawn by one horse, mare, gelding, or mule only, and not otherwise, whatever may be the form or construction of such carriage, or the materials with which the same shall be built or fitted up, provided the price or value of such carriage, together with the cushions and every other thing used therewith or belonging thereto, shall not exceed the sum of 21*l*.; and provided also that such carriage shall have the christian and surname and place of abode and occupation or calling of the owner and of every owner thereof painted in words at length, and in legible and conspicuous Roman letters, two inches at least in height and of a proper and proportionate breadth, in one or more straight lines, in white upon a black ground or in black upon a white ground, on a plain and even surface, on the outside of such carriage, that is to say, upon the back part of the body; or if there be no back part, then upon the panel on the right or off-side of the body; or if there be no panel, then upon some other conspicuous part of the side; or if there be no side, then upon the outer part of the right off-side shaft; and in such plain and conspicuous manner that the same shall be at all times visible and legible.—6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 65.

* By 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 61, it is sufficient if the letters be one inch in height.

Carriages with less than four wheels, built wholly of wood and iron, with springs (wholly or in part of metal), without any other than a tilted covering, and without any lining, apron, or cushion, and with the seat fixed or suspended by slings or braces, such carriage not being on any occasion let or used for hire or profit, but kept as a common stage cart, and used without fraud in the affairs of husbandry, or in the carriage of goods, or in the course of trade, although used occasionally for the purpose of riding therein; provided every such Common Stage Cart have the christian and surname, residence and occupation or calling of the owner, and also the words "Common Stage Cart," painted thereon in the manner hereinbefore prescribed.

V.—HORSES, &c. (SCHEDULES E & F.)

For 1 Horse	£.	s.	d.	For 11 Horses	£.	s.	d.
2 do. each	1	8	9	12 do. each	3	3	6
3 do. "	2	7	3	13 do. "	3	3	6
4 do. "	2	12	3	14 do. "	3	3	9
5 do. "	2	15	0	15 do. "	3	3	9
6 do. "	2	15	9	16 do. "	3	3	9
7 do. "	2	18	0	17 do. "	3	4	0
8 do. "	2	19	9	18 do. "	3	4	6
9 do. "	3	0	9	19 do. "	3	5	0
10 do. "	3	3	6	20 do. and upwards	3	6	0

(The duties are to be paid annually for every horse used on any occasion for riding or for drawing any carriage for which duty is payable, or hired by the year or any longer period, and to be paid by the person using the same, except as after mentioned.)

For every Horse, Mare, or Gelding kept for racing or running for any plate, prize, or sum of money, whether in the stable of the proprietor or other person (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 64) 3 10 0

(To be paid by the person having the charge thereof, in lieu of the several duties of 2*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* charged by the 44 Geo. III. c. 98, and of 1*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.* by the 48 Geo. III. c. 55, and 52 Geo. III. c. 93.)—5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 64.

Horses let to hire for riding or drawing any carriage, for any period short of a year, in any manner so that the Stamp Office duty is not payable 1 8 9
(Which duty is chargeable on the person letting the same.)

Horses or Mules used for riding or drawing, 13 hands high (4 inches to a hand) 1 1 0

Horses or Mules for labour, 13 hands high 0 10 6

One horse used by a Butcher wholly in his trade 1 8 9

—Where two only are kept, for the second 0 10 6

One Horse used by a Bailiff on a farm 1 5 0

For every other Horse not kept for the purpose of riding or of drawing carriages, of the height of 13 hands, and for every mule, except for husbandry 0 10 6

Carriers' and Waggoners' horses, not exceeding 13 hands high, are charged with the same duty as draught horses.

EXEMPTIONS.

Horses belonging to any of the Royal Family; post and stage-coach horses liable to posting duties; and horses kept by horse-dealers for sale.

Horses of market gardeners, and mares kept for breeding, are also exempt.

Horses kept by poor persons discharged from house duties; by clergymen whose preferments do not produce more than 60*l.* per annum; by volunteer commanding officers; or by the privates or officers of volunteer cavalry, or of the cavalry or artillery of the line.

Horses bona fide kept for the purposes of husbandry, or for drawing any carriage not liable to duty, although used when going to or returning from any place with a load; or for riding to procure medical assistance—to or from market—to or from any place of public worship—to or from an election for a member of parliament—to or from any court of justice—or any meeting of Commissioners of Taxes, although occasionally used for other purposes in drawing burthens, and although occasionally used by the owner or let for the purpose of drawing for hire or profit, provided they be not used for drawing any carriage chargeable with duty.—4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 73, § 7.

And any person keeping any horse &c. bona fide for the purpose of husbandry, may use such horse &c. in drawing any carriage of the description of a taxed cart or common stage cart kept by such person for his own use, and built in such manner as to be exempt from duty, without being chargeable with duty.

Any person occupying a farm or estate of less value than 500*l.* a year (estimated in the manner directed with regard to the exemption from window duties) and obtaining his livelihood principally by husbandry on such farm or estate, is exempt from the duty for one horse kept for the purpose of riding, or of drawing any carriage not chargeable with duty; provided he do not keep more than one which would otherwise be chargeable, and do not derive any profit or income exceeding 100*l.* a year from any other source, and the exemption be duly claimed.—4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 73, § 6; and 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 64, § 16.

Any rector, vicar, or curate actually doing duty in the church or chapel of which he is rector &c.; any Roman Catholic priest having taken and subscribed the oaths and declarations required by law; and any teacher or preacher of a separate congregation of Protestant Dissenters, whose place of meeting is duly registered, having taken and subscribed the oaths and declarations required by law, and not following any secular occupation except that of a schoolmaster, are respectively exempt from the duties for one horse kept for the purpose of riding, or of drawing any carriage not chargeable with duty; provided he be not possessed of an income of 120*l.* per annum, and do not keep more than one horse which would otherwise be chargeable, and the exemption be duly claimed.—4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 73, § 5.

A postmaster or innkeeper licensed to let horses to hire is not chargeable in respect of horses bona fide kept for the purpose of being let to hire by reason of their being also used by him for the purpose of husbandry, or for drawing fuel to his dwelling-house, or manure, or hay, straw, corn, or fodder, to or from his stables or premises.—4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 73, § 8.

The duty is not chargeable in respect of one horse bona fide kept and usually employed by any bailiff upon the concerns of any farms with which he may be entrusted, and also in respect of one horse bona fide kept and employed by any shepherd or herdsman solely in tending sheep or cattle; provided these exemptions be duly claimed.—4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 73, § 9.

VI.—DOGS. (SCHEDULE G.)

	£.	s.	d.
For every greyhound kept by any person, whether his property or not	1	0	0
For every hound, pointer, setting-dog, spaniel, terrier, or other dog of whatever denomination (except greyhounds), where more than one dog is kept, whether for his own use or any other person's	0	14	0
Where one dog only is kept, of any denomination, except greyhounds, whether for his own use or another person's	0	8	0
(Which duty is to be paid by the person keeping such dogs.)

EXEMPTIONS.—Dogs belonging to her Majesty or the Royal Family.

Persons discharged from the duty on houses on account of poverty may keep one dog, not being a greyhound, hound, pointer, setting dog, spaniel, lurcher, or terrier.

Whelps not six months old at the time of returning the list are exempt.

Dogs wholly used in the care of sheep or cattle; provided they be not a greyhound, pointer, setting dog, spaniel, lurcher, or terrier, and the exemption be duly claimed.—1 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 73 § 10.

Any person may compound for any number of hounds kept by him for any year, on payment of the sum of 3*l.* Where two or more persons join to keep such hounds, and do not compound, they are chargeable for each hound.

VII.—HORSE DEALERS. (SCHEDULE H.)

Any person exercising the business of a Horse-dealer in London, Westminster and its liberties, the parishes of St. Mary-le-bone and St. Pancras, the weekly bills of mortality, or the borough of Southwark	25	0	0
- - - In any other part of Great Britain	12	10	0

EXEMPTIONS.—Persons selling horses bred by them are not deemed horse-dealers.

VIII.—HAIR POWDER. (SCHEDULE I.)

Every person wearing hair powder	1	3	6
----------------------------------	---	---	---

EXEMPTIONS.—The Royal Family; naval and military officers, soldiers, volunteers; and clergy men whose income is under 100*l.* per annum.

IX.—ARMORIAL BEARINGS. (SCHEDULE K.)

Persons using armorial bearings and keeping a coach or other taxable carriage...	2	8	0
Persons not keeping such carriage but chargeable to the house or window duty...	1	4	0
Persons not keeping such carriage nor chargeable to the house or window duty...	0	12	0

EXEMPTIONS.—The Royal Family; and public officers in respect of the insignia of office.

X.—GAME DUTIES. (SCHEDULE L.)

For every Gamekeeper otherwise charged as a servant	1	5	6
For every Gamekeeper not otherwise charged, and every other person	3	13	6
For every Game-dealing licence (not to be paid by those having a 3 l. 13 s. 6 d. sporting licence)	2	2	0

EXEMPTIONS.—The Royal Family. A gamekeeper may be appointed by the lord of a manor to kill game on the manor for his own use, or for the use of any other person specified in his appointment, and not for the use of the lord, without being chargeable with duty either as a gamekeeper or a male servant. 1 Wm. IV. c. 36.

Persons taking or killing game without having taken out a certificate are liable to double duty.—6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 65, § 8.

NOTE.—An additional 10 per cent is added to all assessments under the foregoing Schedules by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 17, from the 6th April, 1840; which additional duty is to be computed on the total amount; but no fraction of a penny to be charged.

PROPERTY AND INCOME TAX.

By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, the following duties are imposed upon the annual profits arising from property, professions, trades, and offices; being, in effect, a tax of sevenpence in the pound upon all incomes, amounting to 150*l.* or upwards, in Great Britain, from whatever source arising. These duties commenced from the 5th of April, 1842, charged under separate schedules, according to the source from whence the income is derived.¹

SCHEDULE A.

For all lands, tenements, and hereditaments or heritages, in Great Britain, there shall be charged yearly, in respect of the PROPERTY thereof, for every 20*s.* of the annual value, the sum of sevenpence.

The duties under this schedule are assessed upon and payable in the first instance by the occupier or tenant, who is authorized to deduct the same from his rent, or so much thereof as a rate of 7*d.* for every 20*s.* of rent payable by him to his landlord amounts to, all sums allowed by the commissioners being first deducted; and the landlord, in like manner, is entitled to deduct 7*d.* in the pound from any rent-charge, annuity, fee-farm rent, rent-service, quit rent, feu duty, teind duty, stipend to licensed curates, or other rent or annual payment reserved or charged upon the land &c., which is paid by him. So, the occupier of lands, who is charged with the duty on any composition, rent, or payment for tithes, is entitled to deduct the amount from such composition &c., on paying the same.

But for a dwelling house which with the offices &c. is under the annual value of 10*l.*, and also for lands and tenements let for a less period than a year, the assessment is to be made on the landlord, but so as not to impeach the remedy of recovery from the occupier in default of payment by the landlord. So the duty on any house or tenement occupied by a minister of a foreign state is to be paid by the landlord.

Where a house is divided into distinct properties, and occupied by distinct owners or their respective tenants, such properties are chargeable separately.

The duties are to be assessed on all lands, tenements, and hereditaments, whether occupied at the time of assessment or not; and where lands charged to the duties in this schedule are unoccupied, and no distress can be found, the collector may at any time afterwards enter upon them when there shall be any distress, and seize and sell the same. But the duties are not to be levied on any house for the time it shall have been unoccupied.

GENERAL RULE for estimating the Annual Value.—The annual value of lands, tenements, and hereditaments is the rent by the year at which the same are let at rack rent, if the amount has been settled by agreement within the last seven years; but if not so let at rack rent, then at the rack rent at which the same are worth to be let by the year. This rule extends to all lands, tenements, and hereditaments capable of actual occupation, of whatever nature, and for whatever purpose occupied or enjoyed, except the following:—

1. Tithes, if taken in kind, to be charged on an average of the three preceding years.
2. All dues and money payments in right of the church or by endowment, or in lieu of tithes (not being tithes arising from land), on the like average.
3. Tithes arising from land if compounded for, and all rents and other money payments in lieu thereof (except rent-charges under the Tithes Commutation Act), on the amount for one year preceding.

The duty in each of these cases to be charged on the person entitled to such tithes or payments, or his lessee or tenant, agent or factor. But for compositions, rents, or other payments in lieu of tithes, the assessment may be made, if the commissioners think fit, on the occupiers of the lands from which such tithes arise, or on the persons liable to the payment of such compositions, rents, &c.

4. Manors and other royalties (including all dues, services, or other casual profits), on an average of the seven preceding years. To be charged on the lord of the manor or person renting the same.

5. Fines upon leases (not being parcel of a manor or royalty demisable by custom) on the amount received within the last year. But if any part has been invested as productive capital, on which a profit will arise otherwise chargeable for the year in which the assessment is made, the commissioners may discharge such part from the assessment.

6. All other profits from lands, tenements, and hereditaments not in the actual occupation of the party to be charged, on such a fair average as the commissioners shall, on the statement of such party, judge proper. To be charged on the receivers of such profits, or the persons entitled thereto.

7. Quarries of stone, slate, limestone, or chalk, on the amount of profits of the preceding year.

8. Mines of coal, tin, lead, copper, mundic, iron, &c., on an average of five preceding years.

9. Iron works, gas works, salt springs or works, alum mines or works, water-works, streams of water, canals, inland navigations, docks, drains and levels, fishings, rights of markets and fairs, tolls, railways and other ways, bridges, ferries, and other concerns of the like nature from or arising out of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, on the profits of the year preceding.

The duties in each of the last three cases to be charged on the person, corporation, or company carrying on the concern, or their officers having the management thereof, before paying the proceeds to the different members, or to the owner of the soil or property, or to any creditor having any claim thereon. And the charge is to be made on the said profits exclusively of any lands used or occupied in or about the concern.

¹ This tax was originally imposed for a period of three years only; but by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 4, it is continued for a further term of three years.

Though the computation of duty in respect of a mine is to be made in one sum, yet any adventurer therein may claim to be charged separately, and may set off his loss in one concern against his profits in other concerns of the like nature.

DEDUCTIONS AND ALLOWANCES.—1. For the amount of tenths and first-fruits, duties, and fees on presentations, paid by any ecclesiastical person within the year preceding. 2. For procurations and synodals paid by ecclesiastical persons, on an average of seven years preceding. 3. For repairs of collegiate churches and chapels, and chancels of churches, or of any college or hall in any of the universities of Great Britain, by any ecclesiastical or collegiate body, rector, vicar, or other person bound to repair the same, on an average of 21 years preceding. 4. For the parochial rates, taxes, and assessments upon any rent-charge under the Tithes Commutation Act, upon the amount paid in the year preceding. 5. For the amount of the land tax, where the same shall not have been redeemed. 6. For the amount charged on lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages, by a public rate or assessment in respect of draining, fencing, or embanking the same. These deductions are not to be allowed in any case where they are paid by the tenant.

Allowances are also granted for the duties charged on colleges and halls in the universities, in respect of the public buildings and offices not occupied by any individual member, or any person paying rent for them; on hospitals, public schools, alms-houses, and also on the lands, tenements, hereditaments, &c. belonging to any hospital, public school, or almshouse, or vested in trustees for charitable objects, so far as the same are applied to charitable purposes.

SCHEDULE B.

For all lands, tenements, and hereditaments, in England, there shall be charged yearly, in respect of the OCCUPATION thereof, for every 20s. of the annual value thereof, the sum of threepence-halfpenny.

For all lands, tenements, and heritages in Scotland, there shall be charged yearly, in respect of the OCCUPATION thereof, for every 20s. of the annual value thereof, the sum of twopence-halfpenny.

These duties are charged, in addition to those under Schedule A, on all the properties directed to be charged to the said duties, according to the General Rule before mentioned, on the full amount of the annual value, EXCEPT dwelling-houses with the domestic offices thereto belonging, when such dwelling-houses are not occupied with a farm of lands or of tithes, and EXCEPT warehouses or other buildings occupied for the purpose of carrying on a profession or trade.

This schedule is intended to charge the incomes of all who derive profits from the occupation of lands &c., and is made upon the supposition that the profits arising therefrom amount on an average in England to one half, and in Scotland to about one third of the rent, supposing the lands to be liable to tithes, and the tenant to pay all parochial rates, taxes, and assessments.

When, therefore, the lands are tithe-free, or are subject to a rent-charge under the Tithes Commutation Act payable by the landlord, as it is presumed the tenant pays a higher rent in consequence, a deduction of one-eighth of the duty is allowed. So when the landlord pays any rates, taxes, or assessments which are usually a charge upon the occupier, or any composition for tithes, the annual value is to be computed exclusive of such rates, taxes, and assessments, or composition. If, on the other hand, the tenant pays any taxes chargeable by law on the landlord, such as land-tax &c., the amount thereof is to be added to the rent in ascertaining the value.

When the land is subject to a modus or composition real, and not subject to tithe, there shall be deducted from the duties so much as with the like rate on such modus or composition real, shall not exceed one-eighth part of such duties.

Where lands are subject to a modus or composition real in lieu of certain specific tithes, or are free from some and subject to other tithes, the value is to be taken at the rack rent for which the land would let if wholly free from tithe, and one-eighth of the duty is to be deducted, as in the case of tithe-free land.

Any person being lessee and occupier of tithes taken in kind, or being the occupier of the lands from whence they arise, and compounding for the same, is charged at the rate of 2d. for every 20s. of the annual value.

The profits from nurseries, market-gardens, and hop-grounds (except hop-grounds occupied with a farm, and not exceeding one-tenth part thereof), are charged according to the Rules in Schedule D, but are payable under this Schedule.

Cattle-dealers and milk-sellers are subject to an assessment according to the ordinary rule in Schedules A and B, and for a further charge in respect of the profits of their trade under Schedule D.

The commissioners are empowered to abate the assessment in case of loss by floods or tempests, both as respects the duty on the owner and on the occupier.

In case of any change of occupation, the duties are to be collected from the occupier for the time being; but the former tenant is liable for the arrears which accrued in his time, which are to be levied by the commissioners, and repaid by the tenant for the time being.

SCHEDULE C.

Upon all profits arising from annuities, dividends, and shares of annuities, payable to any person, body politic or corporate, company, or society, whether corporate or not corporate, out of any public revenue, there shall be charged yearly, for every 20s. of the annual amount thereof, the sum of seven-pence, without deduction.

The duty is deducted from all dividends payable after the 5th April 1842, except when the half-yearly payment does not amount to 50s. in which case it is to be accounted for under Schedule D.

It extends to all public annuities whatever payable in Great Britain, and to all annuities payable in Ireland out of the revenue of the United Kingdom to or for the use or benefit of any person not resident in Ireland. And no person (other than a member of parliament entitled to be exempted from the assessed taxes) shall be deemed to be resident in Ireland who has been absent for a period equal to six months, either at one or several times, during the year immediately preceding the day on which such dividends are payable.

EXEMPTIONS.—The stock or dividends belonging to her majesty, any accredited minister of a foreign state, commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, friendly societies established under act of parliament (provided the sum assured to any individual does not exceed 30% of the amount of annuity 30%), savings banks, charitable institutions, British Museum, or funds applicable to the repairs of places of worship or colleges, are exempted.

Claims for exemption must be made in writing to the Commissioners for Special Purposes, at the Head Office for Stamps, verified upon oath in such form as they shall direct; who will grant an order for repayment upon the receiver general of stamps and taxes, an officer for receipt, or collector for taxes, or a distributor or sub-distributor of stamps, as may be most convenient to the party.

Any person making a fraudulent claim is liable to a penalty of 100% and treble duty.

SCHEDULE D.

Upon the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to any person residing in Great Britain, from any kind of property whatever, whether situate in Great Britain or elsewhere, there shall be charged yearly, for every 20s. of the amount of such profits or gains, the sum of seven-pence;

And upon the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to any person residing in Great Britain, from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation, whether the same shall be respectively carried on in Great Britain or elsewhere, there shall be charged yearly, for every 20s. of the amount of such profits or gains, the sum of seven-pence.

And upon the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to any person whatever, whether a subject of her majesty or not, although not resident within Great Britain, from any property whatever in Great Britain, or any profession, trade, employment, or vocation exercised within Great Britain, there shall be charged yearly, for every 20s. of the amount of such profits or gains, the sum of seven-pence.

This schedule extends to every description of property or profits, and to every employment of profit, not contained in either of the other schedules, and not specially exempted; among others, to all dividends arising from sources chargeable under Schedule C, when the half-yearly payment does not amount to 50s.

It extends to all trades, professions, employments, or vocations carried on or exercised in Great Britain or elsewhere by persons residing in Great Britain, or carried on or exercised in Great Britain by any persons (whether subjects of her majesty or not) although not resident in Great Britain; and to every art, mystery, adventure, or concern carried on by them respectively; except such adventures or concerns on or about lands, tenements, or hereditaments as, we have seen, are chargeable under Schedule A, namely, quarries of stone, limestone, slate, or chalk, coal mines and other mines, iron-works, gas-works, salt-works, water-works, canals, docks, &c., right of markets, fairs, tolls, railways, &c.

The balance of the profits of trade or manufacture is to be returned at the place where it is carried on, on an average of three years preceding; or if set up within three years, on an average from the period of commencing the same.

In estimating the profits and gains in trade, deductions are allowed for repairs of premises, for supply or repairs of implements, utensils, or articles employed, not exceeding the sum usually employed for such purposes, according to an average of three years;—for bad debts only, or such part thereof as shall be proved to the satisfaction of the commissioners to be such;—for any average loss not exceeding the actual amount of loss after adjustment;—and for the rent or value of any dwelling-house or domestic offices used for the purposes of trade, a sum not exceeding two third parts of such rent.

But no deductions are allowed on account of loss not connected with or arising out of trade, &c.;—nor for any sums employed or intended to be employed as capital therein;—nor on account of capital withdrawn therefrom;—nor for any capital employed in the improvement of premises occupied for the purposes of trade;—nor on account or under pretence of any interest which might have been made on capital if laid out at interest;—nor on account of any annual interest, or any annuity or other annual payment payable out of such profits or gains;—nor for any sum recoverable under an insurance or contract of indemnity;—nor for any disbursements or expenses which shall not be money wholly and exclusively laid out for trade, &c.;—nor for any disbursements or expenses of maintenance of the parties, their families or establishments;—nor for any sum expended in any other domestic or private purposes distinct from the purposes of trade.

The computation of the duty is to be made exclusive of the profits of lands, tenements, and hereditaments occupied for the purpose of trade, profession, &c.

The profits on professions &c. are to be returned on the amount of the preceding year. The rules as to deductions are the same as in the case of trade profits, so far as they are applicable.

Persons carrying on two or more trades or concerns chargeable under this schedule may set off their loss in one concern against their profits in another.

The computation of duty in respect of any trade, profession, &c. carried on by two or more persons jointly, is to be made and stated jointly and in one sum, and separately from any other duty chargeable on the same persons, or either of them. The return is to be made by the principal or precedent acting partner, on behalf of himself and the other partners, whose names and residences are to be returned. But any partner may declare his share of the profits, in order to a separate assessment, for the purpose either of claiming an exemption from duty (as not having an income of £150 a year), or for the purpose of setting off his loss in any other concern chargeable under this schedule.

The profits on all securities bearing interest payable out of the public revenue (except dividends payable out of the public revenue, or the interest of East India Bonds, which are otherwise charged), and all discounts and interest of money, not being annual interest, payable by any person whatever, are to be returned on the full amount of profits and gains arising therefrom within the preceding year.

The returns of profits arising in any other manner than as above described, comprehending every possible source of profit, of whatever nature or kind, may either be formed on an average of years, if uncertain in their annual amount, or if certain in their annual amount, on the profits of the preceding year.

When the assessment for the first year has been duly certified, persons may compound for the remaining two years upon payment of an additional 5 per cent., and thus render further returns unnecessary, provided the contract of composition is entered into within one month after the assessment is fixed. Obtaining a compound by any false statement subjects the party to a penalty of 50%, and forfeiture of all sums paid under it.

Persons paying duties in advance (not less than half a year) are entitled to a discount at the rate of four per cent per annum.

When a person charged under this schedule shall prove to the satisfaction of the commissioners that his profits fell short of the sum at which he was assessed, the commissioners are empowered to amend the assessment for the current year, and to order repayment of the sums proved to their satisfaction to have been overpaid.

Assessments are also to be amended when persons die or cease to exercise any trade; provided, that if the trade or calling be still carried on, the same duties shall still be charged to the persons conducting it, subject only to deductions on account of any diminution of profits that shall be proved to have occurred.

Parties chargeable under Schedule D may, if they prefer it, have their duties assessed by the Special Commissioners instead of the commissioners of the district, by delivering a request to the assessor, with a sealed statement of their incomes, which will only be open to the inspection of the Special Commissioners and the surveyor of the district.

So appeals under the Schedule may be made to the Special Commissioners, by giving notice to the inspector, except in the case of claims for exemption by persons whose incomes are under £150 a year, which must be to the commissioners for the district. And where the parties appealing are dissatisfied with the decision of the Special Commissioners, they may require the latter to transmit the case to the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes, whose decision is final.

SCHEDULE E.

Upon every public office or employment of profit, and upon every annuity, pension, or stipend, payable by her majesty or out of the public revenue of the United Kingdom, except annuities before charged to the duties in Schedule C, for every twenty shillings of the annual amount thereof respectively, there shall be charged yearly the sum of seven-pence.

The duty is payable on all annuities, pensions, or stipends from any public office or employment of profit of a public nature in Great Britain, and for all salaries, fees, wages, perquisites, or profits whatsoever accruing by reason thereof, after deducting the amount of duties or other sums payable or chargeable on the same by virtue of any act of parliament, where the same have been really and bona fide paid and borne by the party to be charged.

GENERAL EXEMPTION.

Any person whose income in the whole is less than 150*l*. per annum is entitled to an exemption from the duties under this act, and to be repaid the amount of any deduction or payment which he shall have made out of any rent, annuity, interest, or other annual payment. In order to entitle him to this exemption, he must deliver to the assessor of the district, within the time limited for delivering in the lists, declarations, and statements required by the act, a notice of such claim for exemption, together with a declaration and statement (in a form provided by the commissioners) setting forth the separate sources of his income, with the particular amount derived from each, and including all annual interests or other payments charged thereon, by which such income is diminished, and also a statement of the sums which the party is entitled to deduct and retain from any other person on account of duty. This statement is transmitted by the assessor to the commissioners, and is open to the inspectors and surveyors, who are to have forty days to examine and object to it; after which, if no objection be made, the commissioners may allow the exemption, and discharge the assessment made on any property of the party within their district; and, upon their certifying the facts to the Commissioners for Stamps and Taxes, they will direct the assessment upon such party in any other district to be discharged; and also, upon their certifying to the Commissioners for Special Purposes that such party has actually paid any duty by way of deduction from any rent, interest, dividend, or other payment, the last-named commissioners will give the party an order entitling him to a re-payment of the amount so paid or deducted upon the Receiver General of Stamps and Taxes, or an officer of receipt or collector of the duties, or a distributor or sub-distributor of stamps.

Appeals are heard and determined against claims for exemption by the Commissioners for General Purposes in the same manner as other appeals. For making fraudulent claims of exemption, a penalty of 50*l*. is imposed.

The claim is to be made where the claimant resides, except in cases of offices, pensions, and stipends, when the claim is to be made before the commissioners of the department.

Persons residing out of Great Britain may claim exemption by affidavit. Claims of exemption may also be made by agents or trustees on account of others.

CHAPTER V.

Of Subordinate Magistrates.

SHERIFF.

THE sheriff is said formerly to have been the deputy of the earl (to whose care a county was entrusted), to act in his stead when the earl had occasion to go elsewhere in his attendance on the sovereign. But although the sheriff is still styled vice-comes, or deputy of the earl, yet his authority and all he does are now immediately from and under the crown, and not from or under the earl.¹

The sheriff is the conservator of the queen's peace in the county for which he is appointed, and has various powers in respect thereof. He may imprison breakers of the peace, and bind persons in recognizance to keep it; he must pursue and (if possible) take all traitors, murderers, felons, and rioters; he has the keeping of the county gaol; and in order to keep the peace, he may summon what is called the posse comitatûs, that is, all persons in the county above fifteen years old and of less degree than a peer, who are bound to attend him under pain of fine and imprisonment.

He is bound to execute in the county all writs of the superior courts directed to him: he must serve the writ, arrest, take bail, summon juries, and execute judgment. So in criminal matters, he must arrest and imprison, return the jury, is answerable for the safe custody of the prisoner, and must see to the execution of the sentence.

He hears, in the county court, all matters in dispute of and under the value of 40s.; has certain duties, as before-mentioned, in the election of members of parliament; and decides on the election of coroners and verderors.

He has generally no power out of his own county; but, on habeas corpus, he may bring up a prisoner to a superior court through intermediate counties, and, on an involuntary escape, he may retake the prisoner in another county. So there are certain mere ministerial acts which he may do out of the county.²

His qualification is, that he have sufficient land within the county to answer the queen and her people; but he need not reside in the county.³

No man is exempted at common law from serving this office, but may be by act of parliament or letters patent;⁴ as, by 42 Geo. III. c. 9, § 172, officers of the militia. But this exemption is now confined, by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 59, to such officers as were employed in actual service in the militia before the end of the war in 1815. An attorney is not capable of holding the office;⁵ and, after serving, a man is exempt for three years.⁶ A fine paid under 9 Geo. I. c. 9, to exempt, only extends to a year, unless there is an agreement extending it.⁷ A sheriff cannot be a justice of peace, or a member for the county.

¹ Watson's Sheriff, 1, 2; 5 Chitty's Burn. J. 493.

² Dalton, 23; Watson, 4, 6.

³ 5 Chit. Burn. J. 494; Watson, 4.

⁴ Earl Shrewsbury's case, 9 Co. Rep. 46; Moor. 111; Saville, 43; Watson, 5.

⁵ 4 Burr. 2109.

⁶ 1 Ric. II. c. 11.

⁷ 2 T. R. 731; 1 B. & C. 585.

The endeavour to take a grant of the office for an estate for years, or greater estate, wholly incapacitates the party.¹ Dissenters are disabled.² A party capable, and not exempted from taking the office, is, on refusal to do so, liable to an information in the Queen's Bench.³

The office lasts only for a year, but may be sooner determined by the queen, though it continues till a successor is appointed in all cases, except the sheriff's own death; and so on the demise of the crown it determines, but he continues to hold it till a successor is named.

How chosen.—At common law the sheriff was chosen by the county; but by the 14 Edw. III. stat. 1. c. 7, he is to be appointed yearly on the morrow of All Souls (now, by 24 Geo. II. c. 48, on the morrow of St. Martin) at the exchequer, by the chancellor, treasurer, and chief baron, taking to them the chief justices. Each of the three first-named officers pricks with a pin the name of one person (hence the term pricking for sheriffs), and from the three so named the crown chooses one.⁴ Without this ceremony the crown has no power to make a compulsory appointment. In Durham, while the palatine jurisdiction of that county was in the bishop, the bishop appointed the sheriff, not annually, but during pleasure; and the bishop's death, as in other counties the demise of the crown, determined the office. By 1 Wm. & Mary, c. 27, § 4, the nomination of sheriffs in Wales was in the justices of Great Sessions; but, the Welsh judicature being abolished by the 1 Wm. IV. c. 70, their nomination, like that of other sheriffs, is now in the exchequer. In Westmoreland the appointment is hereditary in the Thanet family. In many cities and towns which are counties of themselves, they have particular modes of appointing sheriffs; and in these places the power of the sheriff of the county at large ceases. The shrievalty of London and Middlesex is vested by charter in the city of London, and two persons are usually appointed, who are styled the sheriffs of London, though they both make but one sheriff of Middlesex. A writ, therefore, addressed "To the sheriffs" cannot be executed in Middlesex, nor can a writ addressed "To the sheriff" be executed in London.⁵

For all counties in England and Wales (except the county palatine of Lancaster) the sheriff now, by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 99, takes his appointment by its notification in the London Gazette, and a warrant under the hand of the clerk of the privy council (a copy of which is to be enrolled with the clerk of the peace for the county), without the necessity for any patent, writ of assistance, or giving bond with sureties, as were formerly required. The sheriff must then take an oath to execute all his duties; which oath (except in the case of the sheriffs of London and Middlesex and their under-sheriffs) is to be fairly written on parchment (without a stamp), signed by him, and sworn before one of the barons of the exchequer, or a justice of peace of the county; it is then filed by the clerk of the peace among the records of his office, who is entitled to the fee of 5s. for so doing. The old sheriff turns over to the new one all writs and process unexecuted, and also all prisoners in his custody. For this purpose the outgoing sheriff must make out and deliver to the in-

¹ 23 Hen. VI. c. 8.

² Harrison v. Evans, 2 Burn. Eccl. L. 185; Bro. P. C. 181.

³ 5 Chit. Burn. J. 495; 2 T. R. 781.

⁴ Impey's Sheriff, 9.

⁵ Watson, 11.

coming sheriff a true and correct list and account, with all such particulars as are necessary to explain the several matters; and the incoming sheriff signs a duplicate thereof, which is as sufficient a discharge to the outgoing sheriff as if they had been turned over by indenture and schedule, and a writ of discharge &c. issued, as formerly required.

Writs coming from the old sheriff's hands must be executed, and returns made thereto, by the new one; but the old sheriff is in some cases still liable to be called on for past matters:¹ steps, however should be taken against him within six months from the end of his serving.

The sheriff cannot let or farm out his bailiwick;² but he may appoint certain officers to act under him, without taking any profit for so doing,³ except in London, Middlesex, Durham, and Westmoreland.⁴

By 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, § 20, the sheriff of each county in England and Wales shall severally name a sufficient deputy, who shall be resident or have an office within one mile from the Inner Temple Hall, for the receipt of writs, granting warrants thereon, making returns thereto, and accepting of all rules and orders to be made on or touching the execution of any process or writ to be directed to such sheriff.

UNDER-SHERIFF.

The office of under-sheriff is likewise a very ancient one. Formerly he was appointed by deed under the seal of office; though if by parol, it was sufficient. But by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 99, the sheriff is directed to appoint him by writing under his hand without stamp within one month after his own appointment, and transmit a duplicate to the clerk of the peace, to be filed among the records of the county, for which a fee of 5s. is paid by the under-sheriff. He takes an oath (similar to the sheriff's) for due performance of his duty.⁵

He executes in the name of the sheriff all the powers of the sheriff, except his judicial acts, as writs of re-disseisin, of inquiry, of waste, of partition, and of admeasurement of dower and pasture. But, except as to these, the sheriff must depute the whole of his office, or no part of it.⁶

All acts of the under-sheriff must be done in the name of the high sheriff; and by them the high sheriff is bound, and is alone responsible to any party injured thereby. But, as between the high and the under-sheriff, the former may require the latter to give security for the due performance of his office, and has his remedy thereon against him. This security is usually entered into at the time of the appointment, when it is usual for the sheriff to execute a deputation to the under-sheriff to fill his office, and a power of attorney for the under-sheriff to receive the prisoners from the late sheriff, and execute a counterpart of the assignment of the gaol, and also to execute a letter of attorney empowering the under-sheriff or his agent to receive the sum of money appointed to be paid under the 4 Geo. I. c. 16.

The appointment of the under-sheriff lasts only during the pleasure of the high sheriff. If the high sheriff is discharged, the under-sheriff ceases to hold office. But if the high sheriff dies, the under-sheriff retains office till a successor is appointed, and is answerable for the due execution of the office during the interval.

¹ Watson, 21.

² 4 Hen. IV. c. 5; 23 Hen. VI. c. 9.

³ 4 Geo. I. c. 15, § 10.

⁴ Id. § 19.

⁵ Id. § 21.

⁶ Watson, 31.

BAILIFFS, AND SHERIFF'S OFFICERS.

Bailiffs are of several kinds.

There are, first, bailiffs of franchises. In many hundreds and other districts, private persons or bodies politic have the return of writs to be executed therein. This franchise exists either by grant or prescription; and where the bailiff of a franchise has the return of writs within his liberty, he has also the execution of such writs as are incident thereto.

Secondly, there are perpetual bailiffs, or bailiffs in fee, who have by charter or prescription the execution only of writs within a particular district. These are different from the bailiffs of franchises just spoken of; for these have not the return of writs, but the sheriff must make the return to a writ executed by such bailiffs.

Thirdly, the ordinary officers of the sheriff, who are called bound bailiffs, being bound in an obligation for the due execution of their office to the sheriff, who is responsible for their acts.

Fourthly, when a person is appointed merely for the execution of a particular writ at the instance of the plaintiff, he is called a special bailiff. In this case the sheriff's responsibility to the plaintiff ceases; though after the arrest is made, and the defendant is placed in the sheriff's custody, he is answerable for him.

A sheriff's officer cannot be an attorney, nor bail in any action.

If any sheriff, under-sheriff, bailiff of a liberty, or his deputy, or other sheriff's bailiff, wilfully delay the execution or return of any process or execution, or take or require any undue fees for the same, or give notice to the defendant in order to frustrate the execution of any process or writ, or, having levied money, detain it in his hands after the return of the writ, he is liable to an attachment, &c.

By 5 & 6 Vic. c. 98, § 31, no poundage shall be payable to sheriffs, bailiffs, or others for taking the body of any person in execution, but such fees only, to the sheriff or other person having the return of writs, as are allowed under the sanction of the judges, pursuant to 1 Vic. c. 55. See post, 180.

And by the same act, if any debtor in execution escape out of legal custody, the sheriff, bailiff, or other person having the custody of such debtor, shall be liable only to an action on the case for the damages sustained by the person at whose suit such debtor was taken or imprisoned, and not to an action of debt in consequence thereof.

Bailiffs are sometimes punished summarily by the courts, either on petition or motion. If the sheriff be damnified, he has his remedy on the bailiff's bond.¹

GAOLERS.

In every county there is one gaol for debtors, and another for criminals, both of which are under the care of the sheriff, who appoints the gaolers during his pleasure. The sheriff is, in general, liable for the escape of a prisoner; but there are cases in which the gaoler only is liable.

The gaoler should be required by the sheriff to give bond for the due performance of his office, and against escapes.

¹ Watson, 34—39; Chitty's Stat. 53.

The gaoler is bound to receive a party from the sheriff, whether the arrest is legal or not.

If the sheriff directs a writ of habeas corpus to the gaoler and another party to execute, and the custody of the prisoner is entrusted to the other party, and an escape happens, the gaoler is not liable to the sheriff under his bond.¹

By 8 & 9 Wm. III. c. 37, § 8, if the gaoler, after one day's notice, refuse to show any prisoner to his creditor or his attorney, it is deemed an escape. And by § 9 of that act, and 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 38, if a gaoler connive at an escape, he is liable to a penalty of 500*l.*, and is for ever after incapable of being a gaoler. By 19 Hen. VIII. c. 10, the negligent escape of a party indicted for high treason subjects the gaoler to the penalty of 100 marks at the least; if committed on suspicion of high treason, 40*l.*; if indicted for murder or petty treason, 20*l.*; if on suspicion of these, or indicted for any other felony, 10*l.*; and if not indicted, 5*l.* If the gaoler is not able to pay the penalty, the sheriff is liable.

The gaoler is bound to use sufficient force for the preservation of the gaol, but must not use unnecessary coercion towards the prisoners. And it has been held, that if a gaoler confine a prisoner against his will with another afflicted with an infectious disorder, wherefrom death ensues, it is murder.

If the gaoler take any bond from a prisoner for greater ease or favour than other prisoners, or tending to the commission of any illegal act, it is void.

It is a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment, if the gaoler take any illegal fee on the entrance, commitment, or discharge of a prisoner, or detain him for nonpayment of any fees; he is also thereby rendered incapable of holding his office.

OF THE EXECUTION AND RETURN OF WRITS IN GENERAL.

The execution of writs from the superior courts of law formerly constituted a much larger share of the sheriff's ministerial duties than it does at present. By recent enactments of the legislature a great portion of this department of his official business has been almost entirely swept away: we allude to the alterations which have taken place in the law of arrest upon mesne process, and the abolition of imprisonment for debt, even upon execution, when the sum recovered does not exceed twenty pounds exclusive of costs. A brief summary of these important alterations and the additional remedies provided for creditors in lieu of the power of imprisonment thus taken away, will form a necessary introduction to the subject before us.

Abolition of Arrest on Mesne Process.—The 1 & 2 Vic. c. 110, after reciting that "the power of arrest on mesne process is unnecessarily extensive and severe, and ought to be relaxed," enacts, "That from and after the 1st October, 1838, no person shall be arrested on mesne process in any civil action in any inferior court whatsoever, or (except in the cases and in the manner hereinafter provided for) in any superior court." And, by sec. 2, "That all personal actions in her majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster shall be commenced by writ of summons."

¹ Ryland v. Layender, 2 Bing. 65.

The excepted case, and the manner of proceeding therein, are then given in the third and following sections, as follows:—

"If a plaintiff in any action in any of her majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster, in which the defendant is now liable to arrest (whether upon the order of a judge or without such order), shall, by the affidavit of himself or of some other person, show, to the satisfaction of a judge of one of the said superior courts, that such plaintiff has a cause of action against the defendant or defendants to the amount of twenty pounds or upwards, or has sustained damage to that amount, and that there is probable cause for believing that the defendant, or any one or more of the defendants, is or are about to quit England unless he or they be forthwith apprehended, it shall be lawful for such judge, by a special order, to direct that such defendant or defendants so about to quit England shall be held to bail for such sum as such judge shall think fit, not exceeding the amount of the debt or damages. And thereupon it shall be lawful for such plaintiff, within the time which shall be expressed in such order, but not afterwards, to sue out one or more writ or writs of capias into one or more different counties, as the case may require, against any such defendant so directed to be held to bail; which writ of capias shall be in the form contained in the schedule to this act, and shall bear date on the day on which the same shall be issued.

"And the sheriff or other officer to whom any such writ of capias shall be directed shall (within one calendar month after the date thereof, including the day of such date, but not afterwards) proceed to arrest the defendant thereupon. And such defendant, when so arrested, shall remain in custody until he shall have given a bail bond to the sheriff, or shall have made deposit of the sum indorsed on such writ of capias, together with ten pounds for costs, according to the present practice of the said superior courts; and all subsequent proceedings as to the putting in and perfecting special bail, or of making deposit and payment of money into court instead of putting in and perfecting special bail, shall be according to the like practice of the said superior courts, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit.

"Any such special order may be made, and the defendant arrested in pursuance thereof, at any time after the commencement of such action and before final judgment obtained therein; and a defendant in custody upon such arrest, and not previously served with a copy the writ of summons, may be lawfully served therewith.

"It shall be lawful for any person arrested upon any such writ of capias to apply, at any time after such arrest, to a judge of one of the superior courts at Westminster, or to the court in which the action shall have been commenced, for an order or rule on the plaintiff to show cause why the person arrested should not be discharged out of custody. And it shall be lawful for such judge or court to make absolute or discharge such order or rule, and to direct the costs of the application to be paid by either party, or to make such other order therein as shall seem fit. Provided, that any such order made by a judge may be discharged or varied by the court, on application made thereto by either party.

The act, having thus in a great measure abolished arrest on mesne process, proceeds to give more effectual remedies to creditors to obtain satisfaction from the property of their debtors when they have succeeded in getting judgment against them. With this view additional efficacy is given to the writs of fiery facias and elegit, and to the judgments, orders, and decrees of the superior courts. By the writ of fiery facias the sheriff is now empowered to take money, bank notes, bills of exchange, and other securities, which were not formerly seizable under that writ; and under a writ of elegit he is enabled to take the whole of the debtor's real property, instead of a moiety only as theretofore, and copyhold lands as well as others, subject to such account in the court out of which the writ is issued as a tenant by elegit was before subject to in a court of equity. Protection, however, is given to such purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, as had become such before the commencement of the act (1st October, 1838), who remain subject to the old law. Then as to judgments of the superior courts, these are made to operate as a charge upon all the real estate (including copyholds) of the debtor, whether in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, and the judgment creditor has the same remedies in equity as if a charge on such estates had been made by the debtor in writing. But he cannot proceed to obtain the benefit of such charge until one year after judgment has been obtained; and in case of the bankruptcy of the debtor, the judgment creditor will have no preference, unless his judgment has been entered up a year before the bankruptcy. It is also provided that the doctrine of courts of equity, which affords protection to purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, shall not be affected by this act. After judgment, stock in the public funds, and shares in public companies, belonging to the debtor, may be charged by an order of a judge; which order will operate as a distringas; but no proceedings can be taken to have the benefit of such order until after six months. All judgment debts are made to bear interest at four per cent. Orders and decrees of superior courts of law and equity for payment of money or costs, charges, or expenses, have the same effect given them as judgments. But neither such orders or decrees, nor any judgments, will affect real estate as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, until they have been registered with the senior master of the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster. And if any judgment creditor having obtained, or become entitled to the benefit of any security whatsoever, shall, before the security be realized, arrest the person of the debtor, he thereby relinquishes his security. The judgments of inferior courts may be removed into a superior court, and thus become of the same efficacy as if originally of such superior court; but they will not affect lands &c. as to purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, until execution be lodged with the sheriff.

Such are the principal provisions of this act (the remaining clauses relating solely to the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors); and, to carry them into effect, the judges of the courts of law and equity were empowered to sue out new, or alter existing writs, to be executed in the same manner as writs of execution were previously enforced.

Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt under Twenty Pounds.—By another of the statutes above referred to, the power of imprisonment for debt has been still further restricted, being taken away, even after judgment, in all cases where the sum recovered does not exceed twenty pounds exclusive of the costs, except where the debt has been incurred under circumstances of fraud, &c.

The 7 & 8 Vic. c. 96, § 57, reciting that “it is expedient to limit the power of arrest upon final process,” enacts, “That from and after the passing of this act (9th August, 1844) no person shall be taken or charged in execution upon any judgment obtained in any of her majesty’s superior courts, or in any county court, court of requests, or other inferior court, in any action for the recovery of any debt wherein the sum recovered shall not exceed the sum of £20, exclusive of the costs recovered by such judgment.”

By the 59th section, however, a power is reserved to the judge trying the cause to award imprisonment under certain circumstances of fraud. “Provided, that if it shall appear to the judge who shall try such cause (being either a judge of one of the superior courts, or a barrister, or attorney at law), that the defendant, in incurring the debt or liability which may be the subject of demand, has obtained credit from the plaintiff under false pretences, or with a fraudulent intent, or has wilfully contracted such debt or liability without having at the time a reasonable assurance of being able to pay or discharge the same, or shall have made or caused to be made any gift, delivery, or transfer of any personal property, or shall have removed or concealed the same, with an intent to defraud his creditors or any of them, it shall be lawful for such judge, if he think fit, to order that such defendant may be taken and detained in execution upon such judgment in like manner and for such time as he might have been if this act had not been passed, or for any time not exceeding six calendar months in any case in which the time for which a person taken in execution under process issuing out of any such court could lawfully be detained in custody, according to the constitution of the said court, before the passing of this act, is less than six calendar months, whether or not execution against the goods and chattels of such defendant shall have issued as hereafter provided.”

Sec. 60, When the judge shall have made an order for the payment of money, the amount shall be recoverable, in default of payment forthwith or at the times thereby directed, by execution against the goods and chattels of the party; and the clerk of the court shall issue a writ of fiери facias as a warrant of execution to one of the bailiffs of the court, who shall be empowered to levy, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such party within the jurisdiction of the court, such sum of money, and also the costs of the execution.

Sec. 61, If the judge shall have made an order for payment by instalments, execution shall not issue until after default in payment of some instalment; and execution, or successive executions, may then issue for the whole of the said sum and costs remaining unpaid, or for each successive instalment and costs remaining from time to time unpaid, as the judge shall order, either at the time of making the original order or at any subsequent time.

Sec. 62, If it appear to the satisfaction of the judge, by the oath or affirmation of any person or otherwise, that a defendant is unable, from sickness or unavoidable accident, to pay the debt or damages recovered against him, or any instalment thereof, it shall be lawful for the judge, in his discretion, to suspend or stay any judgment, order, or execution for such time as he shall think fit, and so from time to time until it shall appear, by the like proof as aforesaid, that such temporary cause of disability has ceased.

Sec. 63, In or upon every such warrant of execution the clerk of the court shall cause to be inserted or indorsed the sum of money and costs adjudged, with the increased costs allowed for such execution; and if the party shall, before an actual sale of the goods and chattels, pay or cause to be paid or tendered unto the clerk of the court, or to the bailiff holding the warrant of execution, such sum of money and costs, or such part thereof as the person entitled shall agree to accept in full of his debt or damages and costs, together with such fees as have been lawfully incurred by him in the suit, the execution shall be superseded.

But these provisions having been found ineffectual for the protection of creditors, the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 127, intituled "An act for the better securing the payment of small debts," enacts, Sec. 1, "That if any person is or shall be indebted to any other in a sum not exceeding twenty pounds besides costs of suit, by force of any judgment obtained, or of any order for the payment thereof or of any costs, in any court of competent jurisdiction, it shall be lawful for the creditor to obtain a summons from any commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy for the district in which such debtor shall reside or be, or from any court of requests or conscience or other court for the recovery of small debts within the jurisdiction of which such debtor shall reside or be. And the debtor appearing at the time appointed shall be examined by the said commissioner or court; and shall, if the creditor think fit, be interrogated before such commissioner or court by the creditor summoning him, touching the manner and time of his contracting the debt, —the means or prospect of payment he then had,—the property or means of payment he still hath or may have,—the disposal he may have made of any property since contracting such debt. And such creditor shall also, if such commissioner or court think fit, be examined by the said commissioner or court touching his claim against the said debtor, and shall, if the debtor think fit, be interrogated by the said debtor touching his said claim against him. And it shall be lawful for such commissioner or court to make an order on the said debtor for the payment of his debt by instalments or otherwise. And in case such debtor shall not attend as required by the said summons, and shall not allege a sufficient excuse for not attending,—or shall, if attending, refuse to disclose his property, or his transactions respecting the same, or respecting the contracting of the debt, or shall not make answer thereof to the satisfaction of the commissioner or court,—or shall appear to such commissioner or court to have been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt, or of having wilfully contracted it without reasonable prospect of being able to pay it, or of having concealed or made away with his property in order to defeat his creditors,—or if he appears to have the means of paying the same by instalments or otherwise, and shall not pay the same at such times as the commissioner or court shall order, or as the court shall have ordered in which the original judgment shall have been obtained or order made,—then, in any of the said cases, it shall be lawful for such commissioner, or the judge of such court, to order such debtor to be committed for any time not exceeding forty days to the common gaol wherein the debtors under judgment and in execution of the superior courts of justice may be confined within the county, city, borough, or place in which such debtor shall be resident, or to any other gaol or debtors prison within the same county, city, borough, or place, which shall by any declaration of one of her majesty's principal secretaries of state be allowed as a place of imprisonment under this act, so long as such declaration shall remain in force and unrevoked.

And by sec. 2, Every bailiff and messenger to whom any such order shall be issued, or who shall be acting as an officer of the high bailiff of Westminster or Southwark in the execution of any such order issued to such high bailiff, shall be thereby empowered to take the body of the person against whom such order shall be made; and all constables and other peace officers within their several jurisdictions shall aid in the execution of every such order. And no protection, or interim or other order issuing out of any court of bankruptcy or for the relief of insolvent debtors, nor any certificate, obtained after such order for imprisonment under this act, shall be available to any debtor imprisoned under such order as aforesaid.

And by sec. 3, No imprisonment under this act shall in any wise operate as a satisfaction or extinguishment of any debt or demand. But any person imprisoned under this act who shall have paid or satisfied the debt or demand, or the instalments thereof payable, and costs remaining due at the time of the order of imprisonment being made, and all subsequent costs, shall, upon entry of such payment indorsed on the order of imprisonment, signed by the plaintiff or his attorney, be discharged out of custody by leave of the commissioner or judge of the court in which the order of imprisonment was made.

Provisions to the same effect are also contained in the New County Courts Act, 9 & 10 Vic. c. 95; the before-mentioned acts being repealed so far as they relate to or affect the jurisdiction and practice of such courts, or give jurisdiction to any court or to any commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy with respect to orders or judgments obtained in any court so established or ordered to be holden as a county court; but to these we shall refer hereafter.

Another amelioration in the law as to executions, which was effected by one of the acts above referred to, may here also be noticed. The 8 & 9 Vic. c. 127, § 8, reciting that "it is expedient to protect the actual necessities of or belonging to judgment debtors from being seized in execution," enacts, "That from and after the passing of this act the wearing apparel and bedding of any judgment debtor or his family, and the tools and implements of his trade, (such wearing apparel, bedding, tools, and implements not exceeding in the whole the value of five pounds) shall not be liable to seizure under any execution or order of any court against his goods and chattels."

With respect to the costs of executions from Small Debts courts, the 7 and 8 Vic. c. 96, § 66, enacts, "That every sale of goods which shall be taken in execution under process issuing from any such court for the recovery of small debts, shall be taken to be within all the provisions of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 17 (for extending the provisions of the 57 Geo. III. c. 93, regulating the costs of certain distresses);" that is, the costs of the execution shall be the same as a distress for rent not exceeding twenty pounds, under the penalties provided for taking more than the sums allowed in the last-named act. (See post, p. 362.)

And to prevent, as far as possible, the executions of creditors being defeated by collusion between debtors and their landlords, it is enacted by sec. 67, "That no landlord of any tenement let at a weekly rent shall have any claim or lien upon any goods taken in execution under the process of any court of law for more than four weeks arrears of rent. And if such tenement shall be let for any other term less than a year, the landlord shall not have any claim or lien on such goods for more than the arrears of rent accruing during four such terms or times of payment." A similar provision is contained in the 9 & 10 Vic. cap. 95, as to executions issuing out of the courts established under that act, but restricting the landlord's lien to two such terms or times of payment when the tenement is let for any term longer than a week and less than a year.

And with respect to claims on the part of landlords or other parties, in the case of executions from Small-Debt courts, it is further provided by sec. 68, "That if any claim shall be made to or in respect of any goods or chattels taken in execution under the process of any court for the recovery of small debts, or in respect of the proceeds or value thereof, by any landlord for rent, or by any person not being the party against whom such process has issued, it shall be lawful for the clerk of the court out of which such execution issued, upon application of the officer charged with the execution of such process, either before or after any action brought against such officer, to issue a summons calling before the court out of which such execution issued both the party issuing such process and the party making such claim; and thereupon any action which shall have been brought in any of her majesty's superior courts at Westminster, or in the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, or in any local or inferior court, in respect of such claim, shall be stayed; and the court in which such action shall have been brought, or any judge thereof, on proof of the issue of such summons, and that the goods and chattels were so taken in execution, may order the party bringing such action to pay the costs of all proceedings had upon such action after the issue of such summons. And the judge of the court for the recovery of small debts out of which such execution issued shall adjudicate upon such claims and make such order between the parties in respect thereof, and of the costs of the proceedings, as to him shall seem fit; and such order shall be enforced in like manner as any order made in any suit brought in such court." This provision also is repeated in the County Courts Act.

Execution of Writs.—All writs (except those to be executed in the county palatine of Lancaster) are directed to the sheriff of the county, or if he be a party, to the coroner, or to the co-sheriff if there are two. The sheriff is a mere ministerial officer in the execution of writs, and must execute them without looking to their legality, unless it is evident that the court issuing them has no jurisdiction. Though the defendant is misnamed, the sheriff should execute the writ, if a ca. sa., but not on mesne process.

The sheriff usually executes the writ by the under-sheriff. As soon as the writ is delivered at the sheriff's office, the under-sheriff makes out a warrant to bailiffs for its execution.

An arrest is constituted by the slightest touch of the officer, or the slightest act of detainer; but not by words alone, unless the party so arrested acquiesce, or in any degree act in conformity therewith. The bailiff need not show his warrant, but ought to declare its contents. The officer to whom the writ is addressed need not himself actually make the arrest, provided he be acting in it. If the defendant be already in custody, he is detained by merely lodging a writ in the hands of the sheriff; and he cannot be discharged, without satisfying the second as well as the first cause of his confinement.

In writs upon extents or the like, or on a capias utlagatum, or on a writ of seisin or habere facias possessionem, the bailiff may break open outer as well as inner doors; but on any other civil process he can only break open inner doors, when he has gained admittance through the outer one. He cannot execute a writ out of the county; nor on a Sunday, except in cases of treason, felony, or breach of the peace. An arrest on a Sunday is absolutely void, and cannot be rendered good by any waiver of the parties. But on an escape, a party may be retaken on a Sunday; though not where the escape has been voluntary.

Ruling the Sheriff to make a Return of the Writ.—Regularly, the sheriff should make his return to every writ, though it is not usual to do so in every case, unless he is ruled for that purpose. There must, however, be a return to the writ of elegit.

If the sheriff take bail on the execution of the writ, and the plaintiff object to accept the bail, the proceeding can only be against the sheriff, and he may rule him to return the writ; but not where he accepts the bail. The sheriff may be ruled at any time within six lunar months from the time of his being in office; and if he disobey, an attachment will issue against him.—20 Geo. II. c. 27.

The return is made by the under-sheriff in the name of the high sheriff, upon the back of the writ. It must be certain, and a complete answer to the command of the writ; but if informal, may be aided by the appearance of the party, or may in some cases be amended. Sometimes the sheriff is allowed to make an excuse for not returning the writ; as, "tarde," when the writ reached him too late for execution before the day of its return; "languidus," where the defendant is too ill to be removed; "that the party has privilege of peerage or parliament;" or, that the defendant was rescued." A return is also good, where the defendant resides in a particular franchise, that the sheriff has commanded the bailiff to execute the writ, mandavi ballivo.

Sheriff's Duty upon Arrest.—When an arrest has taken place, the sheriff is bound to have the defendant at the return of the writ: he must therefore keep him in close custody, unless sufficient bail be tendered, or he deposit money in lieu of bail.

When the sheriff takes bail, a bond (without stamp) is entered into with two sureties to the sheriff, conditioned for the appearance of the defendant at the return of the writ. This is prepared by the sheriff's officer, who is entitled to a fee in proportion to the amount of the debt. After its execution, and allowing a reasonable time to see that there are no other detainers against him, the defendant, on payment of all fees, of bail bond, &c. must be discharged. The sheriff, on request of the plaintiff, is bound to assign this bond to him, unless the defendant has rendered in discharge of his bail, or the plaintiff has ruled the sheriff to return the writ.

By the assignment the sheriff is altogether discharged, and the plaintiff may sue on the bond in the same manner as the sheriff might have done if the bond had not been assigned, and he had been obliged, by reason of the defendant not being forthcoming, to pay the debt. The action on it must in general be brought in the court out of which the writ in the first instance issued; and the parties cannot be holden to bail. Upon the bond the sureties are liable to pay the whole penalty, though beyond the sum sworn to, but the court will not countenance several actions against each party to it.

Ruling to bring in the Body.—The sheriff having arrested the party, returns cepi corpus et paratum habeo; and if the defendant be at large and no bail be put in, or if bail be put in and they have not justified, the sheriff may be ruled to bring in the body, and, on failure within a certain time, may be fixed with debt and costs upon attachment.

Outlawry.

The word utlagatus, or outlaw, is derived from the Saxon laga, which signifies law; and a person outlawed signifies one that is out of the protection of the law.

At common law, whenever a party was liable to arrest, he was, if the intermediate process was unsuccessful in taking him, liable to be outlawed; but not otherwise. The punishment, for some time after the conquest, was death. A man cannot now be outlawed on an action or indictment originating in any statute, unless it be expressly or impliedly provided for by the statute.

Women are not said to be outlawed, but waived. An infant under twelve years of age cannot be outlawed. A peer or member of parliament can only be outlawed on indictment.

After non est inventus returned upon a capias, the first writ is exigi facias. This is directed to the sheriff, to cause the defendant to be demanded from county court to county court, to the number of five. In civil causes, before judgment, the processes of alias and pluries capias issue before the exigent. In addition to the exigent, a writ of proclamation is also issued, having the same teste and return as the exigent; and if the defendant reside in a different county from that into which the exigent issued, the writ is called a foreign proclamation. By this writ the sheriff is required to make three proclamations: one in the open county court; another at the general quarter sessions of the peace; and a third, one month at the least before the quinto exactus, or fifth demand under the writ of exigent, at the church door of the defendant's parish, immediately after divine service. In criminal cases, after conviction, no proclamation is necessary. If the defendant be neither arrested or appear, after being five times demanded, if a man he is out-lawed, and if a woman she is waived, by the judgment of the coroners of the county court, or of the recorder in London, and such judgment is returned by the sheriff upon the exigent.

After the return of the writ of exigi facias, the next process is capias utlagatum. In executing this, the officer may break open outer as well as inner doors, to take the defendant or his goods. It may be executed in any franchise without a mandate to the sheriff; but in civil cases it cannot be executed on Sundays.

The death of the defendant determines the outlawry. But if a woman is waived, and then marries, the writ must still be executed. If the defendant become bankrupt after outlawry and obtain his certificate, though the debt is barred, yet the writ must proceed; but if he be attending before the commissioners on his examination, he is, for the benefit of his creditors, privileged from arrest, and cannot be arrested during that attendance, even on a capias utlagatum.¹

Formerly an outlaw was placed so completely out of the law, that any person might with impunity kill him; but this has long been abolished. However, he is still debarred from being plaintiff in any action or relator in an information in chancery; and, as he can have no property to qualify him, he cannot be a juror; but he may be a witness, which is for the benefit of public justice, not for his own. He may also make a will. Outlawry, however, is no objection to any application by him tending to the reversal of it.²

Habeas Corpus.³—The statutes 21 Car. II. c. 3, and 56 Geo. III. c. 100, give this most highly remedial writ. Under the former act, in criminal proceedings, a prisoner (except in cases of treason or felony) may have this writ issued to the sheriff, commanding him to bring him up to the court issuing the process under which he is committed, in order to ascertain whether the commitment be just or not; and if within 20 miles of town, the sheriff is bound to bring up the party within three days; if above 20 and under 100 miles, within ten days; and if above 100, within twenty days. But the prisoner must tender to the sheriff 12*d.* per mile, and give his bond to pay the charges of his return to prison, in case he should be remanded.

This writ is issuable and returnable in vacation as well as in term time, unless two terms have elapsed since the commitment. In case of disobedience by the sheriff and his officers, heavy penalties are imposed. Persons once liberated are not to be recommitted for the same offence by any person, unless by order of the court. And persons committed for high treason or felony must be indicted during the next term, or let out on bail and tried the term after, or discharged. Prisoners cannot, except in certain cases, be removed from gaol except by this writ.

¹ Exp. Helsby, 1 Dea. & Ch.

² 5 Chit. Burn. J. 238—241; Chit. Eq. Ind. 726.

³ As to this writ in general, see 2 Chit.

Burn. J. 1077; 1 Chit. Crim. Law. 117—132; Com. Dig. tit. Hab. Corp.; Bac. Ab. tit. Hab. Corp.; Chit. Eq. Ind. tit. Præ-tice, Hab. Corp., and Præc. Writ. 7.

The 56 Geo. III. c. 100 gives power to the judges to issue this writ in other than criminal cases in the vacation, and makes disobedience of it a contempt of court. The judges may, if they see fit, make the writ issued in vacation returnable in the next term; but if issued in term, it must at all events be returnable in the ensuing vacation, if not sooner. And, by § 6, process of contempt may issue in the vacation against persons disobeying the writs under 31 Car. II. Lord Eldon had considerable doubts on this subject.¹

The writ is obtained on affidavits other than the prisoner's, and is discretionary in the court. The application must be in writing, attested and subscribed by two witnesses; and a copy of the warrant of commitment must be produced before the court or judge, or an oath made that such copy was refused.² Ill health is not sufficient ground for the writ.³ Nor can a party committed by order of the House of Commons be brought up on habeas corpus.⁴

In term time it must be moved for by counsel either in the courts of Chancery, Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer; and in vacation, the chancellor, or one of the judges, may be applied to by the party's attorney or counsel. The judge granting the application issues his fiat, and subscribes the writ.⁵

The writ is to be served as directed by the 31 Car. II. c. 2, § 2. The officer to whom the writ is directed then returns the writ, certifying the date and cause of the arrest, and of the detainer or other cause for not bringing up the individual.

In criminal cases, together with this, another writ called the certiorari is usually issued, directed to the magistrate who committed the party, whereby the examination and depositions on which the commitment took place are placed in the power of that tribunal which is to judge of the correctness of such commitment. If the commitment were by a court of competent authority, the return should state that fact. The neglect to make a return is punishable by attachment, or by action at the suit of the prisoner, or by indictment.

Upon the return, the prisoner's counsel may move to file it, and to have the prisoner called into court, and the return read, and afterwards may argue for the prisoner's discharge. When the court thinks, upon hearing affidavits, that there is probable cause for his discharge, or being bailed for felony, if he is unable to pay the expence of being brought to London, the court will allow him to be bailed before a magistrate in the country. If the court determines on the release of a party, it requires him to enter into a recognizance to appear at the trial.⁶

In cases of smuggling and offences against the customs, no habeas corpus can be granted unless the objections to the proceedings are stated. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 53, § 90.

This writ also issues at the instance of other parties. Thus, where the defendant is in custody, and, on a bill filed in chancery, it becomes requisite to compel him to answer it, a habeas corpus ad respondendum

¹ Crowley's Case, 2 Swan. 1.

² Huntly v. Luscombe, 2 Bos. & P. 530.

³ 1 Stra. 4, 5; 1 Leach, C.L. 117.

⁴ Burdett v. Abbott, 14 East, 1.

⁵ 5 Chit. Burn. J. 1084.

⁶ 2 Chit. Burn. J. 1077—86; and see, as to the amount of this, id. 1085; and id. tit. Bail.

issues, in order to bring him into court and turn him over to the Fleet Prison if he persist in refusing to answer; and at common law this was necessary in order to declare against him in one court when he was a prisoner as of another; but this seems no longer requisite. It is also ad satisfaciendum, which is used where a judgment in the Queen's Bench has been pronounced against him, and he is in custody of another court, and it is sought to charge him in execution under that judgment; or ad faciendum et recipiendum, which is usually called cum causâ, and signifies a writ whereby a prisoner in custody of the sheriff or in the prison of an inferior court, may be removed into the custody of the marshal; in which case the cause under which he was first detained is removed into the superior court. There is also another, called ad testificandum, which is for the purpose of bringing up a prisoner to act as a witness in any other cause.

Writ of Fieri Facias.—This is a writ issued at the instance of a party who has recovered judgment for a debt, commanding the sheriff to levy the amount of the debt or damages upon the goods and chattels of the defendant. It closely resembles, in execution, the common distress for rent or taxes. In executing it, the sheriff's officer seizes part of the goods in the name of the whole; and he must continue in possession thereof, or else another person may get possession by another writ. To get possession, he cannot break open the outer door of the defendant's house, although he may that of another, if the goods are clandestinely removed there.¹ But once in, he may break open inner doors or chests; and he may do so to detached buildings, as, for instance, a barn door, without even demanding admission previously. In case of excess of duty, the sheriff is liable to an action; but the seizure remains good. He must seize the goods before the return of the writ.

The goods of certain persons are privileged from this seizure, as those within a royal palace; those of an ambassador and his servants, &c. So, in effect, are those of a certificated bankrupt or a discharged insolvent, if the debt is barred by either process; but the sheriff is not bound to take notice of these latter privileges.

The property in the goods passes to the sheriff when the writ is delivered to him, and therefore any subsequent disposition of them, except in market overt, is void. It seems that if an extent issue at the suit of the crown against the defendant's goods after the fi. fa. is executed, but before they are sold, the extent has the preference.

The sheriff cannot seize the whole wearing apparel of the defendant, but must leave sufficient for his clothing. Nor can he take an estate of freehold; though he may a lease for years, it being but a chattel interest. Neither, until the recent act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, could the sheriff, under this writ, take money, bank notes, bills of exchange, promissory notes, bonds, specialties, &c. But now, by section 12 of this act, it is enacted, "That by virtue of any writ of fieri facias to be sued out of any superior or inferior court after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, or any precept in pursuance thereof, the sheriff or other officer having the execution thereof may and shall seize and take any money or bank notes (whether of the Bank of England or of any other bank or bankers), and any cheques, bills of exchange, pro-promissory notes, bonds, specialties, or other securities for money, belonging to the person against whose effects such writ of fieri facias shall be sued out; and may and shall pay or deliver to the party suing out such execution any money or bank notes which shall be so seized, or a sufficient part thereof; and may and shall hold any such cheques, bills of exchange, promissory notes, bonds, specialties, or other securities for money, as a security for the amount by such writ directed to be levied, or so much thereof as shall not have been otherwise levied and raised; and may sue in the name of such sheriff or other officer for the recovery of the sums secured thereby, when the time of payment thereof shall have arrived. And the payment to such sheriff or other officer by the party liable on any such cheque, bill of exchange, promissory note, bond, specialty, or other security, with or without suit or the recovery and levying execution against the party so liable, shall discharge him to the extent of such payment, or of such recovery and levy in execution, as the case may be, from his liability on any such cheque, bill of exchange, promissory note, bond, specialty, or other security. And such sheriff or other officer may and shall pay over to the party suing out such writ the money so to be recovered, or such part thereof as shall be sufficient to discharge the amount by such writ directed to be levied. And if, after satisfaction of the amount so to be levied, together with the sheriff's poundage and expenses, any surplus shall remain in the hands of such sheriff or other officer, the same shall be paid to the party against whom such writ shall be so issued. Provided, that no such sheriff or other officer shall be bound to sue any party liable upon any such cheque, bill of exchange, promissory note, bond, specialty, or other security, unless the party suing out such execution shall enter into a bond, with two sufficient sureties, for indemnifying him from all costs and expenses to be incurred in the prosecution of such action, or to which he may become liable in consequence thereof; the expence of such bond to be deducted out of any money to be recovered in any such action."

Landlord's fixtures in possession of a tenant cannot be seized; but corn and growing crops (which, as we shall hereafter see, would go to the executors of a party) may be seized, but not artificial grasses growing under corn, as clover or stubble. If, by construction of law, the crop would belong to the landlord, as where the tenant is holding over or is a trespasser, it cannot be seized. If a crop be sold before it is ripe, the person buying it is entitled to a reasonable time for it to ripen before he cuts it. The 56 Geo. III. c. 50 regulates those cases where there are particular covenants as to such crops between the landlord and tenant.

Goods pawned or leased cannot be taken into execution; though, subject to the pawner's or lessee's rights, they may be sold. Neither can an equitable interest be taken; nor goods of a testator in the hands of an executor; nor any other goods in trust. But goods in the hands of a husband as trustee for his wife may, in some instances, be sold. So partnership goods may be sold on a writ against one partner; but then the whole partnership property must be taken. When bankruptcy intervenes before seizure, the seizure cannot be made.

The sheriff, after seizure, sells under authority of the writ venditioni exponas. After seizure, he may accept the debt and costs, and release the goods; or he may take bond, but he is liable to the plaintiff if the bond prove ineffective. It is said, that if the sheriff seize goods after tender to him of debt and costs, he becomes a trespasser.

After seizure of the goods, by 8 Ann. c. 14, § 1, the defendant's landlord has a right to demand from the sheriff one year's rent out of their produce in priority to other creditors; and the same provision is made as to the assessed taxes by 43 Geo. III. c. 99, § 37. But this lien of the landlord is restricted, by 7 & 8 Vic. c. 96, § 67, in the case of weekly, monthly, or other tenants for a less period than from year to year, to four weeks, months, or other such terms of payment.¹

The sheriff does not usually make any return to this writ, unless ruled so to do. He then returns according to the fact, either nulla bona, that there are no goods to seize; or if he has seized, fieri feci; or both, if the value does not cover the whole debt. If he cannot sell the goods for want of purchasers, or of a fair price being offered, he should return to that effect. Where there are adverse claims to the goods, the court will enlarge the time for the sheriff to make his return, and a jury may be impanelled to try the right.

Writ of Elegit.—This is a writ of execution against the lands, goods, and chattels of the defendant when judgment has been recovered. On this writ the sheriff is in the first instance to take the goods of the defendant, except oxen and beasts of the plough, and deliver them to the plaintiff at the price found by a jury summoned as hereafter mentioned. Whatever may be taken under a fi. fa., and that only, may be taken under the elegit; and most of the rules applying to a fi. fa. apply to this writ; but it differs in this, that the sheriff is not to sell the goods, but to deliver them to the plaintiff. If these are insufficient, then the defendant's lands &c. are to be extended or seized, to be in like manner valued, set out by metes and bounds, and delivered to the plaintiff.

Formerly, under this writ, a moiety only of the defendant's lands were taken, and copyhold lands were not liable at all; but now, by 1 & 2 Vic. c. 110, § 11, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the sheriff or other officer to whom any writ of elegit, or precept in pursuance thereof, shall be directed, upon any judgment recovered in any action in any of her majesty's superior courts at Westminster, to make and deliver execution unto the party in that behalf suing of all such lands, tenements, rectories, tithes, rents, and hereditaments, including lands and hereditaments of copyhold or customary tenure, as the person against whom execution is so sued, or any person in trust for him, shall have been seised or possessed of at the time of entering up the said judgment or at any time afterwards, or over which such person shall at the time of entering up such judgment or at any time afterwards have any disposing power which he might without the assent of any other person exercise for his own benefit, in like manner as the sheriff or other officer may now make and deliver execution of one moiety of the lands and tenements of any person against whom a writ of elegit is sued out; which lands, tenements, rectories, tithes, rents, and hereditaments, by force and virtue of such execution, shall accordingly be held and enjoyed by the party to whom such execution shall be so made and delivered, subject to such account in the court out of which such execution shall have been sued out as a tenant by elegit is now subject to in a court of equity. Provided always, that such party suing out execution, and to whom any copyhold or customary lands shall be so delivered in execution, shall be liable to make, perform, and render to the lord of the manor or other person entitled all such payments and services as the person against whom such execution shall be issued would have been bound to make in case such execution had not issued; and the party so suing out such execution, and to whom such copyhold or customary lands shall have been so delivered in execution, shall be entitled to hold the same until the amount of such payments, and the value of such services, as well as the amount of the judgment, shall have been levied. Provided also, that as against purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, who shall have become such before the time appointed for the commencement of this act, such writ of elegit shall have no greater or other effect than a writ of elegit would have had in case this act had not passed."

¹ On writs of execution from any of the new County Courts established under 9 & 10 Vic. c. 95, the landlord's lien is restricted to four weeks where the tenement is let by the week, and to two terms only where let for any other term less than a year. But as to the execution of these writs, see post, tit. COUNTY COURTS.

On receiving the writ, the sheriff must impanel a jury, who enter, with the sheriff, into the house and grounds of the defendant, if the gates and doors are open (for they cannot use force). The inquisition must then find the value thus seized with certainty, or it is void. The sheriff is to deliver the whole of the goods seized to the plaintiff, and also give him, not actual, but legal possession of the lands; for, to gain actual possession, the plaintiff must resort to an ejectment; and when that is obtained, a mere chattel interest, and not a freehold one is acquired by him, which will devolve on his executors. The plaintiff, when in possession of the lands, is called the tenant by elegit, and only holds the lands till the debt is levied thereout, or satisfied elsewhere, with interest; upon which the defendant is entitled to restitution.

Writ of Habere Facias Possessionem.—This writ is resorted to in order to give the plaintiff possession when he has recovered in an action of ejectment. On its being delivered to the sheriff, he gives a warrant to his bailiffs to execute it, taking an indemnity from the plaintiff. The officer may break open the outer as well as inner doors to execute this writ, and may raise a posse comitatús, if necessary, and all other persons should be turned off the premises. If the sheriff, or the plaintiff after he is put into possession, be disturbed, an attachment will be granted against the intruder. The sheriff should return the writ as in other cases.

Writ of Inquiry.—There are several of these; but the writ of inquiry of damages is the only one much in use at the present day, and is directed to the sheriff in his judicial capacity, commanding him, "because it is unknown to the court what damages the plaintiff hath sustained," to inquire thereof. It issues only in cases of judgment by default or on demurrer, against all defendants. Before executing the writ, the sheriff is to give the defendant eight days notice when the inquiry will take place, and the writ must be executed between any two consecutive hours, and not more, on the day named.

The jurors must be properly qualified according to the 6 Geo. IV. c. 50. When the jury is properly sworn the counsel or attorney for the plaintiff states his case, and goes into his evidence for damages; and the defendant by his counsel answers in mitigation of the damages; after which the plaintiff replies. If necessary, the inquiry may be adjourned. When the case is fully heard, the sheriff sums up, and the jury deliver their verdict; and the writ is then to be duly returned as others are.

The execution in most real actions is performed by the writ of habere facias seisinam, by which the sheriff is commanded to cause the demandant to have possession of the lands which he has recovered. This writ is not usually executed where the lands are certain, but only where they are uncertain. It is executed nearly in the same manner as the writ of habere facias possessionem. Real actions, however, are now for the most part abolished; the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 36 having enacted, that no action real or mixed (except a writ of right of dower, or writ of dower unde nihil habet, or quare impedit, or of ejectment), and no plaint in the nature of such writ or action (except a plaint for free bench or dower) shall be brought after the 31st Dec. 1834.

Sheriff's Duty as to Exchequer Writs.

The only writ of this kind which is necessary to be treated of in this place is the writ of extent, which is one of execution against the body, lands, and goods of crown debtors, and is an ancient prerogative writ, on which the lands are liable although there are goods sufficient; but the goods should be first applied.

Extents are in chief, that is, where sued out for a debt to the crown; or in aid, where sued out by a debtor to the crown for the recovery of a debt due to himself. If the crown debtor die, a writ of dem. clausit extremum may issue after his death. Upon receipt of the writ the sheriff issues his warrant, under which outer doors may be broken, and any liberty may be entered to execute it. If the defendant be taken, the sheriff cannot take bail. A certificated bankrupt, or an insolvent discharged subsequently to the accruing of the crown debt, are not exempted from arrest under this writ, for the crown is not bound by the bankrupt laws; but a bankrupt is privileged while attending commissioners on his examination.² On seizing the goods, the sheriff is to keep them in his hands until the venditioni exponas issues. All goods that are in general liable to an extent become so from the teste of the writ, even though sold afterwards in open market. The queen's claims always have priority before those of private persons, provided the writ is issued before judgment is obtained by the subject. If an extent is tested the same day on which a fi. fa. at the suit of a subject is delivered to the sheriff, the extent has the preference; but beyond this the law is unsettled, as in cases where the goods are in the sheriff's hands under the fi. fa. when he receives the writ of extent. Goods distrained for rent before the teste of the writ, but not sold, may be seized under the extent, and the landlord is not entitled to a year's rent. So in bankruptcy, if the teste is prior to or on the same day as the assignment (that is, to the appointment of assignees, which now constitutes the assignment), they are subject to the extent; but not goods conveyed away bona fide by a trader before the teste.

² See Exp. Russell, 1 Mon, 273; Exp. Helsby, 1 Dea. & Ch

Under an extent for duties or penalties incurred under the excise laws, the utensils, goods, materials, preparations, and vessels employed in the particular manufactory in which such duties or penalties have arisen may be taken, although the property in them does not belong to the defendant. So if they have been seized under a fi. fa. prior to the teste of the extent. So the crown has a lien on malt for duties which were unpaid at the time of the bankruptcy; and that although seized by the assignees in bankruptcy. So also certain freehold property may be seized.¹

Debts due to the crown debtor are also liable to an extent, whether they be specialty or simple contract; and all persons conversant therewith are bound to disclose the particulars thereof. They are bound from the teste of the writ; but payment by the debtor to the crown debtor in ignorance of the extent discharges him, if before taking of the inquisition. Specialties, although not due, money in the debtor's hands, or bills of exchange, may be seized. Under an extent against one partner the joint property may be seized, but the co-partner is entitled to an action in equity against the crown. But the sheriff is not to receive the debts till after the inquisition is returned, upon which a scire facias will issue, directing him to receive them. Upon information received that the debtor has some property, the sheriff should hold an inquisition in order to find whether he has such property as is liable to the extent. A summons is issued to the defendant, and to all witnesses, which if disobeyed subjects the parties to an attachment. The sheriff has power to adjourn the inquisition; for all receivable evidence should be gone into.

In the finding of the inquest, facts should be stated with precision, and lands and goods particularly described, or the return will be bad. After the return, the Court of Exchequer issues a venditioni exponas to sell the goods, an order to sell the lands, or a sci. fa. to collect the debts.

Of the Sheriff's Duty regarding Juries.

The sheriff is the proper officer for the purpose of summoning juries. When causes are at issue, there is a writ of venire facias directed to the sheriff, commanding him to cause a jury to come according to the exigency of the writ. If the sheriff is interested, and the coroner also, then the venire is directed to two persons named by the coroner, called elisors, or it is a ground to challenge the jury.

In a subsequent part of this work we shall see the qualifications, disqualifications, and exemptions of jurors, and also how the annual juror's book is made up. This book is kept by the sheriff, and from that for the year in which the venire is delivered to him, he is to select jurors. By 6 Geo. IV. c. 50, § 12, if there be no book for the year, then the preceding one is to be resorted to. By § 39, he is indemnified for returning any person named, although not qualified or liable to serve; but if done wilfully (excepting grand juries at assizes), he is liable to fine. Persons who have attended may have a certificate thereof from the sheriff, and their names are to be entered in a register for that purpose (§§ 40, 41.) Such also is the duty of the clerk of the peace with respect to persons who have attended sessions, whose names also are to be included in such register. In Middlesex, persons who have served are exempt for two terms and the vacations preceding; in Wales, Hertford, Cambridge, Huntingdon, and Rutland, for one year; in York, for four years; and in all other counties for two years. (§ 42.) Common jurors are to be summoned by leaving a note at their dwelling-house ten days before the day of attendance, and for special juries three days notice is required. (§ 25.) Officers taking rewards for not summoning parties are liable to be fined by the court. (§ 43.) When the jury are selected, the sheriff makes out a panel containing their names alphabetically arranged with their places of abode and other additions. The number selected for counties is not to be less than 48 nor more than 72, unless by order of a judge of assize. The alphabetical list is to be kept for inspection at the sheriff's office seven days before the assize; and the under-sheriff (or the secondary, in London) is to write the name of each juror with his addition. These are put into a balloting box and delivered to the judge's associate, and twelve names are indiscriminately drawn as the jury.

¹ See further, Watson, 254, &c.

The sheriff has also to summon special juries, and the same forms are observed. By § 22, where justices of assize so direct, sheriffs may summon 144 jurors to serve indiscriminately on the civil or criminal side, to be divided into two sets; one set to attend the first half, and the other the second half of the assizes. The 46th sect. imposes a penalty of 50*l.* on the sheriff, one half to the king and the other to the informer, for breach or neglect of the duties herein mentioned.

Sheriff's Duty at the Assizes.

A sufficient time before the assizes the sheriff receives the assize precepts, and also the precepts to summon juries. On receipt of these, he issues his warrants to the bailiffs of each hundred to summon jurors, not exceeding 144 in number, as the judge of assize shall direct; to make proclamation of the assize by advertisement in the newspapers, to give notice to coroners and constables, &c.

The sheriff's return to the assize precepts consists of four panels, as they are termed, i.e. schedules, or rolls of parchment. On the back of the precept the sheriff indorses the reference to the panels, thus:—"The return of this precept appears in certain panels hereunto annexed." These are, 1. The names of the magistrates, mayors, bailiffs of liberties, constables of hundreds, and sheriff's officers of the different hundreds; 2. The names of those summoned as grand jurors; 3. Those of petty jurors; 4. The calendar of prisoners. These are written on parchment, and delivered by the sheriff to the judge, tied up with the precept. The calendar of prisoners must also be printed and circulated. If there be any writs of capias, they must be properly returned at the same time, according to the fact. Copies of the nisi prius or petty jury must be printed on parchment, and one copy annexed to each distringas as it is called in the Queen's Bench, or habeas corpora juratorum in the Common Pleas, which is a writ, returnable at the assizes, commanding the sheriff to have the bodies of the jurors in court, or to distrain them by their lands and goods, that they may appear at the day named. Besides this, the under-sheriff should write the names and additions of each jurymen; and put them into a balloting box, which, with the key, is delivered to the clerk of assize. The sheriff and under-sheriff must be constantly in attendance on the judge, whom they are to provide with suitable lodgings, and also observe all ceremonies usual upon the judge's entry into the town, &c.

Sheriff's Duty at Sessions.

The precept is in this case received from the clerk of the peace, under the hands and seals of the justices of the peace, and the command is pretty similar to that on the precept for assize, mutatis mutandis. The sheriff attends sessions, not personally, but by the under-sheriff. The under-sheriff receives all fines paid there. He is to levy all recognizances estreated at the sessions; but he may, instead of taking the body or goods of the party whose recognizance is forfeited, take a bond for their appearance &c. at the next sessions. Where such person is out of his jurisdiction, the sheriff issues his warrant to the sheriff of the county where the party is, to levy the sum forfeited, &c.

A TABLE OF FEES to be taken by Sheriffs, Under-Sheriffs, Deputy Sheriffs, Sheriff's Agents, Bailiffs, and others the Officers or Ministers of Sheriffs, in England and Wales, pursuant to the 1 Vict. c. 55.

	£.	s.	d.
For every Warrant which shall be granted by the Sheriff to his officer upon any writ or process, in London or Middlesex	0	2	6
-- And on Crown and Outlawry process, an additional	0	2	6
In all other counties, where the most distant part of the county shall not exceed 100 miles from London	0	5	0
-- not exceeding 200 miles	0	6	0
-- exceeding 200 miles	0	7	0
Where there are several defendants in a writ of capias , and warrants are issued thereon by the Under-Sheriff against more than one defendant, no more shall be charged in any case for each warrant after the first than 2s. 6d.
For an Arrest in London	0	10	6
In Middlesex, not exceeding a mile from the General Post Office	0	10	6
-- not exceeding 7 miles from the same place	1	1	0
In other counties, not exceeding a mile from the Officer's residence	0	10	6
-- not exceeding 7 miles	1	1	0
-- exceeding 7 miles	1	11	6
For Conveying the Defendant to Gaol from the place of arrest, per mile	0	1	0
For an Undertaking to give a Bail-Bond	0	10	0
For a Bail-Bond:—
If the debt shall not exceed £50	0	10	6
" " 100	1	1	0
" " 150	1	11	6
" " 300	2	2	0
" " 400	3	3	0
" " 500	4	4	0
If the debt shall exceed £500	5	5	0
For Receiving Money under the statute, for deposit upon arrest, and paying the same into court, if in London or Middlesex	0	6	8
If in any other county	0	10	0

Sheriff's Fees.

181

	£.	s.	d.
For Filing the Bail-Bond :—
If the arrest be made in London or Middlesex	0	2	0
If in any other county	0	4	0
Assignment of Bail or other Bond :—
If in London or Middlesex	0	5	0
If in any other county	0	7	6
For the Return of any Writ of Habeas Corpus, if one action	0	12	0
And for each action after the first	0	2	6
For the Bailiff to conduct Prisoner to gaol, per diem	0	10	6
And Travelling Expences, per mile	0	1	0
For Searching Office for Detainers	0	1	0
Bailiff's Messenger for that purpose	0	2	6
To the Bailiffs for executing Warrants on Extent, Capias utlagatum, Levam facias, Fi. fa., Ca. sa., Ne exeat, Attachment, Elegit, Writ of Possession, Forfeited Recognizance, Process from Pipe Office, and other like matters, for each—
If the distance from the Sheriff's office or the Bailiff's residence do not exceed five miles	1	1	0
If beyond that distance, per mile	0	0	6
On Distringas, in London	0	5	0
In Middlesex, not exceeding five miles from the General Post Office	0	6	0
-- exceeding five miles	0	10	0
In other counties, not exceeding five miles from officer's residence	0	5	0
-- exceeding five miles	0	10	0
For each man left in possession, when absolutely necessary—
-- if boarded, per diem	0	3	6
-- if not boarded, per diem	0	5	0
For every Sale by Auction, notwithstanding the defendant should become bankrupt or insolvent, where the property sold does not produce more than 300 l. , 5 l. per cent.; 400 l. , 4 l. per cent.; 500 l. , 3 l. per cent.; and where it exceeds 500 l. , 2½ per cent.
For the Certificate of Sale, to save auction duty	0	2	6
Bond of Indemnity, besides stamps and stationery	0	10	0
Certificate of Execution having issued, for Record	0	5	0
On Writs of Trial and Inquiry :—
For a Deputation	1	1	0
On lodging Writ, for entering Cause, Warrant for summoning Jury; which fee shall be forfeited in case of countermand of trial	0	4	0
On Trial or Inquisition :—
Sheriff, for presiding	1	1	0
Bailiff, for summoning Jury, and attendance in Court	0	4	0
And if not held at the office of the Under-Sheriff :—
For Hire of Room, if actually paid, not exceeding	0	10	0
For Travelling Expences of Under-Sheriff from his office to place where the Trial or Inquisition shall be held, per mile	0	1	0
To the Bailiff, from his residence, per mile	0	0	6
In all cases in which it shall appear to the Master that a saving of expence has accrued to the parties by reason of a Writ of Trial having been executed by Deputation, the fee for such Deputation shall be allowed.
If more than one Trial or Inquisition be held at the same time and place, the travelling expences of the Under-Sheriff from his office, and of the Bailiff from his residence, to the place where the Trial or Inquisition is held, are to be apportioned rateably to the parties.
On Writs of Extent, Elegit, Capias utlagatum, and others of the like nature :—
For summoning the Jury, use of room, presiding at the Inquisition, &c.	2	2	0
Jury	0	12	0
For Travelling Expences of Under-Sheriff from his office to place of inquisition, per mile	0	1	0
For Drawing and Engrossing the Inquisition, per folio	0	1	6
For a Summons for the attendance of a Witness	0	5	0
In Replevin :—
Bond, if the amount be under 20 l.	0	10	6
If above 20 l.	1	1	0
Precept to Bailiff	0	2	6
Notice for Service on Defendant	0	2	6
Broker, where the sum demanded and due shall exceed 20 l. and shall not exceed 50 l. , for Appraisement and Affidavit of value	0	10	0
-- where it shall exceed 50 l.	1	1	0
-- And his travelling Expences from his residence to the place where the goods are, per mile	0	0	6

	£.	s.	d.
Bailiff, for summoning parties, and delivering goods to Tenant	1	1	0
-- And his Travelling Expences, same as Broker.
For the Warrant, Record, and return of a Re. Fa. Lo., Accedas ad Curiam, Pone, or Writ of False Judgment	0	16	6
For Writ of Retorno Habendo	0	4	6
For each Summons on a Writ of Scire Facias, or for the service of a Writ of Capias where there is no arrest	0	5	0
And mileage, per mile	0	1	0
For Recording each Demand or Proclamation under Writs of Outlawry	0	2	0
For Bailiff, for making each demand or proclamation on Writs of Outlawry, in London and Middlesex	0	2	6
In other counties	0	5	0
And Travelling Expences, if the distance shall exceed five miles, then for every mile beyond that distance	0	0	6
For any Supersedeas, Writ of Error, Order, Liberate, or Discharge to any writ or process, or for the release of any defendant in custody (unless in the prison of the county), or of any goods taken in execution	0	4	6
For the Return of any writ or process, and Filing the same, exclusive of the fee paid in filing	0	2	6
Jury Process:—
For Return to Common Venire	0	3	6
The like to Special	0	5	0
The like on Distringas or Habeas Corpora for Common Jury	0	12	0
The like for Special Jury	0	14	0
The like, with a View	1	0	0
The like to a Traverse Venire	0	14	6
For Attendance, naming Special Jury	2	2	0
Twenty-four Warrants to summon Special Jury	1	4	0
For Bailiff, for summoning each Special Juror	0	2	0
Sheriff, attending in Court	1	1	0
For attending a View, the fees as allowed by Rule of Court, Trinity Term, 7 Geo. IV., 1826.
For any duty not herein provided for, such sum as one of the Masters of the Courts of Queen's Bench or Exchequer, or one of the Prothonotaries of the Court of Common Pleas may, upon special application, allow

CORONERS.¹

These are very ancient officers at common law, being equal in point of antiquity with sheriffs. They are so called because they deal principally with pleas of the crown. There are a certain number in every county, usually four in each. The court of the coroner is a court of record, to inquire as to the cause of any sudden or violent death, or of the death of a party in prison; and for this purpose he must, together with a jury of twelve men, hold an inquest upon view of the corpse, without which it would be void. His duty being partly judicial, cannot be executed by deputy; but the coroner for the admiralty may depute another to execute his office pro tempore.

Coroners are of three kinds: one by virtue of office, as the lord chief justice of the court of Queen's Bench (who is principal coroner) and the other judges; another, by charter; and a third, by election, of which kind we proceed more particularly to treat. There are also a coroner to the admiralty, whose jurisdiction extends only to deaths on board ships in certain great rivers and parts of the seas; and a coroner to the verge, that is, over deaths in the royal palace.

¹ Chit. Eq. Ind. 250; 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 346, and notes; Impey's Off. of Sheriff and Coroner, 473 &c.

² But now, by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83, to prevent unnecessary expence and delay in the holding of inquests, a county coroner is empowered to appoint by writing under his hand (subject to the approval of the lord chancellor), a deputy to act for him in case of illness or necessary absence.

Coroners of counties are chosen according to the queen's writ De coronatore eligendo, directed to the sheriff. They are chosen by the freeholders, and must be men of substance and credit; and a similar qualification by property is required of them as of the sheriff. The office is held during life; but a coroner becoming incapable of acting, or being guilty of misconduct, may be removed by writ De coronatore exonerando; and where he is living out of the county, or is in prison, or he suppresses his inquisition instead of returning it to the next gaol delivery, it is sufficient ground for removal;¹ and, by 25 Geo. II. c. 29, extortion, neglect, or misbehaviour, are also grounds of removal.

The coroner's jurisdiction is limited to the county, liberty, or precinct for which he is chosen; and his jurisdiction cannot be extended by the crown. In many cases his jurisdiction is concurrent with that of the coroner of the admiralty, or coroner of the verge of the royal palace. Where a felony or misdemeanor happens on the borders of two counties, or within 500 yards thereof, or partly in one county and partly in another, or where it is begun in one and completed in another, by the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, it may be tried in either county; and this applies to the duties of a coroner, so that the coroner of either county may hold the inquest. And by sec. 9 of that act, when one is killed in one county, the coroner may inquire of all accessories and procurers before the fact, though the procurements were in another county.

The 7 & 8 Vic. c. 92, intituled "An act to amend the law respecting the office of county coroner," after reciting that "the regulations for the election of coroners for counties are insufficient, and that such elections are made with much inconvenience, and attended with great and unnecessary expence," repeals the 58 Geo. III. c. 95 (the act previously in force for regulating the election of coroners), and enacts, That it shall be lawful for her majesty, upon a petition from the quarter sessions (or whenever it shall seem fit to her majesty to direct the issue of a writ De coronatore eligendo for the election of an additional coroner for any county above the number customarily elected), to order that such county shall be divided into districts, that a coroner may be assigned to each for the purpose of holding inquests therein.²

That every such coroner, though designated as the coroner of a particular district, and chosen only by the electors resident therein, shall be considered as a coroner for the whole county, and have the same jurisdiction as if he had been elected by the freeholders of the county at large. But he is to hold inquests only within his own district, except during the illness or unavoidable absence, or vacancy in the office, of a coroner for another district; and in such case he must certify the cause in his inquisition. And each coroner is required to reside in his own district, or within two miles thereof.

That, upon the election of a coroner, the sheriff shall hold a court within the district, on a day to be appointed by him, not less than seven nor more than fourteen days after the receipt of the writ; and if the election be not then determined, but a poll be demanded, shall adjourn

¹ Exp. Warwick Freeholders, 3 Atk. 184; 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 348; Exp. Parnell, 1 Jac. & W. 451; 1 Keb. 280; 1 Chit. Burn. J. 874.

² Nothing in this act touching the division of counties into districts, or the election of coroners, extends to the county of Chester, or to any place where the appointment or election takes place otherwise than under the writ De coronatore eligendo.—Sec. 27.

the court till the next day but one, when the polling shall continue open for two days, the expences thereof being defrayed by the candidates.

That the coroner may impose a fine not exceeding 40s. for the non-attendance of any person summoned as a juror or witness on an inquest.

That he shall not, under a penalty of 50*l.*, act as an attorney on the trial of any person charged by the inquest with any crime.

That the sessions may order the coroner's travelling expences to be paid, if they see fit, though no inquest has in fact been held.

And that the same poundage fees or other remuneration shall be paid to the coroner for the execution of writs or other process directed to him when the sheriff is a party or otherwise disqualified to act, as the sheriff would have been entitled to in the like case.¹

Coroner's Duty at Inquests on Deaths.

The duty of holding inquests in cases of accidental or sudden death is by far the most important in the office of a coroner. When such a death happens, the township, through a peace officer, should immediately give notice to the coroner, and ought not to bury the body before he come; and if they suffer the body to lie too long without such notice, the township is liable to be fined. After receiving such notice, the coroner issues his precept to the constable of the township to return a jury, or on neglect he may be fined 100*l.*² If the peace officer neglects his duty as to the return and appearance of the jury, he is liable to be fined by a judge of assize; but the coroner has no power to impose such fine. As there are several coroners in a county, the inquest which is first completed is in point of law the perfect one. An inquest ought to be held as soon as possible after discovery of the death; but it cannot be held on a Sunday. It may be held apart from the corpse, if, after the jury are sworn and charged to make the inquiry, the corpse be first viewed by the jury in the presence of the coroner (which is absolutely necessary). If the body has been buried, the coroner should order it to be disinterred.

After this the coroner proceeds to investigate all evidence relating to the death on oath. He may also inquire as to accessories before the fact, but not as to accessories after the fact. At the inquest the whole of the evidence, as nearly as possible in the very words, should be taken down; and the coroner should bind over such witnesses as are necessary, to appear at the trial of the accused party, if any.

The verdict of the jury should be reduced into writing, and signed and attested by the coroner and all the jury.³ The coroner then issues his warrant to apprehend and commit any party charged with the death, and a warrant also for the burial of the body, though this may be done before the verdict if necessary.

It may here be observed, that it is illegal to publish the evidence taken on the inquest, as it may tend to prejudice the case when it comes to trial. And the coroner may exclude any person from being present, and may adjourn the inquest at his discretion.

¹ No coroner of the queen's household and verge of the queen's palaces, or of the admiralty, or of the city of London, borough of Southwark, or any place not contributing to the county rates, is entitled to any fee, benefit, or recompence under this act.—Sec. 25.

² 3 Hen. VII. c. 1.

³ As to the form, see 1 Chit. Burn. J. 879. 3 Id. 324.

By the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, the inquisition must be returned to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to take place, or the coroner is liable to be fined; and he is also liable to a fine if he is not present at the assizes when the trial comes on. If there are any defects in the inquisition, they may be fatal to the whole proceeding; for section 20 of that act, which cures many trifling defects in indictments, does not extend to coroners' inquests; but formal defects may be amended at the discretion of the court of Queen's Bench. The inquisition is equal to a finding by a grand jury, and a party accused may be tried on it without indictment; though it is usual also to prefer an indictment, and the party is tried on both at once.

The 7 W. IV. & 1 Vic. c. 68 directs, that a schedule of fees payable on holding inquests shall be made by the justices at quarter sessions for counties, and by the town council for boroughs; that, at the conclusion of every inquest, the coroner shall advance and pay all the expences incurred, according to such schedule; and that within four months he lay an account thereof before the quarter sessions or council, which shall make an order for the repayment, together with 6s. 8d. for every inquest holden by him, over and above all other fees to which he is by law entitled, on the county or borough treasurer.¹

Coroner's Duty and Powers in other Matters.

Coroners are also to inquire as to treasure trove (which, as we have before seen, belongs to the crown), and as to wrecks and royal fish. He is also the person to execute process when there is sufficient objection to the sheriffs doing it; and sometimes the queen's special writ is directed to him. He is bound to be present in the county court, to pronounce judgment of outlawry, as we have before seen. He is also a conservator of the peace in relation to all felonies, and may suppress affrays by arresting the parties.

His privileges are, that he is exempt from serving offices inconsistent with his duties, as attending as a juror; nor can he be arrested while in execution of his office. If he neglect his duty, or abuse his office, very severe penalties are inflicted.

¹ Before the passing of the 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 89, much difficulty frequently arose respecting the attendance and remuneration of medical witnesses at coroners' inquests. But that act empowers the coroner to summon the medical practitioner who attended the deceased at or immediately before his death, if he were attended by any such, or otherwise any legally qualified medical practitioner in actual practice at or near the place where the death happened, and to direct, if he think proper, a post mortem examination of the body, either with or without an analysis of the contents of the stomach or intestines; and a disobedience of such summons or order incurs a forfeiture of 5*l*. If the jury are not satisfied with the evidence of such medical witness, a majority of them may, in writing, require the coroner to summon any other whom they may name; and a refusal of the coroner to issue his summons accordingly is a misdemeanor. And if any person shall state on oath before the coroner that in his belief the death of the deceased was occasioned by the improper treatment or neglect of any medical practitioner, such practitioner shall not be allowed to assist at the post mortem examination. For his attendance at any inquest in obedience to the order of the coroner, every medical practitioner is entitled to a fee or remuneration of one guinea, or, if he has also made a post-mortem examination of the body, of two guineas; which fee the coroner is required, by the 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vic. c. 68, to pay to him at the close of the inquest, and he may obtain repayment from the county rate. No such fee, however, is to be paid for any post-mortem examination made without the previous direction of the coroner, nor to the medical officer of any hospital or public institution whose duty it was to attend the deceased.

JUSTICES OF PEACE.

Justices of peace are usually appointed by special commission under the great seal; though some hold the office by act of parliament, and others by grant or charter, as the mayors or other chief officers in corporate towns.

By stat. 1 Mary, sess. 2. c. 8, § 2, no sheriff can be a justice of peace; nor can a coroner; and by 5 Geo. II. c. 18, § 2, no practising attorney, solicitor, or proctor. But this does not extend to justices by charter, &c.; nor to peers of parliament, or the eldest sons of such, or persons qualified to serve as knights of the shire; nor to the heads of colleges or halls in either of the universities; and all esquires and gentlemen of the law, and persons of higher degree, are eligible.

A mayor is not of necessity a justice of the peace, yet in many cases, by statute, he has equal power with justices, as with regard to the customs, alehouses, the Lord's day, swearing, gaming, weights and measures, &c.

Justices of peace, on their first appointment, take a certain oath, to be administered by the clerk of the peace for the county, &c. In order to be qualified, they must have an estate in lands of the clear yearly value of 100*l.* in possession, or of 300*l.* in immediate reversion or remainder; and of this they must make oath.¹ The oath is to be subscribed and kept by the clerk of the peace, who, on demand and payment of 2*s.*, is to deliver a copy to any person requiring the same.²

Their Jurisdiction.—Although, generally, justices have no jurisdiction out of their county, yet in many cases the presence of an offender in their county gives them jurisdiction, though the offence were committed in another, as in cases of felony, or of an offender coming from off the high seas, or of tenants fraudulently removing goods. By 9 Geo. I. c. 7, § 3, although a justice's house is out of the county, he may there grant warrants &c. as to offences within the county; and by 15 Geo. II. c. 24, justices of liberties or corporations may commit offenders to the house of correction of the county in which the liberty &c. is situate; and by 16 Geo. II. c. 18, they may enforce rates, though they are themselves also chargeable therewith.

By 24 Geo. II. c. 55, § 1, where an offender escapes from one county into another, the justice's warrant of the former must be indorsed by a justice of the latter in order to be executed; and the 13 Geo. III. c. 31, and 54 Geo. III. c. 186, § 2, regulate as to escapes to Scotland or Ireland. By the 7 Geo. IV. c. 38, they have authority over offences committed upon the sea, and places where the admiralty has jurisdiction; and there are many places where they have a partial and concurrent jurisdiction.³

The duties of justices are ministerial or judicial, or both.

By the 45 Geo. III. c. 48, § 3, they are, by virtue of their office, commissioners of land tax. They are also, by 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, § 61, and 4 Geo. IV. c. 95, trustees for the turnpike roads in their county.

¹ 5 Geo. II. c. 18, and 18 Geo. II. c. 20.

² Steer's Parish Law, 283—8.

³ Steer's Parish Law, 278—83.

It has been held, that where they are personally concerned in any case, they ought not to act as magistrates; but if they are assaulted or grossly insulted in their office, no other justice being present, they may commit the offender.

In most cases, unless an act of parliament direct otherwise, the justices should in the first instance issue a summons instead of a warrant, in which the hour and day are fixed for appearance. The service of the summons should be personal, unless that is dispensed with by statute.

But in cases of felony, larcenies, breaches of the peace, and generally where the proceeding is in the name of the queen, and also in cases between party and party where the body of the offender is liable, a warrant is the regular process. Wherever a statute gives a justice jurisdiction over an offence, it impliedly gives him power to apprehend any person charged therewith by warrant; especially after a summons has been neglected. So libellers may be brought up by warrant, and, in default of bail, committed to prison.

Although two justices be required by statute to "hear and determine," yet one alone may issue the warrant.

It is still doubtful whether justices have power to administer oaths, unless where it is expressly given by statute. As to voluntary oaths, in extra-judicial matters, they ought not to be administered, although it is frequently done; as, for instance, by dealers who, wishing to puff off their goods to the public, go before a magistrate and make oath as to their quality.¹

On the taking of depositions, they are to be put down in writing by the magistrate's clerk at the time, as nearly in the words spoken as possible.² A magistrate may commit or remand a party accused for further examination, if necessary; but it should only be for a reasonable time, or he may render himself liable to an action.³

The law as to taking bail in cases of felony is much improved by the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, which provides that where a strong presumption of guilt does not prevail against the party accused from the evidence adduced, justices may take bail from the party, and discharge him pro tem.; and they must certify such bailment, and bind over witnesses &c. to appear at the trial. The same is provided as to misdemeanors; and magistrates are liable to fine for any breach of their duty therein mentioned.

The judicial authority of magistrates is derived partly from their commission, and partly from acts of parliament. In some proceedings they assume the character of a civil tribunal, as in disputes between masters and servants, &c., and in enforcing the payment of rates, fines, &c. In others they act as criminal judges, either acting on their own judgment, or by the assistance of a jury at the sessions. Where by act of parliament two are required to hear and determine any offence, or do any other judicial act, they should both be present to hear the evidence and consult together. And where a special authority is given to them out of sessions, it ought to appear in their orders that such authority was exactly followed. To a certain extent, in matters done in their judicial capacity, they are judges of record. If, upon conviction, the offender is to be fined to the queen, they are to estreat the fine, and send the estreat (i. e. an extract of the record) into the Exchequer; and in all cases they should return the conviction to the next sessions.

¹ See 4 Chit. Bla. Com 137, and notes; Steer 292.

² Davis v. Capper, 9 B. & C., 3 Man & Ry.

³ Mills v. Collet 6 Bing. 52.

It is the duty of magistrates to take notes of the evidence, in order, if necessary, that they should be enabled to set forth the evidence upon the record of conviction with accuracy;¹ and if the party accused do not appear before them, still greater care should be taken, that justice be done him.² It is doubtful whether parties have a right to employ professional agents before magistrates upon a ministerial investigation; but where they are exercising a judicial function, it seems that the accused has a right to such assistance. The former may, by the determination of the magistrate, be altogether private, and therefore it is not strictly lawful to publish an account of the investigation; for it is not conclusive, as the latter is.

The magistrate's duties with regard to disputes between masters and workmen will be seen under the title of MASTER AND SERVANT.

In cases of riot, by the 41 Geo. III. c. 76, § 2, two justices may order an allowance to high constables for extraordinary expences; and by 33 Geo. III. c. 55, § 1, they may fine officers, such as constables, overseers, or other peace or parish officers, not exceeding 40s., for neglect or breach of duty, subject to appeal to the quarter sessions. So, out of sessions, they may award costs, by the 18 Geo. III. c. 19; and, by sec. 2, where a penalty of 5*l.* is imposed, the magistrate in certain cases may order the costs to come out of it.

The 3 Geo. IV. c. 43 provides the form of a conviction; and, with regard to the recovery of penalties, the 5 Geo. IV. c. 18 provides that it shall be by distress on the offender's goods, or he may be detained till the return of the warrant, unless he give security for his appearance; and if he has not sufficient goods, he may be committed to prison. If persons use threats to another, or excite reasonable alarm of serious bodily injury, they may be bound in recognizances to keep the peace for any time in the magistrate's discretion.³

Their commission enumerates all the various classes of offences, and gives them cognizance thereof; and although it does not mention murder or manslaughter, yet under the general word felony they have jurisdiction in those matters. However, in practice, they abstain from trying homicide or capital offences; and it has been held, they have no jurisdiction over forgery or perjury.

They are amply protected in the execution of their office; and slander and abuse addressed to a justice of peace is punishable by indictment. It is different with regard to words spoken of him; but all words which by law amount to slander are, of course, punishable in the usual mode as between private individuals. The power to commit for such offences is questionable, and at all events it must be on warrant, and for a time certain.

¹ R. v. Warnford, 4 D. & R. 489.

² Steer, 309; Willes v. Bridges, 2 Barn.

³ Paley on Convictions, by Dowling, 26. & A. 278.

The office of JUSTICE OF THE PEACE FOR THE METROPOLIS is specially provided for by the establishment of stipendiary police magistrates, who are invested with all the powers, and execute the duties (except as to the business at sessions) of a justice of the peace within the Metropolitan Police District. The act now in force for their regulation is the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, by which their number is limited to twenty-seven; and, for the execution of their duties, nine police courts are established in different parts of the metropolis, including the public office in Bow-street. They are magistrates of the said courts, and justices of the counties of Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, Essex, and Hertford, city and liberty of Westminster, and liberty of the Tower of London. They are appointed by the crown, and must have been practising barristers of seven years standing; but do not require the qualification by estate which is necessary in the case of other justices of the peace.

One magistrate at least is required to attend at each of the said police courts on every day (except Sunday, Christmas-day, Good Friday, or any public fast or thanksgiving day) from ten o'clock in the morning till five in the afternoon, and at such other times as necessity may require, or the secretary of state shall direct. Although they have concurrent jurisdiction, the magistrates of each office act independently, and confine themselves to a particular local district, unless particular circumstances require general co-operation. The secretary of state is empowered to direct at which court each of them shall attend, and also to make rules for regulating the manner of conducting the business.

A single magistrate sitting at any of the said courts is empowered to do any act which is by law authorized to be done by one or more justices of the peace. But they are not competent to act, either alone or with other justices, in any thing which is to be done at a special or petty sessions, or at any general or quarter sessions.

A warrant of any of the said magistrates, in respect of any matter arising within the Metropolitan Police District, may be served out of the said district by the constable to whom it is directed without being indorsed by a justice of the county where it is executed.

And every summons or warrant issued by any justice of peace of the counties of Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, Essex, or Hertford, requiring any person residing within the Metropolitan Police District to appear at any place without the said district to answer any information or complaint touching any matter arising within the said district, is utterly void, except for the purpose of enforcing any rates or taxes levied within any parish or place, part only of which is within the Metropolitan Police District.

The magistrates, clerks, ushers, doorkeepers, and messengers of the said courts are, while in office, or within six months afterwards, incapable of voting at any election of a member of parliament for the counties of Middlesex or Surrey, the cities of London or Westminster, or the boroughs of Marylebone, Finsbury, Tower Hamlets, Southwark, Lambeth, or Greenwich; and if they should endeavour to persuade any voter to give or withhold his vote, or otherwise interfere therein, except in the discharge of their duty, they are liable to a penalty of 100*l*. They are also exempt from serving on any juries or inquests whatever.

CONSTABLES.

Constables are of two kinds: high constables and petty constables.

HIGH CONSTABLES.—The office of high constable extends generally over a hundred or other large division of a county, and is of much higher dignity than that of petty constables, whose duties are confined to the parish, borough, or liberty for which they are chosen, and over whom the high constable has the general superintendence, and is to a certain extent responsible for their conduct.

The appointment of high constables is as old as the 13 Edw. I. c. 6, at least. In those days, when every man was bound to possess certain arms for the general defence of the land, the high constable was appointed to inspect all matters relating thereto. Now, the greater part of his duty, as an officer, is to execute the precepts of the justices of the peace. The other usual branches of his office, such as surveying bridges, issuing precepts concerning the appointment of overseers of the poor, surveyors of highways, assessors and collectors of the land and assessed taxes, alehouse licences, levying of county rates, returning lists of jurors, &c., are vested in him merely as a matter of public convenience. His office is partly ministerial and partly judicial.

Anciently, both high and special constables, where there was a feudal lord, were chosen by such lord, his steward, or the suitors, in the leet; or, where there was no feudal lord, by the sheriff in his torn.

The high constable is now usually chosen by a majority of the justices of the division in which the hundred lies, or by the county justices at their quarter sessions. None but such as reside within the hundred are liable to be appointed. In Westminster, by 29 Geo. II. c. 25, a high constable is elected annually by the dean, or high steward, or his deputy, at a court leet.

A high constable cannot be called upon to act as an overseer of the poor.

PETTY CONSTABLES.—The constable of the vill or parish, or petty constable, as he is called, to distinguish him from the high constable, is he who is generally understood by the term "constable" when used without any addition. His duty is, to prevent offences against the laws, to detect and apprehend offenders, and generally to preserve the peace of the district in which he resides. He is the proper officer of the justice of peace, and bound to execute his warrants. It is also his duty to attend on coroners in order to execute their warrants, as well as on the justices of assize at the gaol delivery, and the justices of peace at the general and special sessions.

Formerly the petty constable was appointed for a vill, township, or tithing, and not for a parish; and the number depended upon the custom of the place. He was elected by the jury, and appointed by the lord or steward of the court leet of the manor in which his pre-

¹ By the 35 Geo. III. c. 51, § 19, high constables employed in collecting county rates might be required by the justices to give security; and by 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 13, high constables were required to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, besides the common oath of office. But now, by cinet lay; and in some places, by custom, the officer of the leet appointed without any election by the jury. But as a constable is a principal officer of the peace, the justices of the peace have, ever since the institution of their office, taken upon them to nominate and swear in constables, whenever they were neglected to be appointed by the leet, as also in all cases of necessity; and whenever unable or unfit persons have been chosen, they have interfered to remove them.

7 & 8 Vic. c. 33, high constables chosen after the 1st October, 1845, are relieved from the collection of county rates, attendance at quarter sessions, and certain other duties, and are not required to take any other than the oath of office.

It being settled, however, that the election of the constable is in the people, it had long been customary in many parishes for the inhabitants to elect their officer in vestry, who was afterwards sworn in before a justice of the peace. And now, by a recent act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, it is enacted, that no petty constable, headborough, borsholder, tithingman, or peace officer of the like description, shall be appointed for any parish, township, or vill, within the limits of that act, at any court leet or torn, except for the performance of duties unconnected with the preservation of the peace, or with the execution of that act, nor otherwise than under the provisions of that act or of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 33 (Rural Police Act).

And by the same act it is further enacted, that the justices of the peace of every county in England shall, on some day after the 24th of March and before the 9th of April in every year, hold a special petty session in their several divisions for the appointment of parochial constables; and the manner of proceeding with respect to such appointment is laid down in the subsequent sections as follows.

Within the first seven days of the month of February in each year, the justices of the peace are to issue a precept to the overseers of each parish in their division, requiring them to make out and return, before the 24th day of March, a list in writing of a competent number of men within their respective parishes qualified and liable to serve as constables, and, with such precept, a notice of the time and place of holding the said special session. The overseers are then to summon a meeting of the inhabitants in vestry, to be holden within fourteen days after the receipt of such precept, for the purpose of making out such list; and the vestry may annex to such return the names of any number of men willing to serve the office of constable, and whom they will recommend to be appointed, although not having the qualification hereafter mentioned. True copies of the list so agreed to in vestry are to be made out and signed by the overseers; and where any of the persons named therein shall have served the office of constable in the said parish, in person or by substitute, they are to set against his name the date of the year of such service. A copy is to be affixed to the principal door of every church, chapel, and other public place of religious worship in the parish, on the first three Sundays in the month of March, with a notice subjoined, stating when and where objections to the list will be heard by the justices; and the original

Nothing in this act is to apply to the city of London, the Metropolitan Police District, or any municipal borough within the 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 76, nor to any place in which rates are levied for the payment of constables under the General Watching and Lighting Act (3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 20) or any local act, nor to the county palatine of Chester. By 7 & 8 Vic. c. 52, the provisions are extended to every liberty having a separate commission of the peace, and not being an incorporated borough. No turnpike toll to be taken for any horse, police van, carriage or cart in the service of the superintendent constable, provided he produce the certificate of his appointment, or have on police dress. Persons fraudulently claiming this exemption incur a penalty of 5*l*.

list, or a copy thereof, is to be kept by the overseers, for the purpose of being perused by any of the inhabitants, at any reasonable time during the first three weeks of the month of March, without fee or reward; and on or before the day limited for making their return, the overseers shall sign and return the original list to the justices, as required by the precept. Overseers neglecting to return such list, or to publish such copies, or leaving out the name of any person who ought to be included therein, or knowingly making a false return, are liable, on conviction before two justices, to forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding 5*l*.

The overseers are then required to attend the special session for the appointment of constables, to verify the said list, and answer such questions touching it as shall be put to them by the justices. The justices may strike out the names of any persons who shall be proved to their satisfaction, either by the oath of the party complaining or upon other proof, not to be qualified or liable to serve; and the list, when duly corrected, shall be allowed and signed by the justices present, or any two of them. And, from the list so allowed, the justices shall choose the names of such number of persons as they shall deem necessary (having regard to the extent and population of the parish) to act as constables within the parish during the year then next following, and until other constables shall be chosen and sworn to act in their stead; and shall cause the persons so chosen to be summoned before them in order to be sworn in.

As to the qualification and liability of persons to serve the office of constable, it is enacted by section 5 of the same act, that every able-bodied man within the parish, between the ages of 25 and 55, rated to the relief of the poor or to the county rate on any tenement of the net yearly value of 4*l*. or upwards, shall be qualified and liable to serve, except the following:

Exemptions.—All peers; members of the House of Commons; judges; justices of the peace; deputy lieutenants; clergymen in holy orders; Roman Catholic priests who have duly taken and subscribed the oaths and declarations required by law; Protestant Dissenting teachers or preachers in a congregation whose place of meeting is duly registered, and following no secular occupation except that of a schoolmaster, and producing a certificate of some justice of the peace of their having taken the oaths and subscribed the declarations required by law; schoolmasters; serjeants and barristers; attorneys, solicitors, and proctors; conveyancers and special pleaders; officers of courts; coroners, gaolers, and keepers of houses of correction; physicians, surgeons, and apothecaries; officers in the navy or army on full pay; persons enrolled and serving in any corps of yeomanry; licensed pilots; masters of vessels in the buoy and light service; household servants of her majesty; officers of customs and excise; sheriffs, and sheriff's officers; high constables; clerks to boards of guardians; masters of union workhouses; county or district constables; parish clerks; registrars and superintendent registrars of births, deaths, and marriages; churchwardens, overseers, and relieving officers, are exempt from serving the office of constable under this act.

Disqualifications.—All licensed victuallers, and persons licensed to deal in any excisable liquor, or to sell beer by retail; all gamekeepers; and all persons who have been attainted of any treason or felony, or convicted of any infamous crime, are disqualified.

And where any person shall have served the office of constable, either in person or by substitute, he shall not be liable to be again chosen until every other person in the parish liable and qualified shall have also served.

If any qualified person chosen as aforesaid shall be unwilling to serve the office of constable in person, and shall find a substitute, he shall attend with his substitute at the time and place appointed for swearing in constables; and if the justices approve of such substitute, they shall cause the oath to be administered to him instead of the person so chosen and unwilling to serve. But the service of such substitute shall not be reckoned as his own service, so as to exempt him from being sooner chosen to serve in his own person than otherwise he would have been liable to.

Any person chosen by the justices and duly summoned to be sworn, who shall refuse, or (without reasonable cause, to be allowed by the said justices) shall neglect to attend and be sworn in, or to find a qualified substitute to be sworn in his stead, shall, upon conviction before two justices, forfeit not exceeding 10*l*. And any person who, after being sworn as constable, shall refuse or wilfully neglect to act in the execution of his office, shall, upon conviction before two justices, forfeit for every such offence a sum not more than 5*l*.

The vestry assembled for the purpose of making such return as aforesaid may, if they think proper, resolve that one or more paid constables shall be appointed for their parish; and in such case a copy of the resolution, and of the amount of salary proposed, shall be sent by the overseers to the justices with the return before mentioned. And the justices of peace, if satisfied with the amount of salary agreed to be paid, shall appoint so many paid constables to act for that parish as shall be agreed to by the resolution; or if the same resolution shall have been agreed to by more parishes than one, adjoining to each other, they may, if they think fit, appoint the same paid constables to act conjointly for all such parishes. And in every parish in which a paid constable shall be so appointed, the justices, if they think fit, need not appoint any unpaid constable; or may appoint a smaller number of unpaid constables than they had otherwise resolved on appointing. And the salary of every such paid constable shall be paid by the overseers out of the poor rate.

Within fourteen days after the swearing in of constables, the clerk to the justices shall send to every justice within the division, and also to the clerk of the peace, for the purpose of being laid before the next court of general or quarter sessions, a list of all the constables appointed in the division, and the parishes for which they have been appointed; and the overseers shall affix to the door of their respective parish churches a list of the constables appointed in their respective parishes.

And the said constables shall have within the whole county, and also within all liberties and franchises and detached parts of other counties situated therein, and also in every adjoining county, all the powers, privileges, and immunities, and shall be liable to all the duties and responsibilities, of a constable within his constableness; but shall not be bound to act as a constable beyond the parish for which they are appointed, without the special warrant of a justice of the peace. Provided, that in those counties in which a chief constable or superintendent shall have been appointed under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93 (Rural Police Act), the constables appointed under this act for any parish within the district for which he is appointed shall be subject to his authority.

Vacancies occasioned by the death or disqualification of any constable during his year of office, or otherwise, are to be filled up at the next petty session of the peace; and in the mean time the person who last served, if not disqualified or exempt, shall be bound to act. If the constable making the vacancy was serving as a substitute, the justices shall summon the person originally chosen to attend and be sworn, or to find another substitute, for the remainder of the year; but otherwise they shall choose another out of the allowed list then in force; and if less than two hundred days shall have elapsed since the first appointment of constables for that year, the service of the person so appointed to act shall be reckoned to him as service for the year.

Duties and Powers.—A constable is not justified in arresting for a mere insult, though he may admonish the parties; but if either party strike the other, or offer to do so, and threaten personal violence, he may be taken and detained, or carried before a magistrate. It is common, if the affray be at night, to take bail for appearance before the magistrate in the morning. When a private person delivers another in charge for an affray committed in his presence, the constable is bound to receive him. But if called in after the affray is over, a warrant to arrest is necessary, unless a dangerous wound has been given, or a felony may ensue. Persons obstructing a constable in the discharge of his duty may be arrested, but may not be struck by him. But if a party in an affray fly, he may be pursued and taken.

If there is an affray in a house, or a great noise, or disorderly drinking, at an unseasonable hour of the night, a constable, after declaring the cause of his coming, and demanding admission in vain, may break open doors. But where felony is being committed, as exposing infants, or cheating by false dice, any person may arrest or pursue and take the offender, although there be no breach of the peace. So may any person to prevent murder, and it is their duty to do so; and if hue and cry is raised, every person is bound to assist, on pain of fine and imprisonment. And so may any person arrest a suspected felon; but he does it at the risk of an action, if the suspected person be innocent.

Constables, after notice to the other inhabitants of the house, may break open doors to arrest a fugitive felon, and, if necessary, may use force; and if death ensue, it is not murder. But private persons cannot do this without a warrant. So, if a dangerous wound be given, the constable, though not present, is bound, on complaint, to arrest the party and carry him before a magistrate. So on a direct charge of felony, however false it prove ultimately to be, unless such falsity is reasonably apparent to him. So on reasonable suspicion, merely of felony he may arrest; but not so a private person, unless he can prove the actual commission of the crime. By the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, § 63, (Malicious Trespass Act), persons found committing any of the offences enumerated in that act (except angling) may be apprehended by a peace officer, or by the owner of the property injured or his servant, without a warrant; and the person to whom any property is offered to be sold, pawned, or delivered, having reasonable cause to suspect that any such offence (as those enumerated in the other sections of the act) has been committed, may apprehend and carry the party offering the same before a magistrate. And similar enactments are contained in 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, § 28 (Malicious Injuries Act). These offences are enumerated in the statutes, and will be more particularly referred to hereafter.

The 12 Geo. II. c. 29, § 8, and 55 Geo. III. c. 31, § 12, provide how the constables shall account for money received by them in respect of the county rate. Where actions are brought against the hundred for riots &c., by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 4, § 31, process is to be served on the high constable, who is to give notice to two justices, and he may conduct the defence to the action as he shall be advised. Where the damage does not exceed 30*l.*, the party damnified is not to bring an action; but, in seven days after the damage, is to give notice of his claim to the high constable, who within seven days is to exhibit it to two justices, and they shall appoint a special petty sessions for deciding the matter; and the high constable is to give the claimant notice of the time and place. The same duties and powers may be imposed on or exercised by petty constables.

By 6 Ann. c. 31, § 5, they are to be on duty in cases of fire, and apprehend persons suspected of stealing goods therefrom. And by 6 Geo. IV. c. 80, and 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 53, § 38, they are to aid excise and custom-house officers, and that even beyond the limits of their particular district. They may not, however, enter a house in search of smuggled goods without a probable cause.¹

By 11 Geo. II. c. 19, § 7, they are to assist landlords in the recovery of property unlawfully removed to avoid a distress for rent. And by 2 W. & M. st. 1, c. 5, § 2, they are to aid in the appraisement of goods distrained, and to administer oaths to the appraisers.² So by 19 Geo. II. c. 21, §§ 3, 7, they are to arrest swearers and take them before a justice. By 50 Geo. III. c. 41, § 21, they are to aid in carrying persons hawking without a licence before a justice of peace, under penalty of 10*l.*

They may also arrest night-walkers and other suspicious persons found loitering or wandering about at unseasonable hours.

They are bound to execute every warrant addressed to them either by name or otherwise. And by 5 Geo. IV. c. 18, § 6, any officer (out of, as well as in, his own district) may execute a warrant within the jurisdiction of the magistrate granting or indorsing the warrant; but he is not compellable to do so out of his own jurisdiction.³ Where a party is arrested on an indorsed warrant according to 24 Geo. II. c. 55, § 1,⁴ or 13 Geo. III. c. 31, and 54 Geo. III. c. 186, § 2, the officer

¹ Rex v. Watts, 1 Barn. & Adolph. 166.

² Gimbert v. Coyney, 1 M'Clel. & Y.

³ See also Walter v. Rumball, 1 Lord 469.

Raym. 53, § 3, 7.

⁴ See ante, tit. JUSTICES OF PEACE.

originally authorized is to take the party to the justice granting the warrant, unless the offence is bailable; and under similar circumstances, by 33 Geo. III. c. 55, § 3, and 5 Geo. IV. c. 18, § 1, in levying fines, the officer originally authorized is to levy them.

The warrant is generally a protection to the officer against an action; and the 24 Geo. II. c. 44 provides, that no action shall be brought till a copy of the warrant has been refused to the party complaining. If it be given, then the action lies against the justice granting it; but this is not necessary where he executes it beyond the jurisdiction of the justice. An overseer executing a warrant of distress for poor's rates, and constables assisting him, are within this act, and the overseers are liable. But if the constable go beyond what the warrant would authorize under any circumstances, then he is not justified. In executing a warrant the constable should take care to have it about him at the time. A verbal warrant is only sufficient if the justice is present.

A constable may, after he has declared his business, break open outer doors, if refused admission, either where he seeks to execute a warrant to compel a man to find sureties of the peace or for good behaviour, or on a charge of felony, or on a capias on indictment; but not if the warrant is merely to search for stolen goods; nor on a distress warrant for poor's rates or church rates, or to require a person to take oaths prescribed by a statute. He should always show his warrant, but should not part with the possession of it.

With regard to the treatment of a person apprehended, the constable is in general to take him before a magistrate; but, in case of a trivial affray, he may, after the heat of it is over, set him free. He must not keep him an unreasonable time, or treat him with unnecessary harshness; but he cannot release on bail. He may also confine a prisoner if necessary, or commit him to temporary imprisonment, till he can carry him before a justice. By 23 Geo. II. c. 29, § 2, he may, in the route to his own precinct or county, take a prisoner arrested through an intermediate county. Having suffered a prisoner to escape, he cannot retake him on the same warrant, except on a voluntary surrender.

Privileges and Exemptions.—Constables are generally exempt from serving any other office, but not from being impressed in the navy. Every one is bound in the day time to recognize a constable as such; but otherwise in the night, when he must show his authority. By 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, § 25, persons assaulting peace officers in the execution of their duty are subject to imprisonment. In resisting an officer after he shows his warrant, if death ensue to the officer, it is murder; but if he refuse to show it, it amounts to manslaughter only.

CONSTABULARY POLICE.—Under the 10 Geo. IV. c. 44, a new and efficient system of police was established, in the year 1829, for the metropolis and its vicinity, in the room of the former local establishments of nightly watch and police, which had been found inadequate to the prevention and detection of crime, by reason principally of their want of connexion and co-operation with each other. Two commissioners of police were appointed, with a police office in Westminster, and a numerous body of able men under their control, as a police force for the Metropolitan Police District; which district, by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, may be extended to any place (the city of London excepted) within the distance of fifteen miles from Charing Cross. This force is one connected body, under the direction of the secretary of state. The commissioners are justices of peace for the counties of Middlesex, Surrey, Hertford, Essex, and Kent; and the men have, throughout the whole of the same counties as well as within the Metropolitan Police District, all the powers, and are liable to the duties and responsibilities of a constable within his constablewick. The observations therefore already made with reference to constables apply to this body; and there are, besides, many special enactments referable to them, not only in the act already mentioned, 10 Geo. IV. c. 44, by which they were constituted, but in the 2 & 3 Vict. cc. 47 and 71, the whole of which are to be construed together as one act.

The same causes which led to the establishment of the Metropolitan Police, and the success which attended it, have suggested the extension of the system to other parts of the kingdom. Accordingly by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 92 provision is made for the appointment of a constabulary police in any county or district where it may be deemed desirable, upon a representation to the secretary of state to that effect from a majority of the justices assembled in general or quarter sessions. The plan has been carried into effect in many counties; but the great expence attending it has prevented its more general adoption; and it is generally considered, that the recent act for the appointment of parochial constables, which we have already detailed, will in a great measure supersede it.

For the provisions as to the appointment of paid constables on canals and navigable rivers, see 3 & 4 Vict. c. 50.

SPECIAL CONSTABLES.—By 1 Geo. IV. c. 37, in case of riot &c. being apprehended, justices are empowered to appoint as special constables any householders not legally exempt from the office of constable, who are to be sworn in and be subject to the same laws as ordinary constables are.

WATCHMEN duly appointed and sworn in by parishes &c. are a kind of special constable for the protection of property &c. during the night time, having nearly the same powers and protection as constables. They are not bound to execute the warrants of justices, as constables are; and, if they do, are to be looked upon as private persons in the performance of such act.

SURVEYORS OF HIGHWAYS.

Every parish is bound, of common right, to keep the high roads that go through it in good and sufficient repair; and the ministerial officer to whom this duty is more particularly entrusted is the surveyor of the highways.

A highway is a right of passage for the public in general, without distinction. There are three kinds of highways: 1st, a footway; 2dly, a foot and horse way; and 3dly, a carriage, horse, and foot road; which last is either the queen's highway, open to all men, or belongs to a city or town, or to private persons. The better opinion seems to be, that, unless there is a thoroughfare, there cannot be a public highway.¹ A public street or passage, no matter what the breadth; an open river; a bridge; or a railway, may be a public highway.

A passage from one part of a street to another, made originally for private convenience, may become a public highway, notwithstanding it is circuitous, or only occasionally used by the public, and though it do not terminate in a town or in any other public road.² So, on the contrary, it is not necessarily a highway, although it lead from one market town to another, and might be advantageously used by the public, or used by them under certain restrictions.³

A highway may exist by prescription (that is, constant use beyond the legal memory of man), or it may be created by dedication of a road to public use. Thus, if one build a street on his land, and place no bar across the road, it is a dedication to the public. But where such bar is put up, although generally the public may pass through, it is no dedication; nor if such bar be knocked down and not replaced, does the presumption of dedication arise. Neither will the circumstance of the building forming a cul de sac (that is, a court or alley with no more than the outlet by which it is entered) favour the presumption. Where a street which had been forming for six years, leading from an old public street to a new road across fields, over which the way had been used for five or six years, was unfinished (one half only being lighted, the other half being neither lighted nor paved, but the inhabitants had paid the highway and paving rates), it was held to be sufficient evidence to go to a jury of a dedication of the street to the public. The act of dedication must be by the owner of the estate of inheritance; therefore a leaseholder or tenant for life cannot devote any portion of the land to the public, so as to bind the reversioner,⁴ although Lord Ellenborough has held the contrary.⁵ However, it is clearly settled, from that case and others, that, by acquiescence on the part of the owner of the inheritance, after a lapse of time dedication may be presumed; but what length of time, has never been settled. Neither has it been settled whether there can be a partial dedication. And though the common law imposes on a parish the duty of repairing all highways within it, it does not follow that because a road is dedicated by the owner of the soil to the public use, that therefore the parish is bound to repair it; for the owner retains his right to the soil with all trees and mines thereon and thereunder; therefore it must be shown that the parish have acquiesced in that dedication.

Highways may also be created by act of parliament, or by necessity. Thus, if a highway become impassable, the public have a right of way over the adjoining land, even though it be sown with grain.

In regard to the ownership of the soil of waste lands adjoining to the highway it is to be observed, they are presumed in the first instance to belong to the owner of the adjoining land, and not to the lord of the manor; and where strips of land lie between a highway and an

¹ Wood v. Beal, 5 B. & A. 454; Wood-
yer v. Haddow, 5 Taunt. 125. Wellbeloved on Highways, 7—19.

² Rex v. Lloyd, 1 Campb. 260; Rev. v.
Wandsworth, 1 Barn. & Ald. 63.

³ Rugby Charity v. Merryweather, 11
East, 376.

⁴ Wood v. Beal, 5 B. & A. 454.

⁵ Rex. v. Barr, 4 Camp. 16.

adjoining inclosure, they are presumed to belong to the owner of the inclosure. But if they are contiguous to or communicate with open commons or larger portions of land, the presumption is in a great measure done away, and prima facie they belong to the lord of the manor. These presumptions arise, whether the owner of the adjoining inclosure be a freeholder, copyholder, or leaseholder.

The parish, as before observed, is generally liable to the repair of all the highways and roads that run through it; and although turnpike roads are formed and regulated by acts of parliament, which provide funds for their repair by tolls to be taken at the turnpikes, yet if the funds fall short, the parish is still bound to repair.

But a particular part of a parish may, by prescription or otherwise, be exempt from the burthen of repairs. Individuals may become solely bound to repair a highway; as where a man, being owner of the soil of an open track of land over which there is a public right of way, incloses the land on both sides leaving a road, he must repair the road, since before the inclosure the public had a right, if the beaten track became impassable, to diverge over the land so inclosed; and if he neglect so to repair it, the public or any person is justified in breaking his hedges in order to go upon a better track. If he incloses one side, or if the other side of the road has been inclosed time immemorially, he is bound to repair only to the centre of the road from the side near to that lately inclosed. So where a footpath runs through different inclosures, all stiles and gates must be kept in good and passable condition; or, it should seem, any person, in order to pursue his right of way, may justify removing the obstacle. This does not, however, apply to inclosures under acts of parliament.

Individuals may also be liable solely to the repairs by prescription; and in this case justices may compel them to repair such highways.

The general law relating to highways is now contained in the 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 50; which act came into operation on the 20th March, 1836, and repealed all former statutes on the subject.¹ It does not, however, apply to turnpike roads, except where these are expressly mentioned, nor to roads paved under any local act. Some alterations were effected by this act, which seem to have been long and much desired; especially the abolition of statute duty, which, variously modified, had existed for three centuries, having been first imposed in the reign of Philip and Mary. As an objection, however, prevailed against the entire abolition of team work, from its being supposed that farmers can in many cases better contribute to the repair of the highways in that mode than by a money payment, a power is conferred on the rate-payers of directing such work to be done, if they think proper, in the manner described in the act. To the former law it was frequently objected, that too much of the expence of repairing the highways was thrown on the land,—that a burthen which ought to be general was, in fact, partial. This act, therefore, renders subject to the highway rate all property rateable to the poor, as well as some other species particularly described in it. In return, the rate-payers are now invested with the power of appointing their own surveyor;

¹ The provisions of this act were extended by the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 71 to all lands belonging to parishes or to the surveyor of highways, lawfully used for the purpose of obtaining materials for the repair of the highways in such parish, the materials in which lands have been or may be exhausted.

a privilege which, practically speaking, was previously in the hands of the magistrates. If they please, they may appoint a permanent and salaried surveyor; or several parishes may unite together for the purpose of appointing such a surveyor for a district. In large parishes, a board for the repairs of the highways, with an assistant surveyor, clerk, &c. may be formed. These, however, as well as the other intentions of the act, will more fully appear from the following abstract of it.

Special Sessions for the Highways.—The justices of the peace within their respective divisions, or any two or more of them, shall hold not less than eight nor more than twelve special sessions in every year for executing the purposes of this act: the days of holding the same to be appointed at a special sessions held within fourteen days after the 25th of March.

At the said special sessions held next after the 25th March, the surveyor of each of the parishes within the division shall verify his accounts, and shall make a return in writing of the state of all the roads, common highways, bridges, causeways, hedges, ditches, and water-courses appertaining thereto, and of all nuisances and encroachments (if any) made upon the several highways, as well as of the extent or the different highways which the parish is liable to repair, what part thereof has been repaired, with what materials, and at what expence, and the amount of rate levied during the time he was surveyor.

Surveyor of the Highways.—Every parish maintaining its own highways shall, at their first meeting in vestry for the nomination of overseers, elect one or more persons for the office of surveyor for the year, to keep in repair the highways to be repaired by the parish. Where there is no such vestry meeting, the inhabitants shall meet on or within fourteen days after the 25th of March.

Any person living in the parish, or in an adjoining one, and having an estate in houses, lands, tenements, or hereditaments within the parish, in his own right or in right of his wife, of the value of 10*l.* a year, or a personal estate of the value of 100*l.* (such person if not living within the parish being willing to serve), or being an occupier or tenant of houses &c. of the yearly value of 20*l.* whether residing in the parish or in an adjoining one, is eligible to be elected. But no person now exempted by law from serving the office of overseer shall be compellable to serve as surveyor. And any person elected may provide a deputy, to be approved of by the justices at a special sessions.

Any person elected and refusing to serve or provide a deputy shall forfeit 20*l.* on conviction before two justices.

Instead of electing such surveyor, the inhabitants may appoint any person of skill and experience to act as a surveyor with a salary.

If the inhabitants neglect to appoint a surveyor, the justices at a special sessions may appoint one till the next annual meeting, with or without a salary, as shall seem fit.

District Surveyor.—As it is expedient in many cases that parishes should be formed into districts for the purpose of having a district surveyor, a vestry may direct one of the churchwardens, or the chairman of the vestry, to apply to the quarter sessions (or if in a division, to the special sessions) to be united with other parishes as a district, and to nominate a person as district surveyor with a salary; which application is to be forwarded to the clerk of the peace. The justices are accordingly authorized to unite and appoint; and such parishes shall form a district for three years, and afterwards until the churchwarden or the chairman of the vestry of any one shall give twelve months notice to the churchwardens and surveyor of each of the others, and to the district surveyor and the clerk of the peace, of their intention to discontinue the union, at the expiration of which notice the union shall cease. In each of such parishes, however, a surveyor is to be elected as hereinbefore mentioned, whose only duty will be to assess and levy the rates, and pay over the money to the district surveyor.

The powers, duties, and liabilities of the district surveyor, where applicable, are similar to those of the surveyor before mentioned, except as to making and levying of the rates. He is to have the laying out and application of all the funds raised under the act; but the expenditure of the money levied in each parish must be confined thereto, unless the parish consent to its being applied for the benefit of the union.

Board of Directors and Assistant Surveyor.—In any parish where the population exceeds 5000, two-thirds of the vestry may determine that a board of direction shall be formed for carrying the act into effect; and for that purpose may elect not more than twenty nor less than five householders, resident and assessed to the highway and poor rates, as surveyor for the year. The powers of the vestry and surveyor will then be vested in such board; and they may appoint a collector or collectors of the rates, an assistant surveyor, and clerk, with salaries, and a treasurer. At the end of the year, and before the day of election, they are to present to the vestry copies of their accounts and minutes of their proceedings.

Such board may rent, or (with consent of vestry) purchase premises for keeping the implements and materials for repair of the highways, and may direct in what manner the highways shall be curbed or paved.

Highway Rates.—In order to raise money for carrying the purposes of the act into execution, a rate is to be made and levied by the surveyor upon all property liable to the poor rates, and also upon such woods, mines, and quarries of stone, or other hereditaments, as have heretofore been usually rated to the highway rate. The rate must be signed by the surveyor, allowed by two justices, and published in the same way as the poor rates. It is not to exceed 10*d.* in the pound at any one time, or 2*s.*6*d.* in the pound in any one year, except with the consent of four-fifths of the inhabitants at a special meeting.

The rate may be recovered by the surveyor in the same manner as the poor rate by overseers; and where the latter are empowered by local acts to compound with the landlords of certain houses &c., or to rate them as occupiers, the same power is given to the surveyor as to the highway rate. Persons unable to pay through poverty may be excused by the justices at a special sessions. Property legally exempt before the passing of the act is still exempted.

Surveyors, with consent of vestry, may appoint collectors, with full power of levying, and allow what the vestry think reasonable.

Every surveyor, assistant, and district surveyor, is to keep an account of all moneys received and paid, and of all tools, materials, &c. provided by him; which accounts shall, at all reasonable times, be open to the inspection of every rated inhabitant, who may take copies thereof. Any surveyor &c. neglecting to make such entry, or refusing such inspection, shall forfeit 5*l*. And, within fourteen days after his leaving office, he shall deliver such books and accounts, together with all moneys in his hands, to his successor, under a penalty of not exceeding 5*l*. and double the amount of any money due from him and not paid over.

Within fourteen days after the appointment of his successor, the surveyor's accounts for the year must be laid before the vestry; and within one month after such appointment they must be signed and laid before a special sessions, to which any person may appeal against them.

Team Work.—Within six days after the appointment of the surveyor, any two rate-payers may require him to call a meeting of the rate-payers; and, if a majority consent, the rate-payers keeping a team of two or more cattle may divide among themselves, in proportion to their assessment, the carriage of the materials required for repairs, and shall be paid for such work within one month at the rate per cubic yard of material per mile fixed by the special sessions at their first meeting after the 25th March. But the work must be performed at the times and places and in the manner the surveyor may direct (except in spring, seed-time, and harvest); and if he does not approve of it, the special sessions may hear the complaint, and impose any forfeiture they think reasonable.

Repair of Highways.—The term highways in this act means all roads, bridges (not being county bridges), carriageways, cartways, horseways, bridleways, footways, causeways, churchways, and pavements.

No road or occupation way made at the expence of any person &c., nor any road set out as a private driftway or horsepath in any award under an inclosure act, shall be deemed a highway repairable by the parish, unless the person proposing to dedicate it to the public use shall give three months notice in writing to the surveyor of his intention, describing its situation and extent, and shall make it in a substantial manner, of the required width, and to the satisfaction of the surveyor and two justices of the division, who are to view and certify at the expence of the party (such certificate to be enrolled at the quarter sessions); and after such highway has been used by the public, and repaired by the person &c. making it for twelve months, it shall ever after be repaired by the parish. On receipt of the notice, the surveyor is to summon a vestry; and if they object to its repair, any justice may summon the person &c. making it to the next special sessions, when the question of its utility shall be determined.

Any person liable to repair a highway by reason of the tenure of lands or otherwise, or the surveyor (with consent of the vestry), may apply to a justice to make such highway a parish one, who shall summon the surveyor or party liable to the next special sessions. And if they decide it to be a parish highway, they shall by order fix the proportion of expence to be annually paid by such person; or, instead, they may award a sum in full discharge of all future claims.

When the boundaries of two parishes lie in the middle of a common highway, a special sessions may determine what part of such highway shall be repaired wholly by one parish, and what part by the other. The same proceedings may be had when the repairs of any part of a highway belong to any person &c. by reason of the tenure of lands or otherwise.

If any bridge be hereafter built liable to be repaired by the county, all highways to, over, and next adjoining such bridge shall be repaired by the parish, person, &c., who was before its erection by law bound to repair them. But the county shall repair the walls, banks, or fences of the raised causeways and approaches to such bridge, and the land arches thereof; and the powers vested in the surveyor of highways for getting materials and removing nuisances are vested in the surveyor of county bridges and the roads at the ends; and the provisions relating to highways shall, as far as applicable, refer to such bridges and roads.

The surveyor is required to make and maintain every public cartway to a market town twenty feet wide, and every horseway eight feet, and every footway by the side of a carriageway three feet, if the ground will allow. But he must not make a footway without the consent of the vestry.

If any gate across a cartway be less than ten feet, or across a highway less than five feet, on notice from the surveyor in writing left at the dwelling of the owner or his agent, it must be removed or enlarged (as required) under a penalty of not exceeding 10s. a day.

The surveyor may make a road through grounds adjoining any ruinous or narrow part of a highway (not being the site of any house, nor a garden, lawn, yard, court, park, paddock, plantation, planted walk, or avenue, nor inclosed for building, nor a nursery for trees), to be used as a public highway whilst the old road is being repaired, on making such recompence to the proprietor &c. as the justices in special sessions may think reasonable.

The surveyor of every parish (not within three miles of the General Post Office) shall, with the consent of vestry, or by the direction of a special sessions, cause to be erected, where two ways meet, a stone or post, with an inscription in large letters (not less than an inch in height) containing the name of the next town or place whereto they lead; and shall also mark the boundaries of the highway with the name of the parish. And, at the approaches to parts subject to floods, shall cause to be erected graduated stones or posts for guiding travellers. And shall secure causeways, by stones or banks of earth, from being injured by waggons, &c.

The surveyor may make, scour, cleanse, and keep open all ditches &c. or watercourses, and lay trunks &c. or bridges in and through any lands (except commons) adjoining the highways, upon paying the owner &c. Damages to be settled as damages for materials. And if any person interfere with such ditches, trunks, &c. without consent of the surveyor, he shall reimburse the charges thereby occasioned, and forfeit not exceeding thrice the amount.

Proceedings to compel Repairs.—After the commencement of this act, proceedings by presentment against the inhabitants of any parish or person on account of any highway or turnpike road being out of repair, are abolished.

If any highway be out of repair, and information on oath by one witness be given to a justice, he must summon the surveyor or other person liable to a special sessions of the division, who shall appoint a person to view and report, or they shall themselves view; and, either on such report or their own view, they may convict in not exceeding 5*l.*, and shall order the repairs, and limit the time, and for default impose a fine equal to the amount requisite for repairs, and divide the proportions among the parties, if several are liable. If the road be part of a turnpike road, the treasurer or surveyor of the trust may in like manner be summoned and fined.

But the justices are not to make any such order where the duty of repairing comes into question. But in such case they must direct an indictment to be preferred, and the witnesses to be subpœnaed, at the next assizes or quarter sessions. And the costs shall be directed by the judge or justices out of the county rate. The indictment, however, may be removed by the defendant by certiorari into the Queen's Bench.

Fines for not repairing, or not appearing to an indictment, instead of being returned into the Exchequer, are to be applied to the repair of the highways. If any fine be levied on an inhabitant, he may appeal to the special sessions, who may order the same to be paid out of the rate.

Procuring Materials for Repair of Highways.—The surveyor may, with the consent of the vestry, contract for materials. But he must not, directly or indirectly, have any share in any such contract, or let any team (unless a licence in writing for such purpose be first obtained from two justices in special sessions), under a penalty of 10*l.* and being disqualified as a salaried surveyor.

The surveyor may, with the consent of vestry and of the justices at a special sessions, sell lands allotted to parishes for getting materials, and from which such materials have been exhausted, for the price the justices may deem reasonable, and with the produce purchase other land.

The surveyor may take materials from any waste land or brook &c. in his own parish, or in any other if enough cannot be procured in his own, and a sufficiency be left for such other parish. But he must not prejudice any river &c., nor dig within 150 feet above or below any bridge or dam. And stones must not be taken from the beach where they protect the adjoining land.

If sufficient materials cannot be had on waste lands, the surveyor may, by licence from special sessions, get them from the inclosed lands of any person (not being a garden, yard, lawn, paddock, &c., or a wood not exceeding 100 acres) within the parish (or in any adjoining one, if enough cannot be had there) making satisfaction to the owners, to be settled by order. But he must not take materials from any inclosed land¹ till one month's notice has been given to the owner or his agent and the occupier to appear at a special sessions, and an order obtained for getting such materials.

¹ Under the term "inclosed land" in this place, and also in the analogous provision of the General Turnpike Act (3 Geo. IV. c. 126), are included lands occupied for agricultural purposes, though not separated from the adjoining lands by any fence or other inclosure; consequently materials cannot be taken from such lands without previous notice to the owners or occupiers, and authority from a special sessions. 4 & 5 Vict. c. 81.

If, in getting materials, the surveyor open a pit, it must be fenced round and filled up in three days where no materials are found, and in fourteen after having got sufficient therefrom.

And every surveyor, within twenty-one days after his appointment, must fill up all pits not likely to be useful, or fence them round, under a penalty of 10*s.* for each default, and 10*l.* for a neglect of six days after notice from a justice or the proprietor, proved on oath at special sessions; to be laid out in repairs.

If, in getting materials, he damage any bridge, road, works, &c., he shall forfeit not exceeding 5*l.*, and be moreover liable to a civil action.

If any person shall, without the surveyor's consent, take away materials to be used for repairs, or out of any quarry, before the surveyor shall have discontinued working for six weeks (except the owner of private grounds, and persons authorized by him to get materials for his private use), he shall forfeit 10*l.*

Widening Highways.—If a road appear, on the view of two justices, not of sufficient breadth, they are empowered to order it to be widened, so that it shall not exceed thirty feet. But they must not pull down any building, nor invade any garden &c., avenues &c., or nursery.

When a road is ordered to be widened, the surveyor, under the direction of the justices, may agree for the recompence of the ground, and for making new ditches and fences.

If no agreement can be come to, the quarter sessions, on the certificate of such justices, and fourteen days notice given by the surveyor to such persons of his intention to apply to the sessions, may impanel a jury to assess the damages, not exceeding forty years purchase. The amount is thereupon to be levied by rate, as directed by justices in quarter sessions; which must not exceed in any one year one-third of the rate levied in addition to the highway rate. The costs to be borne by the surveyor if the jury assess more than he offered, and by the other party if less.

On payment of the sum assessed to the person entitled (or, if he cannot be found or refuses to accept it, to the clerk of the peace), his right shall be divested, and the ground be thenceforth a public highway. But all minerals &c. are reserved, if they can be procured without breaking the surface of the highway; and all timber &c., to be felled within one month after the order, or in default by the surveyor.

Diverting or Stopping up Highways.—When the vestry shall deem it expedient for any highway to be stopped up or diverted, either entirely or reserving a bridleway or footway along the whole or any part, the chairman shall direct the surveyor to apply to two justices to view the same, authorizing him to pay all expences. But if any other party desire such stopping up &c., he shall by notice require the surveyor to give notice to the churchwardens to summon the vestry; and if they agree, the surveyor shall apply to the justices as above, and the expences shall be paid by such party to the surveyor.

And when it shall appear to the two justices, on view required by the surveyor as before directed, that any public highway may be diverted commodiously, and the owner of the lands shall consent in writing, or if it appear upon any such view that any public highway is unnecessary, the justices shall direct the surveyor to affix a notice where it is proposed to be diverted or stopped up, and insert it in a county newspaper for four successive weeks, and fix it on the door of every parish church on four successive Sundays; and on proof thereof to the justices, and delivery to them of a plan verified by some surveyor, they shall certify their view, and the commodiousness of the new highway, and the reasons thereof, and the distance saved; and if the road be considered unnecessary, the reasons thereof also. And the certificate, proof, and plan shall be lodged with the clerk of the peace, and shall be read in open court at the quarter sessions in four weeks thereafter, and enrolled thereat.

Persons aggrieved by any such certificate of justices for diverting or stopping up highways may appeal to the quarter sessions on giving ten days notice in writing, with a statement of the grounds thereof; and the surveyor, within forty-eight hours, must deliver a copy to the party, requiring him to apply to the justices to view. But where the vestry have required him, he need not deliver such notice. No appellant can be heard unless notice has been given, nor on any grounds not set forth therein.

If there be no appeal, or if it be dismissed, the quarter sessions shall order the diversion or stopping up and the purchase of ground (as in widening highways), and the new highway shall be a public one. But no old highway (except a useless one) shall be stopped until the new one be made and certified by two justices; such certificate to be enrolled with the clerk of the peace.

And the parish or party liable to repair the old highway shall repair the new one, without reference to its locality.

The above provisions are applicable to highways repaired by parties by reason of the tenure of lands, &c. And such roads, when so diverted or widened, may, by order of a special sessions be placed under care of the surveyor of the parish, and be thereafter repaired by him. But two justices must view and report to the special sessions, who are to fix the annual payment, or sum in lieu thereof, to be paid by the parties liable.

Obstructions, Encroachments, Nuisances, &c.—If any impediment or obstruction arise in any highway from the accumulation of snow, or from the falling down of the banks on the sides, or from any other cause, the surveyor shall, within twenty-four hours notice thereof from any justice of the county, cause the same to be removed.

If any surveyor or district surveyor shall cause any heap of stone &c. to be laid on any highway, and shall allow the same to remain at night to the danger of passengers, due caution not being given, he shall forfeit 5*l*.

No tree, bush, or shrub shall be planted on any carriageway or cartway, or within fifteen feet from the centre; but the same shall be cut down, grubbed up, and carried away by the owner or occupier of the land within twenty-one days after notice by the surveyor, on pain of forfeiting 10*s*. for every neglect.

If the surveyor shall think any carriageway or cartway injured or obstructed by hedges or trees (unless planted for ornament or shelter to any hop-ground, house, building, or court-yard) any justice, on his application, may summon the owner of the lands to a special sessions, when the question as to their removal shall be determined, whether the owner attend or not (after proof of service of notice); and he must comply with the order within ten days after a copy has been left at the abode of himself or his agent, under a penalty of 40s. And if the order be not complied with, the surveyor shall remove the same, and be reimbursed the charges by such owner, which the justices may levy by distress and sale as other forfeitures.

But no surveyor is to cut hedges, except between the last day of September and the last day of March. And no person shall be obliged to cut any timber in hedges, except when the highway is to be enlarged; and oaks only in April, May, or June, and ash, elm, or other trees in December, January, February, or March.

If any person shall make any building, hedge, ditch, or fence on any carriage or cartway within fifteen feet of the centre, he shall forfeit not exceeding 40s., and the surveyor shall cause it to be taken down or filled up at the owner's expense.

No person shall sink any pit or shaft, or erect any steam-engine or machinery, within twenty-five yards, nor windmill within fifty yards, from any carriage or cartway, unless such pit, machinery, &c. be so screened as not to be dangerous to passengers or cattle; nor make any fire for calcining iron-stone &c., burning clay &c., or making coke, within fifteen yards, unless screened, under a penalty of 5l. But engines &c. existing at the passing of the act may be repaired.

Proprietors of railroads are to erect gates, and keep persons to attend to them, where such railroads cross the highway, or on complaint within one month¹ before one justice may be fined not exceeding 5l.

If any person shall wilfully ride on any footpath or causeway; or drive any horse, cattle, carriage, or sledge thereon; or tether any cattle on any highway; or cause any injury thereto, or to the hedges &c. thereof; or obstruct the passage of a footway; or injure the surface of a highway; or damage posts &c. erected by the surveyor; or dig the banks; or throw down the stones &c. from the parapets of bridges; or deface any milestone or direction post; or play at any game on the highways and annoy passengers; or if any hawkers &c. or gipsy shall encamp &c. on the highway; or if any one shall assist in making a fire, or let off any gun or fireworks &c., within fifty feet of the centre of the highway; or bait any bull near the highway; or lay any timber, rubbish, &c., on the highway, to the injury thereof or of the passengers; or suffer any filth &c. to flow thereon from adjacent premises; or obstruct the free passage thereof; for each of such offences a penalty is imposed of not exceeding 40s. over and above the damages.

If any timber, stones, rubbish, or other thing, be laid on a highway so as to be a nuisance, and shall not, after notice by the surveyor, or assistant or district surveyor, be forthwith removed, he may, by order of a justice, clear the highway of the same, and dispose of it, and apply the proceeds to repairs. If it be not sufficient to defray the expenses of removal, the owner must reimburse the surveyor, or the same may be levied as a forfeiture.

If any horse &c. or other cattle is straying or depasturing on any highway without a keeper (except on parts crossing over commons &c.), the surveyor may seize and impound it in the common pound of the parish or other place, till the owner pay one shilling and the expenses, to be settled by two justices and applied to the repairs; and if not paid in five days, they may order them to be sold (unless such cattle appear to have strayed without any default of the owner). The overplus to be paid to the owner; but if not claimed within one month, shall be applied to repairs. But no more than 20s. shall be paid by any such owner. And nothing herein shall take away any right of pasturage on the side of any highway.

¹ 2 & 3 Vict. c. 45.

Any person guilty of pound breach shall forfeit not exceeding 20*l.*, or in default of payment be committed with hard labour for not exceeding three months.

Driving Carts, &c.—The owner of every waggon, cart, &c. shall paint, in straight lines, on the off side of the waggon &c., or on the off side shafts, his name or title, and the place of trade or abode of himself or partner, in full length, in legible letters, in black and white, and not less than an inch in height, under a penalty of not exceeding 40*s.*

No person shall act as the driver of more than two waggons &c.; and when two are under the care of a single person, they must be drawn by only one horse each, and the horse of the hinder one must be attached to the back of the foremost, under a penalty of 20*s.*

If any driver ride on any carriage or the horse drawing it, not having some other person to guide it (except carriages driven with reins); or if the driver of any carriage shall cause any hurt to any person or goods conveyed, or shall quit the same, or be at such a distance as not to be able to direct the horses; or shall leave the carriage &c. so as to obstruct the highway; or shall drive any carriage not having the owner's name as before required, and refuse to tell his name; or shall not keep the left side of the road on meeting another carriage &c., or shall interrupt the free passage thereof; or shall drive furiously; for each of these offences, on conviction before two justices, in addition to the civil liability, a forfeiture is imposed of not exceeding 10*l.*, or commitment for not more than six weeks.

Any driver may be apprehended without warrant by any person seeing the offence committed; and if he refuse to discover his name, may be proceeded against by a description only of his person and offence, and be committed for not exceeding three months.

Fees.—The following fees only shall be taken by the clerk of the peace and others:—For every information, 6*d.* Summons or warrant, 1*s.*; and 6*d.* for serving. Notice, 6*d.*; and 6*d.* for serving. Order, 1*s.*; and 6*d.* for serving. Warrant of distress, 2*s.* Appointment, 1*s.* Conviction, 2*s.* When the fees directed under local acts are less than the above-mentioned, they are still to be continued.

Turnpike Roads.—The foregoing observations in most cases apply in like manner to turnpike roads; and for more particular information, the acts of parliament creating the trust, and the General Turnpike acts (3 Geo. IV. c. 126, 4 Geo. IV. c. 16, ss. 35, 95, 5 Geo. IV. c. 69, 7 & 8 Geo. c. 24, 9 Geo. IV. c. 77, and 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 8), must be referred to.

THE POOR LAWS.

1. OF THE OFFICERS CONCERNED IN THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE POOR LAWS.

1. THE POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS.—These are appointed by the crown, and removable at pleasure. They are, by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, three in number,¹ any two of whom may sit as a board; and they have power to appoint a secretary, assistant secretaries, clerks, messengers, and other officers. They may also appoint assistant commissioners, of whom we shall speak hereafter.

The whole administration of relief to the poor according to the existing laws is subjected to the discretion and control of the Board of Commissioners; and for this purpose they are authorized to make rules, orders, and regulations, for the management of the poor,—for the government of workhouses,—for the education of children therein,—for the management of poor parish children under the 7 Geo. III. c. 39, and the superintending, inspecting, and regulating the houses in which they are kept and maintained,—for apprenticing the children of the poor,—for the guidance and control of all guardians, vestries, and parish officers, so far as relates to the management or relief of the poor, the making and entering into contracts in all matters relating to the same, and the keeping, examining, auditing, and allowing of accounts,—and generally for carrying the act into execution in other respects, as they shall think proper. But they are not to interfere in any individual case for the purpose of ordering relief; and they can make no rule which shall have the effect of compelling the inmates of workhouses to attend a mode of worship contrary to their religious principles, or of causing children to be educated therein in any religious creed to which their parents may object.

The rules, orders, and regulations of the commissioners are of two kinds: general rules, intended to affect all the parishes or unions in the kingdom, or at least some two or more of them; and particular orders, applicable to a single parish or union.

All general rules are to be submitted to the secretary of state forty days before they come into operation, within which time, or at any time afterwards, they may be disallowed by the privy council; they are also to be laid before parliament, by the secretary of state, at the commencement of the next session. These provisions do not apply to particular rules or orders, addressed to a single parish or union; but by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57 it is enacted, that no general rule or order shall be rescinded or suspended by any particular rule, without the previous approval of the secretary of state.

Fourteen days before any rule, order, or regulation of the commissioners shall come into operation in any parish or union, copies are to be sent to the overseers or guardians of the poor, and to the clerk of the petty sessions for the division in which it is situate, who shall give publicity to them in such manner as the commissioners direct, allow them to be inspected, and give copies when required. And no rule, order, or regulation of the commissioners is to be in force until the expiration of such fourteen days, except orders made in answer to reports of overseers or guardians, and except orders for suspending or dismissing any paid officer, when the commissioners shall declare that the urgency of the case requires it. The disallowance or revocation of rules is to be notified &c. in the same manner. Overseers, guardians, clerks, or the clerk to the justices, &c., neglecting to give publicity to rules, or refusing inspection or copies, are liable to a penalty of not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 4*s.*

¹ By the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56 (for the relief of the poor in Ireland) her majesty is empowered to appoint a fourth commissioner; and the style of the Board is changed, from "Poor Law Commissioners for England and Wales," to "The Poor Law Commissioners." Their functions are by that act extended to Ireland, and they are enabled to sit either in England and Wales or in Ireland, and to have a duplicate seal.

To secure their conformity to law, the rules of the commissioners may be removed by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench ; but, until declared illegal by that court, they are to be obeyed. Neglect or disobedience of the rules or orders of the commissioners, or any contempt of the board, subjects the offender, on conviction before two justices, for a first offence to a forfeiture of any sum not exceeding 5*l.*, for a second offence from 5*l.* to 20*l.*, and a third or subsequent offence is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not less than 20*l.* and such imprisonment, with or without hard labour, as the court may award.

The powers of the commissioners are still further extended by various special provisions for the effectuation of alterations as to the local divisions in which relief is given, the appointment of paid agents, and the establishment and preparation of workhouses.

Where unions already exist, the commissioners may, with the consent of two-thirds of the guardians, either add to, take away from, or dissolve them. Where none exist, they may declare such and so many parishes as they think fit to be united for the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, and to have a workhouse or workhouses for their common use ; each parish paying separately for its own poor, whether relieved in or out of the workhouse, and contributing to a common fund for the support of the workhouse establishment in proportion to the average amount of the expences incurred by it for the relief of its poor for the three years preceding the formation of such union. And the commissioners may vary such proportions according to fresh averages to be taken for that purpose at any subsequent period when they see fit, not only in unions formed under this act, but in unions previously existing under the 22 Geo. III. c. 83 (generally known as Gilbert's Act), or any local act. No union is hereafter to be formed under the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, without the consent of the commissioners ; and so much of that act as restrained parishes from contributing to workhouses at a greater distance than ten miles is repealed.

In unions, the workhouses are to be governed and the relief of the poor administered by a board of guardians, elected annually by the rate-payers and the owners of property, but whose number, duties, and qualifications are to be prescribed by the commissioners.

In unions already incorporated under the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, or any local act, the commissioners may direct that the election of guardians, visitors, and other officers, shall be conducted according to this act; and, with the consent of the owners and ratepayers, they may make such alterations as may seem to them expedient in the number, mode of appointment, removal, and period of service, of the guardians of any parish or of any union now existing or hereafter to be formed.

The commissioners may direct that the laws for the relief of the poor shall be administered by a board of guardians in any single parish; in which case such board shall be elected and act in like manner as is provided for united parishes.

The commissioners may make rules specially for such unions, and may alter or rescind the bye-laws or rules of existing unions, whether those bye-laws are contained or not in any act of parliament. And no rules or bye-laws can be made or altered by guardians under any previous act of parliament without the consent of the commissioners. By the 22 Geo. III. c. 83 certain rules were made, to be observed at every poorhouse or workhouse established under that act; and additional rules (not contradictory thereto) might be made by justices of the peace; but this act provides that no such rules shall be made without the sanction of the commissioners; and that when rules are made by them, no justice shall have power to alter or repeal them.

The commissioners also are empowered to order the appointment of paid officers, either for a single parish or union, or for any number of parishes or unions, to fix the qualifications of these officers, to prescribe their duties, their districts, the security to be required from them, the period of their continuance, and the causes of their dismissal from office, to regulate their salaries, and to prescribe in what proportion such salaries shall be paid by the different parishes or unions.

All existing powers relating to building or altering workhouses are placed under the control and direction of the commissioners, and are not to be exercised without their consent and approbation. In any parish or union not having a workhouse, they may, with the consent of a majority of the guardians of the union, or of the ratepayers and owners of property in the parish, order the overseers or guardians to build a workhouse or workhouses, or to purchase or hire buildings for the purpose. And where there is a workhouse, they may, with the like consent, order them to enlarge or alter the same, or to build, hire, or purchase additional workhouses. And, without such consent, they may order the enlargement or alteration of any workhouse, or building capable of being converted into one, where the expence shall not exceed 50*l.*, or one-tenth of the average amount of the rates.

The commissioners may summon any persons before them, and examine them upon oath on matters connected with or relating to the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, and may enforce the production of books, accounts, contracts, &c., but not of papers relating to the title of lands &c. not being the property of any parish or union. They may require all persons in whom property is vested in trust for the poor of any parish, or who are in the receipt of the rents and profits thereof, to give detailed particulars of the same, and of the manner in which it is appropriated; which statement shall, under the regulations of the commissioners, be open for the inspection of the owners and ratepayers. But this provision does not apply to funds raised by the voluntary contributions of the inhabitants. They may allow the expences of witnesses, and all other expences incidental to such inquiries. Persons corruptly giving false evidence before them are guilty of perjury; and wilfully refusing to attend their summons, to give evidence, or to produce papers, is a misdemeanor. But they cannot act as a court of record, and consequently cannot commit for contempt; and no person is compellable to travel more than ten miles from his place of abode in obedience to their summons.

The commissioners are required to keep a record of their proceedings, and once a year make a general report; both of these to be submitted to the secretary of state, and the latter laid before parliament.

2. ASSISTANT COMMISSIONERS.—The commissioners are empowered to appoint assistant commissioners (not exceeding nine), to whom they may delegate all the powers which themselves possess, except the power of making general rules. Besides the powers thus possessed by delegation, the act empowers the assistant commissioners to exercise powers of inquiry respecting poor law matters similar to those given to the commissioners; and disobedience to their summons, or refusal to answer their inquiries, is equally a misdemeanor. They may attend at all local boards and vestries, and take part in the discussions, but are not to vote. They may also make orders or regulations for single parishes or unions; but these are not to be in force until adopted by and sealed with the seal of the commissioners.

Besides the assistant commissioners above mentioned, temporary special commissioners may be appointed for the purpose of inquiring into particular charges of misconduct in matters relating to the administration of relief to the poor. The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57 enacts, that whenever it may seem fitting to them, or they may be required by the secretary of state, the said commissioners, with the consent of the Treasury, shall appoint some person (being a doctor in medicine, a barrister-at-law, or a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of London or Dublin, an architect, or surveyor, and not being one of the assistant commissioners as aforesaid), or some two or more of such persons, to act either in England or Ireland as an assistant commissioner or assistant commissioners, for the purpose of conducting any special inquiry, for a period not exceeding thirty days; and the commissioners shall delegate to every person so appointed all such of their powers as they may deem necessary or expedient for summoning witnesses and conducting such inquiry. Every such appointment to be subject to the approval of the secretary of state, to be published in the London Gazette, and signified, under seal of the commissioners, to the clerk of the peace of the county within which the inquiry is made. And it is provided, that if any person be charged with any misconduct in any matter relating to the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, and if any such special inquiry be directed to be made into such charge, the person bringing such charge shall be entitled to make his defence by counsel or attorney: but nothing herein shall release any person charged with any misconduct, or bringing any charge of misconduct, from the liability to be himself examined at any such inquiry in the matter of such charge, in the same manner and subject to the same penalties as under the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76.

3. CHURCHWARDENS AND OVERSEERS OF THE POOR.—Overseers of the poor were first directed to be appointed by the 43 Eliz. c. 2. That statute directs, that the churchwardens of every parish,¹ and four, three, or two substantial householders (having respect to the proportion and greatness thereof), shall in every year be nominated under the hand and seal of two or more justices of the peace of the same county, and shall be called overseers of the poor. And if no nomination be made, every justice of the peace within the division is liable to a forfeiture of 5*l*.

Churchwardens are thus overseers ex officio; and their duties in that respect are the same as the other overseers. Of their appointment and other duties we shall have occasion to speak hereafter.

The statute of Elizabeth directed the appointment of overseers to be made in Easter week, or within one month after. But inconvenience being found to arise from the time being regulated by a moveable feast, the 54 Geo. III. c. 91 provides, that the appointment shall be made on the 25th of March, or within fourteen days after. An appointment is not bad, though made after that time; but the justices are liable to the penalty, and a mandamus will lie to oblige them to make the appointment.

In corporate towns, officers of the corporation being justices of the peace have the same authority as to the appointment of overseers within their jurisdiction as justices of the peace in counties; and in London, one alderman has the same authority as two justices elsewhere. And where a parish lies partly within a corporation and partly without, the appointment must be by four justices, viz. by two corporation justices for that part which lies within the corporation, and by two justices of the county for that part which lies without it.

The persons appointed must be substantial householders, and must be so described in the order of appointment. But by 59 Geo. III. c. 12, § 6, persons who are not householders within the parish may be appointed, with their consent, provided they be assessed to the relief of the poor, and be householders resident within two miles from the parish church or chapel, or, where there is no church or chapel, within one mile from the parish boundary. The usual practice is, for the existing overseers to provide the justices with a list of proper and substantial householders; or else the justices issue to the high constable a precept to return a list.

Not more than four, nor less than two, can be appointed for any place.

When an overseer dies or is removed before the expiration of the allotted time, the justices may (on oath thereof made) appoint another, who is to continue in office until new overseers are chosen.²

There are several ways in which the order may be avoided, though it cannot be revoked by the justices who made it. It may be impeached on an appeal to the sessions; and the parishioners may appeal,

¹ The statute of Elizabeth directed the appointment to be made in parishes only; but it was extended by the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12 to villages and townships. It has been held that no place comes within the meaning of the statute that is not a parish or vill at least by reputation; and to make a place a reputed parish within the 43 Eliz., it must have had a parochial chapel, chapelwardens, and sacramentalia at the time that statute was made.

² 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 3.

as well as the persons who are appointed. It may be removed into the Court of Queen's Bench by a writ of certiorari; or it may be impugned on an application to that court for a writ of mandamus. It may be avoided on an indictment against the party appointed, for not taking upon himself the office. It may be invalidated on an appeal against an order of removal, on the ground that the place from which the removal is made is not entitled to separate overseers; or on an appeal against an assessment made for the relief of the poor, for the assessment can be made only by the overseers. Or it may be defeated by a party who is liable to the assessment bringing an action of trespass against the justices who grant a warrant of distress for non-payment; and if the appointment should prove to be illegal, he will recover the amount and damages.

The following classes of persons are exempt from serving the office of overseer:—Peers, and members of parliament; aldermen of London; justices of peace; practising barristers and attorneys; clergymen, though not having a cure of souls; dissenting ministers, taking the oaths and subscribing the declaration and articles prescribed by the 1 W. & M. c. 18; Roman Catholic priests taking and subscribing the oaths of allegiance, abjuration, and declaration prescribed by the 31 Geo. III. c. 32; the president, fellows, and commons of the College of Physicians, within the city of London and its suburbs; freemen of the Company and Corporation of Surgeons, so long as they exercise surgery; apothecaries in the city of London and within seven miles thereof, being freemen of the Company of Apothecaries, so long as they exercise the art; officers of the customs, tide-waiters, and all revenue officers; officers of the army, navy, or marines, whether on whole or half-pay; serjeants, corporals, drummers, and privates in the militia.

In unions formed under the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, and in many single parishes governed by local acts, the overseers had, before the passing of the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, no power of interfering in the care and management of the poor, except under the direction of the board of guardians. This arrangement is now, by that act, extended to all places where there is either a select vestry, a vestry under the 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 80, or a board of guardians: for, by the 54th section it is enacted, that in all such places the ordering, giving, and directing of all relief (subject to the powers of the commissioners) shall belong exclusively to such vestries or guardians; and it shall not be lawful for any overseer to give any further or other relief or allowance from the poor rate than such as shall be ordered by such guardians or select vestry, except in cases of sudden and urgent necessity, when, whether the applicant be settled in the parish or not, he is required to give such temporary relief as each case shall require, in articles of absolute necessity, but not in money. In the places, also, in which justices are empowered to order relief, the overseers are bound to obey their order. But otherwise, in all such places, their duty is principally confined to making and collecting the poor's rate, and paying over to the guardians or treasurer of the union, from time to time, such sums as they may require for the maintenance of the poor, subject to the control of the commissioners.

In parishes not under guardians or a select vestry, the whole management of the poor, as well as the making and collecting of the rates, devolves upon the overseers, subject of course to the control and direction of the commissioners.

The 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76 has imposed on overseers some duties to which they were not previously liable. They are required to enter in the rate-books the names of the owners, or their proxies, who wish to avail themselves of the privilege of voting for guardians, &c. They are to preserve and give publicity to, and allow inspection of the rules and orders of the commissioners. They must, once in every quarter at least, and oftener if the rules and orders of the commissioners shall require it, render an account to the guardians, auditors, or other persons appointed for that purpose; and upon going out of office they must pass their accounts for the entire year, and deliver over to their successors whatever balance or property, belonging to the parish, remains in their hands.

By sec. 95, any overseer or other officer of any parish or union who shall wilfully disobey the legal and reasonable orders of justices or guardians in carrying the rules of the commissioners or other provisions of that act into execution, is subject to a penalty of 5*l*.

And by sec. 97, if he shall purloin or misapply &c. any of the moneys, goods, or chattels belonging to any parish, he shall (independently of any punishment which he may be subject to by any other act) be liable to a penalty of 20*l*. and to pay treble the amount or value of the money or goods so purloined or misapplied.

By sec. 98, in case he wilfully neglect or disobey any of the rules or regulations of the commissioners, he shall for the first offence be liable to a penalty of 5*l*., for a second offence 20*l*., and for every subsequent offence he may be indicted as for a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall pay a fine not less than 20*l*., and suffer imprisonment at the discretion of the court.

4. GUARDIANS OF THE POOR.—The first general statutory provision respecting the appointment of guardians was the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, which authorized parishes to elect guardians under certain regulations, who should receive salaries, and be invested with all the powers and authorities of overseers, except the making and collecting of rates, and be subject to the same liabilities. Other provisions respecting them are contained in the 38 Geo. III. c. 36, and 41 Geo. III. c. 9. But these it is unnecessary to notice, for the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76 enacts, that the election of guardians shall be (where the commissioners so direct) according to the provisions of that act.

By sect. 38 of that act, where there is a union of parishes, the work-houses are to be governed, and the relief of the poor administered, by a board of guardians, elected annually by the ratepayers and owners of property, but whose number, duties, and qualifications are to be prescribed by the commissioners. The qualification is to consist in being rated to the poor-rate, but not so as to require a higher rental than 40*l*.; and one guardian at the least is to be elected for every parish included in the union. Justices of peace for the county, residing in any part of the union, are guardians ex officio. No guardian can act but at a meeting of the board; and no act of any meeting is valid unless three members are present and concur therein.

The election of guardians was directed by that act to be made within fourteen days after the 25th March in each year ; but the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 101 has now extended the time to forty days from that date. The same act has also made a considerable change in the qualification of the voters. Previously rate-payers had one vote if rated upon a rental under 200*l.*, two votes if under 400*l.*, and three votes if above that sum ; owners of property had one vote for the first 50*l.*, and one other vote for every 25*l.* above that sum, up to six votes. But now the number and proportion of votes are the same for each class ; namely, one vote if the property in respect of which the voter is entitled, either as owner or rate-payer, be less than 50*l.*, two votes if amounting to 50*l.* and less than 100*l.*, and an additional vote for every 50*l.* up to six votes.

Where an owner is a bonâ fide occupier, he is entitled to vote as well in respect of his occupation as of his ownership ; so that an owner, if he be an occupier also, may now have twelve votes.

An owner, to be entitled to vote, must give to the overseers a statement in writing of his claim previous to the 1st of February in each year, in order that it may be registered by them. Such statement must contain, besides his name and address, a description of the property as owner whereof he claims to vote, of the interest or estate he has therein, and of the amount of all rent-service (if any) which he may receive or pay in respect thereof, and the persons from whom he may receive or to whom he may pay the same. Provisions are made by the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 101 for the revision of such registers in parishes containing more than 2000 persons.

Owners may vote by proxy, but not rate-payers. But no owner can vote by proxy until fourteen days after he has made his claim.

Rate-payers, to be entitled to vote, must have been rated to the relief of the poor for the year immediately preceding, and have paid all poor rates due, except only such as shall have been made or become due within the six months immediately preceding.

The Poor Law Commissioners are empowered to alter the number of guardians ; to divide parishes into wards for the purpose of electing guardians ; to add parishes to or separate them from unions, and constitute boards of guardians for the parishes so separated.

No assistant overseer, nor any paid officer engaged in the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, nor any person having been a paid officer and dismissed within five years previously under the provisions of the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, nor any person receiving any fixed salary or emolument from the poor rates, is capable of serving as a guardian.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, § 14.

If any question arise as to the right of any person to act as an elected guardian, the commissioners may inquire into the circumstances, and issue such orders as they may deem requisite.—§ 8.

If any person put in nomination tender to the officer conducting the election his refusal in writing to serve, the election, as regards such person, shall be no further proceeded with.—§ 9.

If no person be elected in any parish at the annual election, the persons elected for the previous year may continue to act.—§ 10.

The commissioners may accept the resignation of any person elected ; and in case of any omission to elect, or of a vacancy, may order a new election.—§ 11.

In case the full number of guardians be not elected, or in case of any vacancy by the death, removal, resignation, refusal, or disqualification to act of any elected guardian, the remaining members (being not less than three) shall be competent to act until the next election, or until the completion of the board.—§ 12.

No defect in the qualification or election of any person acting as a guardian, the majority of the board being entitled to act as guardians, shall vitiate any proceedings of the board, if the majority of the persons present be entitled to act.—§ 13.

No justice of the peace shall be disabled from acting as such justice at any petty or special or general or quarter sessions in any matter merely on the ground that he is an ex officio member of the board of guardians complaining, interested, or concerned in the matter, or as acting as such at any meeting of the board.—§ 15.

The duties of guardians consist in administering the poor laws according to the rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioners. Subject to such rules, they are the governors of the workhouses, and the administrators of relief; and they have so far the control in this respect, that no overseer can give any relief other than what they prescribe, except in one or two cases, as we shall see hereafter.

They are to preserve, give publicity to, and allow inspection and copies of the rules and orders of the commissioners. They may appoint paid officers for the management of the poor, under the direction of the commissioners. Their consent is necessary to build workhouses, or to add to, take from, or dissolve a union. By agreement among the guardians, subject to the approbation of the commissioners, united parishes may be one for the purposes of settlement and of rating; and in case of such agreement the guardians are required to assess the value of the property in the several parishes for the purpose of rating.

Guardians are liable to the same penalties and forfeitures for neglect of duty as overseers of the poor. And by sect. 21 of the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, if any guardian or other person shall entice, remove, &c. any poor person from one parish to another, in order to ease the one and burden the other, without an order of removal from justices, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 20*l*.

Whenever the whole of any parish or parishes is situated at a greater distance than four miles from the place of meeting of the board of guardians of the union, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, on the application of the board, to form such parish or parishes into a district, and to direct the said guardians from time to time to appoint a committee of their members to receive applications of poor persons requiring relief in such district, to examine into the cases of such poor persons, and to report to the said guardians thereon.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, § 7.

Every board of guardians constituted under the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, may accept, take, and hold, on behalf of the union or parish respectively for which they may act, any lands, buildings, goods, effects, or other property as a corporation, and in all cases may sue and be sued in their corporate name.—§ 16.

If a board of guardians resolve to make any order, or to prefer any complaint, claim, or application, before justices or otherwise, a copy of the minute of such resolution, signed by the chairman, sealed with their seal, and countersigned by their clerk, shall be sufficient proof of the making of such order, or of the preferring of such complaint, claim, or application. And whenever, either for the purpose of making an order for the removal of a pauper, or on the trial of an appeal against such order, or for any other purpose, it shall be necessary to prove to what parish a pauper has become chargeable, a certificate signed, sealed, and countersigned as aforesaid shall be sufficient proof to what parish and at what time such pauper became chargeable, unless the contrary be proved by other legal evidence. And in all cases in which the guardians may be empowered to make any application or complaint, or to take any proceedings before justices at petty or special or general or quarter sessions, it shall be lawful for any officer empowered by the board by an order in writing under the hand of the presiding chairman, and sealed with their seal, to make such application or complaint, or to take such proceedings on behalf of such guardians, as effectually as if the same were made or taken by such guardians in person.—§ 17.

PAID OFFICERS.—By the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, sect. 46, the commissioners may direct the overseers or guardians to appoint paid officers, with such qualifications as they shall think necessary, for superintending or assisting in the administration of the relief and employment of the poor, and for the examining and auditing of accounts, and otherwise carrying the provisions of the act into execution. And the commissioners may specify the duties of such officers, and the places or limits within which they shall be performed—the mode of their appointment—the nature of the security to be given by them—the amount of their salaries—the time and mode of payment—and the proportions in which the respective parishes shall contribute thereto.

The commissioners may remove any master of a workhouse, assistant overseer, or other paid officer whom they shall deem unfit, and require the persons competent to appoint another fit person in his room. And any person so removed shall not be appointed to any other paid office without the consent of the commissioners.

No person shall be eligible to hold any parish office who shall have been convicted of felony, fraud, or perjury.

Masters of workhouses, or such other paid officers as the commissioners direct, are required to register the names of all persons relieved at or in the workhouse, together with such particulars respecting their family, settlement, relief, or employment, as the commissioners direct.

Any master of a workhouse who shall introduce or permit the introduction of spirituous liquors into a workhouse (except for his own domestic use), unless ordered by a surgeon, or allowed by the rules of the commissioners; or who shall inflict any corporal punishment on any adult person, or confine any person more than twenty-four hours, or be guilty of misconduct towards any poor person, shall, on conviction thereof before two justices, forfeit not more than 20*l.*, or in default of payment of the penalty be imprisoned for any period not exceeding six calendar months; and the justices may order his salary to be applied towards the payment of such penalty.

For purloining or wilfully wasting or misapplying the goods &c. of the parish, they are liable to 20*l.* penalty and treble the value of the goods.

II. OF THE POOR RATE.

The 43 Eliz. c. 43 enacts, that the churchwardens and overseers of every parish shall, by and with the consent of two or more justices, raise weekly or otherwise, by taxation of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes, coal mines, and valuable underwoods within the parish, &c.

The word inhabitant here means a person resident in the parish, and is to be considered with reference to personal property only; for the occupier of lands, houses, &c. is rateable, whether resident or not.

The personal property which has been most usually made the subject of a rate is stock in trade and ships. Stock in trade, however, is now expressly exempted from liability to the rate by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 89. Ships are rateable only when the parish in which their owner resides is locally and visibly their home, that is, where they terminate their voyage, and are laid up when unemployed; in such case their owner is rateable for the profits thereof, even though they be absent at the time the rate is made. The difficulties, however, attending the ascertaining what personal property is liable to the poor rate are so great, that most parishes have confined the rate to real property, and the judges have seemed inclined to approve their conduct. The courts have always been extremely cautious in delivering any express opinion upon the general question, deciding each case according to its own peculiar circumstances, and giving force to the usages of particular places. In one case¹ Lord Mansfield observed that "mankind had, as it were with common consent, refrained from rating personal property, the difficulties attending it were so great."

Not only lands and houses, but all real property which produces an annual revenue is subject to the rate; and although the tax is laid on the land or house, it is in respect of the revenue or annual profits which issue from them, whether produced by nature or by means wholly artificial. Things very distinct from the natural profits of lands are rateable; the land being considered the principal, the profits of which are augmented by the annexation of the accessories. Thus, not only natural productions connected with the land, as a mineral spring, &c.; but artificial profits, as of a towing path, a dock, or a waggon-way, have been deemed objects to be rated. So pipes for gas, under ground, are rateable.

The vicar and parson of the parish, whether resident or not, are liable to be rated by reason of their tithes in the parish, although they let the tithes to their parishioners respectively; and they are also liable for oblations and other offerings. So in respect of property in their possession or occupation, they are liable as other persons are.

By the 54 Geo. III. c. 170, § 11, justices in petty sessions, with the consent of parish officers, may discharge persons from payment of the rates, on proof of their inability to pay them.

An occupier under the act is a person who occupies that which produces profit to himself or to the person under whom he holds. The occupancy must be a beneficial one; and therefore neither the trustees of alms-houses, hospitals, or other charitable institutions, nor persons who reside in them merely as servants, are liable. But an officer of such institution is liable in respect of the rooms he separately occupies.

¹ R. v. Ringwood, 1 Cowp. 326. See also R. v. Andover, 2 Cowp. 564; and Rex v. White, 4 Term Rep. 475.

The tenant is the occupier within the act, and liable to pay the rate, and not the landlord, unless he occupy by his servants merely. But by 59 Geo. III. c. 12, § 19, the vestry may direct that the landlords shall pay the poor rates for houses let at a rent not exceeding 20*l.* nor less than 6*l.* for a shorter term than a year, or on any agreement by which the rent is made payable at a shorter period than three months. But the goods of the occupier may be distrained upon to the amount of the rent actually due, and the occupier may deduct the amount paid for the rates from his rent.

Corporations may be rated, whether they occupy by themselves or by their servants.

Royal palaces, and lands in the occupation of her majesty or any of the royal family, are not rateable; but servants occupying houses and lands belonging thereto are so.

The churchwardens and overseers are empowered to make the rate, and the concurrence of the inhabitants is not necessary, though it is usual and advisable to call a vestry to consult on a rate, and to take the opinion of the inhabitants as to its immediate necessity and particular amount. If the overseers refuse to make a rate, the Court of Queen's Bench will grant a mandamus to compel them.

When the rate is made, it is to be submitted to two justices dwelling in or near the parish or division for their allowance; which is a mere ministerial act on their part, for they are bound to allow it, if the place for which it is made be within their jurisdiction; and if they refuse, a mandamus will lie to compel them.

When the rate has been allowed by the justices, the churchwardens and overseers should cause public notice to be given in the church on the next Sunday after such allowance.

The rate must show upon the face of it in respect of what property the assessment is made upon each individual charged thereby. And the 17 Geo. II. c. 3, § 2 enacts, that the churchwardens and overseers shall permit any of the inhabitants to inspect such rate at all reasonable times, paying 1*s.* for the same, and shall on demand forthwith give copies of the same or any part thereof to any inhabitant &c. paying at the rate of 6*d.* for every 24 names, on penalty of 20*l.*

Persons who feel themselves aggrieved by any rate or assessment, may, on giving reasonable notice to the churchwardens and overseers, appeal to the next general or quarter sessions. All notices of appeal against a rate for relief of the poor must be in writing, and signed by the person giving the same, or his attorney on his behalf. The notice is to be delivered to or left at the places of abode of the churchwardens and overseers, or any two of them. The particular causes or grounds of appeal are to be specified in the notice; and no other cause or ground of appeal is to be inquired into than such as are so detailed. But if the overseers, by themselves or their attorneys, signify their consent, the quarter sessions may proceed to hear and determine such appeal without a preliminary notice having been given, or may, by consent, inquire into matters not included in the notice.

If several parties have a joint grievance, they may join in giving notice of appeal, and that though the circumstances of each individual case may be different. Thus, if several persons be rated for things which are not properly the subject of a rate, the grievance is joint, for they are aggrieved by the rate; and yet the property, in respect of which the rate is imposed, may be entirely different as to each. The sessions may award reasonable costs to the party in whose favour the appeal is determined; but their authority, in this respect, is limited to the case where an appeal has been entered and determined.

The appeal must be to the next sessions. By the act of Eliz. there was no limit as to time; but the stat. 17 Geo. II. c. 48 has been held to repeal the former statute in that particular. "The next sessions" means "the next practicable sessions."

On appeals against poor rates, inhabitants may be witnesses, notwithstanding their liability to be rated to the relief of the poor in the parish out of which the appeal arises.

Where persons fail or refuse to contribute to the poor consistently with the terms of the assessment, the churchwardens and overseers, by warrant from two justices of the peace, may levy the amount by distress and sale of the defendant's goods. Property may be taken, not only in the place for which the assessment is made, but within any other place in the same county or precinct; and if sufficient distress cannot be found, they may be levied in another county, on oath being made of the fact. Persons aggrieved by such distress may either support an action of trespass, or appeal to the next sessions.

Rate in aid.—Where it shall appear that the inhabitants of any parish are not able to raise among themselves sufficient sums for the maintenance of the poor, two justices are empowered, by the 43 Eliz. c. 2, to tax and assess any other in the same hundred. The rate may be imposed on any of the inhabitants of the neighbouring parishes, without imposing a general tax on the entire parish. And the sessions may make an order on parishes out of the hundred, if no parish within the hundred is able to contribute.

III. OF RELIEF TO THE POOR.

It is the intention of the recent Poor Law Amendment Act to restrict the relief of the poor, as much as possible, to that which is administered in well-regulated workhouses. Previous to the passing of this act, as recited by the 52d section, a practice had obtained of giving relief to persons or their families who, at the time of receiving such relief, were wholly or partially in the employment of individuals, and the relief of the able-bodied and their families was in many places administered in modes productive of evil in other respects; but as difficulty might arise in case any immediate and universal remedy were attempted to be applied in such matters, it is enacted, that the commissioners may, by their rules and orders, declare to what extent and for what period the relief to be given to able-bodied persons or to their families in any particular parish or union may be administered out of the workhouse, by payments in money, or with food or clothing in kind, or partly in kind and partly in money, and in what proportions, to what persons or class of persons, at what times and places, on what conditions, and in what manner such out-door relief may be afforded ; and that all relief which shall be given by any overseer, guardian, or other person having the control or distribution of the funds of such parish or union, contrary to such orders or regulations, shall be unlawful and be disallowed in his accounts, subject to the exceptions hereinafter mentioned.

But it is provided, that in case the overseers or guardians upon consideration of the special circumstances of the parish or union, or of any person or class of persons therein, shall be of opinion that the enforcing of such orders or regulations, or of any part thereof, at the time or in the manner prescribed, would be inexpedient, they may defer their operation for any period not exceeding the space of thirty days, making a statement and report of such special circumstances to the commissioners twenty days before the expiration of such thirty days ; and any relief given by such overseers or guardians before an answer to such report shall have been returned by the commissioners, if otherwise lawful, shall not be deemed unlawful, although contrary to such orders or regulations. In case, however, the commissioners disapprove of such delay, or think that for the future such orders or regulations ought to come into operation notwithstanding the special circumstances alleged, they may by a peremptory order direct that from a day to be fixed such orders and regulations, or such parts or modifications thereof as they may think expedient, shall be enforced ; and if any allowance be made or relief given after the last-mentioned period contrary to such last-mentioned order, the amount shall be disallowed in the accounts. A quarterly report of all such cases is to be laid by the commissioners before the secretary of state.

And in case the overseers or guardians of any parish or union depart from the orders or regulations in any particular instance of emergency, and shall, within fifteen days, report the same and the grounds thereof to the commissioners, and they approve of such departure, or if the relief shall have been given in food, temporary lodging, or medicine, and shall have been so reported, then the relief shall not be subject to be disallowed.

And as this practice of giving relief to the able-bodied and their families out of the workhouse had been chiefly the effect of certain discretionary powers vested in churchwardens and overseers, but more particularly in justices of peace, by 36 Geo. III. c. 23, the 55 Geo. III. c. 137, §§ 3, 4, and 59 Geo. III. c. 12, §§ 2, 5, in contravention of and indeed to the virtual repeal of the 9 Geo. I. c. 7, § 4, by which it had been enacted, " that poor persons refusing to be lodged, kept, or maintained in the parish house should not be entitled to receive relief from the churchwardens and overseers," these several enactments are now repealed by the 53d section of the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76 ; the effect of which is, that the said provision of the 9 Geo. I. is revived in its full force. And the 54th section expressly enacts, that after the passing of this act, the ordering, giving, and directing of all relief to the poor of any parish under the government of guardians or a select vestry or a vestry under the 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 80, whether forming part of any union or not, shall (subject in all cases to the powers of the commissioners) belong exclusively to such vestry or guardians.

The powers formerly exercised by justices of peace in ordering relief are by this act not merely abridged, but almost entirely taken away, except in certain special cases, which are—

1. In any unions formed under this act, relief may be ordered by two justices to any adult person who, to the personal knowledge of one of them, is unable from old age or infirmity to work, without requiring such person to reside in the workhouse.

2. In cases of sudden and urgent necessity, overseers are required, even in places under the government of a board of guardians or a select vestry, to give such temporary relief as the case may require, in articles of absolute necessity, but not in money, whether the applicant be settled in the parish or not; and the justices may order such relief if the overseers refuse it.

3. In case of sudden and dangerous illness, any justice may give a similar order for medical relief only, to any parishioner as well as out-parishioner; and an overseer is liable to the same penalty for disobeying such order.

By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, § 5, it shall be lawful for the guardians of any parish or union, subject always to the powers of the Poor Law Commissioners, to prescribe a task of work to be done by any person relieved in any workhouse, in return for the food and lodging afforded to such person; but it shall not be lawful to detain any person against his will for the performance of such task of work for any time exceeding four hours from the hour of breakfast in the morning succeeding the admission of such person into the workhouse. And if any such person, while in such workhouse, refuse or neglect to perform such task or work suited to his age, strength, and capacity, or wilfully destroy or injure his own clothes, or damage any of the property of the board of guardians, he shall be deemed an idle and disorderly person within the meaning of the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83 (Vagrant Act).

Maintenance of the Poor by their own Relations.—There are some cases in which the parish may be relieved, either wholly or partially, from the burden of relief; as, in the first place, where the relations of the pauper are of sufficient ability, they may be compelled to contribute towards his maintenance.

The 43 Eliz. c. 2, § 7 provides, that the father and grandfather, the mother and grandmother, and the children, of every poor, old, blind, lame, and impotent person, and other persons not able to work, being of sufficient ability, shall relieve every such poor person according to such rate as a general quarter sessions shall assess, upon pain of 20s. a month, to be levied by distress. But inconvenience having been occasioned by the application being required to be made to the quarter sessions, the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, § 36 provides, that two or more justices in petty sessions may make the assessment. And the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, § 78 enacts, that all sums so assessed by justices of the peace shall be recoverable in like manner as forfeitures under that act, namely, by distress and sale of the goods of the party, or, if there be no sufficient distress, by imprisonment for not exceeding three months.

This statute has been held only to extend to natural relations, and to such as are particularly enumerated. A father, therefore, is not obliged, under it, to maintain his son's wife or widow; nor a husband his wife's children by a former marriage, or his wife's mother

But the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, § 57 enacts, that every man who, after the passing of that act, shall marry a woman having a child or children at the time of such marriage, whether legitimate or illegitimate, shall be liable to maintain such children as part of his family, and shall be chargeable with all relief, or the cost price thereof, granted to them or on their account until such children shall attain the age of sixteen, or until the death of the mother.

And by sect. 56, relief given to a wife, or to children under the age of sixteen (not being blind, or deaf and dumb), shall be considered as given to the husband or father; and if the mother of the children be a widow, relief to them shall be considered as given to her.

And by sect. 58, any relief, or the cost price thereof, given to or on account of any poor person above the age of twenty-one, or to his wife or any other part of his family under the age of sixteen, and which the commissioners shall by any rule, order, or regulation declare or direct to be given or considered as given by way of loan (whether any receipt or engagement to repay the same be taken or not) shall be considered as a loan to such persons. And in such cases it shall be lawful for any justice to issue a summons requiring such person, as well as his master or employer, to appear before two justices to show cause why any wages due or which may become due to him should not be paid over, in whole or in part, to the overseers or guardians; and the justices may direct the master or employer to pay, either in one sum or by weekly instalments, as they shall think fit, taking into consideration the circumstances of such poor person and his family, out of such wages, the amount of such relief, or so much as shall be due; and the receipt of the overseers shall be a sufficient discharge to the master for so much wages as shall be so paid; and if any master or employer shall refuse or neglect to pay to the overseer or guardian producing any such order the money thereby directed to be paid, the same may be levied in like manner as penalties are recoverable under this act.

It has been said that an order cannot be made on a husband to maintain his wife. But if the wife be relieved, and the relief be considered a loan by the orders or rules of the commissioners, the husband's wages may be attached in the hands of his employer. Or if he desert his family and leave property behind him, it may be seized by the parish officers, and made available in indemnifying the parish for their support. Or he may be punished criminally under the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83 (Vagrant Act) for refusing to support his wife or family. But if a wife be guilty of adultery, a husband may legally refuse to maintain her. So a widow is obliged to maintain her children, and if she desert them, leaving property behind her, it may be made available for their support.

Soldiers' and Seamen's Pensions.—Persons entitled to a pension or other allowance in respect of their services in the army, navy, marines, or ordnance, and who shall apply for parish relief for themselves or families, may be required to assign such pension &c. before any relief is granted. And the wages of seamen in the merchant service, or serving under the smuggling laws, whose families become chargeable during their absence, may be received by parish officers towards the repayment of such sums as shall have been necessarily expended by them in the maintenance or relief of their families.

Relief to Widows Non-resident. — By the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 101, a discretionary power is given to guardians to grant relief, under certain circumstances, to widows not resident in the parish or union. By sec. 26, "In the case of any person being a widow having a legitimate child dependent on her for support, and no illegitimate child born after the commencement of her widowhood, and who at the time of her husband's death was resident with him in some place other than the parish of her legal settlement, and not situated in any union in which such parish is comprised, it shall be lawful for the guardians of the parish or union, if they see fit, to grant relief to such widow, although not residing in such parish or union. Provided always, that notwithstanding anything herein contained, the guardians of any union or parish, and the overseers of any parish, in which such widow may be resident or may require relief, shall be and remain liable to relieve such widow, in the same manner as any other person requiring relief in such union or parish."

The object of this clause appears to be, to avoid the disturbance of those connexions and mode of life, at a distance from the union, to which the family may have been accustomed, and which existed at the time of the husband's death. The power is entrusted to boards of guardians only: overseers acquire no authority under this provision to administer non-resident relief to the class of widows described. And where all the conditions exist which would enable the guardians to grant non-resident relief, they are still to use their discretion as to whether such relief is in the particular case desirable. It will be observed also, that guardians and their officers are in no wise exempted from their previous obligation to relieve any widow who may be in their parish or union requiring relief, by the power thus given to the guardians of the place of her settlement to afford her non-resident relief. And even when that power is exerted, if, notwithstanding the relief sent to her by her parish, she or her children require additional or further relief, the officers of the place where she is are still bound to afford her the relief which the circumstances require.

Relief to Married Women and their Children. — We have seen that by the Poor Law Amendment Act (4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, § 58) relief given to the children of widows is considered as relief given to themselves, and they are liable to the like conditions and consequences on account thereof as the fathers of legitimate children are. But this was not the case with married women; who, before the passing of the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 101, were not liable to any conditions in respect of relief granted to them or their children, and in the absence of their husbands from home under certain circumstances could throw their children upon the parish, however well they might be able to maintain them, or to contribute to their maintenance. But now, by the last-mentioned act, relief may be afforded to such married women or their children as a loan, repayable by them, notwithstanding the ordinary exemption of married women from similar liabilities. By sec. 25, "So long as it may appear that the husband of any woman is beyond the seas, or in custody of the law, or in confinement in a licensed house or asylum as a lunatic or idiot, all relief given to such woman or to her child or children shall, notwithstanding her cover-ture, be given to such woman in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if she was a widow. But nothing herein contained shall diminish or affect the obligations or liabilities of such husband in respect of such relief."

Insane Persons and Idiots.—The estates of insane persons and idiots were formerly liable only in a very imperfect manner to the repayment of relief afforded to them. Now, by the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 101, to the extent to which their property may be more than sufficient to maintain their families, such property is made liable generally to repay the costs incurred by parishes in respect of such persons, and trustees and other persons in possession of property belonging to them are indemnified for any payments they may make to guardians or overseers.

And by sec. 28, "The guardians of every parish or union appointed under any local act, and their officers appointed to act in the relief of the poor, and their clerks, shall, from and after the passing of this act, have the like powers, and shall be liable to perform the same duties, with respect to insane persons, as are provided in the case of guardians appointed under the provisions of the said first-recited act, their relieving officers and their clerks respectively.

Bastardy.—This subject, so far as it relates to the liabilities of the putative fathers of bastards, may now be considered as wholly withdrawn from any connexion with the poor laws. The powers of guardians and overseers of the poor for the enforcement of such liabilities are entirely taken away by the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 101, and their interference in the matter is even rendered criminal.

The proceedings for obtaining an order on the putative father of a bastard child to contribute to its maintenance belong to another part of the work ; it is here sufficient to observe, that the mother alone is entitled to apply for such an order. No officer of any parish or union may conduct any application to make or enforce any such order, or in any way interfere in causing such an application to be made, or in procuring evidence to support such application, or in receiving money under such an order. If he does so, he is subject to a penalty of 40s. But after the death of the mother, or when she becomes legally incapable of receiving the money under an order, if a child for whose maintenance an order has been made becomes chargeable to a parish or union through the neglect of the putative father to make the payments due from him under the order, in such case the guardians (or if there are no guardians, the overseers) may so far interfere as is necessary to compel a compliance with the order. But even in this case they are not to receive the money, but it must be paid to some person appointed to have the custody of the child, who is to receive it on condition that the child shall cease to be chargeable.

And by sec. 8, any officer of a union or parish who endeavours to induce any man to contract marriage by means of threats or promise respecting any application for an order, or enforcement of an order, is declared guilty of a misdemeanor.

But these changes in the law of bastardy make no difference in the legal obligation on parishes to relieve bastard children whenever their necessities require relief.

IV. OF SETTLEMENT.

A settlement may be defined a right to participate in the benefit of the poor laws in a parish or district which provides for its own poor, and to which persons become removable for the purpose of obtaining relief. The methods whereby it may be now acquired are—

1. By Birth and Parentage.—A legitimate child follows the settlement of its father, if it be known; if not, it takes that of its mother. If the settlement of neither can be ascertained, the settlement of the child is in its birth-place; and if that cannot be discovered, it must be provided for in the place where it may happen to be, as casual poor.

The first settlement of an illegitimate child was, before the passing of the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, in the place of its birth; but the 71st section of that act enacts, that every child which shall be born a bastard after the passing of the act shall have and follow the settlement of its mother until it shall attain the age of sixteen, or shall acquire a settlement in its own right. If the mother, however, have no settlement, or her place of settlement cannot be ascertained, then the child's settlement will be as formerly, which is generally in the place of its birth.

2. By Marriage.—If a woman marries a man who has a known settlement, she instantly acquires his settlement, and takes every subsequent settlement which he may obtain till he dies. If he has none, then she retains her own settlement. If the husband deserts her, he having no settlement, she may be removed to her maiden settlement.

3. By Apprenticeship.—This settlement arises from the binding and a residence of forty days in the parish as an apprentice. It matters not whether such days be consecutive or at intervals. If the places of residence be several, the last place regulates the settlement. The apprentice need not continue in the actual service of the first master during the whole time; for if he be assigned over, or continue, with his privity and consent, in the service of another, he may gain a settlement by serving the second master forty days.

By the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, § 67, no settlement can be thereafter acquired by being apprenticed in the sea service, or to a householder exercising the trade of the seas as a fisherman or otherwise, nor by any person then being such an apprentice in respect of such apprenticeship.

4. By Estate.—Any estate in lands, whether freehold or copyhold, or whether held in fee simple, fee tail, for life, or even for term of years, or from year to year, if the party in possession is not the original lessee, but comes in by act of law, will, with a residence of forty days in the parish, suffice to confer a settlement. The 9 Geo. I. c. 7 has introduced a modification of this general right, by providing that no settlement shall be gained by land purchased unless the purchase money amount to 30*l*.

And the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, § 68 enacts, that no person shall retain any settlement gained by virtue of the possession of any estate or interest in any parish for any longer time than such person shall inhabit within ten miles thereof; and in case such person cease to inhabit within such distance, and thereafter become chargeable, he shall be liable to be removed to the parish wherein previously to such inhabiting he may have been legally settled, or in case he may have, subsequently to such inhabiting, gained a legal settlement in some other parish, then to such other parish.

5. By Renting a Tenement, &c.—The 6 Geo. IV. c. 57 (explained by 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 18) requires that the tenement consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both, bonâ fide rented by such person in the parish at 10*l.* per annum at least, for the term of one whole year; that it be occupied by the party hiring it for a whole year under such yearly hiring; and that the rent for the same, to the amount of 10*l.* at least, be actually paid by the party hiring. And the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76 also requires that the person occupying the same shall have been assessed to the poor rate, and have paid the same in respect of such tenement for one year.

6. By Payment of Taxes.—The provisions of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 57 do not in terms take away the settlement by paying public taxes, yet they would seem to do so in effect by requiring a concurrence of all the circumstances which are necessary to confer a settlement by renting a tenement.

Before the passing of the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76 there were two other modes of acquiring a settlement, namely, by hiring and service, and by serving an office; but these are now abolished by that act, though settlements by either of these means previously completed are not affected thereby.

V. OF REMOVING THE POOR.

By the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 2, two justices, on the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers, were empowered to remove to the place of his last legal settlement any person within forty days after his coming to reside in any parish, on his being likely to become chargeable. But this is altered by the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, which enacts that no person shall be removed until he becomes actually chargeable; and by sec. 67, and also by the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, § 20, it is declared, that every person convicted of felony, or adjudged an idle or disorderly person, or a reputed thief, or a rogue and vagabond, shall be deemed actually chargeable and be liable to be removed. Every unmarried woman with child was also by the same act declared chargeable, and might be removed; but this has been repealed by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, § 69.

By the 79th section of the last-mentioned act, no pauper shall be removed until twenty-one days after a notice in writing of his being chargeable, with a copy of the order of removal and of the examination upon which the order was made, shall have been sent to the overseers or guardians of the parish to whom the order is directed, unless the latter agree to receive the pauper, in which case the removal may take place immediately. Nor is the pauper to be removed at the end of the twenty-one days, if a notice of appeal be previously received, but the order is to remain in abeyance till either the appeal be determined or the time for prosecuting it be expired.

By the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 66, "No person shall be removed, nor shall any warrant be granted for the removal of any person, from any parish in which such person shall have resided for five years next before the application for the warrant. Provided always, that the time during which such person shall be a prisoner in a prison, or shall be serving her majesty as a soldier, marine, or sailor, or reside as an in-pensioner in Greenwich or Chelsea Hospitals, or shall be confined in a lunatic asylum, or house duly licensed or hospital registered for the reception of lunatics, or as a patient in a hospital, or during which any such person shall receive relief from any parish, or shall be wholly or in part maintained by any rate or subscription raised in a parish in which such person does not reside, not being a bonâ fide charitable gift, shall be excluded in the computation of such time; and that the removal of a pauper lunatic to a lunatic asylum, under the provisions of any act relating to the maintenance and care of pauper lunatics, shall not be deemed a removal within the meaning of this act. Provided always, that whenever any person shall have a wife or children having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children shall be removable whenever he or she is removable, and shall not be removable when he or she is not removable.—§ 1.

And no woman residing in any parish with her husband at the time of his death shall be removed from such parish for twelve calendar months next after his death, if she so long continue a widow.—§ 2.

And no child under the age of sixteen years, whether legitimate or illegitimate, residing in any parish with his or her father or mother, stepfather or stepmother, or reputed father, shall be removed from such parish, in any case where such father, mother, stepfather, stepmother, or reputed father may not lawfully be removed from such parish.—§ 3.

And no warrant shall be granted for the removal of any person becoming chargeable in respect of relief made necessary by sickness or accident, unless the justices shall state in such warrant that they are satisfied that the sickness or accident will produce permanent disability.—§ 4.

Provided, that no person hereby exempted from liability to be removed shall by reason of such exemption acquire any settlement in any parish.—§ 5.

And if any officer of any parish or union do, contrary to law, with intent to cause any poor person to become chargeable to any parish, convey any poor person out of the parish for which such officer acts, or cause or procure any poor person to be so conveyed, or give directly or indirectly any money, relief, or assistance, or afford or procure to be afforded any facility for such conveyance, or make any offer or promise, or use any threat, to induce any poor person to depart from such parish, and if, in consequence of such conveyance or departure, any poor person become chargeable to any parish to which he was not then chargeable, such officer, on conviction thereof before two justices, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 40*s.*—§ 6.

The delivery of a pauper, under any warrant of removal directed to the overseers of any parish, at the workhouse of such parish or of the union to which such parish belongs, to any officer of the workhouse, shall be deemed the delivery of such pauper to the overseers of such parish.—§ 7.

CHAPTER VI.

Of the People,

AS NATURAL-BORN SUBJECTS, DENIZENS, AND ALIENS.

THE first and most obvious division of the people is into—1. Natural-born subjects; and 2. Aliens.

Natural-born subjects are such as are born within the dominions of the crown of Great Britain and Ireland; and aliens, generally speaking, are such as are born out of those dominions. But this must be understood with some restrictions, as—

By several statutes, all children born in foreign countries, whose father or grandfather by the father's side was a natural-born subject, are deemed themselves natural-born subjects, unless the ancestor was attainted or banished for treason, or was in the service of a foreign prince at enmity with this country.¹

By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, § 3, every person born out of her majesty's dominions, of a mother being a natural-born subject, shall be capable of taking, to him, his heirs, executors, or administrators, any estate real or personal, by devise, purchase, or inheritance of succession.

And by § 16, any woman married to a natural-born subject or person naturalized shall be deemed to be herself naturalized, and have all the rights and privileges of a natural-born subject.

Children of aliens, born in England, are generally natural-born subjects.

Natural-born subjects are said to owe allegiance to the crown, meaning those duties and engagements which are due from a people to a sovereign. Allegiance has been divided into natural and local; the first, or natural allegiance, being such as is perpetually due from all men born within the queen's dominions immediately upon their birth, and which exists wherever the subject may dwell; and the other, or local allegiance, being such temporary duty as an alien or stranger owes while he continues within the queen's dominions and protection.²

ALIENS acquire certain rights while they continue to reside in the queen's dominions; but they are also liable to certain disabilities. An alien may purchase lands &c., but not for his own use, for the crown would be entitled thereto;³ but this would not affect the vendor, who, having received an adequate compensation for the same, could not take any advantage thereof. But an alien may acquire a property in goods, money, or other personal estate to his own use, and may hire a house for habitation, &c. So he may bring actions for personal property; and may make a will of personal estate.

Aliens may now carry on trade as freely as other persons. Formerly higher duties were laid upon goods imported or exported by aliens, whether in British or foreign ships, than on similar goods when imported or exported by natives. But as sounder and more enlarged

¹ 29 Car. II. c. 6; 7 Ann. c. 5; 4 Geo. II. c. 21; 13 Geo. III. c. 21.

7 Rep. 18.

² 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 367, &c.

³ Co. Litt. 2.

principles prevailed, this illiberal distinction was gradually modified, and at length wholly abolished (so far at least as it was of a public character) by 24 Geo. III. c. 16, which repealed the duties commonly called "the petty customs," imposed by 12 Car. II., and all other additional duties imposed upon the goods of aliens above those payable by natural-born subjects, except only the duties upon goods imported or exported in foreign ships, and those of package and scavage, or duties granted by charter to the city of London. The duties thus preserved to the city were not very heavy; but the principle on which they were imposed being exceedingly objectionable, they were at length abolished by the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 66.

By 7 & 8 Vic. c. 66, the laws respecting aliens have been still further modified; the full enjoyment of all personal property is secured to them, except of chattels real; their capacity of enjoying the latter description of property is extended; and provision is made for enabling her majesty to grant to them, under certain regulations, all the rights and capacities of British subjects, except of becoming of the privy council or a member of either house of parliament.

By sec. 4, "Every alien being the subject of a friendly state shall and may take and hold, by purchase, gift, bequest, representation, or otherwise, every species of personal property, except chattels real, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes, and with the same rights, remedies, exemptions, privileges, and capacities, as if he were a natural-born subject of the United Kingdom."

And by sec. 5, "Every alien now residing, or who shall hereafter come to reside in, any part of the United Kingdom, and being the subject of a friendly state, may, by grant, lease, demise, assignment, bequest, representation, or otherwise, take and hold any lands, houses or other tenements, for the purpose of residence or of occupation by him or her, or his or her servants, or for the purpose of any business, trade, or manufacture, for any term of years not exceeding twenty-one years, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes, and with the same rights, remedies, exemptions, and privileges, except the right to vote at elections for members of parliament, as if he were a natural-born subject of the United Kingdom."

The act then provides that, upon obtaining a certificate from the secretary of state, and taking an oath prescribed by the act, every alien now residing in, or who shall hereafter come to reside in, any part of Great Britain or Ireland, with intent to settle therein, shall enjoy all the rights and capacities which a natural-born subject of the United Kingdom can enjoy or transmit, except that such alien shall not be capable of becoming of her majesty's privy council, or a member of either house of parliament, or any other right or capacity (if any) which may be specially excepted in and by the certificate.

Persons naturalized before the passing of the act, and who have resided in the United Kingdom five successive years, are entitled to all such rights and capacities of British subjects as may be conferred on aliens by the provisions of this act.—§ 13.

The act is not to prejudice any rights or interests in law or equity, whether vested or contingent, under any will, deed, or settlement executed before the passing of it, or under any descent or representation from or under a natural-born subject who shall have died before the passing of it; nor to take away or diminish any right, privilege, or capacity heretofore lawfully possessed by aliens residing in Great Britain or Ireland, so far as relates to the possession or enjoyment of any real or personal property.

A DENIZEN is one who, being born an alien, has obtained denization, or letters patent from the crown to make him an English subject. He is in a kind of middle state between an alien and a natural-born subject. He may take lands by purchase or devise, which an alien may not; but cannot take by inheritance, for his parent, through whom he must claim, being an alien, had no inheritable blood, and therefore could convey none to his son. For a like reason the issue of a denizen born before denization cannot inherit to him, but his issue born after may. No denizen can be of the privy council or either house of parliament, or have any office of trust, civil or military, or be capable of a grant from the crown.¹

Naturalization, which can only be performed by an act of parliament (except as undermentioned), places an alien in precisely the same situation in all respects as a natural-born subject; though, before the passing of the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 66, he could not be a member of the privy council or parliament, nor hold any public office of trust, civil or military,² (so that he could not be even a constable,³) or take any grant of lands &c. from the crown to himself or any other person in trust for him; for, by the 1 Geo. I. c. 4, no bill of naturalization could be received in either house of parliament without such disabling clause in it. But this provision is now repealed by the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 66; as are also such other parts of that act, and of the 12 & 13 Wm. III. c. 2, and 14 Geo. III. c. 84, as are inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

Every foreign seaman serving two years in time of war by virtue of the royal proclamation is ipso facto naturalized, and after three years service is deemed a British mariner. And all persons serving here in a military capacity, or being three years employed in the whale fishery, without afterwards being more than two years absent, and not falling within the restrictions in 4 Geo. II. c. 21, are, on taking the oath of allegiance &c., naturalized, with the same disqualifications as aforesaid.

CHAPTER VII.

Of the Clergy.

THE whole body of the people, whether natural-born subjects, denizens, or aliens, are divisible into—1. The clergy; and 2. The Laity.

The clergy comprehends all persons in holy orders and in ecclesiastical offices of the established church.

¹ 12 Wm. III. c. 2.

² 12 Wm. III. c. 2. See 1 Geo. I. c. 4;

14 Geo. III. c. 84.

³ 5 Burr. 2788.

⁴ 13 Geo. II. c. 3.

⁵ 13 Geo. II. c. 7; 29 Geo. II. c. 44;

22 Geo. II. c. 45; 2 Geo. III. c. 25;

13 Geo. III. c. 25.

This venerable body of men, says Blackstone, being separated and set apart from the rest of the people in order to attend more closely to the service of Almighty God, have thereupon large privileges allowed them by our municipal laws, and had formerly much greater, but they were abridged at the time of the Reformation, on account of the ill use which the Popish clergy had endeavoured to make of them. For, the laws having exempted them from almost every personal duty, they attempted a total exemption from every secular tie. But, it is observed by Sir Edward Coke, as the overflowing of waters doth make the river to lose its proper channel; so, in times past, ecclesiastical persons, seeking to extend their liberties beyond their true bounds, either lost or enjoyed not those which of right belonged to them.

The clergy enjoy several personal exemptions. Thus, they cannot be compelled to serve on a jury, appear at a court leet or frank-pledge; nor can they be chosen to any temporal office, as bailiff, constable, &c. During his attendance on divine service, a clergyman cannot be arrested in civil suits; and this privilege extends to his going to and returning from church, and while staying there, unless he stay with the view to elude process. But the arrest is so far valid on any day but Sunday, that if the officer discharge him, he is liable on the escape. At the suit of the crown, however, the privilege cannot be claimed. Neither can their goods be taken on a fi. fa. or levari facias in the ordinary mode; for the writ must be directed to the bishop of the diocese, and executed in a particular mode.

The clergy have also their disabilities. Thus, they cannot sit in the House of Commons.¹ They are not, without licence from the bishop, allowed to take more than eighty acres to farm, under the penalty of 40s. a year for every exceeding acre; nor to engage in any trading or merchandize, under penalty of forfeiting the value of the goods.² But they may buy and sell corn and cattle the produce of their farms, or such as is necessary for use, provided they do it not in person in any fair, public market, &c. Yet if they do engage in trade, their contracts are binding, and they are, like other traders, liable to be made bankrupts,³ because a man cannot take advantage of his own wrong.

The clergy are exempted from personal service in war; but they are in general liable to all public charges imposed by act of parliament. Thus, they are chargeable under the highway acts;⁴ they are also liable to poor rates for their glebe and tithe;⁵ and they are liable to take parish apprentices, or at least to pay towards putting them out.⁶

The exemptions from the duty on horses imposed by the 43 Geo. III. c. 161, extend to any rector, vicar, or curate, actually doing duty in the church or chapel of which he is rector &c., not possessed of 60l. per annum, whether arising from ecclesiastical preferment or otherwise, and not keeping more than one horse &c. for the purpose of riding, which would otherwise be chargeable within the act, except such persons who shall occasionally perform the duty without being the regular officiating

¹ 4 Geo. III. c. 73; Comm. Journ. 18th October, 1553.

² 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, ss. 28—31.

³ 1 Atk. 196; Cowp. 745.

⁴ Hawk. 61, c. 76, § 15; 13 Geo. III. c. 78, § 34, 35, 45, 46.

⁵ 43 Eliz. c. 2; and ante.

⁶ Bott. 608, pl. 841; 2 Nol. P. L. 346, 4th Edit.

minister. And, by 48 Geo. III. c. 55, and 52 Geo. III. c. 93, every ecclesiastical person not possessed of 100*l.* annual income, from preferment or otherwise, is exempted from duty on any horse used only for drawing a two-wheeled taxed cart.

There are divers ranks and degrees among ecclesiastical persons; as, 1. Archbishops; 2. Bishops; 3. Deans, Canons, and Prebendaries; 4. Archdeacons; 5 Rural Deans; 6. Parsons and Vicars; 7. Curates; 8. Churchwardens; and 9. Parish Clerks and Sextons.

1. ARCHBISHOPS.—England and Wales contain two archbishoprics, or provinces as they are called, namely, Canterbury and York. The archbishop of Canterbury is called Metropolitanus et Primus totius Angliæ, and hath under him nineteen bishoprics. The archbishop of York is called Primus et Metropolitanus Angliæ, and hath under him six bishoprics. The archbishop of Canterbury hath precedence.

An archbishop is nominally elected by the chapter of his cathedral church, but in effect is nominated by the king. He is head of, and has the superintendence of all the clergy of his province, and may deprive them for sufficient and notorious cause, as for simony; but infirmity of body &c. is no cause of removal, for the bishop may appoint co-adjutors. On receipt of the queen's writ, he convokes the bishops and clergy in convocation.¹ Appeals lie to him from the decisions of the bishops, and from the consistory courts of each diocese or bishopric. During the vacancy of any see in his province, he is guardian of the temporalities, and is entitled to present to all livings in the disposal of his bishops, if not filled within six months. The archbishop of Canterbury crowns the king or queen. He can also grant dispensations, in any case not contrary to divine or human laws, where the pope used formerly to grant them, which is the foundation of special licences to marry at any time or place, to hold two livings, and the like; and on this is founded the right of conferring degrees in prejudice to the two universities. Archbishoprics become void by death, deprivation for notorious crime, or resignation.

2. BISHOPS are nominally elected by the chapters of their respective cathedral churches, but in effect are nominated by the crown. There are twenty-five bishoprics in England. The power and authority of a bishop, besides the administration of certain holy offices peculiar to that sacred order, as consecration of churches, ordination &c. of priests, confirmation, excommunication, granting licences for marriage, making probates of wills &c., consists principally in inspecting the manners of the people and clergy, and punishing them, in order to reformation, by ecclesiastical censures. He has power to ordain, that is, confer holy orders, all over the world. He institutes and inducts to all ecclesiastical livings in his diocese; he has several courts under him, mostly held by his deputy, called a chancellor. Bishoprics also become void by death, deprivation for notorious crimes, or resignation.

3. The DEAN and CHAPTER² are the council of the bishop in affairs of religion and the temporal concerns of the see.³ They perform service in the cathedral, the head or chief being termed decanus or dean. Deans are nominally elected by the chapter, but in fact are nominated by the crown. The chapter, consisting of canons and prebendaries, are sometimes appointed by the crown, sometimes by the bishop, and sometimes by each other. Deaneries and prebends also become void by death, deprivation, or resignation.

¹ 4 Inst. 322.

² See Hargrave Co. Litt. 95.

³ 3 Rep. 75. Co. Litt. 101, 300.

4. ARCHDEACONS have jurisdiction immediately subordinate to the bishop, either throughout the whole see, or some parts thereof. An archdeacon is usually appointed by the bishop, and has a kind of episcopal authority, now independent of the bishop. Thus, he visits the clergy; holds separate ecclesiastical courts; and grants letters of administration.¹

5. RURAL DEANS are very ancient offices of the church, now almost grown out of use, though deaneries still subsist as an ecclesiastical division of the diocese or archdeaconry. They appear to have been deputies of the bishop, planted round his diocese, the better to inspect the conduct of the parochial clergy, to inquire and report concerning dilapidations, to examine the candidates for confirmation; and they were armed, in minuter matters, with an inferior degree of judicial and coercive authority.

Ordinary.—It is needful in this place to explain, that the term ordinary is a civil law term for any judge who hath authority to take cognizance of causes in his own right, and not by deputation; by the common law, it is taken for him who hath ordinary or exempt and immediate jurisdiction in causes ecclesiastical.²

This name is applied to a bishop who hath original jurisdiction; and an archbishop is the ordinary of the whole province, to visit and receive appeals from inferior jurisdictions, &c.³

6. PARSONS AND VICARS.—The distinction between a parson and a vicar is this: the parson has, for the most part, the whole right to all the ecclesiastical dues in his parish; but a vicar has generally an appropriator over him, entitled to the best part of the profits, to whom he is in effect perpetual curate with a standing salary. In some places, however, the vicarage has been considerably augmented by a large share of the great tithes; which augmentations were greatly assisted by the 29 Car. II. c. 8, enacted in favour of poor vicars and curates, which rendered such temporary augmentations (when made by the appropriator) perpetual. A parson represents the body of the church; and he is per se a corporate body, in order to protect and defend the rights of the church which he personates. He has during his life the freehold of the parsonage house, the glebe, the tithes, and other dues; but these are sometimes appropriated, that is, the benefice is perpetually annexed to some spiritual corporation. He may make a lease of the church and churchyard, and is the only person who can give a licence for burying in the church, neither the ordinary nor the churchwardens having any authority for that purpose.

The method of becoming a parson or vicar is much the same. To both there are four requisites; holy orders, presentation, institution, and induction. At common law, a deacon of any age might be instituted and inducted to a parsonage or vicarage; but by the 13 Eliz. c. 12 it was enacted, that no person unless twenty-three years of age and in deacon's orders should be presented to any benefice with cure, and that if he were not ordained a priest within a year after his induction he should be ipso facto deprived; and by 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4, no person is capable of being admitted to any benefice unless he hath been first ordained a priest, when he is, in the language of the law, a clerk in orders; and for that purpose he must be twenty-four years of age. If he obtain orders, or a licence to preach, by money or corrupt practices (which is the true notion of simony), the person giving such orders forfeits 40*l.*, and the person receiving them 10*l.* and is incapable of any ecclesiastical preferment for seven years afterwards.

¹ Cro. Jac. 556; Lev. 192.

² Co. Lit. 354; stat. West. II. 13 Ed. I. st. 1 c. 19.

³ Inst. 398; 9 Rep. 41. Wood's Inst. 25.

Any person who has been ordained, that is, a clerk in holy orders, may be presented to a parsonage or vicarage by the patron to whom the advowson belongs; but the bishop may refuse him on many accounts: as, if the patron is excommunicated and remains in contempt forty days; or if the clerk is unfit, as if an outlaw, an excommunicate, an alien, or if he is under the proper age, or is an heretic, or has any vice that is malum in se, or does not possess sufficient learning, and some others. But the bishop must in general give the patron notice of the objection, before he can present by lapse.

Institution is a kind of investiture of the spiritual part of the benefice; on which occasion he takes the oath of perpetual residence on the living.

Induction is performed by a mandate from the bishop to the archdeacon. It is done by giving corporeal possession of the church, &c., as by ringing the church bell, the surrender of the keys, or the like.

When these four ceremonies are performed, the clerk is in full possession of the church, except that by law he must, unless prevented by sickness &c., read himself in, that is, read the morning and evening prayers at the proper times within two months of his induction, and also, within the same time, read the Thirty-nine Articles, with his assent thereto, and the ordinary's certificate of his having subscribed the declaration of conformity to the liturgy; and, within six months, he must, in one of the courts at Westminster, or at the general or quarter sessions, take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration.

It has been before observed, that he must take an oath to reside perpetually on his living. In case of non-residence above three months in the year, he is liable to certain penalties; but there are many exemptions, such as sinecure rectories, royal chaplains, certain public officers and students at the universities, &c.; and the bishop may grant licences for non-residence on account of the illness of the incumbent, his wife or family, or where there is not a fit parsonage house.¹

7. CURATES are not entitled to the cure of souls, but exercise their spiritual office under the rector and vicar; and they are either temporary as assistants or substitutes in his absence, or perpetual, where there is neither vicar nor rector, but a clerk is employed to officiate by the impropriator.

Temporary curates must be appointed by the nomination of the incumbent under hand and seal to the bishop, setting forth the stipend for his maintenance, and humbly beseeching the bishop to license him to serve the cure. The right of the appointment of a curate to a chapel of ease is also in the incumbent of the mother church, he having the cure of souls throughout the whole parish.

¹ See the recent statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, by which the whole law as to pluralities and the residence of the clergy has been consolidated and amended.

As all parochial duties are primâ facie imposed upon the rector or vicar, therefore all fees &c. belong to him; and no part of them can be granted to the chapel, except by composition with the patron and incumbent of the parish, and the ordinary, making some compensation to future incumbents if any thing is taken from the living.

Perpetual curates are sometimes nominated by the parishioners by custom, which must be strictly followed in its terms, and sometimes by other parties. It is not necessary, in order to prevent a lapse, that the appointment be within six months, unless so directed by the founder, or the curacy has been augmented by Queen Anne's Bounty. But the bishop may compel the patron by ecclesiastical censures to make the appointment. In certain cases the bishop may call upon the incumbent to nominate a curate with a stipend, and in case of default may himself make the appointment.

It has been decided, that the perpetual curate to an augmented parochial chapelry has a sufficient possession whereon to maintain trespass for breaking and entering the chapel and destroying the pews, and the chapelwarden cannot remove the pews without his consent.¹

LECTURERS form another class of ministers of the established religion, whose situation in the church presents somewhat of an anomaly, as they are in many cases, though subordinate, not subject to the control of the rector or minister of the church; and in other instances, though they have not the enjoyment of all the privileges which usually belong to the person filling the place of chief minister of the church or chapel, they are of an independent foundation. They are generally provided for by the pecuniary contributions of the parish, or by the charity of some benevolent individual, appropriated thereto by deed or will. They must in general qualify themselves as other clergymen; and the only parish duty they perform, as such, is that of preaching.²

OF THE BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

We shall take this opportunity of saying a few words on the subject of benefit of clergy, which originally applied only to this class of persons;³ and although the privilege itself is now totally abolished by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, § 6, yet as it formed till recently so very prominent a feature in our laws, some account of its origin and effect will naturally be expected.

Anciently Christian princes and states, for the encouragement of the clergy in their offices and employments, and that they might not be entangled in suits, granted to them many privileges and exemptions, and particularly an exemption of their persons from process in criminal proceedings, in some capital cases, before the secular judges; which was the true origin of the benefit of clergy.

As the clergy afterwards increased in wealth and power, they endeavoured to set up for themselves, and what they had obtained at first by the favour of princes and states, they began to claim as their right, and that by a title of the highest nature, namely by the law of

¹ Jones v. Ellis, 2 Younge & J. 265.

² Steer. 78—82.

³ 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 377, note.

God. By their canons and constitutions they aimed at, and in some places obtained, vast extensions of these exemptions, both with regard to the persons concerned (extending them not only to persons in holy orders, but to all who had any kind of subordinate ministration relative to the church), and likewise in respect of the causes, exempting, as far as they could, all causes of clergymen, as well civil as criminal, from the jurisdiction of the secular power, and wholly subordinating them immediately and only to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. This jurisdiction they supposed to be lodged in the pope by divine right and investiture from Christ, and from the pope to be shed abroad into all subordinate and ecclesiastical jurisdictions. By this means it happened, that in some kingdoms, and for some ages, there was a double supreme power—the one ecclesiastical, absolute and independent of any but the pope, over ecclesiastical men and canons; and the other secular, residing in the king or civil magistrate.

But this claim of exemption, although it was never thoroughly effected in this kingdom, grew so burdensome, that it was from time to time qualified and abridged by the civil power, sometimes by acts of parliament taking it away in some cases, sometimes by the interpretation and construction of the judges, and sometimes by the contrary usage of the kingdom; for ecclesiastical canons never bound in England farther than they were received, having their authority not from their own strength and obligation, but from the usages and customs of the kingdom that admitted them, and only so far as they were so admitted. Therefore, if ecclesiastical persons were indicted in cases criminal, but not capital, or wherein they were to lose life or limb, then the privilege of clergy was not allowed; and therefore not in indictments of trespass or petit larceny. Nor was it allowed them in high treason. But, at the common law, in all cases of felony or of petit treason clergy was allowed, except in two, lying in wait and burning of houses, which were looked upon as hostile acts, and the authors of them therefore not entitled to the common privileges of subjects.

The 25 Edw. III. c. 4, ordained that all manner of clerks, as well secular as religious, should thenceforth enjoy the privilege of holy church; and by a favourable interpretation of this statute (nearly coeval with its enactment) not only those actually admitted into some inferior order of the clergy, but all persons qualified to be so admitted (which was tried by putting them to read a verse), were deemed entitled to this privilege without further question.

By stat. 4 Hen. VII. c. 13, every person (not being within orders) who had once been admitted to his clergy, should not be admitted to the same a second time. And, by the same statute, if he was convicted of murder he should be marked (unless he was a peer) with an M on the brawn of the left thumb; and for any other felony, with a T. But he should not be ousted of his clergy by the bare mark in his hand, or by a parol averment, without the record testifying it, or a transcript thereof. This distinction between learned laymen and real clerks was abolished for a time by 38 Hen. VIII. c. 1, and 32 Hen. VIII. c. 3, but was held to have been virtually restored by 1 Edw. VI. c. 12.

By the common law, a woman could not have the benefit of clergy; out by the statute 3 Wm. III. c. 9, a woman convicted or waived for any felony for which a man might have his clergy, should, upon praying the benefit of that statute, be subject only to such punishment as a man would be in a like case.

Finally, by stat. 5 Anne, c. 6, which abolished the ceremony of reading, the wall of partition (as Sir Michael Foster expresses it) between subject and subject under one and the same degree of guilt was taken away; and from this period the measure of punishment was governed by the degree of real guilt, and not by the function or abilities of the offender.

This privilege is now, however, as before observed, entirely abolished. The 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, § 6, enacts, "that benefit of clergy with respect to persons convicted of felony shall be abolished; but that nothing therein contained shall prevent the joinder in any indictment of any counts which might have been joined before the passing of the act."

The benefit of clergy had the same effect in restoring a party to his competency as a statute pardon; and, the benefit of clergy being abolished, it was at least doubtful whether a person convicted of felony was a competent witness, although he had undergone the punishment. But this is now remedied by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 32, § 3, which enacts, "that where any offender hath been or shall be convicted of any felony not punishable with death, and hath endured or shall endure the punishment to which such offender hath been or shall be adjudged for the same, the punishment so endured shall have the like effects and consequences as a pardon under the great seal as to the felony whereof the offender was so convicted; provided always, that nothing herein contained, nor the enduring of such punishment, shall prevent or mitigate any punishment to which the offender might otherwise be lawfully sentenced on a subsequent conviction for any other felony."

By the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, § 7, felonies without benefit of clergy, and by § 8, felonies within benefit of clergy, are provided for under all circumstances consequent on the indictment.

OF CHURCHES.

Before proceeding further in considering the officers of the church, we shall here say a few words of the church itself.

And first, of the chancel. This is a part formerly, and in some churches still, separated from the body of the church by a lattice work (from whence its name is supposed to be derived), so as to prevent general access thereto, though not so as to intercept the sound or sight; for in this part the service was usually performed prior to the Reformation, and from this cause the vicar has always had a right to a pew or seat therein. The repairs of this part in general fall on the impropriator, rector, or vicar of the church, and not upon the parish; which, therefore, usually exempts the impropriator, rector, or vicar, from rates for the repair of the body of the church.

Aisle.—In the aisle of the church an exclusive property may belong to any private house in the parish, from its having been occupied and repaired by the owners of that house; and such owner may have his action on the case for an intrusion therein.

Pews.—Formerly there were no pews in churches; and now, by common law, pews are the common property of all the inhabitants of the parish, at whose expense in general they are erected and repaired. The distribution of them rests in the churchwardens, subject to the supervision of the ordinary. And though the higher classes are accommodated before the lower, yet they are not to be unnecessarily accommodated beyond their real wants, to the exclusion of others. Parishioners, however, have a right to rent pews, and to the exclusive use of them, as long as they continue parishioners; but not after, although a pew was in one case¹ adjudged to belong to a house out of the parish, from the presumption that it was formerly within the ecclesiastical limits of the church. It has recently been held, that a party not using a pew for a considerable time has no right to lock it up, and thus prevent the use of it by others.

If more pews are requisite, the ordinary may adjudge galleries to be built; or where the incumbent, churchwardens, and parishioners agree upon the necessity, they may be erected without the authority of the ordinary. As pews are part of the church, a person having an exclusive right thereto cannot maintain trespass for any intrusion, but must bring an action on the case.²

Of the Goods and Ornaments of the Church.—It is the duty of the churchwardens to see to the due ornament and cleanliness of the church. They are, at the expence of the parish, to provide and keep in order the communion table, the pulpit, reading desk, font, chest for alms, chalice, wine &c. for the sacrament, book of prayers, the homilies, tables of degrees of marriages prohibited, the ten commandments, bells and ropes, bier for the dead, &c. With regard to the erection of monuments and the exclusive use of vaults, that permission is obtained by a faculty from the ordinary; and when once obtained, an action is maintainable for the destruction or other damage done to either. The property of the church is unalienable, except for some special uses by the civil law, and with the general consent of the parish and churchwardens.

The expence of repairs of the church is now generally cast upon the parish, by a rate to be raised by the churchwardens, with the consent previously obtained of the parishioners. Though repairing the chancel exempts from a rate for repairs of the church, yet the repairs of a chapel will not in general do so.

Profanation of Churches.—This is visited with various common law and ecclesiastical punishments; and hereunder is prohibited the arrest upon civil process of persons in holy orders while going to, performing, or returning from divine service. So also are prohibited plays, banquets, musters, or other profane usages in the church, chapel, or churchyard; but the performance of oratorios of sacred music is allowed, and is of common occurrence in country churches and in cathedrals. So is brawling prohibited, which consists of quarrelling or chiding by words only. So is striking, or the offer or assumption of the attitude to strike, in the church or churchyard; but this does not extend to such coercion as is necessary for enforcing decent behaviour in church. So is drawing any weapon of offence. And it has been held that a person struck down cannot justify returning blows in his own defence; but this seems very questionable, if it be necessary for his protection against injury to life or limb. As to the more serious offences of setting fire to or otherwise destroying churches, breaking into and stealing therefrom, &c., these will be noticed when we come to treat of the CRIMINAL LAW.

¹ Lonsley v. Hayward, 1 Younge and J. 583.

² Steer's P. L. 15—20.

It may here be observed, that a recent statute, the 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 45, has put an end to the practice of publishing in church during the time of divine service a variety of matters of a temporal nature, which had been previously required by statute or custom; such as notices of vestry meetings, of proceedings relating to the assessing and collecting of the highway and poor rates and land-tax, and of the holding of court-leets, courts baron, and customary courts; and also to the proclamation of outlawries at the doors of the church immediately after divine service. And it is enacted, that after the 1st January, 1838, all proclamations or notices, which under or by virtue of any law or statute, or by custom or otherwise, have been heretofore made or given in churches or chapels during or after divine service, shall be reduced into writing, and copies thereof, either in writing or in print, or partly in writing and partly in print, shall, previously to the commencement of divine service on the several days on which such proclamations or notices have heretofore been made or given in the church or chapel of any parish or place, or at the door of any church or chapel, be affixed on or near to the doors of all the churches or chapels within such parish or place; and such notices when so affixed shall be in lieu of and as a substitution for the several proclamations and notices so heretofore given as aforesaid. And after the said 1st of January, 1838, no decree relating to a faculty, nor any other decree, citation, or proceeding whatsoever, in any ecclesiastical court, shall be read or published in any church or chapel during or immediately after divine service.

Churchyards.—The care and repair of the churchyard, as well as of the church, are in the churchwardens, or, by custom, in particular individuals; and an indictment will lie in case of neglect. The trees and herbage therein are the property of the rector or vicar, by whom they may be appropriated for the repairs of the chancel. No one can erect a tomb, tombstone, or vault in the churchyard, without a faculty from the ordinary; and unless such is obtained, no exclusive property can exist in the person building it; and a prescriptive right may exist in the incumbent to demand a fee for such erection.

With respect to burying, permission to bury in the church itself is only to be obtained from the incumbent; but, by custom, the lord of the manor may have a right to bury there without such permission. In the churchyard every parishioner has a right of burial; and so has a stranger, if he die too far distant from his own parish. In the reign of Charles II. an act was passed to oblige all persons to bury their dead in woollen; and though this was repealed by 54 Geo. III. c. 108, it is left to be still done as a matter of custom. The Court of King's Bench refused to grant a mandamus to bury in an iron coffin; and the chief objection was, that it would be so long in decaying, that if it became general the future burying in the churchyard would become impossible for want of room. By the 48 Geo. III. c. 75, bodies cast on shore, and not claimed by the relatives of the deceased, are to be buried in the parish where they are found, by the churchwardens and overseers, at the expence of the county. If the place is extra-parochial, notice must be given to the constable or headborough; and, by sect. 3, the person giving such notice within six hours is entitled to 5s. reward, and neglecting to give such notice subjects to a penalty of 5l.

If the clergyman refuses to bury a corpse in a convenient time, he is liable to suspension from office for three months, except where the deceased was denounced or excommunicated, and cannot be proved to have died repentant. Unbaptized persons are not entitled to christian burial; but baptism performed by a dissenting minister is sufficient. Neither are persons found felo de se; but persons found to be insane at the time of committing suicide are not deemed capable of having done the act voluntarily, and are therefore not excluded from the privilege of this rite; which gives rise to the usual merciful finding by juries, on inquests, of a verdict of insanity.

Where persons are found felo de se, the 4 Geo. IV. c. 52, after repealing the old law, which directed the burying of self-murderers in a cross road with a stake driven through the body, provides that the coroner shall issue his directions for privately burying the corpse in the parish churchyard, without the performance of any service over it, within twenty-four hours, between nine and twelve o'clock at night.

Though, in general cases, the clergyman is entitled to certain fees on burial, yet he cannot refuse to bury until they are paid: they are recoverable by action. Once buried, bodies cannot be legally taken up, except by permission from the ordinary, or warrant from the coroner; and removing such bodies by stealth for the purpose of sale is an indictable offence. So the stealing grave clothes is felony, as the property of them is in the executors, or in the relatives who paid the expences of burial.¹

CHURCHWARDENS.

Churchwardens are the guardians of the parish church, and the representatives of the body of the parish; and in a certain degree they are the guardians of the moral character and public decency of the parish. Not less than two are usually appointed for every parish; and when appointed and sworn in, they are so far incorporated in law, that they have power to sue and bring actions as to the church property, whether the cause of suit arose before or after their appointment, for the predecessor cannot sue. They are the persons to purchase goods for the parish use, or to take legacies or gifts for the parish, but they cannot purchase lands. One churchwarden cannot singly dispose of parish property, neither can all of them, without the consent of the parish obtained at a vestry meeting.

Who are to be Churchwardens.—The persons who are exempt are peers; clergymen; members of parliament; barristers and attorneys; apothecaries of seven years standing; surgeons of the corporation of surgeons in London; dissenting teachers and preachers duly qualified; Roman Catholic ministers; serjeants, corporals, drummers, or privates of militia; persons who have prosecuted felons to conviction; and non-residents of the parish.

¹ Steer's P. L. 42—57.

Those disqualified are Jews, aliens, infants, and felons. Dissenters (other than those above mentioned) may serve by deputy; and a person not residing in the parish, but being a partner in a house of trade within the parish, is liable to serve. Neither is poverty any disqualification.¹

Election.—If there is any particular custom as to the mode of their appointment and election, such custom is, of course, to be followed. Where not, the minister and parishioners are to agree on the persons; or else the minister is to choose one, and the parishioners one. Under the 58 Geo. III. c. 45 (the act providing for the building of additional churches), one churchwarden is to be chosen by the incumbent, and the other by the parishioners.

They are to be chosen yearly, in Easter week, by the majority of votes at a vestry meeting duly convened for that purpose. When appointed, they must take the oath of office, to be administered by the archdeacon or ordinary of the diocese, without fee; and they continue in office till a successor is sworn in.

Their Interest and Power over the Things of the Church is general; and they are, in their corporate character, the owners thereof, and may exercise all the rights necessary for its protection, but without any power of disposing thereof, except by general consent. They may also enter into contracts binding on the parish, if for the parish benefit; but they have no interest in the freehold of the church. They cannot interfere as to burials, though by custom they may be entitled to some fee in respect thereof. Neither can they remove or set up armorial bearings or monuments in the church, that being the right of the incumbent. Generally, they have no power to purchase lands for the parish; but in some instances this is given them for the benefit of the poor.²

Their duties in general consist in the due repair of the church, collecting church rates, the disposition of pews, and collecting the rents thereof, &c. Under the 58 Geo. III. c. 45, § 73, relating to the building of additional churches, they are to see to the payment of the stipends and salaries of the minister and clerk, and do all acts requisite for the repairs, management, good order, and decency of behaviour in church or chapel.

They are to give notice to the bishop on the death of the incumbent, and collect the profits of the benefice in the mean time. They are to do, or see done, all things necessary for the due observance of the sabbath; they are to see provided and well preserved all parish registers, to provide bread and wine for the sacrament, to collect money on charity briefs; with many other such like duties.³

Within a month after the end of the year they are to render their accounts, and hand over to the parish or their successors, or to a select vestry (by custom), all moneys in hand. If their disbursements exceed their receipts, the successors in office shall reimburse them. To compel them to account, the spiritual or common law courts may be resorted to.

Under the head of OVERSEERS, we have seen their conjoint duties relative to the poor.

¹ Chit. Burn. J. 638; Steer's Parish Law, 83.

² 59 Geo. III. c. 12, § 9—17.

³ 1 Chit. Burn. J. 641—5.

PARISH CLERKS.

The qualification to this office is, that the candidate be at least twenty years of age, known to the minister to be of honest conversation, and sufficient for his reading, writing, and also for his competent skill in singing (if it may be). The right of appointing him is generally dependent on custom, either in the minister or the parishioners. In new churches and chapels built under the 58 Geo. III. c. 45, and 59 Geo. III. c. 134, &c. the appointment is annual, and in the minister. When duly appointed, he is licensed by the ordinary, and sworn in by the arch-deacon. His remuneration depends also on custom; it is sometimes by contributions in goods, such as bread &c., and sometimes in money; sometimes it is by a clerk's rate on the parish; which latter is recoverable by action on the case against the churchwardens.

The parish clerk, as well as the sexton, has a freehold in his office; and though he may be punished by the ecclesiastical courts, he cannot be removed by them, being a temporal, and not an ecclesiastical officer. But in one case, where he was removed, and there was sufficient cause shown for his suspension, the Court of King's Bench would not grant a mandamus to re-admit him.¹ A parish clerk who deceives the clergyman, and obtains or makes a false entry as to publication of banns &c. is liable to transportation for life. Serving the office of parish clerk for a year was held to gain a settlement, before the passing of the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, which put an end to this mode of acquiring a settlement.

SEXTONS.

The sexton's salary depends on custom, and is paid by the churchwardens. His fees are settled by order of vestry; and a table of them is generally hung up in the vestry room. His business is to keep the church clean, to open pew doors, to make and fill up graves, to provide candles and other necessities for the church, under the direction of the churchwardens; to get the church linen washed, &c.; to keep the church keys, under the authority of the minister; to attend during divine service, and keep out excommunicated persons; and to prevent disturbances in the church. His interest in his office is similar to that of the parish clerk, as before mentioned. A female may be sexton. Females may also vote in the election of sexton, where he is chosen by the parish.

OF PARISH VESTRIES.

A vestry is the council of a parish in all matters relating to the general interest of the parishioners; and in every parish there is either an open or a select vestry. Vestries are usually held in a room contiguous to the church; but it is not essential to its validity, that it should be held there, as it may be held in the church itself (in which case the ecclesiastical courts have jurisdiction over any misconduct or disorder committed thereat), or at any other place within the parish.

The powers and rights of vestries extend to the investigation and restraint of the parish expenditure, to determining on the expediency of enlarging or altering their churches or chapels, and other such like matters, and also to the election of parochial officers. The acts of a vestry duly convened bind the rest of the parishioners who do not attend; but the act of one vestry may be rescinded by a future one. The mode of voting ought not to be by ballot, but by show of hands; and an action will lie for excluding any person entitled to vote. A vestry cannot be adjourned but by consent of the whole persons present.

By the 58 Geo. III. c. 69, § 1, for the regulation of parish vestries, it is enacted, that no vestry, or meeting of the inhabitants in vestry, shall be holden, until public notice has been given of the place and hour of holding the same, and the special purpose thereof, three days before the day appointed, by affixing the same on the principal door of the church or chapel.

And for the more orderly conduct of vestries, in case the rector or vicar or perpetual curate be not present, the persons so assembled shall forthwith appoint, by plurality of votes (to be ascertained as hereinafter directed), one of the inhabitants to be chairman; and in all cases of equality of votes the chairman shall (in addition to such votes as he may be entitled to give in right of his assessment) have the casting vote. Minutes of the proceedings and resolutions of every vestry are to be fairly entered in a book (to be provided for that purpose by the churchwardens and overseers), and signed by the chairman and such other of the inhabitants present as may think proper.

Every inhabitant present at such vestry, who, by the last rate made for the relief of the poor, was assessed in respect of any annual rent, profit, or value not amounting to 50*l.*, is entitled to give one vote, and no more; amounting to 50*l.* or upwards (whether in one or more than one charge), is entitled to one vote for every 25*l.*; but no inhabitant is to have more than six votes. When two or more of the inhabitants present are jointly rated, each is entitled to vote according to the proportion borne by him of the joint charge; and where only one of the persons jointly rated attends, he is entitled to vote according to the whole of the joint charge.

Any person having become an inhabitant since the making of the last rate is entitled to vote in respect of the property for which he shall have become liable and shall consent to be rated, in like manner as if he had been actually rated for the same. And by the 59 Geo. III. c. 75, persons rated to the poor, though not parishioners, are entitled to vote according to the value of their premises; and also any clerk or agent of a corporation. But no person is entitled to vote who has refused or neglected, on demand, to pay his poor-rate.

The regulations of the 58 Geo. III. c. 69, for parish vestries extend throughout England and Wales, except the city of London and borough of Southwark. But by § 8 it is declared that nothing therein is to alter the time of holding any vestry, parish, or town meeting, which is by any act required to be holden on any certain day or within any certain time; nor to affect the powers of any vestry or meeting holden by virtue of any special act, or any ancient or special usage or custom, or to change the manner of voting in any vestry or meeting so holden. It has therefore been held, that a right to a plurality of votes does not exist where the poor rates, according to an ancient custom, had been always assessed without regard to the annual value of property, but according to the supposed ability of the party assessed.

¹ The 1 Vict. c. 56 repealed so much of the act as required notices of vestries to be published in church during or immediately after divine service.

SELECT VESTRIES.—Hitherto we have been speaking of open or general vestries, where all the rate-payers have a right to attend. But a custom has prevailed in large and populous cities and towns (especially in and about the metropolis) of choosing yearly a select vestry, that is a certain number of the most respectable inhabitants, to represent and manage all the concerns of the parish for that year; and this, though it has been sometimes productive of injury to a parish, is held to be a good custom, and is countenanced by the courts.

It has also been held to be a good custom, where parishes have chosen a certain number of parishioners as a select vestry, that, as any of them drop off, the survivors shall fill up the vacancy; but the validity of such a custom must be founded on prescription and immemorial usage, for a modern agreement of this kind would not be binding. This mode of constituting select vestries was adopted by the directions of the legislature in 10 Ann. c. 11, for erecting fifty new churches in or near London and Westminster; and, in several private acts for building particular churches, a certain mode has been pointed out for the constitution of these assemblies.

NEW VESTRY ACT.—These close or self-elected vestries, however, having of late years fallen considerably into disrepute, many struggles had been made to set them aside. At length the 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 60 was passed, which enables the rate-payers, where they are so desirous, to abolish them, and appoint a representative vestry freely chosen by the parish at large in their stead, and also to appoint auditors of accounts. This act may be adopted by any parish in England and Wales in the following manner.

One-fifth of the rate-payers, or any proportion amounting to fifty in number, may, between the 1st December and 1st March, present a requisition, with their names and abodes, to the churchwardens, requiring them to call a meeting, to ascertain whether a majority of the rate-payers are favourable to the adoption of the act. On the first Sunday in the month of March, after receipt of the requisition, public notice is to be given on the door of every church and chapel of the establishment, specifying a place and day (not earlier than ten, nor later than twenty-one days) for the rate-payers to declare, by their votes, for or against the adoption of the act. The votes to be taken on three successive days, between the hours of eight in the morning and four in the afternoon. A majority of the rate-payers must vote; and if two-thirds of such majority vote in favour of the act, it is to be declared adopted, and notice thereof is to be given in the London Gazette and one or more public newspapers. Rate-payers (not being more than five together) may inspect the votes at any time within one month after notice of the rejection or adoption of the act. No person is to vote unless he has been rated for one year, and has paid all parochial rates, taxes, and assessments made six months preceding the day of voting. If the act is rejected, no subsequent requisition can be presented within three years after. Parish officers refusing to call a meeting, or suppressing or falsifying votes, or doing any other thing contrary to the act, are guilty of a misdemeanor.

Election of Vestrymen.—Public notice of the election of vestrymen is to be given, on some Sunday, at least twenty-one days previous to the day of election. Rate collectors may be summoned to attend the election, to identify the voters and testify to their qualification. Inspectors of votes are to be chosen, four by the churchwardens and four by the parishioners. Five rate-payers may demand a poll, to be taken by ballot, at which no rate-payer is to have more than one vote. Inspectors are to examine the votes, and declare the result of the election within four days; in case of an equality of votes, the inspectors may decide by lot upon the person chosen. Falsifying voting lists, or in any way obstructing the election, subjects to a fine of not less than 10*l.* nor exceeding 50*l.* Wilfully making an incorrect return subjects an inspector to a penalty of not less than 25*l.* nor exceeding 50*l.* The election of vestrymen is to take place annually, in the month of May.

Number of Vestrymen.—The vestry is to consist of not less than twelve resident householders, where the rated householders do not exceed 1000; if they exceed 1000, twenty-four vestrymen; if they exceed 2000, thirty-six vestrymen; and so on, at the rate of twelve additional vestrymen for every 1000 rated householders; but the number is in no case to exceed 120, unless where a greater number is fixed by special act of parliament. The minister of the parish and churchwardens are to be vestrymen ex officio, and have votes. At the first election, one-third of the existing vestry is to retire by lot, and one third of the number of the new vestry to be chosen; at the second annual election, one half of the remaining part of the old vestry is to retire, and another third of the new vestry to be chosen; at the third annual election, the last remaining portion of the old vestry is to retire, and the remaining one-third of the new vestry to be chosen. Vestrymen are to quit office after three years, and one-third of the whole number is to be annually elected; vestrymen going out by rotation are eligible to be re-elected. No person is qualified to be elected a vestryman within the Metropolitan Police district and the city of London, where the resident householders exceed 3000, unless rated to the relief of the poor upon a rental of not less than 40*l.* per annum; elsewhere a rental of 10*l.* qualifies.

The new vestry are to exercise all the powers of former vestries, but not to invalidate any local act relative to vestries, or the management of the poor by directors or guardians, or any provision for religious worship. The powers of the vestry may be exercised by the majority of those present, there not being less than five present where the vestry consists of twelve to twenty-three, and not less than seven present where it consists of twenty-four to thirty-five, and not less than nine present where it consists of thirty-six and upwards. Vestry meetings are not to be held in the church or chapel. The vestry may choose a chairman when the person authorized by law or custom to take the chair is absent. All their proceedings are to be entered in books, and to be open to inspection. Books of accounts of all receipts and disbursements on account of the parish are to be kept, and to be open to inspection without charge, on penalty for refusing an inspection or extract, not exceeding 10*l.*

Auditors.—Five rate-payers, who shall have signified in writing their assent to serve, are to be chosen as auditors of accounts yearly, in the same manner and at the same time as the vestrymen; and the same qualifications are required of them. But if any person be chosen both vestryman and auditor, he shall be incapable of serving as vestryman; and no person shall be auditor who is interested in any contract, office, business, or employ, or in providing or supplying any article for the parish. The auditors are to meet at least twice a year, at the board-room of the vestry; and, a majority being present, are to examine and audit the accounts of the preceding half year, in presence of the vestry clerk, who is to lay before them a true account in writing accompanied with proper vouchers, of all sums which have come to the hands of the vestry or their treasurer, and also of all monies expended by them, or by the churchwardens, overseers, surveyors, or other persons employed by and responsible to the vestry; and in parishes where other boards have control over any part of the parochial expenditure, the auditors shall examine and audit their accounts in like manner. They may summon before them the parish officers or other persons interested in the accounts, and call for books and papers; and any parish officer or other person refusing to attend, or otherwise wilfully obstructing the purposes of such inquiry, is guilty of a misdemeanor.

The accounts, when audited and approved by the auditors, or the major part of them, shall be by them signed in the presence of the vestry clerk, who shall also affix his signature to the same; and they shall remain at the office of the said vestry clerk, and be open and accessible for examination, at all seasonable times, by any person rated to the relief of the poor, and by any creditor on the rates.

In any parish adopting this act, the vestry shall cause to be made out, once at least in every year, a list of the several freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, and of all charitable foundations and bequests, if any, belonging to the parish, and under the control of the vestry; such list to contain a true and detailed account of the place where the estate or charitable foundation may be situate, and in what mode or security such bequest may be invested, specifying also the yearly rental of each, and the particular appropriation thereof, together with the names of the persons partaking of their benefit (except where such benefit shall be allotted to the poor of the parish generally), and to what amount in each case, and also stating the name and description of the person in whom such estates are vested, and the names and description of the trustees of each charity; and the aforesaid list shall be open to the inspection of the rate-payers, at the office of the vestry clerk, at the same time with the accounts when audited according to the provisions of this act.

VESTRY CLERK.

It is usual for the vestry to appoint a clerk for the better management of the duty that devolves on the vestry itself. But this is an office of merely a private nature. It depends altogether on the will of the parishioners; and they may elect a different clerk at each vestry. Neither is any salary annexed to the situation. If the fees are paid out of the poor rates, there is an end to all prescriptive right to it. As to any supposed agreement made by the parishioners, that such should be an annual office, it cannot be obligatory longer than the parties choose to fulfil it; for it may be revoked at the next vestry. It is not therefore a fixed permanent office, for which a mandamus will lie.¹ This officer acts as the registrar or secretary to the vestry, but has from thence no right to vote or take part in their consultations. His business is to attend the meetings, and draw up and copy all orders and other acts of the vestry, and to give out copies when necessary. He has the custody, therefore, of all books and papers relating thereto; and if they get into other persons' hands, he may have a mandamus for their restoration to him. But he cannot be compelled to produce documents for a mere personal object, as in support of an action of slander, &c.²

PARISH BEADLE.

The beadle is chosen by the vestry; and his duty is to attend vestries, to give notice to the parishioners when and where they are to meet; to execute its orders, as messenger; to assist constables in taking up beggars, in passing vagrants, &c. But unless he is also sworn in as constable, he is not generally entitled to act as such. His appointment is during pleasure; and he may, for misconduct, be dismissed at any time by the parishioners in vestry assembled.³

CHAPTER VIII.

Of Dissenters.

IT seems advisable in this place to make a few remarks on that large body of subjects called dissenters. The annals of our country contain the record of times when they were regarded in a light far different from that in which they are at the present day. Roman Catholics, as well as Protestant Dissenters, now participate, in common with their fellow-subjects of the established church, in all the rights and duties, and are alike entitled to the protection and benefit, of the civil institutions of the empire. They are now admissible into either house of parliament, are capable of holding municipal and other offices, and generally of enjoying every other franchise and civil right; the tests imposed being no longer incompatible with the religious principles either of Catholics or other Dissenters from the established church. Bequests for the benefit of their communities are executed by courts of equity, provided they are not directly contrary to law. Like other subjects, they are exempted from payment of toll in proceeding on Sundays to their places of worship. They are, however, expressly declared liable to all tithes and other parochial and clerical dues.

As to Protestant Dissenters, the Toleration Act, 1 Wm. & Mary, sess. 1, c. 18, the 52 Geo. III. c. 155, and the 53 Geo. III. c. 160, made great concessions to them; but the 9 Geo. IV. c. 7, which repealed the sacramental test, destroyed the great barrier against their admis-

¹ Rex. v. Churchwardens of Croydon,
5 T. R. 714; 1 Chit. Burn. J. 647.

² Steer's P. L. 259.
³ Steer's P. L. 104.

sion to office and public employment. For, before that, persons upon entering into any public office or employment were obliged to take certain oaths, and receive the sacrament according to the rites of the established church, which the Dissenters in general felt to be incompatible with their peculiar religious tenets. But the 9 Geo. IV. c. 17, instead thereof, provides a declaration to be made and subscribed in the form following; viz.

"I, A.B., do solemnly and sincerely, in the presence of God, profess, testify, and declare, upon the true faith of a Christian, that I will never exercise any power, authority, or influence, which I may possess by virtue of the office of (naming it) to injure or weaken the Protestant church as it is by law established in England, or to disturb the said church, or the bishops or clergy of the said church, in the possession of any rights or privileges to which such church or the said bishops and clergy are or may be by law entitled."

Roman Catholics laboured under a variety of disabilities until the passing of the 10 Geo. IV. c. 7. By this act they are enabled to sit in either house of parliament, to vote at the election of members, and generally to hold all civil and military offices and places of profit and trust, upon taking and subscribing an oath provided by that act instead of the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration.

The only offices they are now incapable of filling are those of regent of the United Kingdom, lord chancellor, lord keeper or commissioner of the great seal of England or Ireland, lord lieutenant or lord deputy or other chief governor of Ireland, and high commissioner in Scotland. Catholic members of lay corporations cannot vote in the election &c. of any clerical officer. Nor can they take any office in the established church, ecclesiastical courts, universities, or public schools; nor present to benefices; nor advise the crown, or governor of Ireland, touching the disposal of any clerical office.

By the 5 Geo. I. c. 4, and 10 Geo. IV. c. 7, all persons are prohibited from going to any public religious meeting other than the established church, clothed or attended with any insignia of the office which they may hold, under 100*l.* penalty.

The 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 49, allows Quakers and Moravians to make affirmation in all cases where an oath is required of other parties.

Quakers are expressly exempted from the operation of the marriage acts, and enjoy the liberty of solemnizing matrimony in their own conventicles, if both the contracting parties are of that denomination.

And now, by the 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 85, dissenters generally, who do not approve of the ceremony of marriage as laid down in the rubric of the church of England, are relieved from the necessity of being married according to that form, and may solemnize marriage in their own chapels, when registered for that purpose, in whatever form they may think proper. The only words which the act points out as necessary to form part of the ceremony are of the most simple nature, and in no way calculated to affect the scruples of any sect whatever.

Dissenting ministers who teach or preach in places duly certified according to law are now as fully exempted, without precedent qualification, from the penalty of any acts relating to religious worship, as those who take the oaths mentioned in the Toleration Act and the acts amending it, provided they subscribe the oaths to government when required by one justice. If they refuse, and continue so to teach or preach, they forfeit, at the discretion of the magistrate, from 10*s.* to 10*l.*

Preaching or officiating in any place of worship not duly certified, or in the fields, or any place in the open air, subjects the offender to the like penalties which, as we shall presently see, persons incur by being present at unlawful conventicles. And preaching in an assembly of more than the lawful number in any place without the consent of the occupier, or in any place with barred doors, subjects the party to not exceeding 30*l.* nor less than 40*s.* penalty.

Dissemping teachers carrying on any trade, except that of a school-master merely, must (in order to entitle themselves to the exemptions from serving as overseers or in other parochial offices, or on juries, or in the militia), besides the oaths to the government, subscribe the Thirty-nine Articles, except the 34th, 35th, 36th, and certain parts of the 20th and 27th.

A Dissenting Minister's Right to his Office.—There is nothing inimical to public policy in a court of equity taking cognizance of and protecting the appointment of dissenting ministers, pursuant to any trust to be administered in a suit before the court.¹ And where such minister is duly appointed, a mandamus will be granted by the Queen's Bench to compel parties to admit him to his rights consequent thereon.

We have seen, that all dissenting meeting-houses must be certified; and this must be to the bishop of the diocese, to the archdeacon, or to the justices at the general or quarter sessions in the part where the meeting is held; whereupon they are registered in the bishop's or archdeacon's court, and recorded at the quarter sessions, and a certificate is given, for which 2*s.* 6*d.* is paid. Any person disturbing a lawful assembly of Dissenters may be bound to answer the offence by two sureties of 50*l.* each, or in default be committed to prison, and the sessions, on conviction, may fine him 40*l.*, or commit him for three months; but such prosecution must be within six months after the offence committed. And the wilful destruction or deterioration of a dissenting meeting-house, is punished as other such felonies are; and the parties injured have the like remedies against the hundred.²

By the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 30, dissenting meeting-houses are exempted under like circumstances, if certified, as those of the established church, from parish rates and the assessed taxes.

It is only needful to add, that Jesuits, and members of other religious orders of the church of Rome, bound by monastic or religious vows, in the kingdom at the time of the passing of 10 Geo. IV. c. 7, (13th April, 1829), and Jesuits being natural-born subjects returning to the kingdom, are to send the necessary particulars to the clerk of the peace where they reside, in order that they may be registered; and if any members come into the realm, they shall be banished, unless they have the licence of the secretary of state, who may grant it for six months, revocable at any time he may think fit. But this does not extend to females of such orders. Accounts of such licences are to be annually laid before parliament. The admitting persons to be members of such religious orders is a misdemeanor; and persons admitted may be banished for life; and not leaving the kingdom, they may be conveyed out of it to such place as her majesty may appoint; and if at large after three months, they may be transported.³

¹ See 7 & 8 Vict. c. 45, for the regulation of suits relating to meeting-houses &c. held by Dissenters. ² See 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30, § 2; and c. 31, § 2. ³ 10 Geo. IV. c. 17

CHAPTER IX.

Of the Military State.

ALTHOUGH the laws and constitution of this kingdom acknowledge no such state as that of a perpetual standing army, and in olden times there was no regular army except in time of war; yet in this, as in other countries, it has long been judged necessary for the safety of the kingdom in general to maintain, even in time of peace, a standing body of troops under the command of the crown, which are continued from year to year by act of parliament.

A soldier is possessed of all the rights, and is bound to observe all the duties of other citizens; and he is as much required to prevent a breach of the peace in his individual capacity as any other person. If it be necessary for the purpose of preventing mischief, or for the execution of the law, it is not only the right of soldiers, but their bounden duty, to assist in the execution of legal process, or to prevent any crime or mischief being committed.¹

The military state consists of—1. The Regular Army; 2. The Royal Marines; 3. The Militia.

I. THE REGULAR ARMY.

By the Mutiny Act, which is continued from year to year, the crown may form Articles of War for the government of the forces, and constitute courts martial with power to try any crimes thereby. The articles of war are, it is presumed, within the knowledge of all members of the honourable profession of the army; and as they are not required to be known generally, little good would result from inserting them in the present work.²

By the Mutiny Act, any person who receives enlisting money from a commissioned recruiting officer is deemed thenceforth a soldier, and may be billeted; and if he enlist freely, certain forms are to be gone through before a justice of the peace. He is to take an oath of fidelity, which if he refuse to do, he may be detained by the officer enlisting till he comply. If he has hastily enlisted, he may, on application to a justice within twenty-four hours, obtain his discharge on repaying the enlisting money, with 20s. expences, and all beer money expended subsequent to his enlistment. If, after receiving the enlisting money, he abscond or refuse to go before a justice, he is deemed a soldier, and liable to the punishment for desertion, from which a subsequent enlistment will not save him.

Every regiment is to be mustered twice a year, when all belonging thereto must be present, unless certified to be employed on some other duty of the regiment, or to be sick, or in prison, or on furlough; and any person giving a false certificate, or making a false muster, is liable in the one instance to a penalty of 50l., and in the other to be cashiered. Any person suffering himself to be mustered in lieu of another, or lending a horse to attend muster, is liable to a penalty of 20*l*; and the informer, if in the service, is entitled to be discharged therefrom.

¹ 4 Taunt. 449.

² See 3 Chit. Burn. J. 768, 9.

Upon any part of the army marching through England or Ireland, certain officers are entitled to apply to a justice for a warrant to be directed to the constable of the place, requiring him to provide proper carriages &c. to go certain distances at stated sums, as mentioned in sects. 55, 56 of the above act. And if, in case of emergency, the constable is put to extraordinary expences, he is entitled to be reimbursed out of the county rate. The 80th section provides for the billeting soldiers on victualling houses, and the manner in which this is to be done, giving the party on whom they are billeted the right of redress by application to a justice of peace, who is not a military officer.

The rates of allowance to persons receiving soldiers so billeted are provided by § 53. The 54th section exempts private persons; canteens held under authority of the ordnance department; persons keeping taverns only, being vintners of the city of London and freemen of the company; distillers merely of brandy and strong waters; dealers whose principal dealing is more in other goods than in brandy &c., and in whose houses there is no tipping; and the houses of foreign consuls.

Sections 62, 63 impose penalties on constables and military officers offending against the act.¹

We have already seen that, during the election of members of parliament, all soldiers must be removed to a distance of two miles at least one day before, and must not return within one day after the poll is taken; but this does not extend to Westminster or places of royal residence, or fortified places, or to any soldier &c. having a right to vote at the election.² And by the 11 Geo. IV. c. 7, § 51, the foot guards are privileged to be billeted in Westminster or the places adjacent.

Persons purchasing the arms &c. of soldiers are liable to 10*l*. penalty and treble value of the articles. So trafficking in commissions in the army is punishable by 100*l*. penalty, and treble value of the consideration in cases in which they are not allowed to be sold, and treble the excess of the consideration beyond the regular price for which they are sold where the sale is allowable.

The Mutiny act does not generally interfere with the ordinary course of law with respect to soldiers, in cases either civil or criminal; but, by sect. 3, a soldier is not liable to be detained from his duty on account of any debt under 30*l*. A soldier in actual service may, however, be committed for disobeying an order of justices in a case of bastardy.³

The 60th section exempts all officers in undress or dress uniform, and all baggage waggons &c., from turnpike and other tolls and duties by land, but not from those on canals; and § 61 enables them to pass ferries in Scotland on paying half the regular fares. A further privilege is that of exemption from taking parish apprentices, by § 68.⁴

Soldiers, after their discharge, and their wives and children, may set up in any trade in any place except Oxford and Cambridge.⁵ And when sick &c., they are usually supported by the particular parish to which they belong, or else by the royal hospitals.

¹ See more particularly 3 Chit. Burn. J. 768—762.

² See 8 Geo. II. c. 30.

³ 3 Chit. Burn. J. 784.

⁴ As to the pay of soldiers and its forfeiture, see 3 Chit. Burn. J. 785; and as to deserters, see Id. 786.

⁵ 3 Geo. III. c. 8.

Personating a pensioner, or forging any document relating thereto, or knowingly uttering such, is punishable by transportation for life.¹

It is now fully established, that neither the full pay nor half pay of an officer, or of any person in a military or naval capacity, can in any instance be assigned before it is due; as the object of such pay is to enable those who receive it to be always ready to serve their country with that decency and dignity which their respective stations and characters require.² This is a law founded upon sound policy and general convenience. It may be a hardship upon a poor officer, that he cannot borrow money for himself and family by giving a security upon his future pay; yet it would be a much greater evil to the public service if officers, when called out, were destitute of the means of serving their country from the want of proper habiliments or accoutrements. By the 46 Geo. III. c. 69, § 7, all assignments of retired soldiers' pensions are void.

The probates of wills, letters of administration, and inventories of effects of any common soldier or sailor, dying in service, are exempted from stamp duties; and the 58 Geo. III. c. 73 provides how, in such cases, regimental debts are to be paid. Soldiers and their wives are, amongst other privileges, exempted from the penalties of the Vagrant acts upon pursuing certain forms, which are so far generally known to that profession that they need not be here recited.³

II. MARINES.

The regulations of the marines are in most respects the same with those of the regular army, except that some variation is necessary as they are under the jurisdiction of the admiralty.⁴

III. MILITIA.

The order of militia is very ancient in this kingdom; but, as it now stands, it is principally modelled on statutes passed soon after the restoration of Charles II., at which time military tenures were abolished. The general scheme is to discipline a certain number of inhabitants of every county,⁵ chosen by lot for five years, and officered by the lord lieutenant, the deputy lieutenant, or other principal landholders, under a commission from the crown. They are not compellable to march out of their counties, unless in case of invasion or actual rebellion within the realm or any of its dominions or territories, nor in any case to be sent out of the kingdom. They are to be exercised at stated times, and their discipline is in general liberal and easy; but when drawn out into actual service, they are subject to all the rigours of martial law.⁶

Meetings of the lieutenancy are to be held once a year, in October, in order to issue precepts to the different head constables of the county, who are to serve notices on the housekeepers to return lists of all persons residing in their house liable to serve; and for not making a

¹ 7 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 38.

² 3 T. R. 258; H. Bla. 628; 1 Ball & B. 389; 2 Anst. 538.

³ See 3 Chit. Burn. J. 793, where the mode in which they are to be passed from place to place is pointed out; and see further as to this subject, Id. 767—801.

⁴ See further 5 Chit. Burn. J. 801

⁵ As to this, see 3 Chit. Burn. J. 801.

⁶ 1 Bla. Com. 412.

return, or making a false return, a penalty of 5*l* is inflicted. Quakers are exempt from making this list, on obeying the directions of § 27. In the blank forms for these lists, which are left with every house-keeper once a year, is contained most of the information relating to exemptions from serving;¹ it is therefore hardly necessary to call the attention of the reader further to this branch of the subject.

If any party is aggrieved, a power of appeal is given to a subdivision meeting appointed for hearing such appeals, composed of lieutenants and others. whose decision is final.

Although a person chosen by ballot afterwards remove from the district for which he is appointed, he is still liable to serve.

The term of service is five years, either in person or by substitute.² When a person is balloted, he must take an oath for due service, and must also, before enrolment, be examined by a surgeon of the militia, or on refusal is liable in the first case to 10*l*. penalty, and in the other to imprisonment. A substitute undergoes the same ceremonies, and during his service the principal is exempt from further serving, as though he had actually served; but the substitute may, at the end of the time, be liable to serve again on his own account. The substitute must be a man of the same district for which the principal was chosen, and must be competent to serve;³ and by 43 Geo. III. c. 50, § 7, a seaman cannot be such substitute.

If servants hired by the year are balloted and enrolled, it does not vacate their contract with their master, who is still liable for their wages, unless they are actually embodied or called out, or leave the master for twenty-one days without returning; but an abatement of wages is allowed in case of absence, to be settled by the justices of the peace. If a man so enrolled volunteer into any other service, denying himself to be a militia man; or if a regular soldier offer himself for the militia, either as a principal or substitute, he is liable to pecuniary penalties and to imprisonment in the house of correction. They are liable at certain periods to be called upon for the purpose of training, when most of the foregoing observations on the regular soldiery, as to the application of martial law, providing carriages, &c., apply in like manner to the militia. The absenting himself from such training subjects the party to 20*l*. penalty, or to imprisonment and hard labour, or to be treated as a deserter. So the attempt to sell their arms subjects them to 3*l*. penalty; and the attempt to buy them is 10*l*. penalty.

The privileges and exemptions of persons serving in the militia are as follows. The acceptance of a commission therein does not vacate a seat in parliament. A militia-man is not liable to serve the office of sheriff, nor any parish office, nor to perform any highway duty; nor is he liable to any punishment for absence occasioned by his going to vote at any election. Like a regular soldier, under the 24 Geo. III. c. 44, he may set up in trade (being a married man) in any city or town, &c.; neither can he be removed from any parish on the fear of his becoming a charge thereon until he become actually chargeable. The post office privileges allowed to regular soldiers are extended to the militia when in regular service.

In cases of invasion or a rebellion, the militia is called into actual service by order in council. In case of non-appearance, a party is liable as a deserter; and any person wilfully concealing him forfeits 100*l*. From the date of the warrant for the embodying of the militia, they receive the same pay as the regular infantry, which commences from the day of their joining their corps, and one guinea is to be paid to the captain for the use of every private or recruit, to be disposed of for his advantage, and to be accounted for to him by the captain; and if such captain is not worth 500*l*., then he is to receive one half the current price paid for volunteers or substitutes, unless he is discharged within one month. So, at the expiration of the term of five years, if a balloted man, or a substitute or volunteer, is willing to continue serving three years longer, he shall have the like bounty.

¹ 3 Chit. Burn. J. 816.

² 42 Geo. III. c. 90, § 41.

³ R. v. Willis, 6 T. R. 179.

Where part only of the militia is embodied, and vacancies occur, they are to be filled up by ballot of those enrolled, and in that case those who appear and attend at the ballot and are not chosen are entitled to 1*s*. per day for such attendance while from home.

However, for the present, the balloting and enrolling for the militia is altogether suspended, subject to be again enforced by an order in council.

CHAPTER X.

Of the Maritime State.

THIS is in many points nearly related to the military state, though much more agreeable, says Blackstone, to the principles of our free constitution. The present flourishing condition of our navy is in a great measure owing to the salutary provisions of the Navigation acts, whereby the constant increase of British shipping and seamen is not only encouraged, but rendered unavoidably necessary. This subject, however, will be more particularly adverted to when we come to treat of the mercantile part of our marine. We shall in the first place direct our attention to the royal navy.

I. THE ROYAL NAVY.

There are many laws for the supply of the royal navy with seamen, for their regulation when on board, and for conferring privileges and rewards on them during and after their service.

Of Impressing Seamen.—The right of impressing seafaring men for the sea service by a royal commission has been a matter of some dispute; but, though with reluctance, it is now so fully established that it will not admit of a doubt in any court of justice, and is said to be founded on immemorial usage; and therefore all that the courts now do is to see that the power is not abused.

This right in the crown, however, only exists in regard to seafaring men, and not to landsmen. Neither a freeholder, nor a headborough, nor a freeman and liveryman of London as such merely, nor a seaman or master in the coal trade, nor an apprentice in the Greenland fisheries after three years service, nor a carpenter on board a coal or coasting trader, are privileged from impressment. But a bargeman employed by the Navy board, and a waterman retained by a fire-insurance company, are exempt. So ferrymen are said to be exempt. So a protection therefrom may be given by the admiralty.

In case of wrongful impressment, the remedy is by the writ of habeas corpus before any judge for his discharge; which must be obtained within the time mentioned in 13 Geo. II. c. 27. An unlawful impressment, or an excess of duty in a lawful impressment, subjects the party guilty of it to an action at common law; and the officer would not be protected if death or other accident happened while in the act of or by reason of such excess.

If a sailor on board a merchantman be pressed into the queen's service, he is not entitled to any portion of his wages from the former, unless the voyage is completed.

The 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 24, in order to increase the inducements to seafaring men to enter into the royal navy, limits the period of their service to five years, unless they voluntarily enter for a longer term. The commanding officer of the fleet is empowered, in consequence of special emergency, to detain them for six months longer; in which case they are entitled, for such extra service, to an addition of one-fourth in their rate of pay.

Privileges of Seamen.—Sailors are entitled to the same advantages in respect to the setting up in any trade in any place as soldiers are.

By the 31 Geo. II. c. 10, § 28, no listed seaman can be arrested for a debt or damage not exceeding 30*l*. And the 44 Geo. III. c. 13, § 1, in order to prevent the practice of liberating seamen from service by means of improperly suing out process, provides, that, having been arrested, the sheriff shall keep the party in custody, when he is otherwise entitled to his discharge from the process, and convey him to the commander in chief or other commissioned officer for raising seamen, in order that he may serve on board the fleet; and the sheriff is allowed 2*s*. per mile for conveying him. If the sheriff suffer him to escape, he is liable to 100*l*. penalty. The privilege from arrest is confined to civil causes of suit, and does not extend to criminal cases.

Regulation of the Navy.—The method of ordering seamen in the royal navy is directed by certain express rules, articles, and orders, in which almost every possible offence is set down, and its punishment annexed. And by the 31 Geo. II. c. 10, § 83, printed copies of the articles of war are to be hung up in the most public places in the ship, so as to be accessible to the crew, and are to be read over to them once a month; and, by the 32 Geo. III. c. 67, the same rules hold as to abstracts of statutes relating to their pay.

Offences are to be tried and punished by courts martial, whose jurisdiction extends to all offences against the articles of war committed on the high seas, or below the bridges of navigable rivers, or in havens and creeks within the admiralty jurisdiction, and by persons in actual service and on full pay. But murders are only triable by the admiralty when both the death and its cause happened in such situations.

Seamen assaulting their commander in order to prevent their fighting with an enemy are liable to all the penalties that attach to piracy.

¹ 22 Geo. II. c. 44; 3 Geo. III. c. 8.

Assaulting seamen and others to prevent them working is, by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, § 26, punishable by imprisonment for three months and hard labour.

Swearing, among them, is punished by one hour's imprisonment in the stocks for every single offence, or two hours for a number of offences of which they are convicted at the same time;¹ and for making disturbances in dock yards &c., they may be prosecuted at the quarter sessions or assizes, and in the mean time may be bound in bail to good behaviour.²

Their Pay, &c.—By the 37 Geo. III. c. 56, § 2, if a seaman &c. is wounded in action, he shall receive his full wages till he is cured, or until, being declared incurable, he shall receive a pension from the chest at Chatham, or be admitted into Greenwich hospital; and by the 34 Geo. III. c. 28, 37 Geo. III. c. 53, and 46 Geo. III. c. 127, seamen &c. may, under certain forms, allot certain parts of their pay to be paid to their wives, children, or mothers. This allotment once made can only be revoked under certain circumstances. Forging orders under these enactments is felony, punishable as before mentioned.

Great advantages in point of wages are given to seamen volunteering into her majesty's service; and foreign seamen who during war serve two years on board a man of war, merchantman, or privateer, are ipso facto naturalized, and after serving three years are registered as British mariners.

Letters of Attorney and Wills of Seamen.—Parliament has provided against the frauds and impositions which were too often practised in regard to these documents, by the statutes 55 Geo. III. c. 60, 59 Geo. III. c. 59, 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 49, pointing out the mode in which each is to be executed, and providing that a will and power of attorney to receive pay &c. shall not be contained in the same instrument; that, if attested in a certain manner, such documents shall be valid though executed in a foreign prison; that wills &c. are to be entered on the ship's muster book; and, amongst other enactments, pointing out the manner in which the executors of seamen shall obtain probate of such wills, and the duty of the minister and officers of the parish &c. where the executor dwells as to authenticating the character of the executor.

Persons illegally obtaining Seamen's Pay or Prize Money.—By 59 Geo. III. c. 56, any person falsely representing himself to be a relation of a seaman in order to obtain his wages, prize-money, &c.; or receiving it, not being duly authorized so to do; or falsifying dates of orders for the payment thereof; or being really entitled thereto, and endeavouring to obtain payment by false certificates, are deemed guilty of and liable to be punished as for a misdemeanor.

And persons falsely assuming the name and character of others entitled to prize money &c., or forging &c. any letter of attorney or other document to receive it, or taking a false oath to obtain probate of any will or letters of administration, are guilty of felony and punishable by transportation or imprisonment.

And by 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 49, similar offences relative to remittance bills are punishable in like manner.

Widows' Pensions.—The 10 Geo. IV. c. 14 regulates the mode of payment of pensions to widows of seamen, and declares that all assignments and sales of such pensions are null and void to all intents and purposes whatever.

¹ 19 Geo. II. c. 21, s. 5.

² 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 25, ss. 1, 2.

All orders, certificates, vouchers, bills, and receipts relating to pensions are free from stamp duties. Personating a widow entitled to pension with a view fraudulently to obtain such pension is punishable by fourteen years transportation; and producing false certificates or false affidavits is liable to fine and imprisonment and hard labour at the discretion of the court.

II. OF MERCHANT SHIPS AND SEAMEN.

Before entering upon the consideration of the rights and duties of the mercantile part of the maritime order, we shall first notice those laws which have been passed for their more especial increase and encouragement—we mean the Navigation act, and the act for the registration of the ships.

Law of Navigation.

It has ever been the policy of our legislature to confine the maritime trade of the country as much as possible to British shipping and seamen. So far back as the reign of Henry VII. the leading principle of the Navigation law is distinctly recognized in the prohibition of certain commodities unless imported in ships belonging to English owners and manned by English seamen; and in the early part of the reign of Elizabeth (5 Eliz. c. 5) foreign ships were excluded from our fisheries and coasting trade. To the republican parliament, however, in the year 1651, must be attributed the full developement of those principles, which, being adopted in the succeeding reign of Charles II. as the groundwork of the famous Navigation act (12 Car. II. c. 18) have almost ever since constituted the basis of our intercourse with foreign nations, though it has been found necessary of late years to make some relaxation in these restrictive principles. The law of navigation at present in force is the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 88.

By this act it is enacted, that the following goods, being the produce of Europe, namely, masts, timber, boards, tar, tallow, hemp, flax, currants, raisins, figs, prunes, olive oil, corn or grain, wine, brandy, tobacco, wool, shumac, madders, madder roots, barilla, brimstone, bark of oak, cork, oranges, lemons, linseed, rape seed, and clover seed, shall not be imported into the United Kingdom to be used therein, except in British ships, or in ships of the country of which the goods are the produce, or of the country from which the goods are imported.¹

¹ The 3 & 4 Vict. c. 95 (reciting that the Danube is the principal outlet for the produce of a great part of the Austrian dominions, and the ports of the Danube, which belong to the Turkish dominions, are the natural shipping ports for such produce) empowers her majesty by order in council to declare, that Austrian vessels from any of the ports of the Danube, as far as Galatz inclusively, shall, together with their cargoes, be admitted into the ports of the United Kingdom and of all the possessions of her majesty, exactly in the same manner as if they came direct from Austrian ports.

And whereas, by the application of steam power to inland navigation, and the facilities thereby afforded of ascending rivers, new prospects of commercial adventure are opened to many states situate wholly or chiefly in the interior of Europe, and whose most convenient shipping ports are not within their own dominions, her majesty is enabled to exercise similar powers with regard to such states.

And no goods the produce of Asia, Africa, or America, shall be imported from Europe into the United Kingdom, to be used therein, except the following:

Goods the produce of the dominions of the Emperor of Morocco, which had been imported from places in Europe within the Straits of Gibraltar:

Goods the produce of Asia or Africa, which having been brought into places in Europe within the Straits of Gibraltar from or through places in Asia or Africa within those Straits, and not by way of the Atlantic Ocean) may be imported from places in Europe within the Straits of Gibraltar:

Goods the produce of places within the limits of the East India Company's charter which (having been imported from those places into Gibraltar or Malta in British ships) may be imported from Gibraltar or Malta:

Goods taken by way of reprisal by British ships:

Bullion, Diamonds, Pearls, Rubies, Emeralds, and other jewels or precious stones.

And no goods the produce of Asia, Africa, or America shall be imported into the United Kingdom, to be used therein, in foreign ships, unless they be the ships of the country in Asia, Africa, or America, of which the goods are the produce, and from which they are imported; except the following:—

Goods the produce of the dominions of the Grand Seigneur in Asia or Africa, which may be imported from his dominions in Europe in ships of his dominions:

Raw Silk and Mohair Yarn, the produce of Asia, which may be imported from the dominions of the Grand Seigneur in the Levant Seas, in ships of his dominions:

Bullion.

Provided always, that in case any treaty shall be made with any country having a port or ports within the Straits of Gibraltar, stipulating that such productions of Asia or Africa as may by law be imported into the United Kingdom from places in Europe within the Straits of Gibraltar in British ships shall also be imported from the ports of such country in the ships of such country, then it shall be lawful to import such goods from the ports of such country in the ships of such country.

All manufactured goods are to be deemed the produce of the country of which they are the manufacture.

And no goods shall be imported into the United Kingdom from the islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, or Sark, nor exported to any of such islands, or to any British possession in Asia, Africa, or America, except in British ships; nor be carried coastwise from one part of the United Kingdom to another, nor from any one to any other of such islands, nor from one part to another part of the same island, except in British ships; nor from any British possession in Asia, Africa, or America, to any other of such possessions, nor from one part to another part of the same, except in British ships; nor be imported into any British possession in Asia, Africa, or America in any foreign ships, unless they be ships of the country of which the goods are the produce, and from which the goods are imported.

What are British Ships.—No ship is to be admitted a British ship unless duly registered and navigated. Every British registered ship (so long as the registry shall be in force, or the certificate of registry be retained for the use of such ship) shall be navigated during the whole of every voyage (whether with a cargo or in ballast), in every part of the world, by a master who is a British subject, and by a crew whereof three fourths at least are British seamen; and if such ship be employed in a coasting voyage from one part of the United Kingdom to another, or in a voyage between the United Kingdom and the islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark, or Man, or from one of the said islands to another of them, or from one part of either of them to another of the same, or in fishing on the coasts of the United Kingdom or of any of the said islands, then the whole of the crew shall be British seamen. But vessels under-fifteen tons burthen are admitted in navigation upon rivers &c. although not registered; and vessels under thirty tons employed in the Newfoundland fishery &c. need not be registered. Honduras ships are to be taken as British in the trade with the United Kingdom or the British colonies in America.

In order to be deemed the ships of any particular foreign country, vessels must be of the built of, or prize to such country; or British-built, and owned and navigated by subjects of such country.

Master and Seamen.—No person is qualified to be master of a British ship, or to be a British seaman within the meaning of this act, except natural-born subjects of her majesty, or persons naturalized by act of parliament, or made denizens by letters of denization; or except persons who have become British subjects by virtue of conquest or cession of some newly acquired country, and who shall have taken the oath of allegiance to her majesty, or the oath of fidelity required by the treaty of capitulation by which such newly acquired country came into her majesty's possession; or persons who shall have served on board any of her majesty's ships of war in time of war for the space of three years. The natives of places within the limits of the East India Company's charter, although under British dominion, shall not, upon the ground of being such natives, be deemed to be British seamen. Every ship (except ships required to be wholly navigated by British seamen) which shall be navigated by one British seaman if a British ship, or one seaman of the country of such ship if a foreign ship, for every twenty tons of the burthen of such ship, shall be deemed to be duly navigated, although the number of other seamen exceed one-fourth of the crew. Her majesty may, by proclamation during war, declare that foreigners having served two years on board any of her majesty's ships of war in time of such war, shall be British seamen within the meaning of this act.

No British registered ship shall be suffered to depart any port in the United Kingdom, or any British possession in any part of the world, whether with a cargo or in ballast, unless duly navigated. But British ships trading between places in America may be navigated by British negroes; and ships trading eastward of the Cape of Good Hope within the limits of the East India Company's charter may be navigated by Lascars or other natives of countries within those limits.

If any British registered ship shall at any time have, as part of the crew, in any part of the world, any foreign seamen not allowed by law, the master or owners of such ship for every such foreign seaman forfeit 10*l*. Provided, that if a due proportion of British seamen cannot be procured in any foreign port, or in any place within the limits of the East India Company's charter, for the navigation of any British ship; or if such proportion be destroyed during the voyage by any unavoidable circumstances, and the master of such ship shall produce a certificate of such facts under the hand of any British consul, or of two known British merchants, if there be no consul at the place where such facts can be ascertained, or from the British governor of any place within the limits of the East India Company's charter; or, in the want of such certificate, shall make proof of the truth of such facts to the satisfaction of the collector and controller of the customs of any British port, or of any person authorized in any other part of the world to inquire into the navigation of such ship, the same shall be deemed to be duly navigated. The proportion of seamen may be altered by proclamation.

But goods of any sort or the produce of any place, not otherwise prohibited than by the law of navigation hereinbefore contained, may be imported from any place in a British ship, and from any place not being a British possession in a foreign ship of any country, and however navigated, to be warehoused for exportation only, without payment of duty upon the first entry thereof.

If any goods be imported, exported, or carried coastwise, contrary to the law of navigation, they are forfeited, and the master of the ship forfeits 100*l*.

With regard to passage vessels between Great Britain and Ireland, by 4 Geo. IV. c. 88, no captain of any vessel under 200 tons shall take more than twenty passengers, unless licensed by the collector of the customs at the port of sailing, under 50*l*. penalty.

Nor shall any master or other person having the charge or command of any ship so licensed which shall clear out from any port or place in the United Kingdom, have on board, at or after being cleared out, at any one time, or convey or transport from any place in Great Britain or Ireland respectively, in any such ship or vessel, a greater number of persons (exclusive of the ordinary crew) than in the proportion of five adult persons, or of ten children under fourteen years of age, or of fifteen children under seven years of age, for every four tons burthen of such ship; and if any such vessel be partly laden with goods, wares, or merchandize, or horses or carriages, then the person having the command of such ship shall not take on board a greater number of persons (exclusive of the ordinary crew) than in the proportion of five adult persons, or of ten children under fourteen years of age, or of fifteen children under seven years of age, for every four tons of that part of such ship which shall remain unladen; and such goods, with which such ship or vessel may be partly laden, shall, at the sight and under the direction of the officer of the customs at the place where such goods are taken on board, be stowed in such a manner as to leave sufficient accommodation for the proportion of persons allowed to be received on board, under penalty of 5*l*. for every additional person.

Merchant vessels &c. are not to carry more than ten persons if of or under 100 tons, or twenty if not exceeding 200 tons, under the penalty of 5*l*. for every person beyond the proportion.

But this act does not extend to vessels in the service of government or of the East-India Company, nor to any vessel of 200 tons burthen or upwards, nor to any vessel employed in carrying troops.

Penalties are recoverable in three calendar months, before a justice of peace of the place from which the ship departs. A power of appeal is given to the quarter sessions.

For the regulations as to vessels carrying passengers from the United Kingdom to any place out of Europe, not being within the Mediterranean Sea, see 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 53.

Of the Registration of Ships.

The principal object of the registration of ships is to facilitate the exclusion of foreign ships from those departments of trade in which they are prohibited from engaging by the Navigation law, by affording a ready means of distinguishing such as are really British. It has also been considered advantageous to individuals, by preventing the fraudulent assignment of property in ships.

The provisions relating to the registry of British ships were consolidated by the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 89. This act provides, that no vessel shall claim or enjoy the privileges of a British vessel, unless it shall have been duly registered according to the provisions of that act, or under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 118, or 4 Geo. IV. c. 41; and certain persons are authorized to make such registry, and grant certificates thereof, being in the United Kingdom the collector and comptroller of the customs at the port of registry. Ships exercising the privileges of British ships before registry become forfeited.

No ship shall be deemed duly registered, except such as are wholly of the built of the United Kingdom, or of the isle of Man, or of the islands of Guernsey or Jersey, or of some of the colonies, plantations, islands, or territories in Asia, Africa, or America, or of Malta, Gibraltar, or Heligoland, which belonged to her majesty at the time of building, or such ships as shall have been condemned as prize of war, or forfeited for breach of the laws for the prevention of the slave trade and which shall continue wholly to belong to her majesty's subjects duly entitled to be owners of ships registered.

No Mediterranean pass shall be issued for any ship as belonging to Malta or Gibraltar, except such as shall have been duly registered at those places respectively, or such as, not being entitled to be so registered, shall have wholly belonged before the 10th October, 1827, and shall have continued wholly to belong, to persons actually residing at those places respectively as inhabitants thereof, and entitled to be owners of British ships there registered, or who, not being so entitled, shall have so resided upwards of fifteen years prior to the said 10th October, 1827.

If the foreign repairs of a vessel exceed 20s. per ton, except they are absolutely necessary to enable her to perform the voyage in which she is engaged, she loses the privilege of her registry; and the master, on arrival at a British port, is to report such repairs, and the necessity thereof must be proved to the commissioners of customs. If a ship is declared unseaworthy, it is to be deemed lost or broken up, and never can regain the privilege; nor can British ships captured by enemies be again entitled to registry; but ships condemned in courts of admiralty may be registered.

All ships are to be registered at the port to which they belong, unless the commissioners of customs permit registry at other ports.

A vessel is deemed to belong to the port at or near to which some or one of the owners who shall subscribe the declaration required by the act resides; and whenever the owners transfer shares in such ship or vessel, the same shall be registered de novo before the ship sail from the port she is in. But if there is not time to comply with the requisites of the act before it sails upon another voyage, the collector and controller of the port where it then is may certify upon the back of the existing certificate of registry, that the same is to remain in force for that voy-of such certificate, shall make proof of the truth of such facts to the satisfaction of the collector and controller of the customs of any British port, or of any person authorized in any other part of the world to inquire into the navigation of such ship, the same shall be deemed to be duly navigated. The proportion of seamen may be altered by proclamation.

But goods of any sort or the produce of any place, not otherwise prohibited than by the law of navigation hereinbefore contained, may be imported from any place in a British ship, and from any place not being a British possession in a foreign ship of any country, and however navigated, to be warehoused for exportation only, without payment of duty upon the first entry thereof.

If any goods be imported, exported, or carried coastwise, contrary to the law of navigation, they are forfeited, and the master of the ship forfeits 100*l*.

With regard to passage vessels between Great Britain and Ireland, by 4 Geo. IV. c. 88, no captain of any vessel under 200 tons shall take more than twenty passengers, unless licensed by the collector of the customs at the port of sailing, under 50*l*. penalty.

Nor shall any master or other person having the charge or command of any ship so licensed which shall clear out from any port or place in the United Kingdom, have on board, at or after being cleared out, at any one time, or convey or transport from any place in Great Britain or Ireland respectively, in any such ship or vessel, a greater number of persons (exclusive of the ordinary crew) than in the proportion of five adult persons, or of ten children under fourteen years of age, or of fifteen children under seven years of age, for every four tons burthen of such ship; and if any such vessel be partly laden with goods, wares, or merchandize, or horses or carriages, then the person having the command of such ship shall not take on board a greater number of persons (exclusive of the ordinary crew) than in the proportion of five adult persons, or of ten children under fourteen years of age, or of fifteen children under seven years of age, for every four tons of that part of such ship which shall remain unladen; and such goods, with which such ship or vessel may be partly laden, shall, at the sight and under the direction of the officer of the customs at the place where such goods are taken on board, be stowed in such a manner as to leave sufficient accommodation for the proportion of persons allowed to be received on board, under penalty of 5*l*. for every additional person.

Merchant vessels &c. are not to carry more than ten persons if of or under 100 tons, or twenty if not exceeding 200 tons, under the penalty of 5*l*. for every person beyond the proportion.

But this act does not extend to vessels in the service of government or of the East-India Company, nor to any vessel of 200 tons burthen or upwards, nor to any vessel employed in carrying troops.

Penalties are recoverable in three calendar months, before a justice of peace of the place from which the ship departs. A power of appeal is given to the quarter sessions.

For the regulations as to vessels carrying passengers from the United Kingdom to any place out of Europe, not being within the Mediterranean Sea, see 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 53.

Of the Registration of Ships.

The principal object of the registration of ships is to facilitate the exclusion of foreign ships from those departments of trade in which they are prohibited from engaging by the Navigation law, by affording a ready means of distinguishing such as are really British. It has also been considered advantageous to individuals, by preventing the fraudulent assignment of property in ships.

The provisions relating to the registry of British ships were consolidated by the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 89. This act provides, that no vessel shall claim or enjoy the privileges of a British vessel, unless it shall have been duly registered according to the provisions of that act, or under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 118, or 4 Geo. IV. c. 41; and certain persons are authorized to make such registry, and grant certificates thereof, being in the United Kingdom the collector and comptroller of the customs at the port of registry. Ships exercising the privileges of British ships before registry become forfeited.

No ship shall be deemed duly registered, except such as are wholly of the built of the United Kingdom, or of the isle of Man, or of the islands of Guernsey or Jersey, or of some of the colonies, plantations, islands, or territories in Asia, Africa, or America, or of Malta, Gibraltar, or Heligoland, which belonged to her majesty at the time of building, or such ships as shall have been condemned as prize of war, or forfeited for breach of the laws for the prevention of the slave trade and which shall continue wholly to belong to her majesty's subjects duly entitled to be owners of ships registered.

No Mediterranean pass shall be issued for any ship as belonging to Malta or Gibraltar, except such as shall have been duly registered at those places respectively, or such as, not being entitled to be so registered, shall have wholly belonged before the 10th October, 1827, and shall have continued wholly to belong, to persons actually residing at those places respectively as inhabitants thereof, and entitled to be owners of British ships there registered, or who, not being so entitled, shall have so resided upwards of fifteen years prior to the said 10th October, 1827.

If the foreign repairs of a vessel exceed 20s. per ton, except they are absolutely necessary to enable her to perform the voyage in which she is engaged, she loses the privilege of her registry; and the master, on arrival at a British port, is to report such repairs, and the necessity thereof must be proved to the commissioners of customs. If a ship is declared unseaworthy, it is to be deemed lost or broken up, and never can regain the privilege; nor can British ships captured by enemies be again entitled to registry; but ships condemned in courts of admiralty may be registered.

All ships are to be registered at the port to which they belong, unless the commissioners of customs permit registry at other ports.

A vessel is deemed to belong to the port at or near to which some or one of the owners who shall subscribe the declaration required by the act resides; and whenever the owners transfer shares in such ship or vessel, the same shall be registered de novo before the ship sail from the port she is in. But if there is not time to comply with the requisites of the act before it sails upon another voyage, the collector and controller of the port where it then is may certify upon the back of the existing certificate of registry, that the same is to remain in force for that voyage. And if any ship be built in any of the colonies, plantations, islands, or territories belonging to her majesty in Asia, Africa, or America, for owners residing in the United Kingdom, and the master, or the agent for the owner, produces to the collector &c. of the port where such ship was built the certificate of the builder, and subscribes a declaration before such collector of the names and descriptions of the principal owners of such ship or vessel, and that she is the identical ship or vessel mentioned in such certificate of the builder, and that no foreigner, to the best of his knowledge and belief, has any interest therein ; the collector of such port may cause such ship to be surveyed and measured, and shall give the master a certificate, stating when and where and by whom such ship or vessel was built, the description, tonnage, and other particulars required on registry of a ship or vessel, and such certificate shall have all the force and virtue of a certificate of registry under the act during the term of two years, unless such ship shall sooner arrive at some place in the United Kingdom.

Persons residing in foreign countries may not be owners, unless members of British factories, or agents for or partners in British houses.

A declaration being made by the subscribing owners, according to the form prescribed by sec. 13, to the effect that no foreigner hath any share or interest in the vessel, it is to be surveyed previous to registry, and a certificate of the survey given, the owner or master concurring therein. Sections 16 to 19 prescribe the modes of ascertaining the tonnage, which when ascertained is to be carved in figures three inches long on the main beam, and ever after deemed the tonnage, unless any alteration be made in the burthen of the vessel.

A bond is given by the master and owners at the time of registry, in a penalty according to the tonnage, conditioned that the certificate of registry shall be solely made use of for the service of such vessel, and given up to be cancelled in case of its becoming no longer entitled thereto. When the master is changed, the new master gives a similar bond, and his name is indorsed on the certificate of registry. These bonds are liable to the same stamp duties as customs bonds.

The name of a vessel when registered is not afterwards to be changed ; and must be painted on the stern, under 100*l.* penalty.

Upon application for registry, the builder's certificate of the particulars of the ship must be given, with the name of the first purchaser, and a declaration made to the truth thereof.

If the certificate of registry be lost or mislaid, the commissioners may permit registry de novo, upon a bond being given by the owners and master, that if the certificate at any time afterwards be found, it shall be forthwith delivered to the proper officers of customs to be cancelled, and that no illegal use has been or shall be made thereof with their privity or knowledge ; or if, by reason of the absence of the ship or owners, or any other impediment, registry cannot be made, the commissioners may grant a licence for present use, which for the time limited therein is as effectual as a certificate of registry.

Persons detaining a certificate of registry forfeit 100*l.* ; and if a justice certify such detainer, the ship is to be registered de novo. If the person detaining the certificate have absconded, the ship may be registered de novo, as in the case of a lost certificate.

If a ship be altered so as not to correspond with the old registry, it is to be registered de novo.

Where a vessel is condemned as a prize, or for breach of the laws against the slave trade, the certificate of condemnation is to be produced for the purpose of registration. Prize vessels are not to be registered at Guernsey, Jersey, or Man, but at the ports of Southampton, Weymouth, Exeter, Plymouth, Falmouth, Liverpool, or Whitehaven.

All transfers of interest are to be made by bill of sale, reciting the substance merely of the certificate of registry.

The property in every ship is divided into sixty-four parts or shares, and a shareholder of less than a sixty-fourth part is not entitled to be registered as a part owner. The declaration upon the first registry states the number of such shares held by each owner. Smaller portions may be conveyed or transferred without a stamp; and partners may hold ships or shares without distinguishing the proportionate interest of each owner. Only thirty-two persons are to be owners of a ship at one time; but this is not to affect the equitable title of heirs &c., nor joint stock companies, whose trustees may apply to have registry made.

Bills of sale are not effectual until produced to officers of customs, and entered in the book of registry or intended registry.

The entry of bill of sale is valid to pass the property, except as against such subsequent purchasers and mortgagees who shall first procure the indorsement to be made upon the certificate of registry of such ship or vessel in manner hereinafter mentioned.

When a bill of sale has been entered for any shares, thirty days are allowed for indorsing the certificate of registry, before any other bill of sale for the same can be entered; it being the true intent and meaning of this act that the several purchasers and mortgagees (when more than one appear to claim the same property, or to claim security on the same property) in the same rank and degree shall have priority one over the other, not according to the respective times when the particulars of the bill of sale or other instrument by which such property was transferred to them were entered in the book of registry as aforesaid, but according to the time when the indorsement is made upon the certificate of registry as aforesaid: provided, that if the certificate of registry shall be lost or mislaid, or shall be detained by any person whatever, so that the indorsement cannot in due time be made thereon, and proof thereof shall be made by the purchaser or mortgagee, or his known agent, to the satisfaction of the commissioners of her majesty's customs, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to grant such further time as to them shall appear necessary for the recovery of the certificate of registry, or for the registry de novo of the said ship or vessel under the provisions of this act, and thereupon the collector and controller shall make a memorandum in the book of registry of the further time so granted, and during such time no other bill of sale shall be entered for the transfer of the same ship or vessel, or the same shares thereof, or for giving the same security thereon.

Bills of sale may be produced after entry at other ports than those to which vessels belong, and transfers be indorsed on the certificate of registry, on previous notice to the officers at the port of registry.

If upon registry de novo any bill of sale shall not have been recorded, the same shall then be produced. A bill of sale previous to registry may be recorded after registry; upon change of property, a registry de novo may be granted if desired, although not required by law.

Copies of declarations &c. and of extracts from books of registry are to be admitted in evidence, without the production of the original or originals, and without the testimony or attendance of any collector or controller, or other person or persons acting for them respectively, in all cases, as fully and to all intents and purposes as such original or originals, if produced by any collector or collectors, controller or controllers, or other person or persons acting for them, could or might legally be admitted or received in evidence.

Where vessels or shares are sold in the absence of the owners by their known agents without formal powers, the commissioners may permit a record of such sales, or registry de novo, as the case may require, and in other cases where the bills of sale cannot be produced, security being given to produce legal powers or abide future claims.

When the transfer of any ship, or of any shares thereof, shall be made only as a security for the payment of debts, either by way of mortgage, or of assignment to trustees for the purpose of selling the same for the payment of debts, then the collector and controller of the port where the ship or vessel is registered shall, in the entry in the book of registry, and also in the indorsement on the certificate of registry, in manner hereinbefore directed, state and express that such transfer was made only as a security for the payment of debts, or by way of mortgage, or to that effect; and the person to whom such transfer shall be made, or any other person claiming under him as a mortgagee or trustee only, shall not by reason thereof be deemed to be the owner of such ship, or share thereof, nor shall the persons making such transfer be deemed by reason thereof to have ceased to be owners of such ship, any more than if no such transfer had been made, except so far as may be necessary for the purpose of rendering the ship or shares so transferred available by sale or otherwise for the payment of the debts for securing the payment of which such transfer shall have been made.

Transfers of ships for security of debts being registered, the rights of a mortgagee are not affected by any act of bankruptcy of the mortgagor, &c.

Of the Owners of Ships.

The ownership in ships is acquired either by building at a man's own expence, or by purchase. But in the latter mode great attention is required to see that the seller has the legal title; for otherwise the purchase will not, as in many other cases of personal property, give any title.

The master or captain has every power necessary for the employment and navigation of the vessel; but he has not, except in case of extreme necessity, authority to sell it, and is bound seriously and deliberately to try every other expedient to raise money before disposing of the ship or any part of the cargo. Therefore no person can safely purchase a ship of the master, not even though the master be part owner; for the sale will only be good as to his own share, which differs from the case of ordinary partnerships, as we shall see hereafter. In foreign countries attempts have been made to evade the effect of these restrictions, by procuring a sentence of condemnation and sale of a ship as unfit for service, from some court or judge having jurisdiction in maritime affairs. But this jurisdiction is unknown in England, and does not bind the real owner, who may litigate the right of such sale in England.

If a ship, "with its tackle, apparel, furniture, and other instruments thereunto belonging," be assigned, the ship's boat does not pass. The title in the ship only passes by written documents. When the ship is in a British port, and on sale of the whole interest therein actual possession can be given by the seller, that ought to be done; for if the seller is allowed to retain possession, and during that time become bankrupt, the property passes to his assignees, as being in his order and disposition. But if the purchaser obtain possession any time before the bankruptcy, it will be sufficient. But in case of a sale of part only, the mere title deeds pass the property, unless the part owner is in actual possession. When the ship is at sea, then the property also passes, even though the whole be sold, by mere delivery of the requisite title deeds.

Another mode of acquiring property in a ship is by capture from an enemy, legalized and sanctioned by sentence of condemnation in a court of the capturing state. But a capture by a neutral state, or by pirates, does not alter the property.

The mortgage of a ship merely as a security does not pass the property of it, so as to constitute the mortgagee an owner.

Of Part Owners.—The property in a ship is usually divided into shares, possessed by several persons, who are part owners, and, as such, tenants in common, and not joint tenants; as to the difference of which we shall see more hereafter; suffice it here to observe, that such part owner has a distinct, though undivided, interest in the whole; and that a share of such owner on his death passes to his representative, and does not go to the other part owners by survivorship, as it would were it a joint tenancy.

Generally, where there are several owners, one of them is appointed the ship's husband, who has all the authority of a sole owner, provided he act with due discretion. When this is not the case, and the owners differ among themselves as to the employment of the ship on a voyage, those willing must give bond to the court of admiralty to return the ship or pay for the fares of those dissenting, and are liable to all loss and damage and entitled to the profit. One part owner may render the others liable to expences of repairs, though, if the creditor knew not that there were several owners, he may sue the party ordering such repairs alone.

So, where a voyage is commenced after the bankruptcy of a part owner who has not paid his quota of outfit, the others are entitled to deduct such quota from the ultimate profits, and are not to pay his full share of them to the assignees and rest satisfied by proving the debt and taking a dividend with the other creditors under the commission. But where one is appointed ship's husband, and the accounts are ascertained between him and the other owners, and one of them afterwards settles his quota by giving a bill of exchange, the only remedy is proof under the commission.

The ordinary remedy for the adjustment of a ship's accounts between ship owners is by bill in equity. But an action at law may in some cases be resorted to, in case of joint and several agreements appointing a ship's husband.

As respects strangers, all the part owners form one owner, and actions concerning the ship must be by or against them all.

Of the Master and Mariners.

The master is the person entrusted with the care and management of the ship or vessel; and his powers and authority for this purpose are very great. The situation of a master is so important, that in some countries no one can be appointed to it who has not submitted to an examination by competent persons to ascertain his fitness for properly discharging its duties; but in this country the owners are left to their own discretion as to the skill and honesty of the master. Although he is bound to make good any damage that may happen to the ship by his negligence or unskilfulness, yet he cannot be punished criminally for mere incompetence.

The Authority of the Master in relation to the employment of the Ship.—A trading ship is let either by an entire contract called charter-party; or, by several contracts, the goods of distinct persons are carried to their destination. This is called a general ship. Whether the master is part owner, or is a mere agent of the owners, the owners are bound to the performance of every lawful contract made by him relative to the usual employment of the ship, in the same manner as every agent is enabled to bind his principal. But the master is at the same time liable on his contract, the law giving the merchant the double remedy. A charterparty made by the master in his own name does not render the owners directly liable to an action; but if it be made in a foreign port, and in the usual course of a ship's employment, and without circumstances affording evidence of fraud, or where made at home under circumstances implying the owners' assent, they are, to the extent of the value of the ship and freight, liable thereto.

As owners are bound to perform these contracts, so they are liable for breaches committed by the master or seamen.

But if the owners themselves have made a special contract for the employment of the ship, the master cannot annul it and substitute another. Neither are owners bound by the master's contract to carry goods freight free.

The master has power to subject the owners to pay charges for needful repairs and necessaries for the ship, such as stores, pilots, mariners, &c., or money borrowed for these purposes; and they may be either directly liable and made personally to pay them, or indirectly by a suit against the ship. The master is himself also liable for these, unless he takes care by express terms to exonerate himself. By owners here is to be understood not those who have the legal title merely to the ship, but those from whom the master derives his appointment, and for whom he acts as agent. But the owners of a mail packet are liable, though the master be appointed by the postmaster-general.

In an action by a creditor, he must always show the necessity of the expenditure; for the master's power to charge the owners does not extend beyond necessities. The ship itself is not, however, liable where the repairs &c. are provided in the ship's own port. The pledging the ship for these purposes is called hypothecation, the contracts of which are bottomry and respondentia bonds. Bottomry is a word derived from the bottom or keel of the ship, and is a figurative expression signifying the entirety of the ship. Respondentia applies to a loan upon the merchandise on board the ship. On bottomry more than five per cent interest may be by the contract of the parties be chargeable, dependent on the risks of the voyage. Hypothecation does not vest the property of the ship absolutely in the creditor, but only gives him a privilege or claim upon it, to be carried into effect by legal process, just in the same manner as in the case of mortgages. Upon the arrival of the ship, if the loan is not repaid at the time prescribed, the creditor must apply to the admiralty court, with the instrument of hypothecation and proper affidavits of the facts, and he thereupon obtains a warrant to arrest the ship, and must cite all the parties to appear, when the ship will be dealt with, either by sale or otherwise, as circumstances demand. Hypothecation must be by some deed or contract in writing, as it cannot be constituted by a mere verbal pledge; and it is necessary to its validity that the money be advanced on the credit of the ship originally; for if in the first instance the owner's personal credit was relied on, the bond taken subsequently will be void. The master cannot pledge the ship for any debt of his own; and there is this peculiarity attending hypothecation, that, generally speaking, the last creditor has a priority of lien, since it may be presumed that the last loan was the means of saving the ship, so as to complete her voyage.

The master is bound to bestow the utmost fidelity and attention upon his trust; and in case of negligence or misconduct, whereby the owners suffer any damage, he may be made responsible. He is bound to bestow his whole time and attention in the service of his employers; and if he enters into any engagement that may distract him from their interests, and the profits of that engagement get into the hands of the owners, he cannot recover them back from them.

Of the Seamen.

Many regulations have been made from time to time by different statutes for the regulation and government of seamen, the chief of which are now consolidated in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112.

Register Tickets.—An office for the registry of merchant seamen, first established under the 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 61, and continued by the present act under the title of "The General Register and Record Office of Seamen," is held at the Custom-house, London; from which office, or from the collector or comptroller of customs at an outport, every person intending to serve on board any ship under the provisions of this act (except as master, physician, surgeon, or apothecary) must first provide himself with a register ticket. For this purpose he must apply personally, and answer all the questions set forth in the schedule to the act. Masters also must procure register tickets for their apprentices, by taking them, with their indentures, to the register office, or to a custom-house at the nearest outport.

A seaman losing his register ticket may be furnished with another, upon giving a satisfactory account of the loss; but otherwise he is liable to a penalty of from 2s. to 10s. Giving false answers to questions with reference to the granting of tickets is a misdemeanour; as it is to alter or destroy any register ticket, or to counterfeit, transfer, or traffic in such for gain or otherwise.

Agreements.—No master of a ship, of whatever tonnage or description, belonging to a subject of her majesty, proceeding to parts beyond the seas, or of a British registered ship of 80 tons burden or upwards employed in the fisheries or coasting trade, shall carry to sea any seaman as one of his crew (apprentices excepted), unless he shall have first made and entered into a written agreement with him, specifying what wages he is to be paid, the quantity of provisions he is to receive, and the nature of the voyage in which the ship is to be employed, so that he may have some means of judging of the period for which he is to be engaged. The agreement is to be properly dated, and signed by the master in the first instance, and by each of the seamen at the port where they are respectively taken on board, the signature of each party being duly attested by one witness at least, and the agreement having been first read over and explained to the seaman in the presence of such witness before executing it. And no master of a ship shall carry to sea any seaman, being a subject of her majesty, until he shall have first obtained from him his register ticket, which he is to retain until the termination of his service, and then restore it to him. A penalty of 10*l.* attaches to a breach of any of these regulations, except for not reading over and explaining the agreement to a seaman before his signing it, for which the penalty is 5*l.*

The owner or master of a ship under the burden of 80 tons, though not required to enter into a written agreement, must, before employing a seaman receive his register ticket, and retain it until the expiration of his service, and then return it to him.

The agreement, or a copy of it properly certified, is to be deposited by the master with the collector or comptroller of customs, within twenty-four hours after the ship's arrival at her final port of destination in the United Kingdom; or, in the case of ships engaged in the fisheries or in the coasting trade, within ten days after every 30th June and 31st December, under a penalty of 10*l.* Such copy may be received as evidence on behalf of the seaman; though he is not required to produce the agreement or a copy, or give notice for the production thereof. If not produced, he may prove the contents, or establish his claim by other evidence, according to the nature of the case.

No seaman, by reason of any agreement, shall forfeit his lien upon the ship, or be deprived of any remedy for the recovery of his wages to which he would otherwise be entitled. And no agreement contrary to or inconsistent with this act, nor any contract or engagement whereby he shall consent to forego any claim to wages in the case of freight earned by a ship subsequently lost, or to salvage or reward for salvage services, shall be valid or binding on him.

Wages.—The wages of a seaman are to be paid within two days after the cargo has been delivered, or within seven days after the seaman's discharge, whichever may first happen; and in the coasting trade, within two days after the termination of the agreement, or at the time when he is discharged, whichever may first happen. In all cases the seaman, at the time of his discharge, is entitled to be paid on account a sum equal to one-fourth of the balance due to him. In case of neglect or refusal to make such payment, the master or owner shall forfeit to the seaman (to be recovered as wages) the amount of two days pay for every day (not exceeding ten) during which payment shall, without sufficient cause, be delayed beyond such periods. But nothing in this clause as to wages extends to ships employed in the Southern Whale Fishery, or on voyages for which seamen are wholly compensated by shares in the profits of the adventure.

Payment of wages to a seaman is valid notwithstanding any bill of sale or assignment thereof, or attachment or incumbrance thereon. No assignment or sale of wages or salvage made prior to the accruing thereof, nor power of attorney expressed to be irrevocable for the receipt of wages or salvage, is valid or binding; and no attachment from any court shall prevent the payment of wages to a seaman.

If on the voyage the allowance of provisions which he agreed to receive were reduced one-third, or less, he shall receive fourpence a day, or if reduced more than one-third, eight-pence a day in addition to his wages for the period such reduction continued.

Upon the discharge of a seaman, or on payment of his wages, the master shall give him, not only his register ticket, but a certificate specifying the period of his service and the time and place of his discharge, or in default shall forfeit and pay to him the sum of 10*l*.

If, three days after the termination of the stipulated service, or three days after a seaman has been discharged, he be desirous of proceeding on another voyage, and in order thereto, or for any other sufficient reason, he require immediate payment of any amount of wages, not exceeding 20*l*., a justice of peace, on satisfactory proof that he would be prevented from employment or incur serious loss or inconvenience by delay, may summon the parties before him, and, if no reasonable cause for delay appear, may order payment to be made forthwith; and, in default of immediate compliance, the party liable shall forfeit and pay the sum of 5*l*. in addition to the wages.

Wages not exceeding 20*l*. may be recovered before a justice of peace in and for any part of her majesty's dominions, or of the territories under the government of the East India Company, where or near to the place where the ship ended her voyage, cleared at the custom-house, or discharged her cargo, or the party liable resides. If the order for payment be not obeyed within two days, the justice may issue his warrant to levy the amount by distress and sale of the party's goods, or may cause the amount to be levied on the ship; and if such levy cannot be made, may cause the party to be committed to the common gaol until the amount with all costs be paid. The decision of such justice is final and conclusive.

All the rights, liens, privileges, and remedies given by this act or by any law or usage to seamen for the recovery of wages extend, in the case of the insolvency or bankruptcy of the owner, to the masters of ships for the recovery of wages due to them.

No suit or proceeding for the recovery of wages, unless they exceed 20*l.*, can be instituted against the ship, or the master or owner, in any court of admiralty or of record, unless the owner be bankrupt or insolvent, or the ship be under arrest or sold by authority of an admiralty court, or unless a magistrate under this act refer the case to such court, or unless neither the master or owner reside near the place where the service terminated or the seaman was discharged.

Whenever a ship is sold or transferred at a foreign port (unless the crew consent in writing to complete the voyage if continued), or whenever the service of a seaman terminates at any place out of her majesty's dominions, the master shall give to each of the crew, or to each of the seamen whose service so terminates, a certificate of discharge and also his register ticket, and, besides paying their wages, either provide them with adequate employment on board some other British vessel homeward-bound, or furnish the means of sending them back to the port at which they were originally shipped, or to such other port in the United Kingdom as shall be agreed upon, or provide them with a passage home, or deposit with the consul &c. of the place a sum sufficient to defray the expences of their subsistence and passage home. If the master refuse or neglect so to do, such expences, if defrayed by the consul or any other person on behalf of the seaman, shall be a charge upon the owner, except in cases of barratry, and may be recovered with full costs of suit, or if defrayed by the seaman, may be recovered as wages.

In case of wreck or loss of the ship, every surviving seaman shall be entitled to his wages up to the period of the wreck or loss, whether the ship shall or shall not have previously earned freight, provided he produce a certificate from the master or chief surviving officer of his having exerted himself to the utmost to save the ship, cargo, and stores.

Medicines.—Every ship navigating between the United Kingdom and any place out of the same shall have constantly on board a sufficient supply of medicines and medicaments suitable to diseases arising on sea voyages, according to the scale issued by the Admiralty; and (excepting ships bound to European ports, or to ports in the Mediterranean Sea) shall also have on board a sufficient quantity of lime or lemon juice, sugar, and vinegar, to be served out whenever the crew shall have been consuming salt provisions for ten days,—the lime or lemon juice and sugar at the rate of half an ounce each per day, and the vinegar at the rate of half a pint per week to each person, so long as the consumption of salt provisions is continued.

In case the master or any of the seamen receive any hurt or injury in the service of the ship, the expence of providing the necessary surgical and medical advice with attendance and medicines, and for his subsistence until he be cured, or brought back to some port of the United Kingdom, shall be defrayed by the owner, without any deduction from his wages.

Every ship having 100 persons or upwards on board, and every ship whose voyage is estimated to exceed twelve weeks having 50 persons on board, shall have, as one of her complement, a physician, surgeon, or apothecary; or, in default, the owner shall forfeit 100*l.*

Provisions, &c.—Upon complaint of three or more of the crew, it shall be lawful for any consul or vice-consul of her majesty, or any collector or comptroller of customs, to survey and examine, or cause to be surveyed and examined, the provisions, water, and medicines put on board any ship for the use of the crew; and if it be found that they are of bad quality, or unfit for use, or not appropriate, or not in sufficient quantity, the surveying officer shall signify the same in writing to the master; and if the master do not provide other fit and proper provisions, water, and medicine, or a sufficient quantity, or shall use any which have been signified to be of bad quality, he shall in each case be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Refusal to join Ship, Absence, Desertion, &c.—In case a seaman, whether before the commencement or during the progress of a voyage, shall neglect or refuse to join the ship on board of which he has engaged to serve, or shall refuse to proceed to sea, or shall absent himself without leave, or shall desert, a justice of peace, upon complaint thereof on oath by the master, mate, owner, or his agent, may issue his warrant, and cause him to be apprehended and brought before him, and, upon due proof of such neglect, refusal, absence, or desertion, commit him to prison or the house of correction for a period not exceeding thirty days; or, at the request of the master &c., instead of committing him, may cause him to be conveyed on board the ship, or deliver him to the master &c. for the purpose of being so conveyed and proceeding on the voyage, and may also award to the master or owner the costs incurred in his apprehension, not exceeding 40s., to be deducted from his wages.

If any seaman, during the period of his service, wilfully and without leave absent himself from the ship, or otherwise from his duty, he shall (in all cases not of desertion, or not treated as such by the master), forfeit out of his wages the amount of two days pay, and for every twenty-four hours of such absence the amount of six days pay, or, at the option of the master, the expences necessarily incurred in hiring a substitute; and if, while he belong to the ship, he shall without sufficient cause neglect or refuse to perform such his duty as shall be reasonably required of him by the master, he shall be subject to a like forfeiture in respect of every such offence, and for every 24 hours continuance thereof. And in case any seaman, after the ship's arrival at her port of delivery, and before her cargo shall be discharged, quit the ship without a previous discharge or leave from the master, he shall forfeit one month's pay. But no such forfeiture shall be incurred unless the fact of the seaman's absence, neglect, or refusal be duly entered in the ship's log-book, the truth of which entry it shall be incumbent on the owner or master, in case of dispute, to substantiate by the evidence of the mate or other credible witness.

Any seaman or other person deserting the ship shall forfeit to the owner all his clothes and effects which he may leave on board, and also all wages and emoluments to which he might otherwise be entitled; and in the case of a seaman deserting abroad, he shall likewise forfeit all wages and emoluments which shall become due or be agreed to be paid to him by the owner or master of any other ship in whose service he may engage for the voyage back to the United Kingdom. The wages &c. thus forfeited for desertion are to be applied to the reimbursement of the expences occasioned by such desertion to the owners or master, and the remainder paid to the Seamen's Hospital Society; and the master shall, in case of desertion in the United Kingdom, deliver up the register ticket to the collector or comptroller of customs at the port. Every desertion must be entered in the log-book at the time, and certified by the signature of the master and mate, or of the master and one other credible witness.

The absence of a seaman from the ship for any time within twenty-four hours immediately preceding its sailing, whether before the commencement or during the progress of a voyage, wilfully and knowingly, without permission; or the wilful absence of a seaman from his ship at or for any time without permission, and under circumstances showing an intention to abandon the same and not return thereto, shall be deemed a desertion.

In case of a desertion in parts beyond seas, if the master engage a substitute at a higher rate of wages, he shall be entitled to recover from the deserter, by summary proceeding, such excess of wages. But the seaman is not to be imprisoned longer than three calendar months for nonpayment of such excess.

Persons wilfully harbouring and secreting any seaman or apprentice who has deserted, knowing or having reason to believe him to be a deserter, shall forfeit the sum of 10*l*.

No debt exceeding 5*l*. incurred by any seaman after he has engaged to serve, is recoverable until the service is concluded.

No keeper of a public-house, or of a lodging-house for seamen, shall detain any chest, tools, or other property of a seaman for debt; and in case of such detention, a justice of peace, upon complaint on oath, may inquire into the matter in a summary way; and if it appear that the alleged claim is fraudulent, or that the debt was not fairly incurred to the full amount, may by his warrant cause the effects to be delivered to such seaman, and the person detaining them shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 10*l*. at the discretion of the justice.

But nothing in this act, or in any agreement, shall prevent any seaman or person belonging to any ship or vessel from entering into the naval service of her majesty; nor shall such entry be deemed a desertion, nor shall such seaman or other person thereby incur any penalty or forfeiture, either of wages, clothes, or effects. And when a seaman shall quit any ship in order to enter her majesty's naval service, and shall thereupon be actually received into such service, not having previously committed any act amounting to and treated by the master as desertion, he shall be entitled immediately to have his register ticket and all his clothes and effects delivered to him, and to receive the proportionate amount of his wages up to the time of such entry, to be paid either in money or by a bill on the owner; and the master shall deliver and pay the same accordingly, under a penalty of 20*l*., recoverable by such seaman with full costs of suit. But in case the master have no means of ascertaining the balance, he shall deliver to him a certificate of the period of his service, and the rate of his wages, producing at the same time the agreement to the commanding officer of her majesty's vessel; who, upon such delivery and the settlement of the wages, shall indorse thereon a certificate of such entry.

Any master forcing on shore and leaving behind any part of his crew in any place abroad, is guilty of a misdemeanor. And no part of the crew can be discharged in any place abroad, even with their consent, without the sanction of the governor &c. if at a British colony, or of the consul &c. if at a foreign port. And if any master leave any of his crew at any place abroad by reason of their not being in a condition to proceed on the voyage, he must obtain a certificate to that effect from such functionaries, and deliver a true account of the wages due to each, and pay the same either in money or by a bill drawn upon the owners of the ship.

For the protection of seamen against the arts and impositions of crimps, the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 116 empowers the Board of Trade to grant licences to fit and proper persons for providing seamen for merchant ships, and imposes a penalty of 20*l.* on any person (not being the owner, part owner, master, or person in charge of the ship, or the ship's husband) who shall hire, engage, supply, or provide a seaman to be entered on board a merchant ship without having such a licence; and on any person, whether licensed or not, who shall obtain the register ticket of a seaman on pretence of so engaging him; and on any owner, master, &c., who shall receive or accept to be entered any seaman so engaged contrary to the act.

And any person who shall receive or demand from a seaman, or from any person other than the owner, master, or ship's husband, any remuneration for or on account of the hiring or providing such seaman, is subject to a forfeiture of 5*l.*

No wages shall be advanced, nor any advance note for wages given, until six hours after the ship's articles have been signed on board the ship, and then only to the seaman himself, unless such wages are paid in money, in which case payment may be made to the seaman himself at any time after the signing. All payments contrary hereto are declared null and void, and the wages may be recovered by the seaman as if they had not been paid.

Any person, other than an officer or person in her majesty's service, going on board a merchant vessel before her arrival in dock or at her place of discharge, without the consent of the master, is liable to a penalty of 20*l.*, and may be delivered by him to a constable or peace officer to be taken before a magistrate.

If any person shall, on board a merchant ship, within twenty-four hours of her arrival, solicit a seaman to become a lodger at the house of a person not licensed as aforesaid, or shall take out of the ship any chest, bedding, or other effects of a seaman, except under his personal direction, and without the permission of the master, he is liable to forfeit 5*l.*

Any person, who shall demand from a seaman payment for his board or lodging for a longer time than such seaman actually resided and boarded with him, or who shall take any money, documents, or effects of a seaman, and not return the same when required, after deducting what is justly due in respect of his board and lodging, shall forfeit 10*l.* over and above the amount thereof so unjustly detained.

Penalties under this act may be recovered before two justices; one half to be paid to the informer, and the other to the Seamen's Hospital Society. If not paid, the offender may be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for six months.

Apprentices.—Every vessel of 80 tons and under 200 is required to have on board one apprentice; of 200 and under 400, two apprentices; of 400 and under 500, three apprentices; of 500 and under 700, four apprentices; of 700 and upwards, five apprentices; or the master shall forfeit 10*l.* for every apprentice deficient.

Overseers of the poor may bind out healthy boys, with their consent, not under twelve years of age, who or whose parents are chargeable to the parish, as apprentices to the sea service for seven years, or until the age of twenty-one, and may pay to the master 5*l.* to be expended in providing such boy with necessary sea clothing and bedding. And any person to whom any poor parish apprentice has been bound to a service on shore, or his executors or widow, may, with the consent of such apprentice, assign or turn him over to any master or owner of a ship not having her complement of apprentices. All indentures and assignments are to be registered with the registrar at the custom-house, London, or elsewhere with the collector of the port.

Apprentices are not allowed to enter into her majesty's service without the consent of the master; and if they do, he is entitled to their wages.

Seamen's Hospital.—During the reign of George II., an establishment, attached to Greenwich Hospital, was erected, under the 20 Geo. II. c. 38, "for the relief of sick, maimed, and disabled seamen, and the widows and children of such as shall be killed, slain, or drowned in the merchant service." That act has been repealed, and the establishment is now regulated by the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 52. Towards the fund for these purposes, every master of a British ship in the merchant service pays two shillings per month, and every seaman, pilot, or other person (except apprentices), one shilling per month, which sums are deducted from their wages, and must be paid over by the master to the person appointed under the authority of the act at the port to which the ship belongs before she can be cleared inwards. But it does not extend to persons employed in boats upon the coast in taking fish, or in boats or vessels trading from place to place within rivers.

Of Pilots.

As to pilots who have the care of the helm out at sea, there are no particular laws in this country affecting them; but it is otherwise as to pilots which ships are obliged to take in to navigate them in certain places, where the right is founded on ancient statutes of incorporation. All the provisions as to pilotage are consolidated in the 6 Geo. IV. c. 125. This statute, which imposes an obligation to take a pilot on board within the limits of certain ports and places, allows persons residing within the Cinque Ports to conduct their vessels up and down the Thames and Medway into or out of any port or place within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports. And where a ship has been brought into port by a pilot, she may be removed by the master or mate or other person in command, or if in ballast by any other person, for the purpose of entering or going out of any dock, or for changing her moorings. In other cases any unlicensed person piloting a vessel subjects the master to a penalty of 5*l.* for every fifty tons burthen.

The charge of pilotage is regulated by usage or by statute, usually increasing according to the greater depth of water drawn by the vessel; and is to be recovered against the owner, master, or consignee, or their agents, in the same manner as are the penalties under the act, viz., either before justices if not above 20*l.*, or by action of debt in the courts at Westminster if above 20*l.*

By s. 59, however, certain vessels there mentioned are exempted, provided they are piloted by the master and crew, and not by an unlicensed person employed solely for that purpose. Neither do any penalties attach on persons assisting in case of distress.

By s. 53 the master is not liable for the loss or damage of the vessel arising by reason of his not having a pilot on board, unless the absence of that officer were caused by the master's wilful conduct in any way. And s. 55 provides that no owner or master is liable in such case where a pilot was on board; but the pilot is liable, though only to the extent of his bond. With respect to this, however, it is necessary to observe, that the release of the master from liability only occurs where he is bound to take such pilot on board, and not where it is in his election or discretion to do so or not; for in the one case the entire management is taken out of the master by the statute and given to the pilot, and in the other the pilot is only the agent or servant of the master.

Affreightment by Charterparty.

This is a contract where the whole or the principal part of a ship is let to a merchant for the conveyance of goods on a determinate voyage to one or more places; and if entered into by the owners themselves, they are liable for the negligence of the master &c. in the first instance, as they are also if entered into by the master avowedly on their behalf; otherwise the master is liable in the first instance. The freight is a sum of money paid by the merchant for the use of so much of the ship, or for so much tonnage. The charterparty usually mentions the burthen of the ship, and a mistake in this may be prejudicial to one party or the other. Where stated to be of 200 tons burthen or thereabouts, the "thereabouts" was construed to be to the extent of five tons more or less.

The usual contents of this contract are, to provide a tight and staunch ship, furnished with all necessaries, to be ready by a certain day to receive cargo; with provisions as to sailing, delivering of cargo, keeping vessel in repair, &c.

The merchant covenants to load and unload in a certain number of days, or further time, for which a further sum of money is to be paid in case of necessity. The delay and payment are called demurrage, which ceases as soon as the merchant has done all acts necessary on his part for dispatching the ship.

The construction of a charterparty is in general liberal, and not according to the strict letter. It being under seal, it cannot be released or varied by parol.

The other contract of affreightment is a bill of lading, which is a written document subscribed by masters of ships, acknowledging the receipt of goods on board, and promising to deliver them at a certain specified place, "in the like good order and condition (the act of God, the queen's enemies, fire, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation, of whatever nature and kind soever, save risk of boats, as far as ships are liable thereunto, excepted.)" Bills of lading are made out in sets of three or four, three of them being on stamped paper: one of them should be remitted by the first post after signing to the person to whom the goods are consigned, a second being sent to him by the ship; a third is to be retained by the shipper of the goods; and a fourth, on unstamped paper, is to be given to the master for his government. When a bill of lading is given together with a charterparty, it is to be considered merely as evidence of the shipment of the goods. Bills of lading ought to be signed within twenty-four hours after delivery of the goods on board. But, upon delivery of the goods, the master, or person officiating for the master in his absence, is to give a common receipt for them, which is to be delivered up on the master signing the bill of lading.

Average.—If one party's goods are damaged or lost for the benefit of the others, the owners of the latter must contribute to make good the loss the first sustains. This is called average; and this applies in general not only to goods on board, but to the ship and its parts which are sacrificed for the general good.

Stoppage in transitu is that power which the consignor has of countermanding the delivery of goods sent off to the consignee. It is therefore an adverse act on the part of the former against the latter. Where the consignee becomes bankrupt, and before delivery the consignor gives this order to the master, it is his duty to obey the countermand. But the consignor's power of doing this may be restricted by various acts and circumstances. We shall see more of this subject when treating on CARRIERS and BAILEES in general.

Salvage is a compensation to be paid to those by whom the ship or cargo is saved from impending danger &c., or rescued from an enemy; and the party is entitled to hold possession of the thing saved till compensation be made. If its amount be not agreed upon, it is a question to be determined by a jury. Within the limits of high and low water mark, and at sea, the Admiralty has jurisdiction. No person on board the ship (as a passenger) can claim salvage, as it is the general interest and duty of all on board to do their best for the safety of the goods and vessel. But there are cases where it is allowed; as where a passenger remained on board for that purpose, when he had an opportunity of escaping from the vessel, and the vessel was deserted by the master. There are several enactments which enforce this right, and give encouragement to all persons to assist in cases of distress. So in the case of recapture, the amount of salvage, which varies according to different circumstances, is fixed by several statutes, on payment of which the ship &c. are restored to the original owners; but a privateer once taken by the enemy and recaptured becomes the prize of the recaptors. The land forces co-operating with the navy in saving vessels may also be entitled to salvage.

CHAPTER XI.

Of Master and Servant.

THIS relationship is created in a variety of ways, depending upon the nature of the service to be performed. Servants are generally the constituted agents of the master; and therefore most of the observations on the law of principal and agent will apply to this subject also. The law recognizes various sorts of servants; we shall therefore consider them separately.

I. APPRENTICES.

The term apprentice is derived from the French word apprendre to learn.

Prior to the 54 Geo. III. c. 96, no person could set up a trade without having been bound apprentice in his youth; but now that obligation is only in force where the bye laws or customs of a particular corporate town require it, or where a settlement under the poor laws is sought to be obtained. And now also, though formerly otherwise, any person may take an apprentice, even an infant, with the exception only of a feme covert. Yet even a feme covert sole trader in the city of London, who is regarded as distinct from her husband for the purposes of trade, and is liable to the bankrupt laws, may take an apprentice.

With respect to who may be compelled to be bound as an apprentice, we shall see hereafter how far a father has the right to bind his child,¹ and how far parishes have power to put out poor children;² and we have already shewn the law respecting sea apprentices.³

Any person may bind himself apprentice voluntarily, as an infant without his father's consent; but his contract cannot render him liable to an action thereon, except in the city of London, it only subjecting him to the jurisdiction of magistrates.

The number of apprentices that a man may take is in certain cases limited. Thus, a clothmaker, fuller, shearman, weaver, tailor, or shoemaker, can only have three apprentices to one journeyman. No hatmaker can have more than two, and those by indenture for seven years each; and weavers of stuffs in Norwich or Norfolk, shall have two apprentices only, and with these two journeymen also.

The contract of apprenticeship should always be in writing, though it is not always necessary that it should be by deed; for if it be for more than a year's binding or service, the Statute of Frauds requires it to be in writing, in order to ground an action thereon. But for the purposes of gaining a settlement it must be by deed, though it need not be indented; and the writing should state all the particulars of the contract, and should be properly executed by both parties; and if by deed, it should be duly stamped.⁴

¹ See post, tit. PARENT AND CHILD.

² See post, PARISH APPRENTICES.

³ See ante, tit. MARITIME STATE

⁴ See ante, tit. STAMPS.

If an apprentice absent himself, or neglect his duty, or commit any other breach of the stipulations agreed to be performed by him, the master may support his action against the parties (other than the infant) who are bound by the contract. And covenant lies against those parties on the apprentice not duly accounting; and if the apprentice, being an infant at the time of his being bound, on his coming of age, refuses to abide by the indenture (which he may do by giving a proper notice to that effect), the other parties are bound. Neither is a breach of covenant by the master any answer to an action brought by him, as the other party has his cross remedy on the covenant.

If the master, however, put an end to the service by direct waiver or otherwise, then indeed no action can be maintained on the contract; but if the contract were by deed, such termination can only be made by deed. It is not every little occasional absence that constitutes a breach of the contract, as being an act of unlawful absents, but it must be a substantial absence; and therefore if it extend to merely half an hour beyond his time, that would be insufficient.

The master is in like manner liable to an action for any breach of duty on his part; and he cannot justify to such action by a plea that the apprentice ran away, unless sufficient appears on the pleadings to justify the master in terminating the contract from the apprentice's conduct.

If the apprentice is unwell, and there is a probability of his recovery, the master must provide for him; though it is otherwise if the apprentice become idiot, or otherwise incapable of learning. During the term of the apprenticeship the master is entitled to all the earnings and gains which an apprentice may acquire by his labour, either in the service of another or in any employment on his own account; and for this purpose it is sufficient if he be an apprentice de facto, though not legally so constituted. If the apprentice be enticed away or harboured by another person, after notice to the latter to deliver him up not complied with, an action may be sustained by the master against him, if any damage can be shown to have ensued by reason of the loss of his services.

If an apprentice be guilty of negligence or other misbehaviour, the master may exercise moderate correction, though he cannot delegate such authority to another person. But, in case of gross misconduct, it is better for the master to apply to a justice, or the sessions, to discharge or punish him. In like manner the master is justified in using all means necessary for the defence of his apprentice. If the master be guilty of misusing or ill-treating an apprentice, the justices may, on complaint, where not more than 25*l.* has been paid as the premium, discharge the apprentice from further serving him, and the master is liable to an action, and sometimes to an indictment for neglect or ill treatment. If the apprentice rob the master of property entrusted to him, it is, by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, declared to be felony.

Apprentices cannot in general be assigned from one master to another without all parties are consenting, except by the custom of London; though such assignment, if it take place, will not, as we have before seen, take away the apprentice's right to a settlement. But a dissolution of the apprenticeship may take place by other ways than those already pointed out: thus, it may be terminated by death, by bankruptcy, insolvency, &c.

¹ See Penn v. Ward, 2 Cr. M. & R. 338.

In case of the death of the master, it is doubtful how far the contract is at an end. It seems that the executors are bound to continue the performance of it in the best manner they can; at least, they are liable to provide him with necessaries that are covenanted for by the contract. By the custom of London, they are bound to place him with another master; and courts of equity will also, in some cases, compel the executors to return part of the premium.

In case of bankruptcy, the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 49, enacts, that where any person shall be an apprentice at the time of issuing the commission against the master, the bankruptcy shall be and enure as a complete discharge of the indentures; and if any sum shall have been really and bonâ fide paid by or on the behalf of such apprentice to the bankrupt as an apprentice fee, it shall be lawful for the commissioners to order any sum to be paid to or for the use of such apprentice which they shall think reasonable, regard being had to the amount of the sum so paid by or on behalf of such apprentice to the bankrupt, and to the time during which such apprentice shall have resided with the bankrupt previous to the issuing of the commission.

By the 20 Geo. II. c. 19, 33 Geo. III. c. 55, and 4 Geo. IV. c. 29, a summary jurisdiction is given to two justices of peace in the cases of complaints by and against apprentices upon whose binding not more than 25*l.* premium has been paid; and the 32 Geo. III. c. 57 contains certain enactments as to parish apprentices upon whose binding out not more than 5*l.* has been paid. But doubts having arisen whether these acts applied to cases where no sum whatever had been given as a premium, the act 5 & 6 Vic. c. 7 was passed, which declares that all the said acts shall be taken to extend to apprentices where no sum or premium of apprenticeship is paid.

Parish Apprentices.—Where the parents of children are not able to support them, the churchwardens and overseers, with the assent of two justices, may place out such children as apprentices, till twenty-one if a male, or till twenty-one or marriage if a female; but they must not be under nine years old at the time of binding.

Formerly they might be bound to any clergyman, gentleman, farmer, or trader of the parish, in turn; and 10*l.* penalty was attached to a refusal to take and provide for them. A power of appeal, however, was given, to the sessions. But now, by 7 & 8 Vic. c. 101, § 13, poor children can no longer be put out as apprentices, under the 43 Eliz. or 8 & 9 Wm. III. c. 30, to parishioners unwilling to receive them; all provisions in those and all other acts, general or local, for this purpose, being repealed.

The child is first to be carried before two justices of the peace, who are to inquire whether the intended master resides within a reasonable distance, and who may examine the parents thereon, and into the character and circumstances of the master. No child is to be bound where the master resides above forty miles from the parents, or out of the country, unless the child's parish be more than forty miles in extent, when under special circumstances, to be stated in the indenture, they may be so bound. The binding must always be by indenture.

II. SERVANTS IN GENERAL.

There are several observations which apply generally to all who come under the denomination of servants, viz. clerks, domestics, husbandry servants, manufacturers, journeymen, artificers, labourers, and the like. Thus, the contract need not, in general, be in writing; nor does the memorandum or agreement require a stamp, except where the service is under articles of clerkship, which seems to be more like an apprenticeship than that species of service of which we are now speaking. The term is (with the exception of domestic service) generally held to be for a year, unless the term of hiring, or the express contract, raise a different construction; and in such cases the service cannot be put an end to before the end of the year, unless on the ground of misconduct. If the contract be for wages at so much per week, then it seems not to be a yearly hiring; nor if at so much per month or half year. But if it is at so much per annum, to be paid half-yearly, quarterly, monthly, or by the week, it may be regarded as a yearly service. With domestic servants, however, the general understanding seems to be, that, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, the service is under any circumstances monthly, and may be determined by either party on a month's notice; and if the service be determined otherwise without sufficient grounds, a month's wages is forfeited by the party breaking the implied contract. If, in any case of service, the parties are either of them guilty of misconduct, the other is justified in putting an end to the service. Thus, if the servant disobey the master's orders, or absent himself from home at night, or assault another servant, or being a female become pregnant, or being a male get a female servant with child, though the latter may have left the service.¹

Whether a servant can be discharged on the ground of insanity is very doubtful. A servant's marrying is no cause for discharge; neither is sickness, though the master is not liable for the doctor's bill.

Any public crime, or even gross impertinence towards the master, will justify the determination of the service. And we may add generally, that where the contract ends, there ends also the right to demand wages.

If any servant through negligence cause a house to be set on fire, he shall forfeit 100*l.* to the churchwardens, to be distributed among the sufferers, &c.; and if he refuses to pay it, he shall be committed to prison for eighteen months. Stealing property entrusted to them is not a mere breach of trust, but is an indictable offence; as is also the inciting or soliciting a servant to do so.

A master has no power whatever to beat such servants of whom we are now speaking, for any cause whatever. But masters and servants may justify assaults upon third persons in defence of each other.

The liability of the master for the servant's conduct and acts towards third parties will be more properly considered under the subject of PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.²

Where the term of service is not completed, if the servant absent himself, any person enticing or harbouring him is, after notice, liable to an action for the detainer, per quod servitium amisit.

¹ A master may sue for the seduction of his female servant.—Fores v. Wilson, M. 29; MacLaughlin v. Pryor, 4 Man. & Peake, 55.

² See Chandler v. Broughton, 1 Cr. & M. 29; MacLaughlin v. Pryor, 4 Man. & Gr. 48.

By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 48, it is enacted, that when any bankrupt shall have been indebted, at the time of issuing the commission against him, to any servant or clerk, in respect of wages or salary, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, upon proof thereof, to order so much as shall be due, not exceeding six months wages, to be paid to such servant or clerk out of the estate; and such servant or clerk shall be at liberty to prove under the commission for any sum exceeding such last-mentioned amount. Upon this statute it has been held, that a son serving his father as clerk, at a salary of two guineas per week and two suits of clothes per annum, was a servant within this act;¹ and it has been extended to servants of persons who had been in trade only two months before the bankruptcy. But it seems only to apply to those who are yearly servants, and not to those who are retained weekly or by the month.²

Giving Characters of Servants.—In no case can a master be compelled to give a character; but if he do so, and it be a false one, and a loss by robbery &c. ensue to the party hiring him, the former master is liable to an action for damages to the extent of the loss. And if a bad character be given maliciously of a servant, the servant may maintain his action for slander. By malice in law is understood an act not merely arising from moral bad feeling, but from the want of due care and caution; but a mere erroneous character is not sufficient to justify the action, for express malice must be shown.

By 32 Geo. III. c. 56, if any one personate the master, and give a false or counterfeit character of a servant, or falsely assert that a servant has been hired for a period of time in their employ, or in service with another person, or was discharged at any other time, or had not been hired in any previous service, contrary to the fact, or any person offering himself knowingly under such false representations, shall, on conviction, forfeit 20*l.*, or may be committed for three months; and the informer, who is entitled to half the penalty, is declared a good witness. But offenders discovering accomplices before conviction are indemnified.

III. DOMESTIC OR MENIAL SERVANTS.

Little remains to be said of this class of servants in particular, most of the law relating to them being contained in the preceding general observations. Magistrates have no peculiar jurisdiction over these servants, although it has been erroneously supposed to be otherwise. The amount of their wages is always regulated by the contract between the parties; but if there be no express or implied agreement upon the subject (as if the servant came merely on trial), he can claim none; and it has been therefore held that a slave coming to England, thereby gaining his freedom, and continuing with his master without any stipulation as to wages, is not entitled to demand any. So if a servant comes in upon the understanding, that the amount of wages is to be settled thereafter, or that they should be such as the master should think fit, and no contract is subsequently made, no claim can arise for any wages. And if a servant has left his master's service for a considerable time without claiming wages, the presumption is, that all wages have been paid, till the contrary be shown.

¹ Exp. Humphreys, 3 Dea, Chit. Rep.

² Exp. Skinner, 1 Mont, & Bli. 417.

Breakages.—A master cannot, without an express agreement to that effect, set off or deduct from the amount of wages the value of goods lost or broken by the servant's carelessness, however gross; but the master's remedy would be by cross action.¹

Clothes.—Where a servant was engaged for a fixed sum and a suit of clothes per annum, and was provided with a livery suit on entering into service, and was wrongfully turned away before the conclusion of the year, it was held that he could not maintain an action of trover for the suit of clothes, as he had no property in the clothes till he had served the year. Lord Tenterden said, that if the plaintiff was dismissed without reasonable cause, whereby he was prevented from becoming entitled to this suit of clothes, he has his action for that.²

IV. ARTIFICERS, LABOURERS, JOURNEYMEN, AND WORKMEN.

By 5 Eliz. c. 4, all unmarried persons, and all married persons under a certain age, not possessed of certain property, or not filling certain situations therein specified, are compellable to go into service; those who have been brought up to trades, in those trades; and those who have not been used to trade in husbandry. And, by the same statute, labourers and artificers are obliged to work between March and September from five in the morning until between seven and eight o'clock at night, with the exception of two hours and a half for their meals in the meantime; and in the other months, from sunrise to sunset. All labourers and artificers may be compelled by the justices to work during the harvest months, on pain of 40s. And persons going out of their parish to work in harvest may be required to have a certificate from their parish, so that they shall not gain a settlement in any circumstances in the district to which they go. In order to prevent these kinds of servants improperly quitting any service in which they are engaged, and to free the party subsequently hiring them, it is necessary that they should have testimonials from their master to quit his service. Labourers improperly quitting service, and fleeing into another county, are liable to be taken up on process of capias, and to be imprisoned till they find sureties to perform the lawful service. But the provisions of this statute, though remaining unrepealed, have in a great measure fallen out of use, having been superseded by later regulations, or by a general acquiescence in their disuse, as being no longer adapted to the circumstances of the times.

There are many statutes relating to workmen in general, as well as to those of particular trades. Thus, the payment of their wages, though the amount of them is left to their contract, is especially provided for. They cannot be paid in bank notes of any kind, unless the servant agree, tacitly or otherwise, to accept them. Neither can they, by agreement or otherwise, be paid by goods in lieu of wages, under a heavy penalty on the master. Between clothiers and other workmen, the penalty is 20l.; and between masters and workmen in the hat, fur, hemp, flax, mohair, silk, linen, woollen, fustian, cotton, lace, or iron manufactures, or leather trade, it is 10l. A fine of 5l., to be paid to the master, is imposed on workmen of any kind leaving their work unfinished, except for non-payment of wages, or with the master's consent.

¹ 4 Camp. 134.

² 3 Car. & P. 470.

The 5 Geo. IV. c. 96, after repealing former statutes on the subject, substitutes new regulations for settling disputes between masters and workmen, respecting wages, the hours of labour, the finishing of work, the finding of implements, and the compensation to be given for any new or altered manufacture; which may be either by submission to a justice of peace according to mutual agreement, or by arbitrators nominated, and whose award may be enforced, by justices.

With respect to combinations among workmen, an entire repeal of most of the old statutes has taken place, and the law has been remodelled by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 129. This statute provides, that if any person shall, by violence to the person or property, or by threats or intimidation, or by any other molestation, compel any journeyman to leave his employment, or not to return to his unfinished work, or prevent him from hiring himself, or compel him to belong to any club founded for that purpose, or to pay fines thereat, or by such means endeavour to bring about any alteration in the settled mode of conducting the manufacturing business in any way, he shall suffer imprisonment and hard labour for any time not exceeding three months.

But this is not to extend to meetings at which the master is present, to fix the rate of wages or the hours of work, nor to such meetings among masters only for these latter purposes. Offenders against this act may be compelled to give evidence against others in pari delicto, upon being indemnified from the consequences of such offence; and justices may summon offenders, and, on the neglect to appear, may issue warrants for their apprehension, and impose the penalties of their crimes. And, by 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, § 25, persons committing assaults in pursuance of a conspiracy against the above act may be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any time under two years.

The system of the employment of children in factories has lately undergone legislative revision and considerable amendment. The 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 103 provides, that children under eighteen years of age are not to be employed, except in lace manufactories, and in the packing of goods, between the hours of half-past eight at night and half-past five in the morning, nor more than twelve hours a day, and except where in a watermill time has been lost by want of water, which may be fetched up by three additional hours per day, and in other similar cases of accident. An hour and a half in the day is to be allowed for their meals. No child under ten years old is to be employed, except in silk mills; and children under thirteen are only to work nine hours a day, and ten in the silk manufactories. They are to have holidays on Christmas-day and Good Friday, and eight other half days during each year. With every child employed the master is to have a medical certificate of its ability to perform bodily labour. For the purpose of enforcing these regulations, inspectors are appointed.

Children under thirteen are directed to be sent to school by the master, &c., who is to deduct the expences (not more than 1*d.* in each shilling) out of their wages. The manufactory is to be well limewashed in the interior once a year, unless the consent of the inspector is obtained to the contrary; and heavy penalties are imposed on the master and his servants for breach of any of these regulations.

This act has been amended by 7 & 8 Vic. c. 15; and similar provisions are enacted as to calico print works by 8 & 9 Vic. c. 29.

CHAPTER XI.

Of Principal and Agent.

I. THE DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF AGENTS.

THE relationship of principal and agent is constituted whenever one person, having power to do any act, authorizes another person to do it for him in his name. In such a case the delegated authority cannot in general be again delegated by the agent to a third person, though it may in some cases, as we shall see hereafter. An infant, or a married woman, though generally speaking incompetent to appoint an agent, is not incapacitated from being an agent.

Agency, how created.—The agency is created either by parol or by writing; and it is either general, to do all acts; or general and special, to do all acts relating to a particular transaction; or special, to do one single act. And the authority is limited, as where he is tied down to obey the particular instructions of the principal; or unlimited, as where he is entitled to use his own discretion.

If his instructions are limited, he is bound strictly to follow them. If he exceed them and a loss ensue, he is liable, unless the principal adopt his act by any conduct on his part. If a gain accrues from the agent overstepping his authority, the principal shall in all cases have the benefit of it.

An agent is bound to use all diligence and care in the execution of his trust, and to possess a competent skill in ordinary cases for the accomplishment of what he undertakes; otherwise an action may be maintained against him. This observation applies to every kind of agent, be he broker, attorney, surgeon, or any other professional agent; though it is questionable whether it would apply to a barrister or physician, since these are honorary professions, the members of which have no legal right to demand remuneration for their agency.¹

In the absence of particular instructions, the agent is bound to follow the known customs of trade, as applicable to the particular circumstances of his duty.

His responsibility to his principal extends to all actual damage that the latter sustains, and to that only; for a supposed or probable injury is not sufficient. If an act be omitted, which, if done, would not have entitled the principal to any benefit, or if it would have been a fraud on others, or in any way illegal, the omission forms no ground of action against the agent.

A gratuitous agent even, that is, one who receives no remuneration for his trouble, is sometimes liable for the consequences of want of due care and caution on his part; as where a gratuitous agent received the money of his principal, and placed it in his banker's hands mixedly with his own, and the bankers failed, he was held liable for the loss.² And all benefits which an agent receives beyond his mere commission generally belong to and are liable to be refunded to the principal.

¹ See Tidd's Practice, 9th edit. p. 85, and note f.

² Massey v. Banner, 4 Mad. 413; 1 Jac. & W. 241.

Factors and Brokers.—The preceding observations apply to all agents; but there are agents of a mercantile description on whom other special duties attach; as factors and brokers. The former are generally entrusted with the possession as well as the disposal and management of the property; the latter term seems in general (for the term has never yet been strictly defined) to apply to those who are engaged merely in the negotiation of contracts between parties.

A factor is bound to take such reasonable care of the goods entrusted with him as a man of average prudence would take of his own property, and such care only. He is not liable in cases of robbery, fire, tempest, or damage from accident which he could not have averted, unless the goods either ought never to have been in the place or situation in which the accident happened, or ought to have been removed thence before that time. If he deposit the goods in a safe warehouse according to the custom of the trade, he is not liable to any damage.¹

Factors, and consignees who act as factors, are in general bound to insure property entrusted to them to a proper amount and with a sufficient policy, unless directions are given to the contrary; and if they do not, they are liable to the loss; but if the insurance office fails, they are not accountable, if they had used reasonable care in the selection. Again, it is the duty of factors to see that all the custom duties on goods are duly paid, or else they may be liable for the consequences of a seizure.

If an agent is employed to sell any thing for his principal, it is his duty to get the best price he can under the circumstances; and to this end he is bound to exert that degree of vigilance and intelligence which might be expected from a prudent man in the management of his own business. If it be the usage of trade that he may sell upon trust, he is not liable to a loss in consequence, unless he knew the vendee to be a person of low credit. But in all cases the length of credit must be reasonable and customary. When the contract is ended, the principal ought to have as speedy a notice of it as possible. If the agent

The agent is only liable to his principal for the money arising from a sale from the time he actually receives it, unless he gave credit improperly; but if the agent owing the vendee money sets off his debt against the price of goods sold, he is stopped from saying he has not received the money.

If goods are shipped by an agent abroad to this country other than such as the principal ordered, it is the principal's duty to give notice to his agent, and to return them.

It is a fundamental rule, that an agent employed to sell cannot be a purchaser, nor vice versâ; because, if he were allowed, he could not have his mind wholly unbiassed, so as to give every advantage to his principal, as his duty required; and this rule, we shall see, extends to all persons in fiduciary situations, to trustees, mortgagees, assignees in bankruptcy, or even a solicitor for the party.

A del credere commission is one in which an agent, in consideration of an additional premium, engages to insure to the principal, not only the solvency of the vendee, but the punctual discharge of the debt; and therefore he is liable for it in the first instance, without prior demand upon the debtor; and in such case he is answerable for the produce of the sale or performance of the contract absolutely. A broker, though not acting under del credere, may by his mode of dealing become liable directly to his principal; as, where he drew in his own name a bill on the purchaser in favour of the principal, and transmitted it to his principal, he was held liable as the drawer of the bill; or where the broker does not discover the name of the principal or of the purchaser, he may make himself liable.

¹ Goods in the possession of a factor cannot be distrained for rent. Gilman, v. Elton, 3 Brod. & King, 75.

If an agent be imposed upon by a forged order, and induced to pay the principal's money, the agent is liable to pay it over again; but not if he give credit in the usual course of trade, which afterwards proves bad. Again, a loss occasioned by an unauthorized disposal or adventure of the principal's money, not prescribed by the usage of business, though intended for his benefit, falls on the agent; and if an agent having received money, either improperly deposit it in an unsafe custody, or, being authorized to deposit it, do so mixedly with his own money in his banker's hands, and without any distinguishing mark, and the banker fail, the agent is liable.

Another of the most principal duties of agents is to keep accounts regularly, and render them to his principal. If he has made interest or profit of the principal's money, he must account for that also, and can take nothing for himself, save his stipulated reward. Even when an account has been dated and delivered, and a balance paid, upon a suggestion of either fraud or specific errors pointed out, the Court of Chancery will open the account within a reasonable time.

Joint agents and joint principals are each considered as but one person; and therefore one joint agent is liable for all the acts of his partner, even though the business were transacted wholly by the latter with the knowledge of the principal.

How compelled to account, and Remedies against them.—Agents may be compelled to account, sometimes by a special action of assumpsit or of account,¹ where there is a mutual account; but if there is any intricacy or difficulty in the account, a bill in equity is the more usual and suitable proceeding to compel it. But the bare relation of principal and agent is not sufficient to entitle the former to relief, if the matter is fairly triable at law; and therefore a bill filed for an account, and an injunction, must disclose a case of open and unsettled items, and not such merely as would form a ground of set-off to an action at law, otherwise the bill will be demurrable.

For misconduct, neglect, or disobedience of instructions, the remedy is either an action on the case as for a wrong, or of assumpsit on the implied undertaking; and in one or other of these actions the principal may recover compensation in damages for the injury suffered.

With respect to the recovery of specific property in the hands of an agent, or wrongfully disposed of by him, an action of trover will lie against him in general. If, however, the agent becomes bankrupt, the case is materially altered; for, by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 72, it is enacted, that if any bankrupt, at the time he becomes bankrupt, shall, by the consent and permission of the true owner thereof, have in his possession, order, or disposition, any goods or chattels, whereof he was reputed owner, or whereof he had taken upon him the sale, alteration, or disposition as owner, the commissioners shall have power to sell and dispose of the same: provided, that nothing herein shall invalidate or effect the transfer or assignment of any ship or vessel, or share thereof, made as a security for any debt, either by way of mortgage or assignment, duly registered.

¹ The law presumes a promise on the part of a factor to account for goods sent to him. Where therefore he refuses to account for sales, the consignor may maintain assumpsit (Topham v. Braddick, 1 Taunt. 372); or he may have an action of account. See 1 Archbold's Nisi Prius, 142.

It has, however, been long settled that this does not apply to the case of a bare factor; though it may, notwithstanding this general principle, become a question of fact, whether the factor, by the reputed possession of the property, acquired a degree of false credit which imposed on the world, so as to bring him within the provision of the statute. If the factor's assignees, therefore, detain the principal's goods, an action of trover will lie, subject to any lien the factor had before his bankruptcy; or if they have been sold, and notes payable at a future day received by the factor, these, or even money which can be sufficiently ear-marked and distinguished, may be recovered from the assignees, as following the nature of the property which produced them. This exemption from the effect of bankruptcy is not confined to goods alone; but specific securities deposited with an agent for any specific purpose, as to answer former bills outstanding, follow the same rule; and these in like manner may be recovered by action of trover, or by petition in bankruptcy. But money which has been actually received by a bankrupt agent, and mixed with his own funds without ear-mark, cannot be separated from the bankrupt's estate, but the principal must come in and prove his debt like any other creditor.

II. THE RIGHTS OF AGENTS.

Their Remuneration.—With regard to the rights of agents, their commission is either regulated by contract, or by usage, or by act of parliament. By the 12 Ann. stat. 2, c. 16, the rate of brokerage to be taken by brokers or solicitors for procuring a loan is limited to 5s. for every 100*l.*, or $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent, under 20*l.* penalty; and by 17 Geo. III. c. 26, 10s. is allowed them for procuring a loan on an annuity. But it has been held, that a solicitor advancing his own money is not entitled to any such commission. If there is no usage adapted to the case, and there is no contract express or implied, no commission whatever can be recovered; and that even when labour was performed under a resolution, "that any service to be rendered by him should be taken into consideration, and such remuneration made as should be deemed right."

If the contract or business which the agent is employed to manage be illegal, and in seeking the recovery of any reward the proof of that illegality must necessarily come to the knowledge of the court before which the question is tried, the illegality of the transaction will at once form an obstacle to the recovery of commission. The right to reward might also be forfeited by the conduct of the agent, as by negligence or unskilfulness, whereby no benefit arises to the principal from the transaction, or even the neglect to keep accounts, or if he depart from the character of an agent, and act adversely to him in any part of the transaction. So also if the agent be made the principal's executor; or if a servant engaging to devote his whole service to his principal, hire out his services to another party.

By the usage of trade, a ship-broker is not allowed to charge a ship owner for commission unless the charter-party be actually entered into, although it might be the fault of the principal that it was not completed; and if, for executing a charter-party, the commission is to be a per-centage on the freight earned, if nothing is earned nothing can be recovered.

Bankers are usually allowed a per-centage for agency above 5*l.* per cent for interest on advances, if made bonâ fide, and not as a mere cloak for usury. Where the lender was not a banker nor engaged in trade, and although the money lent was the agent's, and not that of a third person, yet he was allowed to charge commission also.¹ And where a bill broker, in order to get a bill discounted at 4*l.* per cent, took upon himself the responsibility of indorser, and charged his principal with 5*l.* per cent discount, which was the lowest sum for which he could have done the business except for his indorsement, it was held that, although he also charged 10*s.* per cent for his trouble, it was not usury, and that he was entitled to charge it as his del credere commission.²

Advances by them.—Agents are also entitled to be reimbursed all advances made in the regular course of a legal employment, as for duties paid, warehouse-room, &c.; and for any advances made in cases of urgency, where the advice of the principal could not be obtained in time, and they were necessary. He cannot recover for mere voluntary and officious payments, or if they become necessary by reason of his own prior unwarranted acts; and therefore it may be taken as a general rule, that, to entitle the agent to indemnity, the disbursement made must be justified by express or implied instructions, or by the subsequent acquiescence of the principal. And payments made to third persons, after notice of an act of bankruptcy of the principal, are not recoverable.

Lien.—Agents have a general lien on the property of the principal in their hands, for any thing that is due to them from him. We shall consider this subject more fully in a subsequent part of the work.³

III. THE AGENT'S AUTHORITY; AND THE OBLIGATIONS OF PRINCIPALS, IN RESPECT OF THEIR AGENTS' ACTS, TO THIRD PERSONS.

The authority of agents must sometimes be by writing, and it may sometimes be given by parol. Corporations aggregate must, in general, appoint their agents in the former manner; but merely for its inferior or ordinary services, as those of a servant &c., or to do such acts as are in the ordinary course of its business as a corporation, parol is sufficient. Thus, the Bank of England may without deed authorize agents to make and sign in the name of the corporation bank notes, bills, &c., being in the ordinary course of their business. A parol appointment without deed is sufficient for a receiver; and so is an appointment of auditors. In such manner a corporation may also appoint a bailiff to distrain; but a corporation cannot authorize the seizure of forfeited goods, except under the common seal. But they may appoint an attorney upon record without deed. In bankruptcy, by 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 40, corporations may prove by an agent, of whose appointment the only proof requisite is his own oath; but no agent can vote in the choice of assignees, except under a power of attorney.

¹ Exp. Gwyn, 2 Dea. & Ch. 12. ² Exp. Goss, 2 Den. & Ch. 240. ³ See post, 392.

An agent cannot, in general, bind his principal by his signature to a deed, unless his appointment were also by deed, even though the principal admit the appointment. And under the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, an agent's appointment must be in writing to enable him to make or create leases, estates, or interests of freehold, or terms of years, or any uncertain interest, other than leases under three years, in messuages, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or for surrendering the same, except copyhold interests. But by § 4, for the purpose of charging executors or administrators out of their own estates, or to charge any person for the debt or default of another, or upon a marriage agreement, or on any contract or sale of lands, tenements, hereditaments, or interests in and concerning them, or upon any agreement not to be performed within a year, although the instrument must be in writing and signed, the agent signing need not be authorized by deed. And therefore, although a lease or other document creating interests as in the first three sections must be signed by an agent authorized in writing, yet such written authority is not requisite to render valid a contract or agreement for a lease &c. So it is also in the common case of an auctioneer, who binds the parties, by his signature to the contract, to the future execution of the deeds requisite to complete the purchase. In other cases a parol, or at most a written authority, is in general sufficient without a deed.

An authority may sometimes be created by implication merely, as from previous employment of the agent in similar acts; and in this instance the agent rather assumes the position of a servant towards his master, and the act of the servant is regarded as the act of the master himself, upon the principle that he who accredits another by employing him must abide by the effect of that credit. Thus, if a master always sends his servant to buy things with ready money, the master is not responsible for things ordered by the servant wrongfully on credit, although they afterwards come to the master's use; but it is otherwise if the master generally sends his servant to order goods on credit, or sometimes on credit and sometimes for ready money; for in these latter cases the master will be liable to whatever extent the servant surreptitiously orders goods, and although the goods do not come to the master's use, as the party giving credit has no mode of distinguishing for what he is to give the master credit, and for what not. This principle applies equally to all other cases where authority is impliedly given to the agent; as if a clerk is in the habit of drawing or accepting bills in his employer's name; or if a broker, usually employed to buy goods, sells them again, the master or principal is in both cases bound.

Such being the obligation of the principal, he may in general in like manner incur responsibility after the agency is ended, unless there be actual or constructive notice to the party giving credit; and therefore in all important agencies the termination of them should be advertized in the Gazette, or by circular letters. An authority may also be presumed from subsequent acquiescence or assent.

We have before shown, that an agent's authority cannot in general be delegated to another by him; and it follows, that an authority given to A, B, and C jointly cannot be executed by any of them without all joining in it.

As to the form in which the authority is to be exercised:—If it be under power of attorney, it must be done in the name of the principal. If it be a bare act, as the surrender of a copyhold, or the execution of a deed, it is sufficient if it be stated to be done by the agent for or on behalf of the principal. But with regard to a contract entered into by an agent, it should appear that the principal does the act, and therefore it should be made in his name.

The authority of an agent to bind his principal continues only during the agency, except as before mentioned; and the determination of it may take place by revocation, by effluxion of time, or by performance of the commission. A power of attorney is in general revocable at pleasure, unless it is coupled with an act giving the agent an interest in the transaction, as where it forms part of a security. The death or bankruptcy of the principal will, in general, be an absolute revocation of a power of attorney, unless, as before observed, it be coupled with an interest.

An authority is to be so construed as to include all necessary and usual means of executing it with effect; but a power of attorney is always to be performed to its very letter, the law giving it a strict interpretation.

The employment of an agent or factor under general terms being exclusively to buy and sell, he had formerly no right to pledge the property; and it was repeatedly decided, that a principal might recover back goods on which an advance of money had been made by a third party, without being bound to repay such advance, and that notwithstanding such third party was wholly ignorant that the individual pledging the goods held them as a mere factor or agent. It had also been held, that the purchasers of goods from factors or agents not vested with a power of sale, though that fact was unknown to the purchaser, might be liable to pay the price of the goods a second time to the real owner. To remove these hardships, and to place the contracts between factors or agents and third parties on a sounder footing, the 4 Geo. IV. c. 83, and 6 Geo. IV. c. 94, were passed; by which it is provided, that any person in possession of any bill of lading, India warrant, dock warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, wharfinger's certificate, warrant, or order for delivery of goods, shall be deemed the true owner of the property, so far as to give validity to any contract for the sale or disposition of the same, or for the deposit or pledge thereof as a security for any money or negotiable instrument advanced thereon, with any person who shall not have notice, by such documents or otherwise, that he is not the real owner. And, by § 4, any person may contract with an agent entrusted with goods for the purchase of them, and may receive and pay for the same to such agent, and such contract and payment shall be binding against the owner, notwithstanding notice that the person making the contract is an agent, provided such contract and payment be made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and the purchaser at the time of the sale or payment had no notice that the agent was not authorized to sell such goods or to receive the said purchase money.

But, notwithstanding these acts, the law did not afford that facility and security to transactions with agents which the interests of commerce appeared to require. The system of making advances on goods had become an usual and ordinary course of business, especially with regard to foreign trade; and it was deemed desirable that parties dealing with agents having possession of goods, or documents entitling to goods, should be protected as against the principals with respect to any advances they might make thereon. By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 94, the sales of goods by agents as such were, with some limitations, protected; but an equal protection was not afforded to advances made on the security thereof. Moreover, the law did not allow such advances to be made on the possession of goods, but only on the possession of documents entitling to goods. Neither did it protect the exchange of securities; and, besides, many uncertainties existed with respect to the construction of the law, which had given rise to much litigation. To supply these deficiencies, therefore, and to place the law on a more clear and certain basis, the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39 has been recently passed, which, from its great importance, we shall here give at length.

The deficiencies of the former law are first stated in the preamble, which recites that "Whereas by the act 6 Geo. IV. c. 94, validity is given under certain circumstances to contracts or agreements made with persons entrusted with and in possession of the documents of title to goods and merchandize, and consignees making advances to persons abroad who are entrusted with any goods and merchandize are entitled under certain circumstances to a lien thereon; but, under the said act and the present state of the law, advances cannot safely be made upon goods or documents to persons known to have possession thereof as agents only: and whereas by the said act it is further enacted, 'that it shall be lawful for any person to contract with any agent entrusted with any goods, or to whom the same may be consigned, for the purchase of any such goods, and to receive the same of and to pay for the same to such agent, and such contract and payment shall be binding upon and good against the owner of such goods, notwithstanding such person shall have notice that the person making such contract, or on whose behalf such contract is made, is an agent, provided such contract or payment be made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that such person shall not, when such contract is entered into or payment made, have notice that such agent is not authorized to sell the same, or to receive the said purchase money:' and whereas advances on the security of goods and merchandize have become an usual and ordinary course of business, and it is expedient and necessary that reasonable and safe facilities should be afforded thereto, and that the same protection and validity should be extended to bonâ fide advances upon goods and merchandize as by the said recited act is given to sales, and that owners entrusting agents with the possession of goods and merchandize, or of documents of title thereto, should, in all cases where such owners by the said act or otherwise would be bound by a contract or agreement of sale, be in like manner bound by any contract or agreement of pledge or lien for any advances bonâ fide made on the security thereof: and whereas much litigation has arisen on the construction of the said act, and the same does not extend to protect ~~as~~ or in accepting or procuring such advance as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to any of the punishments which the court shall award, as hereinbefore last mentioned. Provided nevertheless, that no such agent shall be liable to any prosecution for consigning, depositing, transferring, or delivering any such goods or documents of title, in case the same shall not be made a security for or subject to the payment of any greater sum of money than the amount which at the time of such consignment, deposit, transfer, or delivery was justly due and owing to such agent from his principal, together with the amount of any bills of exchange drawn by or on account of such principal, and accepted by such agent. Provided also, that the conviction of any such agent so convicted as aforesaid shall not be received in evidence in any action at law or suit in equity against him. And no agent entrusted as aforesaid shall be liable to be convicted by any evidence whatsoever in respect of any act done by him, if he shall, at any time previously to his being indicted for such offence, have disclosed such act on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity in any action, suit, or proceeding which shall have been bonâ fide instituted by any party aggrieved, or if he shall have disclosed the same in any examination or deposition before any commissioner of bankrupt.

Section 7 provides also, that nothing herein contained shall prevent such owner as aforesaid from having the right to redeem such goods or documents of title pledged as aforesaid, at any time before such goods shall have been sold, upon repayment of the amount of the lien thereon, or restoration of the securities in respect of which such lien may exist, and upon payment or satisfaction to such agent, if by him required, of any sum of money for or in respect of which such agent would by law be entitled to retain the same goods or documents, or any of them, by way of lien as against such owner, or to prevent the said owner from recovering of and from such person with whom any such goods or documents may have been pledged, or who shall have any such lien thereon as aforesaid, any balance or sum of money remaining in his hands as the produce of the sale of such goods, after deducting the amount of the lien of such person under such contract or agreement as aforesaid. Provided always, that in case of the bankruptcy of any such agent, the owner of the goods which shall have been so redeemed by such owner as aforesaid shall, in respect of the sum paid by him on account of such agent for such redemption, be held to have paid such sum for the use of such agent before his bankruptcy; or in case the goods shall not be so redeemed, the owner shall be deemed a creditor of such agent for the value of the goods so pledged at the time of the pledge, and shall, if he think fit, be entitled in either of such cases to prove for or set off the sum so paid, or the value of such goods, as the case may be.

By sect. 8, in construing this act the word "person" shall be taken to designate a body corporate or company as well as an individual.

By sect. 9, it is provided, that nothing herein shall be construed to give validity to or in anywise to affect any contract, agreement, lien, pledge, or other act or thing made or done before the passing of this act.

As between the principal and a third person dealing with the agent, the former cannot in general be discharged from liability by agreement between him and his agent, unless the conduct of the third party testifies a dealing with and trusting of the agent rather than the principal. If an agent do not disclose the name of his principal, the third party, supposing the agent to be principal, on discovering before payment the true state of the case, may either elect to regard the agent or principal as his debtor; but not if he lie by after the disclosure, and suffer the principal to settle with the agent. But if the third party know the agent to be such, but not for whom, it is questionable how far he may come against the others.

Representations of agents, to bind the principal, must be made at the time of and with reference to the particular transaction; and notice to an agent is notice to his principal, even where he acts for both parties; and this, whether the notice is expressed or implied. So an agent's declarations and admissions are sufficient.

If money is due upon a written security, it is the duty of the debtor, if he pay it to an agent, to see that the latter is in possession of the security; if he be not, he may be called on to pay the money a second time. When not on written security, the authority of the agent depends on the principles already shown in regard to general agency, and payment to an agent properly authorized is sufficient; and in like manner delivery of goods to an agent is sufficient.

The principal is, like a master, in general civilly liable for the neglect or fraud of the agent. Thus, a master is liable for the unskilfulness of the agent, as a master smith for the injury to a horse, the exercise of an unruly horse, unskilful driving, &c. &c.; and that although a third or fourth party be employed through the first agent. As, where A employed B to repair a house, who contracted with C to do the work, and C contracted with D for the materials, and D left them in the road, so that an accident happened to E; E recovered against A. But whether, where A hires for the day a carriage and horses and coachman of B, and an accident happens by the driver's neglect, A or B is liable, is unsettled, and was the occasion of the memorable conflict of opinions between Chief Justice Abbott and Justice Littledale on the one hand, holding A not liable, and Justice Bayley and Justice Holroyd on the other.¹

The responsibility of the master only extends to those acts within the scope of the agent's employment; neither is he liable for the wilful misconduct of the agent. The master is not liable for the criminal acts of his agent, unless the latter were expressly commanded by him to do the act.

The law of libel, however, introduces an exception to this rule; for where the proprietor of a publication was so far absent at the time, that it was morally impossible he could have sanctioned the insertion of the libel, he was nevertheless held liable on an indictment for his servant's act.

As to the benefit that enures to the principal from his agent's acts, it may generally be taken as a rule, that where the principal would be bound by the agent's acts, he would also be entitled to take advantage of them.²

¹ Laugher v. Pointer, 5 Barn. & C. 547, in which case all the authorities are fully gone into.

² See Paley's Principal and Agent.

CHAPTER XII.

Of Attorney and Client.

ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW and solicitors, are another species of agents, who form with their clients a relationship to which most of the foregoing general remarks on Principal and Agent are applicable; there are, however, some particular duties arising from this connexion which require a separate consideration.

Formerly the parties to a suit were not permitted to appear by attorney without the king's special warrant, but were required to attend the court in person. But by the statute of Westminster, 13 Edw. II. c. 10, a general liberty was given to all persons for this purpose. Attorneys increased in number very rapidly thenceforth; and therefore by 3 James I. c. 7, § 2, it was enacted, that none should be admitted unless brought up in the courts; and at length, by 30 Geo. II. c. 19, with other prior statutes, that no one should act as attorney in any law proceedings, in any court where attorneys are usually admitted and sworn, unless he had been bound by contract in writing to serve as clerk for the space of five years to an attorney duly admitted, and had been examined, sworn, admitted, and enrolled, under penalty of 50*l*.

The law relating to the admission of attorneys and solicitors has been lately consolidated by 6 & 7 Vic. c. 73, all former acts on the subject being thereby repealed. This act enacts, that no person shall act as an attorney or solicitor, or as such sue out any writ or process, or commence, carry on, or defend any action, suit, or proceeding in any court of law or equity, in England or Wales, or act as such in any matter civil or criminal, without having been admitted and enrolled, and otherwise duly qualified according to the regulations of the act.

In order to such admission and enrolment, the party must have been bound by contract in writing to serve, and have duly served, as clerk for five years to a practising attorney or solicitor; during the whole of which service he must have continued and been actually employed in the proper business, practice, or employment of such attorney or solicitor.

It is provided, however, that a clerk bound for five years may serve part of the time (not exceeding one year) as pupil with a practising barrister or a certificated special pleader, and also in addition thereto, or instead thereof, a year with the London agent of the attorney or solicitor to whom he was bound.

It is also provided, that a person who has taken the degree of Bachelor of Arts, or of Laws, at either of the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, or Durham, may be admitted after having served a clerkship of three years only, one year of which may be with the London agent of the attorney or solicitor to whom he was bound.

An affidavit of the due execution of the articles must be made by the attorney or solicitor to whom the clerk is bound, and filed within six months after their date with the proper officer; who enrolls and registers them, making at the time a memorandum of the date of filing both upon the affidavit and the articles. This affidavit, as well as an affidavit of due service under the articles, must be produced at the time the clerk applies for admission.

Before admission, the clerk is examined as to his fitness and capacity to act as an attorney or solicitor by persons appointed for that purpose by the judges, called Examiners. Upon their certificate of his competency, a fiat is issued for his admission, which takes place before one or more of the judges of the court, by whom the necessary oaths are administered and his admission is signed; and his name is then entered on the rolls of the court.

When thus entered and enrolled, before beginning to practise as an attorney or solicitor, he must take out the necessary certificate from the Stamp Office, and this must be renewed annually. Persons practising without such certificate are unable to recover for any business done by them; they are, moreover, liable to a penalty of 50*l.* by the Stamp acts.

No attorney or solicitor is allowed to have more than two clerks under articles with him at the same time, nor to take or retain any clerk after he shall have left off practising, or whilst employed himself as a writer or clerk by another attorney or solicitor. If he become bankrupt or insolvent, or remain in prison for twenty-one days, the clerk may be discharged from his contract, or assigned to another person, upon application to a court of law or equity.

An attorney duly admitted in any one of the superior courts of law at Westminster is entitled to be admitted and practise in any other court upon signing the roll thereof; in like manner a solicitor admitted in the Court of Chancery may practise in any inferior court of equity, or in the Court of Bankruptcy, upon signing the roll of such court.

No attorney or solicitor can, either in his own name or in the name of any other, sue out any writ or process, or commence or prosecute or defend any action or suit, while a prisoner in any gaol or prison, or in the rules thereof, upon pain of being deemed guilty of a contempt of court, besides being incapable of recovering his fees.

Attorneys are not to act as agents for, or suffer their names to be used by unqualified persons, on pain of being struck off the rolls; and the unqualified person may be committed to prison. And they cannot enter into partnership with unqualified persons.

An attorney duly admitted and enrolled becomes an officer of court, and has many privileges. He is presumed to be always present in his court. He may always, when plaintiff, sue in his own court, and may lay and retain the venue in Middlesex. When defendant, he must be sued in his own court; but he cannot change the venue.

An attorney is also exempt from many offices, such as sheriff, constable, &c.; but not from militia service, as he can serve by substitute. He cannot be a justice of the peace for any county; but this does not extend to cities or towns, whether counties of themselves or otherwise.

These privileges are, however, confined to practising attorneys, since they are rather for the benefit of his clients than of the attorney himself. And the privileges as to the mode of being sued are generally gone by the plaintiff being also attorney of another court.

They are also subject to some disabilities. A practising attorney cannot hold the offices of under-sheriff, sheriff's clerk, or bailiff of sheriff or of liberties, or clerk of the peace, nor be lessee in ejectment, nor bail for any defendant, nor a justice of the peace, nor a commissioner of land tax. Attorneys who embezzle their clients' money are in general excluded from the benefits of the Insolvent Debtors act; and while in prison for debt &c., they cannot practise. But bankruptcy has not such an effect.¹

An attorney has no right to interfere with the duties of a magistrate in his own justice room; and therefore, where a criminal information was moved for against two justices, on the ground of their having deprived the defendant of legal assistance by excluding his attorney from the justice room (no corrupt motive being imputed to the magistrate), the Court of King's Bench refused to interfere. Bayley J. said, it might be a different thing where counsel are employed, but an attorney at all events has no right to be present.²

And in R. v. Barron (3 B & A. 432), it was decided by the Court of King's Bench that an attorney has no right to be present during the investigation of a charge of felony before a magistrate. The presence of an attorney on such occasions is often permitted as a matter of courtesy; his assistance is sometimes desired; and if his advice or opinion is asked, it is proper for him to give it; but he is not to take leave, uninvited, to obtrude his comments upon the case.³

So also in Cox v. Coleridge (1 B. & Cres. 37) it was decided that a prisoner, when examined before magistrates on a charge of felony, is not entitled, as of right, to have a person skilled in the law present as an advocate on his behalf, it being a preliminary investigation only, and not conclusive upon him.

But an attorney has a right to be present on behalf of a party accused or otherwise on the hearing of an information, which is a judicial proceeding.

We now proceed to discuss briefly their duties towards their clients. Care, skill, and integrity are required of them, as of other agents. They are not liable for mere mistakes and errors of judgment more than counsel are, where they act with care and integrity; but, without these, they are liable for a loss in consequence falling on the client. If the attorney's conduct be gross, the courts will in general interfere summarily against him; but not otherwise.

Where an attorney once appears for a party, he cannot withdraw himself, even although the client neglect to provide him with money. Neither in chambers, if he refuse to go on with the suit, has he any lien on papers so as to obstruct the course of the suit, nor any lien for his costs on the fund in court. Thus, in equity, a solicitor was ordered to pay all the costs occasioned by his refusing to appear for defendant at the hearing pursuant to his undertaking, and the costs of the application;¹ and where the plaintiff changes his solicitor, the former solicitor has no right to stop him from proceeding till his costs are paid.²

¹ Exp. Brown, 2 Ves. J. 68.

² R. v. A & B. Js. of Staffordshire, 1 Chit. Rep. 217.

³ Per Abbott C. J., S. C., 3 B & A. 488.

A solicitor refusing to act longer in a cause was ordered to permit the client to inspect papers in his possession at all reasonable times, without any undertaking on his part to proceed to taxation of his bill;³ and he will be ordered, though his bill of costs is not paid, to deliver up the papers to the present solicitor of the party, the latter undertaking to hold them subject to the former solicitor's lien, for what shall be found due to him on the taxation of his bill. An offer on the part of the former solicitor, after the motion made to proceed with the cause, will not prevent the court from ordering him to deliver up the papers on the terms above mentioned.⁴

A solicitor, having refused to allow a deed in his possession to be proved on behalf of plaintiff, because he had a lien on it for costs due from defendant, was ordered to produce the deed at his own expence, and pay all costs consequent on his refusal.⁵

A solicitor has no lien upon the will of his client, and cannot refuse to produce a deed executed by the client in his favour, containing a reservation of a life interest, and a power of revocation.⁶

Generally, a solicitor discharged by his client, or his representatives, is not bound to produce the papers in his possession for the purposes of the cause, his bill of costs not being paid.⁷ But where a party has a pressing necessity for papers in the hands of his solicitor, the court will order them to be delivered up, upon a deposit being made, sufficient to cover the amount of the solicitor's bill and the costs of the taxation.⁸

A solicitor having declined to act for his client has no lien for his costs upon a fund in court.⁹ But on a party changing his solicitor, the former solicitor has a lien for his costs upon papers in his hands; but he cannot otherwise stop the progress of the cause till he is paid.¹⁰ Nor is he entitled to compel payment of his costs by refusing to permit such inspection of the papers in his hands, or such production of them before the court or the master, as may be necessary in the conduct of the cause.¹¹

A clerk in court and solicitor refusing to continue the conduct of a cause until his fees were paid, was ordered to produce an office copy of the bill to be marked by the six clerks, so that an answer might be filed.¹²

When writings come to an attorney's hands in the way of his business as attorney, a court of common law, on motion, will rule him to deliver them back on payment of what is due; but otherwise if they come to him in another capacity, as steward of a manor, especially where there are disputed accounts between the parties, such being the proper subject of a bill in equity.

¹ Cook v. Broomhead, 16 Ves. 133.

² O'Dea v. O'Dea, 1 Scho. & L. 315.

³ Moir v. Mudie, 1 S. & S. 282.

⁴ Colegrave v. Manley, 1 Turn. & R. 400.

⁵ Brassington v. Brassington, 1 S. & S. 455.

⁶ Balch v. Symes, 1 Turn. & R. 87; and see Tyler v. Drayton, 2 S. & S. 309.

⁷ Lord v. Wormleighton, 1 Jac. 580; Medfearn v. Sowerby, 1 Swan. 84.

⁸ Chutton v. Pardon, 1 Turn. & R. 304.

⁹ Creswell v. Byron, 14 Ves. 271.

¹⁰ Merreweather v. Mellish, 13 Ves. 161. Twort v. Dayrell, Id. 195.

¹¹ Commerell v. Poynton, 1 Swan. 1.

¹² Mayne v. Hawkey, 3 Swan. 23.

A solicitor has a lien for his costs on a fund in court produced by his exertions; and therefore when, on a bill for discovery in aid of a defence at law, an injunction was granted on terms, one of which was the payment of money into court, and an answer was afterwards filed, and the action at law being subsequently tried a verdict was found for the defendant; it was held that the solicitor for the defendant in equity had a lien on the fund for the costs of the discovery. But where the solicitor putting in the answer was removed, and his demand was paid, and another solicitor employed, it was considered that the fund was exonerated to that extent, and the latter solicitor had not any lien for the costs of the former solicitor, though paid by him.¹

Where plaintiff's solicitor, with notice, suffers the defendant to satisfy the demand of his client, without making effectual provision for payment of his costs, the court will not suffer him to proceed in a suit against the defendant for recovery of them.²

The lien of a solicitor upon a fund in court which is the result of the proceedings cannot be defeated by the subsequent insolvency of the client.³

A solicitor has a lien on papers delivered to him as such, but not on those delivered to him as steward.⁴

A solicitor claiming lien on a deed cannot be compelled to produce it at the hearing of the cause, without a subpoena duces tecum.⁵ But whether the proceedings under a commission of bankrupt that has been superseded are subject to the solicitor's lien, *qu?*⁶

Whether a solicitor's lien for his costs on a fund in court is general, or is confined to costs of a particular suit, qu? In *Lann v. Church*⁷ it was held that he had not. Solicitor having in his possession the instrument on which his client's right to the fund rests, he has a general lien on the fund.⁸ But a solicitor's lien does not extend to debts that are not due to him in his professional character.

If an attorney (being concerned as well for mortgagor as mortgagee) has been appointed receiver of rents and profits of mortgaged estates, and on the order made for delivery of possession there is found to be a balance remaining in his hands beyond what is sufficient to satisfy the mortgagee, he will be ordered to pay such balance into court, notwithstanding the general report has not yet been made, on which there may possibly be found to be a greater sum of money due to him than the balance in his hands.⁹

Though order be made on petition in bankruptcy, directing costs to be paid to petitioner personally, solicitor does not thereby lose his lien.¹⁰

A solicitor is bound to produce papers of his client for him, or in bankruptcy for his assignees, though not employed by them, in the cause for the purposes of which he received them; but is not bound to deliver them up or produce them in any other business without payment.¹¹

¹ Irving v. Viana, 2 Y & J. 70.

² Morse v. Cooke, 1 M'Clel. 211; S. C. 13 Price, 473.

³ Exp. Moule, 6 Mad. 462.

⁴ Champernown v. Scott, 6 Mad. 28.

Busk v. Lewis, 6 Mad. 29.

⁵ Exp. Shew, 1 Jac. 270.

⁶ 4 Mad. 391.

⁷ Worrall v. Johnson, 2 Jac. & W. 214.

⁸ Lewes v. Morgan, 5 Price, 42.

⁹ Exp. Bryant, 1 Mad. 49.

¹¹ Ross v. Laughton, 1 V. & B. 349.

Deeds deposited with a solicitor for a particular purpose, and after that had failed, permitted to remain with him, are subject to the general lien.¹

Solicitor's lien on papers is superseded by taking security.²

Where there are costs in equity and at law due from the opposite parties, the court will not set off the costs at law against those in equity, if the solicitor in equity claims his lien on the latter.³

A client cannot compel the executor of his attorney to produce his papers &c. in court, though only for the purpose of using them there, unless the testator's bill of costs be paid or secured.⁴

Solicitor prosecuting a suit to a decree has a lien on the estate recovered in the hands of the person recovering, for his bill, but not in the hands of the heir. But if the suit be revived, the lien revives. Committee of a lunatic has a lien on the lunatic's estate, and the solicitor employed by the committee was declared to stand in his place.⁵

Voluntary release by a party to his adversary, is not to defeat the clerk in court of his lien for costs. If the suit had ended on a bond fide compromise for a reasonable consideration paid, it would have been otherwise.⁶

A solicitor who is in disburse for his client, has a right to be paid out of a duty decreed to an administrator, and has a lien upon it before the bond creditors of the deceased; nor can the administrator controvert this rule, by insisting on applying the assets in a course of administration.⁷

A solicitor may detain title deeds as against client till payment of his bill, but not against persons who have antecedent rights.⁸

A solicitor has a lien for his costs on all papers that come into his hands for the purpose of business, as well as on papers in the cause in which he makes the demand.⁹

But a solicitor has no lien against remainder-man on deeds put into his hands by tenant for life.¹⁰

Whenever a client is bound to produce a deed for the benefit of a third person, so also is his solicitor, though the latter may have a lien on it for costs against his client.¹¹

Upon an act of bankruptcy by lying two months in prison, joint and separate commissions issued; the former being established and the latter superseded, the attorney employed by the bankrupt in sustaining the latter against the former has no lien upon papers delivered to him by the bankrupt after the arrest; and, upon petition of the joint creditors, he was ordered to deliver them up.¹²

When an attorney is charged by affidavit with any fraud or malpractice in his profession, contrary to the obvious rules of justice and common honesty, the court on motion will order him to answer the matters charged; and in general, if he positively deny the malpractices, they will dismiss the complaint; but otherwise they will grant an attachment.

¹ Exp. Pemberton, id. 282.

² Cowell v. Simpson, 16 Ves. 275. Id. Balch v. Symes, 1 Turn. & R. 92.

³ Smith v. Brocklesby, 1 Anst. 61.

⁴ Magrath v. Muskerrey, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 477; Vern. & Scriv. 171.

⁵ Barnesley v. Powell, Ambl. 102. Exp. Price, 2 Ves. 407.

⁶ Anon. 2 Ves. 25.

⁷ Turwin v. Gibson, 3 Atk. 720.

⁸ Marsh v. Bathoe, Ridgw. 256.

⁹ Exp. Nesbitt, 2 Scho. & L. 279.

¹⁰ Id. ibid.

¹¹ Furlong v. Howard, 2 Scho. & L. 115.

¹² Exp. Lee 2, Ves. J. 205.

Where he has been fraudulently admitted, or convicted subsequently of felony, or other offence rendering him unfit to act, or has knowingly suffered his name to be improperly used by an incompetent person &c., or signed a fictitious one, or forged a counsel's name to any proceeding, or has otherwise grossly misbehaved himself (or falsely represented that an injunction had been obtained,¹) he is liable to be struck off the rolls, which is in general, though not always, considered a perpetual disability.

An attorney is sometimes struck off the rolls at his own instance, as for the purpose of being called to the bar. But in this case an affidavit is always required that no other person is about to apply for the same purpose, as this mode of striking him off is never regarded as a perpetual disability.

When the relationship is once fairly created, the client is bound by any consent given in court, either by the attorney or the counsel, if they are aware of all the circumstances, although they had no instructions for such consent; and at all events, to counteract it, the parties ought to apply without loss of time.² But if a solicitor institutes unnecessary proceedings, the court will take care that the client shall not suffer by the course adopted.³

A solicitor may, in the exercise of the general authority given him by his client, defend a suit, but cannot institute one without a special authority for the purpose.⁴

Whether notice to an attorney in one transaction shall be notice to him in another transaction, must, in all cases, depend upon the circumstances.⁵

A solicitor is not absolutely restricted from taking any reward from his client beyond his mere costs (although many cases go to establish the contrary) in the same manner as a trustee; but it is always incumbent on him to show that he has taken no undue advantage of his situation.

Whenever an attorney is called on to give his services to his client, whether to prepare a deed or will, the law imputes to him a knowledge of all the legal consequences to result, and requires that he should distinctly and clearly point out to his client all those consequences from whence a benefit may arise to himself.

Another peculiarity in this relationship is that relating to professional confidence. In general, any person is liable to be called on to discover the whole of his knowledge in a particular transaction. But not so an attorney; for, for the benefit of the client, he cannot be made to disclose matters communicated to him in connection with a cause. But this does not extend to matters where the solicitor was not professionally employed; and in this the court always uses its own discretion.⁶

With respect to costs between the solicitor and client, the former is bound, before he commences any proceedings for their recovery, to deliver a bill to him, and suffer one month to elapse. The client is, in general, entitled to have the bill taxed; and if more than one sixth is taken off, the costs of the taxation fall on the solicitor.⁷

¹ Kimpton v. Eve, 2 Ves. & B. 352.

² Furnival v. Bogle, 4 Russ. 142.

³ Wood v. Wood, 4 Russ. 553.

⁴ Wright v. Castle, 3 Mer. 12.

⁵ Mountford v. Scott, 1 Turn. & R. 280.

⁶ See Chit. Eq. Ind. p. 1238.

⁷ See generally, 1 Tidd. Pr. 60—90, 9th ed.

CHAPTER XIII.

Of Bailor and Bailee, or the Law of Bailment.

BAILMENT is defined to be the delivery of a thing for some special object or purpose, upon a contract, express or implied, to conform to that object or purpose. The party bailing property is the bailor; and the party who receives it is the bailee.

The first duty of a bailee is to keep the thing entrusted to him with such care as persons of ordinary discretion would take of their own property under the like circumstances. It is impossible to lay down any less general rule as to the degree of care requisite; for in all cases it must depend on the nature of the property, and other circumstances, as time and situation. In some places, as in the country, a degree of care would be sufficient, which in others, as in town, might be insufficient. So as to the time, the same degree of care observed in the day-time might be deemed insufficient in the night. And again, the quality of the thing bailed may require more or less care to be bestowed on it, as a sack of corn and a bag of money. The bailee is, of course, liable to the consequences of want of due care.

If the benefit from the bailment is equal to the bailor and the bailee, no more than ordinary care is required. If the bailor receive the only benefit, the bailee is only liable for gross neglect. If the bailee receive all the benefit, he is answerable even for slight neglect.

There are five different sorts of bailments, each of which we will consider in due order.

I. Where the Property is deposited with the Bailee for no particular purpose, and without any Recompence to him.—Here he is only bound to take ordinary care, and is not liable for a loss by accidents over which he has no controul and not arising from any misconduct of his. If, however, he is entrusted with jewels &c. of value, and suffers them to lie indiscriminately about a room, without being under lock and key, and they are stolen or lost, he will be liable; or if he put a horse into a strange and dangerous field at night, though perfectly safe to his own cattle which are accustomed to it, he would be liable. Or if, being entrusted with a box of valuables known to him as such, and, on a fire happening, he saves his own property of considerably less value, he is liable; though if nearly equal in value, he may save his own first. A bailee of this description should always be prepared to re-deliver the property. He cannot dispose of it by sale, pawn, or otherwise; yet he has such an interest in it that he may bring an action against a third person for an injury done to it. A banker comes under this description of bailees; and it seems, if bills are entrusted to him for safe custody only, or money which is locked up in a box, he cannot dispose of or use them.

II. Bailments for some particular purpose, without any Recompence.—Here, besides the care requisite in the foregoing description of bailments, he is bound to take all care in order to execute the particular purpose for which the goods were pledged. As if a person, without pay, assume safely to remove several casks of brandy from one cellar to another, but manage them so negligently that one cask is staved, he is liable. But more or less will be required according to the skill that is reasonably to be expected of him; as if a farrier undertake to shoe a horse gratuitously, and lame him, he is liable; but if a person unused to that trade undertake to do as much, he will not in general be responsible for his want of skill.

III. Where Property is bailed gratuitously, and the Bailee is to have the Use of it for his own benefit.—This is, in fact, a lending of property for use, but not for consumption; and the bailee is liable for loss that a very careful and vigilant man could have avoided. It has been said that he is liable for the loss &c. by any accident save by the act of God or the queen's enemies. He is therefore in general liable to make good the loss. He cannot lend, let, sell, or pawn this kind of bailment to any other person.

IV. Bailments in Pledge or Pawn.—Here the bailment is beneficial to both parties, yet the pawnee, or person in whose possession the property is placed, is bound to take more than ordinary care of it. If it be taken away from him by stealth or by want of due care, he will be liable. This pawnee cannot dispose of it, unless under the express or implied consent of the owner, or by express statute, as in the case of pawnbrokers. Neither can he use it, unless the nature of the property require it; as if a horse, cow, dog, &c. If the deposit is to secure a debt, the inference is, that if the debt be not paid, he may reimburse himself out of the deposit. But when the particular object for which it was deposited is accomplished, the pawnee is bound to re-deliver it to the owner. The law relating to pawnbrokers will hereafter be more fully considered.

V. Bailments for Hire, or for work, labour, and care to be bestowed upon the property, or to be carried from place to place, and where both Bailor and Bailee receive a benefit therefrom.—These are the most common sorts of bailment in daily use; and of these we shall inquire—

1. Of Bailments by letting to Hire.—Here the bailee acquires a temporary qualified property, and is only bound to take such care as a prudent man would take of his own property, and may in general make use of it as if it were his own property. As, if it be a horse, he may lend it to a person who has an ordinary degree of skill in riding; or if a musical instrument, he may remove it to a place for public performance on it, without being liable for any loss or damage which it may sustain. If it be a carriage, and a man and horse are hired with it, he is not liable for the consequences arising from the negligence of such man; but it is otherwise if his own man has the charge of it.

2. Where the Property is bailed to have some labour or care bestowed on it, with reward to the Bailee.—Here the bailee is bound to use more than ordinary care, the same as the borrower of property without reward to the lender should do. A workman, for instance, is bound to secure the property placed in his hands in the way of his trade, so as to protect it against depredation by persons in his employ.

Of a warehouseman or wharfinger reasonable and common care of any commodity entrusted to his charge is exacted; he is not, like an innkeeper or carrier, bound by any custom of the realm, nor is he to be considered as an insurer, unless he also unite the character of a carrier; he stands therefore, in general, in the situation of an ordinary bailee for hire, and is answerable only for ordinary neglect. He is not answerable for a theft committed by his servants, if he can prove that the goods were lodged in a place of security, and that he has not been guilty of positive negligence, nor exercised less care towards them than towards his own property. He is not answerable for destruction by rats, reasonable care having been taken to prevent such mischief. Neither is he liable for loss arising from robbery, or any accident, unless the same be occasioned by his gross default or negligence. In cases where the warehouseman or wharfinger has insured the property from fire, and it is burnt, if the warehouseman has received the amount of the insurance, the owner may recover it from him. The responsibility of a warehouseman or wharfinger commences directly the goods are delivered into his custody, indeed from the moment that his tackle is applied to the goods for the purpose of lifting them into his warehouse; and it is no excuse for any injury done in raising them from the cart, that the owner's carman refused to secure them in the manner which the warehouseman pointed out. And the responsibility ceases only when the goods are delivered by the warehouseman or wharfinger out of his possession according to the owner's express or implied directions. Where it is proved to be the custom of wharfingers, when goods are sent to be forwarded coastwise, to deliver them to the mates of the coasters, and not to ship the goods themselves, or make any charge for shipping, the responsibility of the wharfinger ceases with the delivery to the mate, though the goods are lost before they are carried off the wharf.

Wharfage seems only to be due when the goods are laid upon the wharf for the purpose of being loaded or unloaded; it differs from anchorage or moorings, which are charges incidental to the ship. In London the duty for wharfage and crantage is created by statute 22 Car. II. c. 11, which directs that the amount thereof shall be regulated from time to time by the king in council.

A wharfinger, having the mere custody only of goods, cannot by an unauthorized sale affect his employer.

With respect to factors, attorneys, auctioneers, and bailiffs, when their undertaking lies in feasance, and not merely in custody, more or less diligence is required according to the nature of the business; and their reward is the reason of the obligation to use a degree of diligence adequate to the performance of the work. The question as to what amounts to reasonable care is to be left to a jury to decide.

Innkeepers fall also under this class of bailees; but of these we shall treat separately.

3. Where Property is to be carried from place to place, with Reward to the Bailee.—Common carriers and stage coachmen fall under this description; and we shall take occasion to treat of them in a distinct chapter.¹

¹ 3 Chit. Com. Law, 354—386.

CHAPTER XIV.

Of Common Carriers,

BY LAND AND BY SEA.

We shall consider—

1. WHO ARE COMMON CARRIERS.
2. WHAT ARE THEIR DUTIES AND OBLIGATIONS.
3. WHAT ARE THE RISKS FOR WHICH THEY ARE LIABLE.
4. THE COMMENCEMENT AND TERMINATION OF THEIR RISKS.
5. WHAT WILL EXCUSE OR JUSTIFY A NON-DELIVERY OF THE GOODS.
6. THE GENERAL RIGHTS OF CARRIERS.
7. THE RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND OBLIGATIONS OF CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS.

1. Who are deemed Common Carriers.

A private person may contract with another for conveying his property from place to place without becoming a common carrier, but only incurring the responsibility of an ordinary bailee for hire; for, to constitute a person a common carrier, he must exercise it generally as a public employment. A common carrier is therefore one who, for hire and reward, undertakes to convey the goods of any who will employ him from place to place. These are of two descriptions, viz. carriers by land, and carriers by water.

Among the former are stage-coach and waggon proprietors, truckmen, carters, and porters for hire; among the latter are ship and steam-vessel owners and masters, lightermen, hoymen, barge owners, ferry-men, canal boatmen, and the like.

It seems that a proprietor of a stage coach who merely carries the luggage of passengers is not a common carrier, but is liable for want of the due care which is required of ordinary bailees for hire. Yet this doctrine is not quite settled; for in a late case (Brook v. Peckwick, 12 Moore J. B. 447, 4 Bing. 218) Best C. J. seems to have considered them as common carriers. This last observation applies likewise to water carriers of passengers.

In order to charge persons as common carriers, it is not necessary that a specific compensation should have been agreed on, as they are entitled to demand a reasonable one. When several persons are engaged in the business of common carriers, and by contract between them one finds carriages and another horses, or one works one part of a road and another the other, all are liable as partners. The same principle applies where there are partners in a coach or waggon office.

They are responsible for any contract made partly by them and partly by their servants; as where a parcel was booked, and on account of its value the bailor feed the guard extra, to insure its greater safety; but otherwise if the contract were entirely with the servant.

2. The Duties and Obligations of Common Carriers.

They are bound to receive and carry all goods offered for transportation, on receiving suitable recompence; and if they refuse, they are liable to an action. If, however, the carriage is full, or there is extreme danger to their safety from public disturbances, these or such like reasons will afford a sufficient excuse. They are bound to take the utmost care of the goods from the time of receiving them (but they need not receive them till they are about to start on their accustomed journey), to obey the directions of the bailor in respect of them, and to carry and deliver them safely; consequently they are bound to procure proper vehicles and equipments, and servants.

It is as well here to remark, that certain restrictions are, for the sake of public safety, placed on the carriage of gunpowder generally, not only by common carriers, but by any other person. The 12 Geo. III. c. 61, § 18 provides, that no person shall carry at one time more than 25 barrels of gunpowder, of 100 lbs. weight each, in any carriage by land, or more than 200 barrels by water (except in vessels with gunpowder imported from or to be exported to any place beyond sea, or going coastwise), and prescribes the description of covering the carriage is to have, and that vessels must be close-decked, and the package covered with raw hides or tarpaulins as soon as packed, under pain of its being liable to be seized by any person.

It need hardly be said, that a carrier is not liable to an action for refusing to carry any thing which would constitute an illegal act.

By the 3 Car. I. c. 1, no common carrier can use his calling on Sundays, under 20s. penalty. And the driver of a van between London and York was held to be within the act, and liable to be stopped and convicted for travelling on that day.¹

It has been holden, that if a carrier embezzle an entire package, he is only liable to a civil action; but if he break open a package and take part of its contents, with intent to steal, it is felony. And if, after he has determined his former responsibility, he regain possession with intent to steal, he is guilty of felony, just as a stranger would be. So if, instead of delivering the goods at the proper place, he takes them to another and converts them to his own use, he is guilty of felony, it is said. In any of the above cases, if the misappropriation of the property is the act of the servant, and not of the carrier himself, it is a felony.

3. What are the Risks for which they are liable.

Carriers are liable for all losses, except those arising from the queen's enemies, or by natural accidents, as lightning, earthquakes, tempests, &c. The queen's enemies are foreigners at war with us, and pirates, but not mere robbers on the highway, or riotous mobs, &c.; since, it is said, by a contrary doctrine a combination between carriers and common robbers might be encouraged.

But as to carriers by water, the 7 Geo. II. c. 15,² has provided, that ship owners shall not be liable for the loss of any goods by embezzlement &c. of the master or mariners without their privity, further than the value of the vessel with her appurtenances, and the full amount of freight due or to grow due for the voyage. And the 26 Geo. II. c. 86, § 3, provides that the owners in such case shall not be liable at all, unless the shipper of the goods at the time of shipment, insert in his bill of lading, or otherwise declare in writing, their true nature, value, and quality. And, by § 2 of the last act, the owners are exempted from loss &c. by fire. Carriers by water are, as we have already seen,¹ bound to take a pilot on board in certain cases; and the 6 Geo. IV. c. 125 provides, that owners of vessels shall not be liable for loss by reason of not having a pilot on board, unless upon refusal to take one in.

¹ Exp. Middleton, 3 B. & C. 164; 4 D. & R. 824.

² Corrected and amended by 53 Geo. III. c. 159.

Before the passing of the act 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. carriers frequently endeavoured to limit their responsibility, by giving public notice that they would not be responsible for more than a certain sum (usually five pounds) on any one parcel the value of which had not been declared and paid for accordingly. But in all cases, to avail himself of this defence, it was necessary for the carrier to show that the bailor or his servant was acquainted with this limitation at the time of delivering the goods. Hence arose much litigation and uncertainty; and, to obviate the inconveniences arising from this state of things, the above-mentioned statute was passed; which declares, that carriers by land shall not be liable for the loss of certain articles specified in the act when their value exceeds ten pounds, unless the nature and value of such articles be stated at the time of their delivery to the carrier, and an increased charge paid or agreed to be paid upon the same; and it further declares, that no publication of any notices by carriers shall have power to limit their responsibility at common law for any other articles except those specified in the act. As it is an act of great importance, we shall give its provisions more at length.

From and after the passing of this act (23d July, 1830), no mail contractor, stage-coach proprietor, or other common carrier by land for hire, shall be liable for the loss of or injury to any article or articles or property of the descriptions following, viz. Gold or silver coin of this realm or of any foreign state, or any gold or silver in a manufactured or unmanufactured state, or any precious stones, jewellery, watches, clocks, or time-pieces of any description, trinkets, bills, notes of the Bank of England, Scotland, or Ireland respectively, or of any other bank in Great Britain or Ireland, orders, notes, or securities for payment of money, English or foreign, stamps, maps, writings, title deeds, paintings, engravings, pictures, gold or silver plate or plated articles, glass, china, silks in a manufactured or unmanufactured state, and whether wrought up or not wrought up with other materials, furs, or lace, or any of them, contained in any package delivered either to be carried for hire or to accompany any passenger in any mail or stage coach or other public conveyance, when the value of such property shall exceed the sum of ten pounds, unless at the time of the delivery thereof at the office, warehouse, or receiving house of such carrier &c., or to his servant, the value and nature of such property be declared by the person sending or delivering the same, and such increased charge as hereinafter mentioned, or an engagement to pay the same, be accepted by the person receiving it.

And when any package containing any of the articles above specified shall be so delivered, and its value and contents declared, and such value shall exceed the sum of ten pounds, such carriers may demand and receive an increased rate of charge, according to a notice to be affixed in some conspicuous part of the office, warehouse, or other receiving house, stating the increased rates of charge required above the ordinary rate of carriage as a compensation for the greater risk and care to be taken for the safe conveyance of such valuable articles; and all persons sending or delivering parcels shall be bound by such notice, without further proof of the same having come to their knowledge.

¹ See ante, tit. Pilots.

When the value has been so declared, and the increased rate of charge paid, or an engagement to pay the same accepted, the person receiving it shall, if required, sign a receipt for the package (not liable to stamp duty), acknowledging the same to have been insured; and if such receipt shall not be given when required, or such notice shall not have been affixed, the carrier shall not have any benefit under this act, but shall be responsible as at common law, and be liable to refund the increased rate of charge.

And after the 1st September, 1830, no public notice or declaration theretofore made or thereafter to be made shall be deemed to limit or in anywise affect the liability at common law of any such mail contractors, stage-coach proprietors, or other public common carriers, in respect of any articles or goods to be carried and conveyed by them; but they shall be liable, as at common law, to answer for the loss of or injury to any articles or goods in respect whereof they may not be entitled to the benefit of this act.

For the purposes of this act every office, warehouse, or receiving house used by any such carrier for the receiving of parcels to be conveyed as aforesaid, shall be deemed to be the receiving house, warehouse, or office of such carrier; and any one or more of such mail contractors, stage-coach proprietors, or common carriers shall be liable to be sued by his, her, or their name or names only; and no action or suit commenced to recover damages for loss or injury to any parcel, package, or person, shall abate for the want of joining any co-proprietor or co-partner in such mail, &c.

Nothing in this act is to affect any special contract between such carrier and any party for the conveyance of goods and merchandize.

Where the value and contents of any parcel shall have been declared as aforesaid, and the increased rate of charges paid, if the same be lost or damaged, the party entitled to recover damages shall also be entitled to recover back such increased charges so paid, in addition to the value of the parcel or package.

The act is not to protect any carrier from liability to answer for any loss or injury arising from the felonious acts of any coachman, guard, book-keeper, porter, or other servant in his employ, nor to protect any such coachman, guard, book-keeper, or other servant from liability for any loss or injury occasioned by his own personal neglect or misconduct.

The carriers are not to be concluded, as to the value of any parcel, in case of loss, by the value so declared, but may require proof of the actual value by the ordinary legal evidence; and in actions brought against them may pay money into court.

Carriers continue liable as we have seen, for the felonious acts of their servants; and also for their own misfeasance or gross negligence. It is not possible to lay down any general rule as to the circumstances which constitute this offence. Differing as they do in almost every case, the question when raised, must be left to a jury. It has been decided, however, that the mis-delivery of a parcel, or its non-delivery within a reasonable time, is a misfeasance. In like manner, the sending of a parcel by a different coach from that directed by the bailor, and the removing it from one carriage to another, are misfeasances. Where a parcel is directed to a person at a particular place, and the carrier, knowing such person, delivers the parcel to another who represents himself as the consignee, such delivery is gross negligence. Leaving parcels in a coach or cart unprotected in the streets is also gross negligence.

In all cases of loss, the onus lies on the carrier to exculpate himself.

4. The Commencement and Termination of the Risk.

The risk commences from the delivery to the carrier or his servant. But a mere leaving of the property at an inn or yard where the carrier puts up, or at a wharf, without the knowledge of the carrier, is not sufficient. The risk also terminates with the due delivery at the proper place of destination, but not before. If the goods are directed to one place, and the owner requests the carrier to allow them to remain in another, as in the carrier's warehouse, till he call or send for them, and while there a loss arises, the carrier's liability has ceased.

5. What will excuse or justify a Non-delivery of Property.

The acts of God and of the queen's enemies have been already shown to be a sufficient excuse in this case; to which may be added the throwing goods overboard in a storm for the purpose of saving human life, if done with prudence. If the goods perish by some internal defect, he is excused; as if horses &c. in a storm become unruly, and damage themselves. He is also discharged by waiver on the part of the consignee or bailor, as we have already seen. So if the goods are seized by reason of any illegal act by the bailor. And the responsibility ends when the goods are stopped in transitu by any party entitled so to do, or where an adverse superior title is set up.

6. The General Rights of Carriers

When once delivered to him, the carrier has such a property in the goods that he may maintain an action or indictment against any person (even the owner) injuring or taking them away; and he has such a lien that he need not deliver them without being paid a fair remuneration, even though the bailor applies for them before they are carried, waiving the carriage of them. He is entitled to demand the price of the carriage, in fact, before he receives the goods. Formerly there was a power given to justices at sessions to fix the rates of carriage; but this does not now exist. In Harris v. Packwood (3 Taunt. 272), Lawrence J. said, "There is nothing unreasonable in a carrier requiring a greater sum when he carries goods of greater value; for he is to be paid not only for his labour in carrying, but for the risk which he runs, which is greater in proportion to the value of the goods. I would not, however, have it understood that carriers are at liberty to charge whatever they please. A carrier is liable by law to carry every thing which is brought to him, for a reasonable sum to be paid for the same, and not to extort what he will."

We may here add the rights and liabilities of carmen and porters, being common carriers, in London.

RATES OF CARTAGE, in the City of London.

All Goods, Wares, and Merchandize whatsoever, weighing 14 cwt. or under are deemed half a load; and from 14 to 26 cwt., are deemed a load, and are chargeable with the following Rates for the carrying thereof:—

	Half a Load.	A Load.
	2s. 2d.	3s. 6d.
For any distance within and to the extent of Half a mile	2 9	4 4
Not exceeding One mile	3 6	4 11
— One mile and a half	4 4	5 7
— Two miles	4 11	6 4
— Two miles and a half	5 7	7 0
— Three miles	6 4	7 9
— Three miles and a half	7 0	8 5
— Four miles

And so after the same rate to the extent of ground limited by act of parliament.

For all Merchandizes and Commodities that cannot be divided, weighing above 26 cwt., the Carman shall, over and above the rates above-mentioned, receive and be paid after the rate of 2d. per cwt. for every cwt. exceeding 26 cwt., and so in proportion for any weight less than a cwt.

For the Carriage of all dry Goods, Wares, and Merchandize, which shall not weigh 10 cwt., and which shall be taken up in the city of London, and shall not be drawn up hill, and shall be carted by any licensed cart, within the distance of a quarter of a mile, 1s. 10d.

The carmen of the city of London are constituted a fellowship by act of common council. The rates which they are allowed to charge, and the regulations by which they are guided, are settled at the quarter sessions. In other respects they are subjected to the rule of the President and Governors of Christ's Hospital, to whom the owner of every cart pays an annual licence duty of 17s. 4d. Every licensed carman is to have a piece of brass fixed upon his cart, on which is engraved a certain number, which is registered, together with his name and place of abode, at the Hospital.

Carmen are to help to load and unload their carts; and any carman exacting more than the regular fare shall, upon proof before the lord mayor or any two magistrates, suffer imprisonment for twenty-one days.

Carmen riding upon the shafts of their carts, or sitting within them, not having some person on foot to guide the horses, shall forfeit 10s.

RATES OF PORTERAGE for conveying Parcels from Inns, &c.

By the London Porterage Act, 39 Geo. III. c. lviii., no person shall charge, within London, Westminster, Southwark, and the suburbs thereof, and other parts not exceeding half a mile from the end of the carriage pavements, for the portorage of any parcel not exceeding 56 lbs. weight, more than the following Rates:—

For any distance not exceeding		Not exceeding One mile	0s. 6d.
a quarter of a mile	0s. 3d.	— One mile and a half	0 8
Not exceeding half a mile	0 4	— Two miles	0 10

And so in like manner the additional sum of 3d. for every half mile.

Any person or porter demanding more than the above rates for any parcel not exceeding 56 lb. weight to forfeit 20s. or not less than 5s. Any inn or warehouse-keeper neglecting to send a ticket with every parcel, containing the name or description of the inn or warehouse from whence the same is sent, with the christian and surname of the porter who is to deliver the same, and the carriage and portorage marked thereon, forfeits 40s. or not less than 5s.; and the porter not leaving the ticket with the parcel, or altering or wilfully obliterating any thing written thereon forfeits 40s.; and if he demands more than is written on such ticket, 20s. Every parcel arriving by coach must be delivered within six hours after such arrival, if not after four in the afternoon, or before seven in the morning, and then within six hours after seven in the morning; or by waggon, within twenty-four hours after such arrival; or the innkeeper forfeits 20s. or not less than 10s. Parcels directed "To be left till called for," are to be delivered on payment of carriage and 2d. warehouse-room for the first week, and 1d. for each week after, on forfeiture of 20s. or not less than 10s. Every porter misbehaving forfeits 20s. or not less than 10s. These offences are cognizable before any justice of the district.

The porters of London have the exclusive privilege of taking up and carrying parcels within the city, and the employment of any one else is punishable by fine. Any other person may bring goods into the city; but he is liable to fine if he take up or carry any therein.

7..Of Carriers of Passengers.

We have already, in other parts of this work, shown some of the regulations provided for stage coaches and other carriers of this description. We will now notice the rules which more particularly relate to them and their passengers, &c.

1. Carriers of Passengers by Land.—In the first place they are bound to carry all passengers who offer themselves, provided they have room for them; and in a late case¹ it was held, that if several persons have contracted to go inside a coach in company, the carrier has no right to separate them. In this case the coach had two bodies, in one of which there might have been room for all the party. The party consisted of a lady and her three daughters, and it was necessary that all should go together for the protection of the younger ladies. Another passenger had, on the arrival of the above party, fixed himself in that part where there might have been room for the party, so as to exclude the possibility of accommodating the party together. They therefore performed their journey by post-chaise, and the coach proprietor was held liable to repay their expences. It may here be observed, that proprietors are always in like manner liable to the expences a passenger is put to by travelling post or otherwise where they do not find sufficient accommodation, or such as they had contracted for, or when there is a breach of any of their duties.

The proprietor is bound to provide a vehicle and harness &c. sufficiently strong &c. for the journey, and is always to examine the same previous thereto. He is to provide a steady and competently skilled coachman, who has a knowledge of the road, with steady horses, and lights by night. He is bound to see that the coach is not overloaded, so as to endanger an overset (which is independent of the statutory regulations), and to take as much baggage of passengers as they are usually allowed. If a passenger has more, he is still bound to take it if there is room, for which he may charge extra; and he must remove parcels not belonging to other passengers, it seems, in order to make sufficient room.

In the progress of the journey the coachman is bound to stop at the usual places, and to allow the usual intervals for refreshment, which they cannot vary at their mere caprice; to drive with all due precaution; and although the coach is not actually overset, if a passenger leap off the coach from any real danger of an overset &c., and an injury happen to him, the same degree of liability ensues. He is generally bound to observe the laws of the road, which are by usage these; viz. In meeting from an opposite direction another vehicle, each is to keep on his own left side; in passing or overtaking, the foremost vehicle is to bear to the left, and the carriage in passing is to drive on the other's right side. In crossing, the driver coming transverse shall bear on the left hand so as to pass behind the other carriage. But where there is sufficient space he is not absolutely bound to follow these rules. In London, it has lately been laid down by Sir Peter Laurie, that if there is a long line of carriages, and in consequence of a stoppage one carriage backs upon the others, those behind him are bound to stand their ground if possible, and, rather than move, to suffer their pole to break the panel of the carriage backing, and for so doing they would ~~not~~ be held liable.

¹ Long v. Horne, 1 Car. & Payne, N. P. Cases, 610.

Before booking a place, they may demand the whole fare, or refuse to book it; but it is usual to demand only half; and even if the whole is paid, and the seat is not used, they generally return half the money. They have a lien on the passenger's baggage for the fare, but cannot detain his person nor the clothes on him.

2. With regard to carriers by water, the same rules in general apply. We shall therefore only notice those which particularly relate to the prevention of the collision of vessels.

In all cases of collision, the essential question is, whether proper measures of precaution were taken by the vessel which has unfortunately run down the other. This is partly a question of nautical usage, and partly of nautical skill. If all the usual and customary precautions are taken, then it is treated as an accident, and the vessel is exonerated. If otherwise, the offending vessel and its owners are deemed responsible. Some rules, however, which probably had their origin in the customs of navigation, are now adopted as positive rules of law. Thus, the law imposes upon the vessel having the wind free the obligation of taking proper measures to get out of the way of a vessel that is close-hauled, and of showing that it has done so; otherwise the owners will be responsible for any loss which ensues. Therefore, a vessel sailing with the wind must give way to one sailing by the wind, and the vessel sailing by the wind is not obliged to alter her course. Another rule is, that the owner of a vessel entering a port or river where other vessels are lying at anchor, is bound to make use of all proper checks to stop the headway of his vessel, in order to prevent accidents; and if, from want of such precautions, a loss ensues, he and his owners are responsible. Another rule is, that when vessels are crossing each other in opposite directions, and there is the least doubt of their going clear, the vessel on the starboard tack is to persevere in her course, while that on the larboard is to bear up or keep more away before the wind. And in respect to steam boats, as they do not receive their impetus from sails, but from steam, they are capable of being kept under greater command; and therefore it seems, from their greater power, they ought always to give way to vessels using sails only.¹

Railway and Canal Companies.—In the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 & 9 Vic. c. 20, as well as in the various special acts authorizing the construction of railways, provisions are inserted empowering the respective companies to carry passengers and goods at such charges as they may think proper, not exceeding the tolls by the special act authorized to be taken, with the same liabilities and privileges as common carriers and stage-coach proprietors:

And the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 42, reciting that greater competition for the public advantage would be obtained if similar powers were granted to canal and navigation companies, enacts, that such companies may carry as common carriers for their own profit, and that all the provisions in force relating to common carriers shall apply to such companies.

¹ Jones on Bailment, by Theobald, Appendix i. to lxxv.

CHAPTER XV.

Of Innkeepers.

We have already shown what the law is with regard to licences to keep an inn.

An inn may be defined to be a house in which travellers, wayfaring men, and other such like casual guests, are provided with victuals, lodging, and accommodation for themselves, their horses, &c.

An alehouse is a house in which ale is sold by retail, to be drank or consumed on the premises, but does not necessarily lodge guests.

Every inn is not an alehouse; but if an inn uses common selling of ale, it is then also an alehouse, and becomes subject to the laws respecting alehouses; and if an alehouse lodges and entertains travellers, it is also an inn.

A coffee-house is a house where coffee is sold to be drank on the premises, and is not of itself an inn; but it has been held, that a house of this kind in London, where beds, provisions, &c. are furnished to any person paying for the same, although no common stage &c. stop there, and to which there are no stables &c., is to be considered an inn. But a house where guests are furnished with these accommodations under a prior special contract or arrangement is not an inn, although stabling is also provided.

An hotel is a place for the accommodation of occasional lodgers, who are provided with apartments hired for the night or week, and is generally regarded as an inn.

A tavern is a place where wines and liquors as well as beer are sold, and drinkers are entertained. And a virtualling-house is where victuals are supplied, but no lodging is provided. The keepers of both these fall under the denomination of innkeepers or alehouse-keepers.

It seems, an innkeeper may be indicted, like any other person, for selling unwholesome provisions of any kind; and they are prohibited from making horse-bread, unless no baker resides in the same town. Their charges must be reasonable for horse provender. All measures in which excisable liquors are sold must be of the standard measure. They are prohibited from keeping disorderly houses, or from harbouring thieves or offenders against the revenue laws; and in case of an internal riot, constables may break open doors. The licences of persons suffering unlawful meetings to be held in their house will be forfeited; and the same penalty attaches for suffering immoral or seditious books to be read in their houses. In case of public riots, two justices may order the doors of public-houses to be closed; or one justice may so order in case of a licence granted under the 1 Wm. IV. c. 64. Gaming, music, dancing, &c. are also forbidden in any inn; but this depends on whether the amusement be for the profit of the landlord, or the mere entertainment of the guests; and where it is at the request of a particular party, as in the case of a country assembly-room, it is not within the prohibition. Innkeepers are to do their best to prevent tipping and drunkenness in their houses; and voluntary drunkenness in any person is punished with 5s. fine, and on a second offence 10l. sureties are required.

An innkeeper is at all times bound to receive guests, with their horses and goods, provided he has room for them, (except reputed thieves &c.), and to supply them with victuals and lodging, upon a reasonable price being tendered to him, or an action or indictment may be brought against him; but he is not absolutely bound to provide post-horses, though duly licensed for that purpose.

An innkeeper is bound to keep safely all such things as his guests deposit within the inn or the proper outbuildings, or in his custody as an innkeeper, and is liable for all losses which may happen otherwise than by the act of God or the queen's enemies, unless he can show that it was by the guest's own fault or acts that the loss happened. It is necessary for this liability that the party be a guest at the time of the loss; we must therefore see who is a guest. A guest is one who eats and drinks, or sleeps (except as hereafter mentioned), at the inn. Where a party brings goods to an inn, and asks leave to deposit them there, and the innkeeper refuses, but the party afterwards sits down and eats &c., thereby becoming a guest, and while there his goods are stolen, the innkeeper is liable. And if a party becomes a guest, and is absent for a time, with a known intention of returning at night, the innkeeper must take proper charge of his goods in the meantime, especially if the latter derive any profit from the custody, as the keep of a horse, even although the absence be for several days. And if one merely comes to an inn, and puts up his horse or other property, from which the innkeeper meantime derives a benefit, the owner is a guest, although he never go into the inn himself; but if from the property the innkeeper derive no benefit, it is otherwise. A soldier quartered at an inn is a guest. The owner may recover for the loss of goods deposited by his servant or agent who is a guest, although the owner himself be not a guest.

Next, let us see who are not guests. If a party come to an inn and take an apartment merely, under a particular previous contract, as a lodger, and do not eat and drink there, his mere lodging will not render the innkeeper liable to a loss. But if he come in the ordinary way, and sleep there, it would seem the innkeeper would be liable. A person invited as a visitor to dine or sup with the innkeeper, and afterwards, on account of the lateness of the hour, sleeping there voluntarily, is clearly not a guest in the present acceptation of the word, but a mere visitor.

It will of course be understood that an innkeeper, by taking a reward for property left in his custody, may render himself a bailee in another sense, although not under liability as an innkeeper.¹

No absolute delivery of the property of a guest into the innkeeper's custody is necessary; though he would not be liable if the goods were left in an improper part of the premises, as in an open court yard, unless it was the innkeeper's duty to have removed them to a proper place.

Any special agreement as to the custody of the goods does away with the innkeeper's general liability; and if a guest takes upon himself the exclusive custody of the goods, as if a room be hired as a shop for goods, and the key of it offered to the owner, the landlord's liability ceases. But a traveller merely desiring the goods to be taken into the common commercial or coffee-room, and not to his bed-room, is not such a taking of the exclusive custody.

¹ See ante, BAILEE for Hire, p. 295.

An innkeeper cannot in general discharge himself of his liability by refusing to take charge of the goods, and telling the guest to take the key of the room and lock his door, if the guest refuses to do so. But it is otherwise if he accepts the key, and thereby takes exclusive custody; or if the innkeeper be desirous of locking the goods up, saying, he cannot otherwise warrant them, and the guest opposes it, the liability of the former seems at an end. Neither is an innkeeper bound to take in the guest's goods if the house be full. Insanity, infancy, illness, or absence, are no excuse from an innkeeper's general liability.¹

By the statute 6 Anne, c. 31, it is enacted, "that no action, suit, or process whatsoever shall be had, maintained, or prosecuted against any person in whose house or chamber any fire shall accidentally begin, or any recompence be made by such person for any damage suffered or occasioned thereby." This act seems to exonerate bailees in general from liability to make good losses arising from fire beginning in a house or chamber; and extends over the whole kingdom. By the 14 Geo. III. c. 78, § 86, this relief is extended, as far as respects places within the bills of mortality, to losses arising from fire beginning in any house, chamber, stable, barn, or other building, or on any person's estate. This latter provision, however, does not extend further than to fires happening within the bills of mortality; and it seems to have been considered that innkeepers or carriers in general are not within the protection of this statute.²

If an innkeeper be guilty of gross overcharge, the guest may tender him what he is fairly entitled to; and the innkeeper may be indicted and fined, it seems, for an act of extortion.

By the 24 Geo. II. c. 40, § 12, it is provided, that no person shall recover any sum of money, debt, or demand on account of spirituous liquors, unless it shall bonâ fide have been contracted at one time to the amount of 20s. or upwards; nor shall any particular article in any account for distilled spirituous liquors be allowed, where the liquors delivered at one time shall not amount to the full value of 20s., nor where any part of the liquors so sold shall have been returned or be agreed to be returned directly or indirectly; and if any retailer, with or without a licence, shall take any pawn by way of security for payment of any money for such spirituous liquors or strong waters, he shall forfeit 40s. for every pawn or pledge so taken, to be levied by warrant of one justice, half to the poor and half to the informer; and the owner shall have such remedy for recovering such pawn, or the value thereof, as if it had never been pledged. Under this act it has been held that an innkeeper cannot recover the amount of items in his bill for spirits &c., unless each item amounts to 20s. at one time.³

The commonest remedy an innkeeper has for his remuneration is by a lien. It is very doubtful whether he can detain the person of a guest; but on his horse he has a special lien for the amount of the horse's feed &c. only. Other goods of the guest may be detained as a lien for a debt then incurred, unless there is any agreement to give credit, in which case nothing can be detained. If, before the lien on the horse is discharged, the horse is taken away, the innkeeper eo instanti may pursue and retake it. But if the horse is detained and the owner agree afterwards to leave him in pledge, the innkeeper gains a special property in the horse, and may retake him at any time. If the horse is once removed by consent, the right of lien is gone.

¹ Chit. Burn. J. 102—105. 3 Chit. Com. Law, 365—368.

² 3 Chit. Com. Law, 367, 8.

³ Gilpin v. Rendle, 1 Selw. N. P. 61; Burney v. Hutchinson, 5 B. & A. 241.

If an innkeeper detains a horse or other property, he has no right to use him otherwise than is especially requisite for the horse's benefit. Neither can he sell him. But in London there is a custom, that a horse may, on appraisement by four neighbours, be sold when the price of his keep amounts to his value.

Besides the remedy by lien, an action will lie for the guest's bill.¹

CHAPTER XVI.

Of Husband and Wife.

By marriage the husband and wife become as one person in the eye of the law, the very being or legal existence of the woman being by the common law suspended during the marriage, or at least incorporated with and consolidated in that of the husband, under whose protection she performs every thing. Modern times have introduced exceptions to this doctrine, as we shall presently see; but the general rule still continues. The reasons upon which the law virtually suspends the existence of the wife during coverture appear to be these: first, for her husband's safety, to deprive her of the power to injure him by any act without his assent, express or implied; and secondly, for her own security, to guard against her husband's influence over her, by disabling her from disposing of her own property, except by those methods and with those solemnities which the law itself prescribes. In treating of this relationship we shall consider—

I. CONTRACTS TO MARRY, AND THE CONSEQUENCES OF A BREACH THEREOF.

II. THE MARRIAGE ITSELF.

III. DIVORCE.

IV. THE CONSEQUENCES OF THE MARRIAGE.

I. CONTRACTS TO MARRY, AND THE CONSEQUENCES OF BREAKING THEM.

The contract must be mutual, that is, one party must offer matrimony and the other accept the offer, so that either party may sue or be sued on it. Thus a man may sue a woman for breach of her engagement, as well as the converse. An infant, however, cannot be sued, unless after coming of age the engagement is continued; though he or she may sue for breach of an engagement. Neither can a person non compos mentis be sued, because he is incapable of contracting, unless it is proved to have been during a lucid interval. It is not in any case necessary to prove an express contract in totidem verbis to marry; for whether such engagement had existed is a question to be left to and determined by a jury from the connecting circumstances. The engagement is binding, though no express time be fixed or stated for its completion; as the law will presume it to be within a reasonable time. If the marriage would have been illegal, as being within the degrees prohibited,¹ the contract is void, and no action is maintainable: but because the other party had made a similar promise to a third person forms no excuse. A discovery, however, that the other party is substantially a person of bad character, from facts capable of proof, seems sufficient to bar any action that may be brought.² A bill in equity will lie to discover a promise to marry, although not to enforce specific performance thereof, the only remedy being an action for damages.

¹ See Chit. Barn. J. 56—101.

Lawful marriage is always regarded with favour by the law. Hence contracts or wagers tending to the restraint of marriage are declared void. So also contracts in procuration of marriages are void, in equity at least; and the offence of procuring the marriage of a ward of court is punishable by imprisonment for contempt of the court, and also by indictment for the conspiracy.³

II. OF THE MARRIAGE ITSELF.

The acts at present in force for regulating marriages in England are the 4 Geo. IV. c. 76, and the 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 85. The former act relates solely to marriages solemnized according to the rites of the established church; and before the passing of the last-mentioned act none other could lawfully be had in England, except where both the parties were either Quakers or Jews. It provides, that banns of matrimony shall be published in an audible manner in the parish church, or in some public chapel in which they may be lawfully published, of or belonging to such parish or chapelry wherein the persons to be married shall dwell, according to the form of words prescribed by the rubric prefixed to the Office of Matrimony in the Book of Common Prayer, upon three Sundays preceding the solemnization of the marriage, during the time of morning service (or of evening service, if there be no morning service on such days) immediately after the second lesson; and when the persons dwell in different parishes, the banns shall be published in both parishes; and the marriage shall be solemnized in one of the parish churches where such banns have been published.⁴

Notice of the names and place and time of abode of parties is to be given to the minister seven days before publication.

Ministers are not punishable for marrying infants without the consent of parents &c. after such publication, unless they have notice of dissent; but if dissent is publicly declared, the publication is void.

Republication of banns is necessary if the marriage be not solemnized within three months after the first publication.

No licence is to be granted by any archbishop, bishop, or other ordinary, to solemnize any marriage in any other than the church or

¹ See the Common Prayer Book.

² Chit. jun. on Contracts, 157—160.

³ Chit. Bla. Com. 433, note 2.

⁴ As to the publication of banns and solemnization of marriages in district churches or chapels, see 7 & 8 Vic. c. 56.

chapel of the parish or chapelry within which the usual place of abode of one of the persons to be married has been for the space of fifteen days immediately before granting the licence. And if a caveat is entered, no licence is to be granted until the matter is examined into by the judge. And before such licence is granted, one of the parties shall personally swear before the surrogate &c. that he or she believeth that there is no impediment of kindred or alliance, or of any other lawful cause, nor any suit commenced in any ecclesiastical court, to bar or hinder the proceeding of the said matrimony according to the tenor of the said licence, and that one of the said parties hath, for the space of fifteen days immediately preceding such licence, had his or her usual place of abode within the parish or chapelry within which such marriage is to be solemnized; and where either of the parties (not being a widower or widow) shall be under the age of twenty-one years, that the consent of the person or persons whose consent to such marriage is required under the provisions of this act has been obtained thereto: provided always, that if there shall be no such person or persons having authority to give such consent, then upon oath made to that effect by the party requiring such licence, it shall be lawful to grant such licence notwithstanding the want of such consent.

The father, if living, of a party under twenty-one years of age (such party not being a widower or widow), or if the father shall be dead his or her guardian lawfully appointed, and if no guardian then the mother if unmarried, and if no mother unmarried then the guardian appointed by the court of chancery, shall have authority to give consent to the marriage of such party; and such consent is required for the marriage of a party so under age, unless there shall be no person authorized to give such consent.

If the father, or guardian, or mother be non compos mentis, or abroad, or shall unreasonably or from undue motives refuse or withhold consent to a proper marriage, then any person desirous of marrying may apply by petition to the lord chancellor &c., who may proceed thereon in a summary way. If, upon examination, the marriage appears to be a proper one, the lord chancellor may declare it to be so, and the consent of the other persons is dispensed with.

If the marriage is not solemnized within three months after the date of the licence, a new one must be obtained.

The right to grant special licences to marry at any hour or place is reserved to the archbishop of Canterbury.

If marriages are solemnized in any other place than a church or lawful public chapel, or at any other time than between the hours of eight and twelve in the forenoon unless by special licence, or without publication of banns unless by licence, either special or common; or if any person not in holy orders shall solemnize matrimony according to the rites of the church of England, the parties offending are guilty of felony, and liable to transportation for fourteen years. But prosecutions must be commenced within three years. And all marriages solemnized in any place other than a church or chapel where banns may be lawfully published (except by special licence), or without due publication of banns or a licence, or by any person not being in holy orders (the parties thereto knowing of such circumstance), are wholly void.

If the marriage of a minor is procured without the proper consent, either by licence obtained on a false oath, or by undue publication of banns, the offending party may be debarred from any property which would accrue from such marriage, by a bill to be filed by the attorney general in the court of chancery or exchequer, at the relation of the party whose consent was necessary; and such court may settle and secure the property to the benefit of the innocent party and the issue of the marriage, or, if both parties be guilty, for the benefit of the issue only. But proceedings for this purpose must be commenced within twelve months after the marriage, and within three months after it came to the knowledge of such relator.¹

After the marriage, it is not necessary in support thereof to give proof of the actual dwelling of the parties, &c.; nor will any evidence be received to prove the contrary in any suit touching its validity.

All marriages must be solemnized in the presence of two witnesses besides the minister. Immediately after the celebration, an entry is to be made in the register book, expressing whether the marriage was celebrated by banns or licence; and if the parties be under age, not being a widower or widow, whether it was with consent of the parents or guardians; and the entry must be signed by the minister, and also by the parties married, and attested by two witnesses.

Persons making a false entry, or forging &c. any entry, or any licence, or destroying the register, are guilty of felony, and liable to transportation for life or not less than seven years, or to imprisonment for not exceeding four nor less than two years.²

The 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 85 (Dissenters' Marriage Act) was passed for the relief of those who do not approve of the ceremony of marriage as laid down in the Rubric. It leaves the religious part of the ceremony to be conducted in whatever form may best suit the religious tenets of the parties, provided the marriage be solemnized in a place of worship duly registered under the act; or marriages may be had without any religious ceremony whatever, if the parties please, at the office of the superintendent registrar of the district. The only requisites essentially necessary are, that a certificate be previously obtained from the superintendent registrar of the district; that the marriage be solemnized in the place mentioned in such certificate, with open doors, between the hours of eight and twelve in the forenoon, in the presence of a registrar and two or more credible witnesses; and that in some part of the ceremony each of the parties repeat the following words:—

"I do solemnly declare, that I know not of any lawful impediment why I, A.B., may not be joined in matrimony to C.D.

And each of the parties say to the other—

I call upon these persons here present to witness, that I, A.B., do take thee, C.D., to be my lawful wedded wife [or husband.]

The certificate is to be obtained by giving twenty-one days previous notice of the intended marriage to the superintendent registrar of the district within which the parties shall have dwelt for at least seven days previously; or if the parties have lived in different districts, to the superintendent registrar of each district. A fee of 1s. is paid on entering the notice, and another of 1s. on receiving the certificate.

¹ As to the wife's property being ordered to be settled upon her and the issue of her marriage, by reason of the forfeiture of the husband under this statute, see Attorney Gen. v. Mullay, 7 Beaver, 351.

² 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. c. 66, § 20.

The certificate of the superintendent registrar, like the publication of banns in the parish church, is intended to prevent hasty and clandestine marriages by securing proper publication thereof; and for this purpose the superintendent registrar (who is generally the clerk to the board of guardians for the union, and with the limits of which his district is generally co-extensive) is required to read all such notices at every meeting of such board held during the twenty-one days after the notice and before the issuing of the certificate.

Such certificate is required as well in the case of marriages where both parties are Quakers or Jews as in other cases, although these religious sects were exempted from the operation of former Marriage Acts. It may also be substituted for the publication of banns with respect to a marriage to be solemnized in the parish church according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England, if the parties choose.

Where parties are desirous of having their marriage solemnized within a less period than twenty-one days, the superintendent registrar is empowered to grant a licence of marriage, upon the payment of three pounds above the value of the stamps, which will entitle the party to receive a certificate seven days after the notice has been given. In order to obtain such licence, one of the parties must appear personally before the superintendent registrar, and make oath (or solemn affirmation) that he or she believes that there is not any impediment of kindred or alliance, or any other lawful hindrance to the marriage, and that one of the parties has lived for the space of fifteen days within the district within which the marriage is to be solemnized; and if either party (not being a widower or widow) be under twenty-one years of age, that the consent of the person or persons whose consent is required by law has been obtained, or that there is no person who has authority to give such consent, as the case may be. Such licence and declaration are respectively liable to the same stamp duties as licences for marriage granted by the ordinary of a diocese and the affidavit required to procure the same; and the superintendent registrar is entitled to a fee of three pounds upon granting such licence. But no such licence shall warrant the solemnization of a marriage in a church or chapel belonging to the church of England. Nor can any superintendent registrar grant a licence for a marriage to be solemnized out of his own district.

The marriage in all cases must take place within three months after the notice has been entered with the superintendent registrar, or a fresh notice must be given.

The registrar before whom any marriage is solemnized is entitled to ask of the parties the several particulars required to be registered respecting the marriage, and to receive the sum of 10s. if the marriage be by licence, and the sum of 5s. if without licence.

In case either party is under age (not being a widower or widow), the consent of the same persons is required under this act as under the 4 Geo. IV.; and such persons may forbid the issue of the certificate by writing the word Forbidden opposite to the entry of the notice of the intended marriage in the Marriage Notice Book of the superintendent registrar, with his or her name and place of abode, and the relation in which he or she stands in respect to either party, and by which he or she is authorized to interfere. But any person forbidding the issue of the certificate by any wilfully false representation is subject to the penalties of perjury.

And any party whose consent is not required by law may, upon the payment of five shillings, enter a caveat against the grant of a certificate or a licence for marriage; and in such case the superintendent registrar shall not grant the same until he shall have examined into the ground of objection, and shall be satisfied that it ought not to obstruct the issuing thereof. If the caveat be considered frivolous or vexatious the party entering it is liable to an action for damages.

Marriages in other countries are recognized by the law of England if they are valid by the law of those countries. Hence marriages at Gretna Green in Scotland are recognized by the law of this country, because they are not deemed invalid by the law, though certainly celebrated in a manner contrary to the general usage, of that part of the kingdom. So a marriage in Ireland performed by a clergyman of the church of England in a private house was held valid, although no licence was granted for that purpose.

Before the 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 54, marriages between persons within the prohibited degrees of kindred were not absolutely void, but voidable only by sentence of an ecclesiastical court during the life-time of both the parties. This act, after legalizing marriages previously celebrated between persons within the prohibited degrees of affinity (but not affecting those within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity), enacted, that all marriages thereafter celebrated between persons within the prohibited degrees either of consanguinity or affinity, should be absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes.

III. DIVORCE.

In the first place, no marriage can be dissolved, although a sentence of divorce may be repealed in the spiritual court, after the death of either party.¹ But, in effect, the ecclesiastical court can declare a marriage to be illegal after that event. Thus, where on the death of a man his reputed wife applies for and takes out letters of administration, on a prior wife applying to the court they may revoke the first letters, and decree them to the first wife; and this was done in a late case,² at the Bedford summer assizes, 1832, and the jury on a trial at law found the second marriage to be illegal from the result of their verdict.

Divorces are of two kinds; the one à vinculo matrimonii, which means an absolute discharge from the bonds of marriage, as though none had ever taken place; and the other à mensâ et thoro, signifying a cessation of the obligation of the parties to continue to live together, which is a partial divorce.

The divorce à vinculo is grounded on some disability or other cause existing before the marriage, and the issue in this case are illegitimate. The corporeal impotence or imbecility of the husband pre-existing at the time of the marriage, and continuing to exist, is a sufficient ground,³ so is a relationship within the canonical degrees of affinity. Upon this divorce the wife, it is said, shall receive again her property if it be in existence; but if spent or gone bonâ fide, without fraud on the part of the husband, her remedy is at an end. It also enables the parties to marry again, and to do all other acts, as if they had never been married; and the husband is not liable to the future debts of the wife.

¹ Chit. Bla. Com. 440, 441, and notes 34. 35. 3 Bla. Com. 98. ² MS.

See 1 Rob. 379.

The divorce à mensâ is where the marriage was primarily lawful, but from some supervenient cause it becomes impossible or impolitic in the eye of the law that the parties should continue to cohabit or live together. Though usually decreed in the ecclesiastical court, it may be sometimes obtained, as in the case of adultery of the wife, by an act of parliament.¹ The grounds for it may be cruelty in either party, even in a single instance, when it really endangers life, limb, or health; and even words menacing such dangers are sufficient. So if the husband has been convicted of an unnatural crime. But mere insult, irritation, coldness, unkindness, ill-temper, or even desertion, are not sufficient grounds, although Blackstone seems to say that "intolerable ill-temper" is sufficient. Adultery is always a sufficient ground.²

In cases of divorce à mensâ et thoro, an allowance is usually given to the wife out of the husband's property, depending on circumstances, and this even in case of adultery, where the divorce is obtained by act of parliament; for the justice of the legislature has provided that she shall not, for the want of pecuniary means, be driven to continue in a course of vice;³ though where the sentence is obtained in the ordinary mode, it seems otherwise.⁴ And it is settled, that where the husband and wife are living separate, and by deed he allows trustees for her use a sum of money for maintenance, she does not forfeit it on adultery.⁵ This allowance is termed alimony. Courts of equity consider it as separate and independent of pin-money, which the wife by agreement on marriage may be entitled to; so that the latter cannot be deducted from the former.⁶ Sometimes courts of equity may decree alimony;⁷ and after it is decreed, either by a court of equity or by the ecclesiastical courts, they will, when any portion of it is due, prevent the husband's evasion by quitting the kingdom, by issuing the writ of ne exeat regno against him.⁸

IV. THE CONSEQUENCES OF MARRIAGE.

1. Rights acquired by the Husband in the Property of his Wife, and his Power over it.

As to the Wife's Real Estate.—By marriage the husband takes a freehold interest in the wife's real estate during her life; and if they have any child born, from that moment the husband takes an interest for his own life also as tenant by curtesy, of which he is not divested though the child die the moment after. In order to support this estate in him, there are four requisites: 1. The marriage must be legal; 2. The wife must be seised of the estate; 3. The issue must be ¹ See the modes of proceeding in both these cases, 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 441, notes 39, 40.

² 3 Chit. Bla. Com. 94, notes 14, 15.

³ Per Best J., 4 D. & R. 17, and per Bailey J., id. 94.

⁴ 1 Bla. Com. 442; 3 Id. 94.

⁵ Jee v. Thurlow, 2 Barn. & C. 347;

S. C., 4 D. & R. 11.

⁶ Ball v. Courtt, 1 Ves. & B. 292; Colmer v. Colmer, Mos. 121.

⁷ Angier v. Angier, Prec. Chan. 496; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 152.

⁸ See Cases in Chit. Eq. Index, 522; and see further 2 Roper on Husband and Wife 309, notes.

capable of inheriting, supposing it to live; and 4. The death of the wife must precede the husband's.

The husband cannot be tenant by curtesy of a mere right, title, condition, or personal inheritance &c. of the wife. But he may of manors, lands, and tenements, of which actual seisin may be obtained by the wife, and of various hereditaments, such as rents, tithes, commons, advowsons, offices of inheritance, trusts, equities of redemption, &c.

When the wife's estate is capable of seisin, actual seisin must be had during her life, to entitle the husband to be tenant by curtesy. If the wife be disseised before marriage, and there is no re-entry during marriage, no such title can arise to the husband; though a disseisin after marriage cannot affect his title. So, if the freehold is suspended during the marriage, the husband gains no title, unless the suspension is by a mere term of years, in which case the termee is regarded as holding possession for the wife. No curtesy arises from the wife's seisin for her life merely, or as tenant at will, nor of copyholds, except by special custom, which must be strictly followed. Nor is the seisin of a reversion sufficient. If a wife is entitled to an estate for life, then A.B. to have it for life, and then to the wife in reversion; if A.B. die before the wife, the husband is entitled as tenant by curtesy on her death; but not if A.B.'s estate takes effect; though if A.B.'s interest had been less than freehold, as for a term of years, the husband's title would not have been affected. No title in curtesy arises where the wife and another are entitled as joint tenants; but otherwise if in coparcenary, or as tenants in common.

Where there is no possibility of actual seisin of property, as of rents, advowsons, and the like, no seisin is required other than a legal or equitable seisin; although as to equitable seisin, where the husband takes any thing under the wife's will, and any intention of hers is apparent that he shall not have the estate by curtesy and also the benefits of the will, equity will in general put him to his election to choose which of the two he will abide by.

If real property is given by deed or by will to husband and wife as joint tenants, he cannot, unless she join in the disposition thereof, divest her of the interest which after his death she would take in the whole property. This is contrary to the ordinary relation of joint tenants, as we shall hereafter see when we come to treat of the laws relating to estates. Neither is her interest affected by treason in the husband; for, in legal phraseology, they take by entireties, and not in moieties.

The husband, as he and the wife are one, cannot give &c. any thing direct to his wife, except by his will, or by any particular local custom, as in York, or as a donatio mortis causâ, which is a gift made by him while upon his death-bed, and can only take effect in case he die from that illness, and therefore does not pass to her till after the marriage is dissolved by his death. But by intervention of trustees this may be done; for the husband can give any thing to them upon trust that the wife shall have the benefit of it. And a purchase by the husband in the name of his wife is presumed to be a gift to her, which, in general, she shall take and enjoy after his death.

The husband may, in general, alien the property of the wife without her assent during his own life; but she or her heirs, after that, have the power, by process of law, of re-entering ~~of the~~ property so aliened, if the remedy be pursued promptly after his death. Copyhold estates of the wife are however, in general, incapable of being so aliened. So also courts of equity will in general relieve the wife from the effects of an act of forfeiture committed by the husband of the wife's copyhold estates.

As to the Husband's Power to grant Leases of the Wife's Estate.—The statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 28, although in other respects it provided for the relief of the wife and her heirs against the alienation of her estates by the husband, yet, for the encouragement of industry, it insured to the lessees of the husband and wife the lands of the wife during the term granted; and, in doing so, the statutes rendered firm and obligatory the contracts jointly made by them during the marriage.

The husband is also entitled to exercise a power contained in any deed to lease the wife's property conjointly with her, but the precise terms of the power must be strictly and literally followed.

Again, the husband alone may charge his wife's real estate with the payment of his debts during their joint lives; and if he be the survivor, and entitled to be tenant by curtesy, he may further charge them during his own life. And a security to any extent on the wife's estate, which she and her husband may effect, will be good.

If, however, the wife join in these acts to raise money for the husband's use, she will be entitled to exoneration to that extent out of any real estate or assets he may have; but it seems that the claims of other creditors would be preferred to her's. If, however, the money is raised to pay a debt contracted by the wife before marriage, she is not entitled to any exoneration; nor where it is connected with a contract on the marriage for settling her estate. Evidence is admissible to show for what purpose the money is raised. But parol declarations of the wife of her agreement to make a gift of the money to her husband are inadmissible; although she may exclude herself from the right of exoneration out of his assets if she, by professions that she did not intend to assert her right, induced his executors to administer his personal estate.

The mere reservation of the equity of redemption in such cases in the husband and wife and the survivor will not charge the wife's interest therein; but when the limitations of the property are distinct from the bare transaction of the incumbrance, then it will.

His Interest in her Chattels Real, as Terms of Years &c., and in the Rents due at his death, she being then alive; and his Liability to the Charges affecting such Chattels.—This is only a qualified title, viz. an interest in right of his wife, with a power to alienate during the coverture. If he do so alienate them, the alienation is effectual against the wife whether she survive him or not; but if he do not, and she survive him, then she continues to be the owner thereof as effectually as if she had never been married. If, without any alienation, the wife die first, then they belong absolutely to the husband by marital right, and not merely by his taking out administration. If leasehold property of the wife is underlet by the husband, or by both, and the rent is reserved payable to him, and he die leaving his wife surviving, his executors seem to be entitled to the rent due at his death: but if reserved to both, it seems they belong in such event to the wife, though upon this point there is some difference of opinion.¹

When the husband by survivorship becomes entitled to such chattels real, he takes them subject to all the charges and equities with which they were affected in the wife's possession. The husband's acts of forfeiture, as by waste, outlawry, or attainder for felony, or felo de se, form as effectual a bar to the wife's claims as any other disposition thereof made by him. And on insolvency or bankruptcy, or upon a writ of fi. fa., the wife's interest may be sold for the benefit of his creditors.

Of the Husband's Interest in and over his Wife's Personal Estate.—

A woman is not permitted to dispose of her property in fraud of her contemplated marriage. This, in general, resolves itself into a mere question of fraud; for before marriage a woman is at liberty to dispose of her fortune, provided it be done with no improper motive, as to deceive the man who is then addressing her with a view to their union. But deception will be inferred, if after the commencement of the treaty she should attempt to dispose of her property without his knowledge or concurrence; and under no circumstances will any such voluntary disposition of her property be binding upon her subsequent husband. Where, however, such settlement is made on her children by a former husband, the cases on the subject go to decide that such would be valid; though this is certainly contrary to the principle on which the preceding doctrine is founded.

By marriage all the personal property of the wife, of which she is actually or beneficially possessed at the time, becomes the property of the husband absolutely. His disposition of them by will or otherwise will therefore be good; and he may also empower her to dispose of them by her will, either generally or in any particular manner. But this is only good as against her next of kin in case she dies before her husband.

But marriage is no gift to him of property belonging to the wife as administratrix or executrix, though he may, in her right, administer such property, and dispose of it in the same manner in which she might; and therefore he may release debts due to the estate to be administered. The wife cannot administer without his consent; but property coming to her executrix &c. she may bequeath by will without his consent. And if any action is brought in relation to such matters, the wife must in general be joined with the husband.²

As to the wife's chores in action, such as debts owing to her at the time of her marriage, arrears of rents, legacies, residuary personal estate, money in the funds, &c., the husband, to gain any property in them, must during his life reduce them into possession, that is, obtain the actual controul of them by recovering them, or by their being transferred into his name, &c. The mere intention to reduce them into possession is not sufficient; and therefore a mere appropriation of the fund by him to any particular purpose is not such a reduction.³

As to the assignment by the husband of the wife's chores in action to which she is only entitled in reversion or expectancy, it is now pretty well settled that it can only stand good in case he survive her; and that even although she join in the assignment. At the same time she may confirm it after his death; but her merely reciting such assignments in a deed executed by her after his death, is not such a recognition. Nor does she debar herself from the right to set aside such assignment by forbearing to claim it till after a particular event.¹

¹ See 1 Roper, Husb. & Wife, 144. See also Harrison v. Andrews, 13 Sim. 595. ² As to what constitutes such reduction, see Roper, 210 &c.

This saving of the wife's rights is only confined to such as, in order to reduce into possession, he must sue for in a court of equity, and not to those over which the common law imparts the power to him.

Where the husband, in order to reduce the wife's property into possession, is obliged to resort to a court of equity, the court will oblige him to settle some portion of it on her and her children. The portion to be thus settled depends upon the circumstances of each particular case; and, though generally half, it is never the whole fund. She may, where this fund is subject to equitable cognizance, file a bill in equity to enforce her right to settlement by means of her next friend against her husband. If she die before any steps are taken to secure her allowance, her children have no power or claim to do so; although if any steps are commenced, they may continue to prosecute them. The wife also, by her waiver of rights, may bar her children.

The wife's equities to a portion of the fund sought by the aid of a court of equity equally follow the property whether it is sought to be recovered by the husband or by his assignees, by contract or in bankruptcy. But if the money be already paid to such purchaser before steps are taken to enforce her right to settlement, her right is gone.

So the court of equity will restrain the husband from obtaining the wife's portion by any process in the ecclesiastical courts until he has made a settlement on her.

Adultery on her part is generally a bar to her equity in this respect, except in the instance of a ward of court.

The husband, although he may refuse to make any such settlement, is yet entitled to the interest of her fortune, but not to the capital; and his assignees may take the yearly income, subject to making her an allowance. But if the husband desert his wife, and leave her destitute, or compel her by his cruelty to leave him, the court will deprive him not only of the capital, but of the interest also; and out of this property, although generally the husband is personally liable to all her debts, the court will order her creditor for advances to be repaid.

In case of a ward of court married without the previous approbation of the lord chancellor, the husband, besides being liable to imprisonment for the contempt of court, is punished by a settlement being made most strictly debarring him from taking any benefit in her property.

Effect of Settlements on and after Marriage.—By a settlement before marriage the husband may, by an agreement therein to that effect, be entitled to her choses in action, present or future; but without such a clause he is only entitled to her then property, under such restrictions as to her choses in action as have been before pointed out.

¹ The cases of Mitford v. Mitford (9 Vex. 37), Hornaby v. Lee (2 Madd. 16), Purdew v. Jackson (1 Russ. 1), Honner v. Morton (3 Russ. 63), and Stamper v. Barker (5 Madd. 157) have established the unqualified right of a married woman surviving her husband to all her choses in action not reduced by him into possession, and to her reversionary and contingent interests in personal chattels not vesting in possession during the coverture, against the assignee of the husband for valuable consideration, or his general assignee in bankruptcy or insolvency. The husband cannot bind his wife's reversionary interest in personality, either with or without her consent.

If after marriage any accession takes place to her property, he, on taking it, may (unless the settlement has already provided for such a possibility) be made to execute an additional settlement on her in respect thereof; and he then becomes a purchaser of such property, which renders the post-nuptial settlement valid against creditors, provided it is in other respects fair, and the assignees must perform the covenants of the settlement before touching her property.

Settlements before marriage are always good against creditors or purchasers. But, unless under the foregoing circumstances, settlements after marriage are in general invalid against prior creditors, and purchasers also, even if they have actual notice thereof. They are good if made in pursuance of previous articles agreeing to settle in writing; and they are always good against the husband and others claiming under him. And post-nuptial settlements made for value, either on an accession of fortune to the wife, or on her giving up some right, as to jointure, dower, &c., or by order of courts of equity, are good.

2. Wife's Rights over the Husband's Property.

DOWER.—The law in respect of dower has undergone great alterations by the late act 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 105.

By marriage the wife (unless by agreement otherwise) is entitled to a life interest, at her husband's death, in one third of his estates of inheritance of which he has been seised during the coverture. For this purpose a valid, or at least not a void, marriage is necessary; for if it is only voidable, and it has not been set aside during his life, it is too late after his death to dispute it, and all the consequences of a good and valid marriage attach.

Dower attaches on all corporeal hereditaments, and out of rents, estovers, commons appendant or in gross (if certain), advowsons, fairs, bailiwicks, profits of a park-keeper and of courts, tithes, woods, mills, piscaries, tolls of a navigable river (unless the act expressly provides against it), and the like, and of mines opened, but not of those unopened.

An estate in dower is an estate for life which the law gives a widow in the third part of the lands, tenements, and corporeal and incorporeal hereditaments, of which the husband was solely seised or entitled in law or equity (though before the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. equitable seisin was not sufficient), in fee or in tail, in possession, at any time during the marriage, and to which estate the issue of such widow might have inherited. Thus, if an estate be limited to a man and the heirs of his body by his then wife, and he marry again, the second wife is not dowable out of that estate, for her heirs could not by possibility inherit. A seisin in law was sufficient; thus, if land descended to the husband, who died before entry, yet dower attached: but now, by § 3 of the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 105, seisin is declared not to be necessary. The wife is not entitled to dower of a remainder or reversion expectant on a freehold created before marriage; but there is dower if the remainder or reversion depend on a term of years. There is no dower of a seisin for an instant merely, as where there are two joint tenants, and one makes a feoffment in fee; nor of both the lands given and taken in exchange, but she must elect which to take dower out of. She shall have a third of the profits of such things as cannot be divided, as fairs, offices, and the third presentation to an advowson. She shall have no dower of an estate of which her husband was mortgagee in fee, nor if he be attainted of treason; but she shall not be barred, if he be attainted of felony only. Neither is dower lost by divorce à mensâ et thoro for adultery; though it is if she quit her husband's house in company of the adulterer. The widow of an idiot or non compos has dower. But the widow cannot enter till the heir has assigned her dower. If he refuse, she must bring a writ of dower, and the sheriff must assign it by metes and bounds, unless the husband were tenant in common, then she has an undivided third share of her husband's interest. Therefore, before assignment and entry, the freehold is not in the widow. But before entry she has a right only, which may be conveyed (i. e. extinguished) by lease and release to the person having the freehold in possession; and after entry it may be conveyed &c., like other freehold estates. And during the husband's life the wife may bar her right to dower by the new mode prescribed by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, in lieu of fine or recovery.

By gavelkind custom, she is entitled to half the land so long as she continues a widow and chaste.

The tenant in dower is subject to an action for waste, and liable to forfeiture. Her concurrence was necessary to make the tenant to the precipe, she not being within the 14 Geo. II. c. 20.

The methods by which dower may be prevented from attaching are as follows. As the husband must be solely seised, by making him a joint tenant; or by putting the fee in remainder, as to the husband for life, remainder to B during life of husband of &c., remainder to husband in fee. The best way is by the usual uses to bar dower, as now most generally practised. Dower may be barred in law by the woman accepting a jointure under the 32 Hen. VIII. c. 28. A provision made by will of husband in lieu of dower is so far a bar to dower, if the intent be clear, as to put her to her election. And so in equity, by accepting other considerations, such as fall not within the statute, as a yearly sum &c., though not charged on any particular fund.

The 3 & 4 W. IV. c. 105 having effected considerable changes in the law of dower, the provisions of it are here subjoined.

No widow shall be entitled to dower out of any land which shall have been absolutely disposed of by her husband in his lifetime, or by his will.

All partial estates and interests, and all charges created by any disposition or will of the husband, and all debt, incumbrances, contracts, and engagements to which his land shall be subject or liable, shall be valid and effectual as against the right of his widow to dower.

A widow shall not be entitled to dower out of any land of her husband, when in the deed by which such land was conveyed to him, or by any deed executed by him, it shall be declared that his widow shall not be entitled to dower out of such land.

A widow shall not be entitled to dower out of any land of which her husband shall die wholly or partially intestate, when by his will, duly executed for the devise of freehold estates, he shall declare his intention that she shall not be entitled to dower out of such land, or out of any of his land.

The right of a widow to dower shall be subject to any conditions, restrictions, or directions which shall be declared by the will of her husband duly executed as aforesaid.

Where a husband shall devise any land out of which his widow would be entitled to dower if the same were not so devised, or any estate or interest therein, to or for the benefit of his widow, such widow shall not be entitled to dower out of or in any land of her said husband, unless a contrary intention shall be declared by his will.

No gift or bequest made by any husband to or for the benefit of his widow of or out of his personal estate, or of or out of any of his land not liable to dower, shall defeat or prejudice her right to dower, unless a contrary intention shall be declared by his will.

Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall prevent any court of equity from enforcing any covenant or agreement entered into by or on the part of any husband not to bar the right of his widow to dower out of his lands, or any of them.

Nothing in this act shall interfere with any rule of equity, or of any ecclesiastical court, by which legacies bequeathed to widows in satisfaction of dower are entitled to priority over other legacies.

No widow shall hereafter be entitled to dower ad ostium ecclesie, or dower ex assensu patris.

This act shall not extend to the dower of any widow who shall have been married on or before the 1st January 1834, and shall not give to any will, deed, contract, engagement, or charge executed, entered into, or created before the said 1st January 1834, the effect of defeating or prejudicing any right to dower.

JOINTURE.—Dower may also be barred by jointure, which is a provision made by marriage settlement in lieu of it; and which, though by fine and proclamation of the husband, or by forfeiture for waste, or by the alienation of the wife, it may be barred, yet is not (as dower is) forfeitable by elopement and adultery, nor by the husband's treason or felony. Coke says, a strict legal jointure requires that—1. The provision for the wife must take effect, in possession or profit, immediately after the husband's death. 2. It must be for the term of her own life, or more. 3. It must be in satisfaction of the whole, and not of part of dower. 4. It must be expressed or averred to be in satisfaction of dower. It may be made before or after marriage; but if made after marriage, she may waive it, and claim her dower. If made before marriage, she will be barred whether adult or infant, even if not a party to the deed of jointure; but Mr. Cruise thinks,¹ that, if under age, she or her guardian must have notice, or she would have relief in equity. If she be an infant, the provision must be as certain as her dower.

The Wife's Interest in the Husband's Personal Property.—When the husband dies possessed of property, and without leaving any will, and, after paying his debts, there is a surplus, the wife under the Statute of Distributions, is entitled to one third where there are children or their lineal descendants living; and where not, to one-half of such surplus.* And, by the custom of London and York, when his estate exceeds 2000*l.*, she is entitled to 50*l.*, or if under 2000*l.*, to the furniture of the widow's bed-chamber and apparel. And where the children have been advanced in the world by the father during his life-time, the value of that advancement will be brought into account with the widow, which is called "hotchpot." Settlements on the widow will sometimes bar her right under these customs. The wife also may take interests, limited to her by marriage settlement, or by covenants therein, to leave her property at his death by his will.¹

3. The Effects of Marriage upon the Acts and Agreements of Husband and Wife prior to Marriage; and the Husband's Liability in respect of them.

When married, the wife cannot, without the husband's consent, make or appoint an attorney to do any act; and on the same principle, if she has done so before marriage, the act of marriage is a revocation of it. But if a warrant of attorney is made to her, it is not revoked; nor is marriage a determination of a lease at will made to or by her before that event. However, she is in general incompetent to make a will; and one made before marriage is revoked by it, although the husband consented to it. A submission to arbitration by the wife is revoked by marriage. And in some instances marriage is a release from obligations contracted by her previous thereto, as where she has given a bond to her husband, unless the debt thereunder cannot become due till after her death. The husband is generally liable for all her debts contracted prior to or during the coverture;² but for those contracted before marriage he ceases to be liable when the coverture ceases; though if he receives assets from her as administrator after her death, he continues liable to the extent of such assets.

A bond given by a man to his intended wife without the intervention of trustees is revoked on the marriage; but otherwise if trustees are interposed, or if the terms are to be performed after the coverture ceases. For where such a bond is made, and the husband becomes bankrupt, proof is allowed of it under the bankruptcy.³ But the husband cannot settle his own property on his wife, so as to belong to her in the event of his bankruptcy, though he may settle her property in that mode. The marriage of an executrix with a debtor to the estate does not release his debt.

4. The Disabilities of Coverture, and the Exceptions to them.

A married woman has a variety of rights and disabilities with respect to the exercise of powers.⁴ As to purchases of real estate by her, they seem to depend more on the assent of the husband, without which she may sometimes treat them as nullities after his death. A wife's receipt for money is void against the husband, unless she act with his authority, either express or implied. Neither can she release a debt, or give or negotiate any security. Neither can she in general contract debts to bind her husband, unless they be for necessities supplied to herself proportioned to their sphere in life, or for goods for the use of the family, or, not being necessities, unless they afterwards come to the

¹ See 2 Roper, 1.—56.

² See post, as to his liability for debts during marriage.

³ See Exp. Tindal, and cases there referred to, 1 Dea. & Ch. 391.

⁴ See 2 Roper, 95.

husband's use; and though the necessities were for her children by a prior marriage, if they are living with the husband, he is liable. Where the husband makes an allowance to the wife for necessities,¹ which fact is known to the tradesman trusting, the husband is not liable. Nor is he liable for money lent to the wife, even though applied by her to the purchase of necessities. However, in equity, the lender would be entitled to stand in the place of the party furnishing such necessities, and so be entitled to recover from the husband. If the wife buys necessities on credit, and pawns them before they come to the husband's use, he is not liable; nor if the credit is solely given to her, unless by any subsequent act he acknowledges the debt. His liabilities, however, cease if she leave him without some sufficient reason, as cruelty or substantial ill-treatment; but in this case he ought to give particular notices to tradesmen not to trust her,—a general notice, unless brought home to the party's knowledge, being of no avail. If he drive her away from her home without sufficient cause, and give actual notice to tradesmen not to trust her, he is still liable for necessities supplied to her. But if she afterwards commits herself, his liability ceases from that time. Her elopement or adultery will also discharge him; but if he afterwards receives her again, his liability is thereby revived. She, however, could not be arrested for those debts from which the husband is released; or rather, if she were arrested, she might, on application to a court of common law, have been released on what is termed common bail.¹

By the custom of London, however, she may be considered as a time sole, and, as such, may trade, and become subject to the bankrupt laws.

Other exceptions which are allowed to the general disabilities of the wife by means of marriage are those of pin-money, gifts or allowances to her to keep house &c., and her paraphernalia.

Although gifts by the husband immediately to the wife are void at law, yet in equity they are supported, provided they are fair and reasonable. But it is to be observed that a gift of the whole property of the husband during his life-time is void, even in equity, against his creditors.

Pin-money, &c.—This is money given for her clothes and ornaments, or other separate expenditure. It may be given either by the marriage agreement, or by gift independent and subsequent thereto. The former is good in every respect; but the latter is void as against his creditors, unless under circumstances already pointed out, as, for instance, a future accession on her part to property. If she suffers her pin-money to run into arrear, she can seldom claim arrears for more than a year past; but if she demands it without success, she will not be considered as having waived it; neither can the presumption of waiver arise if she be non compos mentis. If the husband provide her with the articles for which the pin-money was intended, her claim to the latter will be regarded as thereby satisfied.

Gifts &c. to keep House.—These are supposed to be a certain sum; and if, by saving any part of it, she accumulates a fund, she is considered to hold it for her own use; but this, as well as pin-money, if in consequence of an agreement after marriage only, is liable to the husband's creditors.

Paraphernalia.—This term comprehends such articles of dress and ornament as are bought by her husband for her use, or are given to her by strangers, and are suitable to her condition in life. They are not absolutely the property of either party; so that neither can dispose of them by will during the life of the other, but they pass to the survivor. Although the wife cannot during his life do so, he may sell or give them away during her life-time; and on the same principle they are liable to his debts, except, perhaps, where given by strangers. If, however, the husband die indebted, and her paraphernalia be taken by his specialty creditors after the general personal estate is exhausted, she will be allowed to stand in the place of such creditors to reimburse herself out of the real estate in possession of the heir, to the amount of her paraphernalia, and will be entitled to precedence in payment of their value to legatees. The right to paraphernalia may, however, be barred by settlement, or, as against her administrators, by her acquiescence in her husband's otherwise unwarranted disposition of them.

¹ Freestone v. Butcher, 9 Car. & P. 647; Lane v. Ironmonger, 18 Mee & W. 368.

The Wife's Power to enjoy separate Estate.—Courts of equity have also relaxed the rule, that a married woman cannot have any separate estate without the actual intervention of trustees, in another instance. Thus, although it would be better to interpose trustees, if land or personalty be devised, bequeathed, or settled by a stranger to or upon a married woman for her separate use, yet, without giving it to trustees, the intention of such stranger will be effectuated, and the wife's interest protected in courts of equity, by their regarding the husband as a trustee for her; and there are instances where courts of law would not interfere in such case against the wife's interest. Such separate enjoyment is supported when the words in the will or deed are, that she "shall enjoy and receive" the property; or, that it shall be "for her livelihood;" or, that "her receipt shall be a sufficient discharge;" or, that it "shall be paid into her hands;" and in many other such cases.¹

Again, where the wife is, by the agreement of the husband, or by the custom of London before mentioned, and in other instances, allowed to carry on a separate trade from her husband, the property thereof is her separate property. However, as in general no separate action can be maintained against her, she cannot (except by the custom of London) be made a bankrupt in respect of any such separate trading.

Such separate property, if real estate, may, by agreement between husband and wife before (though not after) marriage, be disposed of by the wife during coverture so as to bind her heir at law; and if personal estate, she may dispose of it without such power, just as if she were single. If, however, property is given her to enjoy during her life, with a power to dispose of it by her will &c., care must be taken that the terms of the execution of the power are strictly complied with.²

Such separate property is also in some instances rendered liable to her debts and engagements after her death, independent of the liability of the husband.

SEPARATION.—This, though unknown to the common law, was, till lately, so clearly settled as to afford room for valid contracts in relation thereto. At law such deeds, if in contemplation of immediate separation, were good; and in equity they were good for every purpose where ¹ See Barrymore v. Ellis, 8 Sim. 1; Brown v. Bamford, 11 id. 127. See also the cases on this subject in Western's Conveyanc. iv. 258.

² See 1 Vict. c. 26, § 10, which must be complied with notwithstanding the power.

trustees were interposed. They were, however, in general considered at an end when a reconciliation between the parties subsequently took place.

But this doctrine has undergone a complete alteration by the late case of Westmeath v. Westmeath, in the House of Lords,¹ which has decided, that a prospective or any deed of separation (excepting so far, perhaps, as it may provide for children) is invalid, and may be set aside or treated as void.² Such is the modern decision; but its correctness is very questionable, and in all probability the law will again stand as it did before this case.³

If, during this state of separation, the wife be molested by the husband, she has a remedy by writ of supplicavit in the Court of Chancery, obtained upon proceedings called articles of peace; and if he attempt to seize her, or actually do so, she may have a writ of habeas corpus, in order to obtain security for her person or to regain her liberty.

5. Effects of the Marriage as between the Husband and Wife.

It would far exceed the limits of this work to enter into the detail of actions by or against husband and wife conjointly and separately, or into the consideration of whether she may sue or be sued alone, or whether she must be joined or not with her husband in an action by or against him; suffice it to observe, that in general, if the wife be injured in her person or property, she can bring no action for redress without her husband's concurrence, and in his name as well as her own; neither can she be sued without making the husband a defendant. But where the husband has abjured the realm or is transported (he being then considered dead in law), she may sue and be sued alone. These, however, are only general rules, liable to many exceptions.⁴

Inequity, by the intervention of a third person, who is termed prochein ami, or next friend, the wife may sue the husband. If the husband be guilty of ill usage towards his wife, she may obtain sureties from him to keep the peace, either by application to justices of peace, or to the courts of Chancery or Queen's Bench. So he is bound to maintain her, unless she elopes without good cause, or is guilty of adultery. Therefore he is liable for necessities supplied to her; or she may obtain an order for maintenance from a magistrate, or alimony by application to the ecclesiastical courts, &c.⁵

In criminal prosecutions, the wife may be indicted and punished separately; and where she receives stolen goods, or is guilty of riot, or of assault or battery, or of many other inferior misdemeanors, and the husband does not participate therein, she is the party responsible in the eye of the law. But it is otherwise if she commit any crime by coercion on his part or in his presence, short of felony or treason; for then he is the party liable.⁶

But in trials of any sort they are not allowed to be evidence against or for each other, where their rights may in any manner be affected by

¹ Dow's P. C., N. S., 5, 18.

² 1 Chit. Gen. Prac. 58.

³ If the deed of separation be properly prepared, there is no doubt of its validity.
--EDITOR.

⁴ See 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 448, and note 49, id.

⁵ 1 Chit. Gen. Prac. 60.

⁶ 1 Ch. Bla. Com. 443, n. 49; and see further, tit. Husband and Wife, in the Index.

the nature of the evidence. The rule is founded upon this, that, being but one person in law, it is a maxim that a party cannot be a witness in his own cause, neither can he be his own accuser. But there are exceptions; as where the accusation against the husband is the forcible abduction of the woman, or on an indictment against him for murder or the attempted murder of his wife, she, or her dying declaration, may then be evidence against him, and vice versâ. And by the Bankrupt act, 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 37, the commissioners may examine the wife in order to discover the bankrupt's estate, &c. And cases of high treason form another exception.

Upon the same principle, also, the admissions or declarations of one cannot be made available against the other. But there are exceptions also to this rule; as where the declarations are in the nature of facts. as the declaration by her, at the time of effecting a life policy, of the bad state of her health; and also where she is allowed to act as his agent, her declarations &c. are good evidence.¹

In case of her adultery, the adulterer is liable to an action for crim. con.; and if the guilty parties are taken in the fact, it would, at most, be but manslaughter if the husband kill the wrong-doer.

The husband has also, in case of necessity, the right to use moderate correction or coercion towards his wife; but if he exceed due bounds, she may exhibit articles of peace against him to insure her protection. The husband may also restrain the wife's liberty in case of any gross misbehaviour; in which case his right to do so may be tried by a writ of habeas corpus to any of the judges.² If she leave him, he has his remedy by habeas corpus to bring her back again; and a suit in the ecclesiastical court may in some instances be instituted by him for restitution of his conjugal rights, the sentence in which case will operate to her perpetual imprisonment unless she submit.

These, in the words of Sir Win. Blackstone, are the chief legal effects of marriage during coverture; upon which we may observe, that even the disabilities which the wife lies under are, for the most part, intended for her protection and benefit. So great a favourite is the female sex of the laws of England!³

CHAPTER XVII.

Of Parent and Child.

THE term child, in a strictly legal sense, is only applicable to those who are born legitimate; for a bastard is, in the eye of the law, regarded as nullius filius, or the child of no one. We shall therefore in the first place confine our observations to legitimate children, and afterwards consider those that are illegitimate.

In England, a child, to be legitimate, must be born during the continuance of the coverture, or within such a time after its cessation that it can be presumed to have been conceived before the coverture ceased; and there are cases where a child born forty-one weeks and four days after the husband's death was declared legitimate.¹

¹ 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 443, 444, and note 50.

² And See 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 444, 5, and notes.

³ Id.

I. LEGITIMATE CHILDREN.

We shall inquire into, 1. The legal duties of parents to maintain, protect, and educate their legitimate children; 2. Their powers over them; and 3. The legal duties of children towards their parents.

1. The Duties of Parents towards their Children.

Their maintenance by their parents by legal obligation has already been pointed out under the subject of the poor laws.² Independently of the enactments there referred to, there is no legal obligation on the part of parents to support their children. Therefore, unless there is either an express or an implied contract on the part of the father, he will not be liable even for the son's necessities; although at the same time there are cases in which an indictment at common law would lie against the father for neglecting to provide for his children.

A very slight degree of evidence is sufficient, however, to fix the father with an implied promise; and where the children of the wife by a prior marriage were received into, and held out by him to the world as part of his family, he was held liable for their necessities. But where the son was allowed money for these purposes, the presumption of contract could not be raised against the father; and if a tradesman furnishes clothes to an extravagant extent, the father is held not to be liable even for part of them. So also if the credit were given to the child alone, and not impliedly to the father. But where such credit was given to the son upon any fraudulent misrepresentation on the father's part, the latter was held responsible. In these cases the obligation on the father's part cannot arise after the child is twenty-one years old. But we shall see hereafter how far the infant himself is liable after he comes of age for debts contracted prior thereto.³

If a parent die without making a valid will, then indeed, by the Statute of Distributions, if a wife is also left, two thirds of his personal property go equally to the children and their lineal descendants, except such children, not heirs at law, who have an estate by settlement in the parent's life-time; if only children and no wife, are left, then it all goes to them, whether they are such by one, two, or more wives. Grandchildren only take between them the share to which their parent (father or mother), if living, would have been entitled to, and do not share equally with the children of the intestate, their aunts or uncles. Beyond this there is no obligation on a parent to leave his child any thing by his will.

If a father is possessed of real estate absolutely in fee simple, he may disinherit his heir; but courts of equity always regard heirs with compassion, and will always, if fairly possible, put a construction on a will unfavourable to disinheriting them. Further, an heir may in general, unless he is clearly debarred, have an issue devisavit vel non, as it is termed, directed by the Court of Chancery to be tried at law, in order to ascertain the validity of the will, whereby he is so apparently disinherited; and he is in other ways much favoured in equity, as by the power of inspecting the title deeds &c. disinheriting him.¹

¹ See, as to this, 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 445, note 17.

² See ante, p. 223, 4.

³ 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 448, and notes.

The law also favours bequests of property in favour of children before other persons; and a marriage and birth of a child is a revocation of a will made prior thereto. Courts of equity favour children in many other instances; as where a father having taken a security from a son for money advanced, destroyed the security, the court regarded it as a release of the debt.²

Purchases of the father in the name of the son, if not done with a view to defraud creditors, are regarded as purchases for the son's benefit; and though in some cases a legacy left to a creditor is regarded as a satisfaction of the debt, yet the slightest circumstance is taken hold of to prevent that construction where the son is his father's creditor.³

Where under statutory enactments the father is, as before observed, bound to maintain an infant, an indictment may be preferred for the neglect, or an order of maintenance obtained from a magistrate. But the mother is in no case bound to support her children during their father's life-time. Thus, where the father was not of ability to support the children, and although the mother was, yet the Court of Chancery directed a portion of the children's property to be advanced for their maintenance;⁴ and that, though their father was dead, and the mother had married a second time.⁵ Among the higher classes of society, where proper maintenance and education are withheld, the Court of Chancery is the proper court to apply to.⁶

As to the protection of children: this the law permits rather than enjoins, feeling that nature in this respect requires rather to be controuled than forced. A father has such an interest in the person of his child, that at any age he may justify his defence, even by forcible means. And where a man's son was beaten by another boy, and the father went near a mile to find him, and there revenged his son's quarrel so that death involuntarily happened, the father was held only guilty of manslaughter, and not of murder.⁷ He has generally a right to the custody of his infant son and daughter, and may legally retake them, or may have an habeas corpus to restore them to his custody. He may support an action of trespass for the seduction of his female child whilst resident with him, per quod servitium amisit; but not in respect of the mere parental right, for no such action can be supported, unless it occasion an actual loss to the parent, as in strictness no damages are recoverable in any case for an injury merely to parental feelings; and yet it has been held to be no ground for a new trial, that the judge, in an action for debauching a daughter, admitted evidence of a promise of marriage, though such proof probably increased the verdict, without evidence of any real greater damage to the parent in the character of master.

The taking away a daughter under the age of sixteen, or the stealing of a child under ten years, are punishable, the former as a misdemeanor, the latter as a felony.⁸

¹ See Chit. Eq. Index, 485.

² 2 Sm. & S. 254.

³ See Chit. Eq. Index, 733, 4.

⁴ Mad. 275.

⁵ 1 Bro. C. C. 268.

⁶ 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 65.

⁷ 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 449, 50.

⁸ 9 Geo. IV. c. 31.

The parent has also, in general, a right to direct and controul the education and care of his child, so as to compel him to receive his education at a particular school or college, and may delegate that care to other proper persons; and a court of equity will lend its aid to enforce obedience. It is an established doctrine, that a parent may justify the correction of his child either corporally or by confinement; and a schoolmaster, under whose care and instruction a parent has placed his child, may equally justify similar correction. But the correction must be moderate, and in a proper manner.¹

So also a father may maintain a suit for his infant child; as also may any person as a prochein ami, in equity, where the interests of the father and child are at variance; which is contrary to the general law, which provides against the maintenance of law-suits by parties not directly interested therein.²

With respect to the duties of parents to educate their children, they are not enforced by the municipal laws of this country, natural affection in general forming a sufficient inducement to the observance of them; the only exception to this act of non-intervention being that whereby poor children may be bound as parish apprentices, as we have already shown.³ And we may as well here remark, that where a child is a ward of the Court of Chancery, that court will take care that the child is educated in a style suitable to its expectations.

2. The Powers of Parents over their Children.

Under this head (having already pointed out, under the subject of the protection of children, the coercive powers of parents) we may here make the only remaining observations upon this topic, namely, how the power of parents may be controlled by the Court of Chancery &c., the Court of Queen's Bench having no power directly to do so;⁴ and we will add a few observations on wards of court generally.

The consent of parents is necessary, as we have already shown, to the marriage of infants.⁵

A father has no power over his child's estate, being considered as a mere trustee, and liable to account to the child when he arrives at the age of twenty-one; but he is entitled to the profits of a child's labours so long as he is living with his parent, till he is of age. But he has no common law right to bind him apprentice against his consent. And all power ceases at the age of twenty-one; but till then, as we shall presently more fully show, the father, on his death, has the power to appoint a testamentary guardian (as he is termed) by his will.

The crown is the general guardian of all children, and its care is delegated to the Court of Chancery, neither of the other courts having any authority over them. The Court of Chancery may therefore appoint for an infant a guardian ad litem, that is, to sue or to defend a suit. It may also appoint guardians to consent to their marriage, and in other instances of necessity. This court, however, only exercises its powers where they have property, and are made wards of court; for which purpose it is merely necessary to file a bill in equity in their behalf.

¹ 1 Chit. Gen. Prac. 63, 4.

² See Chit. Eq. Index, tit. ChamPERTY, p. 200.

³ See ante, p. 273.

⁴ 5 East, 221; 10 Ves. 58, 59.

⁵ See ante, tit. MARRIAGE, p. 309.

This done, the court has very large powers for the infant's benefit. It will go so far as even to remove a child from its father's custody, where it may be prejudicial to its general good to suffer it to remain with the parent, as was done in the late case of Mr. Wellesley.¹ And the court will also restrain the father, under circumstances sufficiently strong, from taking his child out of the jurisdiction of the court, as for instance to Scotland.

Where a child is in the sole custody or control of the father, or of any person by his authority, or of a guardian after the death of the father, provision is made by a recent act, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, for the mother's access to it, at such times and under such regulations as the lord chancellor or master of the rolls shall order, upon the hearing of the petition of the mother; and if the child be under seven years of age, it may be delivered into her custody until it attain that age. But neither the custody of the child, nor access to it, can be thus granted to a mother against whom adultery has been established.

With respect to testamentary guardians, the 12 Car. II. c. 24 enables the father (though not the mother) to appoint such guardians by his will until the child be twenty-one years of age, whose power continues in the case of a son until that period even though he marry; but in the case of a daughter, her marriage puts an end to the guardianship. The father's power of appointment extends to all his legitimate children under twenty-one, and unmarried at his decease, or born after; but not to a natural child, though the court will, unless a sufficient reason be given for the rejection, adopt this nomination.

A testamentary guardian has all the powers of a father, and is also subject to the controul of the court in case of misbehaviour. So if several guardians are appointed and one dies, the other stands in his place; for the party dying could not in any manner delegate or assign his authority to another. A stranger cannot appoint such guardian; though if he attempts to do so, the court will take care that the child is educated according to his expectations. Neither has a grandfather power to make such appointment. At the same time any party may leave property to an infant on condition of the father's acquiescing in the donor's appointment; but if the father refuse to accede, then the infant's interest is forfeited; though if there be a gift in the will to the father also, and he accept it, knowing the consequences, the father's assent is presumed, and the appointment will stand good.

Before acting, which is virtually an acceptance of the office, the guardian may refuse to take the burden of the office upon him, though not after he has acted; and in case of a refusal before acting, new guardians are appointed by the court on petition.

There are cases in which the property of the infant being inconsiderable, a guardian has been appointed (the father being an improvident person) without a bill filed, and merely on a petition; and sometimes it is done without even a reference to the master to inquire if it be expedient, which is in general ordered. The conduct of an ordinary guardian may be called in question before the court by petition, but the testamentary guardian will only be displaced on a bill filed. A testamentary guardian, and still less an ordinary guardian, cannot change the nature of the infant's estate; he cannot sell real estate, and convert it into personal; nor with the personal estate buy real, and so convert it into real. If he do so, the money produced in the former case, on the child's death, passes to the representatives of the infant as real estate; and in the latter case the real estate purchased passes as the personal would. Otherwise, great injury might arise to the infant's heir or next of kin.

¹ 2 Russel, 1; 2 Bli. N. S. 124; 1 Dow, N. S. 154.

The guardian is the proper judge at what school to place his ward; and the court will not indulge the infant in being put with a private tutor, or in changing his school; and if he should refuse to go to school, will compel him. But in the case of a female ward above the age of puberty and marriage, some weight will be given to her inclination, as to with whom she should reside and be educated.

If guardians disagree as to the management of their ward, the guardianship devolves upon the court; and where there were differences between guardians as to the education of the ward, parol evidence was held to be admissible of the intent of the father. Indeed, in such cases, all sorts of evidence, it has been said, are received, to govern the court in its discretion.¹

The court, unless the father is of ability to do so by his own means, usually directs part of the interest of an infant's property to be devoted to the maintenance and education of the infant; the amount so applied being proportioned to the value of the property. This allowance is given to the father and mother, or other person who has the charge of the infant, for its maintenance; and in some instances the court has allowed even the capital itself to be broken in upon for a child's advancement and putting out into the world; but this always requires the sanction of the court.

With regard to the marriage of infant wards of court, the sanction of the court is always requisite, or the parties concerned in its completion may be severely punished, there being nothing of which the court is more jealous than its protection of infants and their marriages. And where, upon the slightest evidence, there is an anticipation of an attempt of this nature, the court will restrain the least communication between the parties by letter or otherwise. It will remove a guardian who gives the least sanction to such an event; and all persons abetting are guilty of a contempt of the court, and may be punished by imprisonment, or even indicted. The husband also may be imprisoned and debarred of his wife's visits till he conform and make such settlement of the wife's property on her as the court shall approve of, which sometimes goes the length of depriving the husband (as in case he has no property) of any participation whatever in the ward's fortune.

Infant Mortgagees, &c.—Arising out of the general incapacity of infants is the doctrine of infant trustees and mortgagees. Before the 7 Ann. c. 19, if an estate descended to an infant as a trustee or mortgagee, as he had no power to execute any deed or conveyance, the cestui que trust, or the mortgagee, was put to the incalculable inconvenience of having to wait till the infant came of age before he could have his estate re-conveyed to him. To remedy this, the above and subsequent statutes have from time to time been made, and finally the

¹ Mad. Chan. 311.

1 Wm. IV. c. 60, which consolidates them, and provides, by § 4, that, by the direction of the Court of Chancery, such infants shall be empowered to convey as effectually as though they were of full age, and by § 5, where the property is situate within a county palatine or in the principality of Wales, by the direction of the palatine court. If they refuse to convey, then the court is empowered by § 22 to appoint new trustees for the purpose. This, however, only extends to what are termed bare trusts, namely, where the infant trustee has no interest, nor any duty to perform beyond that of merely conveying.

3. The legal duties of children towards their parents lie in a very narrow compass. They are, as we have already shown,¹ bound to maintain their parents, in case of their ability to do so, where the latter are unable to maintain themselves. And children are justified in defending their parents by force, or maintaining a suit or cause for them.

II. BASTARDS.—1. Who are Bastards.

A bastard is a person who is not only begotten, but is born also, out of lawful matrimony. If he be begotten before marriage, and the parties marry, the offspring born after marriage is not a bastard, and is regarded as a child of the husband, whether in fact so or not. If an infant is born so long after the death of the husband that it could not have been begotten by him, the infant is a bastard. We have already shown that no precise limit is fixed as to this time, and we mentioned the case of a child born forty-one weeks and three days after her husband's death having been held to be legitimate.

Where a widow is or pretends to be with child after her husband's death, his collateral heir may, in order to ascertain the fact, have a writ de ventre inspiciendo, on which the widow's person is examined by a jury of matrons, who determine whether she is with child or not; and if she be so, she may be kept within proper restraint till the birth. If not, such collateral heir is entitled to have the estate, though liable to lose it again if a child be born within forty weeks from the death of the husband, or such further time as that, in the course of nature, the child could have been begotten during wedlock.

If a child be born in wedlock, but by reason of the absence of the husband the impossibility of his access to his wife is shown, the child may be declared a bastard. But access is always presumed until the impossibility be shown. So where the husband is physically impotent, the wife's offspring is illegitimate. On a divorce à vinculo matrimonii, as the marriage is presumed illegal from the beginning, all the issue are bastards. After a divorce à mensâ et thoro, non-access is presumed until the contrary be shown; but on a separation by agreement, access is presumed in the first instance.

2. The Duty of Parents towards their illegitimate Children.

This principally consists in their obligation to maintain them.

Before the passing of the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, when a woman was delivered of a bastard child, and charged any person on oath as being the father of it, he might, at the instance of the overseers or other parish officers, be immediately apprehended and committed, if he did not give security to appear at the sessions, that an order for its maintenance might be made on him. He was also chargeable for the surgeon's bill and other expences attending the birth, his apprehension, and the order of filiation; though these were subject to the discretion and allowance of the magistrates or a court of quarter sessions. If, on examination, the mother refused to answer questions put to her, she might be committed; but she was not compellable to appear and be examined till the expiration of one month after her delivery. An order might be made on her alone, or on her conjointly with the man. Either the overseers or the parties charged might appeal to the sessions against the order; and it might be removed into the Court of Queen's Bench for final decision. The order could be enforced by proceeding on the recognizance, by commitment of the party, or by sale of his property if he ran away, or, upon an order of the Court of Queen's Bench, by attachment, or by indictment. Besides being thus obliged to provide for such children, the parents were liable to be committed to prison, at the discretion of justices, for any time not exceeding a twelvemonth and not less than six months; though the woman could not be committed till a month after her delivery.

But by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76 (Poor Law Amendment Act) all former statutory provisions as to the indemnity of parishes against the charge of bastards born after the passing of that act were repealed. No sureties could be required before the birth, nor any order of filiation made upon the father after the birth. Nor could either the father or mother be punished in respect thereof. When, however, by reason of the inability of the mother to provide for its maintenance, the child became actually chargeable, the overseers or guardians might, on giving the father fourteen days notice, apply to the quarter sessions for an order to reimburse the parish for its maintenance; and if they suspected that he was likely to abscond, might summon him before a justice, who, on being satisfied of such his intention, could require him to give security for his appearance at the sessions, or in default thereof commit him until the application should be heard. If the sessions were satisfied that the party charged was really the father, it might make such order as should appear just and reasonable under all the circumstances of the case, not exceeding the actual expences incurred or to be incurred for the maintenance of the child, to continue in force until the child should attain the age of seven years; and if the court thought fit, the costs of the child's maintenance might be reckoned from the birth, if within six months of the hearing of the application, or otherwise from the commencement of the preceding six months. But no such order could be made unless the evidence of the mother were corroborated in some material particular by other testimony; and no part of the money paid by the father was to be given to the mother, or in any way applied to her support. If the court did not make an order, the expences of resisting the application were paid by the overseers or guardians; and if an order were made, the putative father might appeal against it to a subsequent sessions.

Now, however, by 7 & 8 Vic. c. 101, all previous powers of making an order upon any putative father for the maintenance of a bastard child have been repealed, and other provisions are substituted to the following effect.¹

Any single woman being with child, or having been delivered of a bastard child, may, either before the birth, or at any time within twelve months afterwards, or at any time thereafter upon proof that the father has within twelve months after the birth of the child paid money for its maintenance, make application to a justice of peace acting for the place in which she resides for a summons to be served on the man alleged by her to be the father of the child; making a deposition upon oath, if the application is before the birth, stating who is the father of the child; and such justice shall thereupon issue his summons to the alleged father to appear at a petty session to be holden after the expiration of six days at least for the petty sessional division, city, borough, or other place for which such justice usually acts. And the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 10, reciting that doubts had been entertained as to the time to be fixed by the justice for the appearance of the man so summoned at the petty session, enacts, that the justice to whom any application is made by any such woman being pregnant shall summon the man to appear at some petty session to be held on a day after the time when the mother shall expect the child to be born: providing, that if on such day the woman shall not have been delivered, or the justices at the petty sessions shall be satisfied that she has been delivered at so short a period before such day that she cannot appear at the same session, they may adjourn the hearing until some other day, and so from time to time until the child shall have been born and the woman shall be able to attend.

And after the birth of the child, on the appearance of the person so summoned, or on proof that the summons was duly served, the justices in petty session shall hear the evidence of the woman, and such other evidence as she may produce, and also any evidence tendered by or on behalf of the alleged father; and if the evidence of the mother be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony, they may adjudge the man to be the putative father of such bastard child; and may also, if they see fit, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, proceed to make an order on him for the payment to the mother of a sum of money weekly, and of the costs incurred in obtaining the order, including, if they think proper, 10s. for the midwife, and 10s. towards the funeral expences if the child have died before the making of the order. And if the application be made before the birth of the child, or within two calendar months afterwards, such weekly sum may be calculated from the birth, at a rate not exceeding 5s. per week for the first six weeks; but in other cases not exceeding 2s. 6d. per week from the time of making the application.²

At such petty sessions the woman may be assisted, and the alleged father may appear and make answer, by counsel or attorney.³

The petty sessions may adjourn the hearing of the case as often as may seem fit. But no order shall be made unless applied for at such sessions within the space of forty days from the service of the summons after the birth of the child. But the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 10, enacts, that it shall be lawful for the petty session to make an order in respect of an application made to a justice by such woman so pregnant, if she apply to the petty session within two calendar months from the birth of the child, although more than forty days have elapsed from the time when the summons was served.

¹ This act has been amended by the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 10, which provides forms to be used for the various proceedings in bastardy, the want of which had given rise to much uncertainty as to the validity of orders previously made under it.

² Any one magistrate of a police court in the Metropolitan Police District may issue summonses, and exercise all the powers in matters of bastardy, which may be done elsewhere by the justices at petty sessions.—8 & 9 Vic. c. 10, § 9. ³ Ibid. § 7.

If at any time after one month from the making of the order it be made appear to any one justice, upon oath or affirmation, that any sum due in pursuance of such order has not been paid, such justice may, by his warrant, cause the father to be brought before two justices; and in case he neglect or refuse to pay the sums due, together with the costs attending the warrant, apprehension, and bringing up, such justices may direct the same to be recovered by distress and sale of his goods and chattels, and may order him to be detained until return can be made to the warrant of distress, unless he give sufficient security for his appearance before two justices on the day appointed for the return, such day not being more than seven days from the time of taking the security. If upon the return of the warrant, or by the admission of such putative father, it appear that no sufficient distress can be had,⁴ such justices may, by their warrant, cause the putative father to be committed to the common gaol or house of correction for any term not exceeding three calendar months, unless such sum and costs with the charges be sooner paid. But if the woman have allowed the weekly payments to be in arrear for more than thirteen weeks without application to a justice, the man shall not be called upon to pay more than the amount due for thirteen weeks in discharge of the whole debt.

The putative father may appeal against the order to the quarter sessions, upon giving notice within twenty-four hours to the mother, and within seven days entering into security by recognizance or otherwise before a justice of peace for the payment of costs.⁵

On the trial of the appeal, the quarter sessions shall hear the evidence of the mother and such other evidence as she may produce, and any evidence on behalf of the appellant; but shall not confirm the order unless the evidence of the mother be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony.⁶

All money payable under the order shall be paid to the mother so long as she lives and is of sound mind, and is not in any gaol or prison, or under sentence of transportation. But in case of her death, or if she become of unsound mind, or be confined in a gaol or prison, or under sentence of transportation, two justices may appoint some person to have the custody of the child, who may apply for and ⁴ Within the jurisdiction of such justices 8 & 9 Vic. c. 10, § 8.

⁵ Notice of his having entered into such recognizance must be forthwith sent to the woman, and (unless it be entered into before one of the justices who made the order) to one at least of such justices; otherwise the appeal will not be allowed. Notice by post is sufficient.—8 & 9 Vic. c. 10, § 3.

The putative father may abandon the appeal at any time before the hearing, and save his recognizance, by giving notice in writing to the justice before whom it was taken, and to the mother, and paying her all sums then due and the expences of the appeal.—Ibid. § 5.

⁶ 8 & 9 Vic. c. 10, § 6.

recover all payments due under the order, so long as the child is not chargeable to any parish or union, in the same manner as the mother might have done.⁷

No order for the maintenance of a bastard child in pursuance of this act shall, except for the purpose of recovering money previously due, be of any force after the child has attained the age of thirteen years, or after the marriage of the mother, or the death of the child.

Every woman neglecting to maintain her bastard child, being able wholly or in part so to do, whereby it becomes chargeable to any parish or union, shall be punished as an idle and disorderly person under the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83 (Vagrant Act); and every woman so neglecting to maintain her bastard child, after having been once before convicted of such offence, and every woman deserting her bastard child, whereby it becomes chargeable to any parish or union, shall be punishable as a rogue and vagabond under the said act.

The settlement of a bastard born since the passing of the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76 (Poor Law Amendment Act) follows that of the mother until the child attain the age of sixteen, or acquire a settlement in his own right. And the mother, as long as she is unmarried or a widow, is bound to maintain such child until the age of sixteen, or till marriage if a female; and all relief to it is considered as granted to the mother. But if she marry, her husband will be bound to maintain all her children, legitimate or illegitimate, as part of his family, and will be chargeable with all relief granted to them until they arrive at the age of sixteen, or till the death of the mother.

3. The Rights and Incapacities of Bastards.

A bastard can inherit nothing; for, being regarded in law as the child of no one, he can take nothing by descent, not even his surname, though he may acquire that by reputation. Nevertheless, the law prohibits him from marrying with his putative sisters or his mother; and if under age, the consent of his putative father or guardian specially appointed is necessary to his marriage by licence. The father has no right to the custody of such child during its infancy, the mother having the preference.

Neither can he have heirs, except those descending lineally from his own body; though he may be made legitimate by act of parliament. A bastard cannot take any thing under a will under the description of children, though he may if properly described. Neither can he take upon a limitation while en ventre sa mere; for he can gain no name by reputation until he is born, and the law is against the presumption of a woman being with child of a bastard. If he die seised of real estate of inheritance, intestate and without issue, the estate goes to the crown or other immediate lord of the fee. But this is usually given to his family, the crown reserving perhaps a tenth part of it.

Though in favour of children courts of equity sometimes supply defects in conveyances, as in surrenders of copyhold, yet they will not do so in favour of bastards.

⁷ The clerk to the justices making an order on the putative father, or appointing a person to have the custody of the child, shall send a duplicate of each order or appointment to the clerk to the guardians of the union or parish in which the mother resides at the time of making the order or appointment.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Of Guardian and Ward, and of Infants in General.

WE have already shown that the father is the proper guardian of a child while living, and that he has also the power to appoint guardians to his children by his will, which subject has been already fully discussed. It also seems, that if no guardian is otherwise appointed, an infant, either before or after fourteen years old, may appoint to himself a guardian, by writing or parol; but this does not preclude the Court of Chancery from appointing another. Guardians ad litem may also be appointed at the will of the infant, either by a court of common law or of equity, or by a judge at chambers.

A guardian has all the power over his ward which a father would have; though, like the father, he is in fact a mere trustee, accountable to the infant when of age, and responsible for all acts of wilful neglect and default, unless he act under the authority of the Court of Chancery. He can do nothing but for the benefit of the ward. Thus, he cannot purchase from or sell to the ward an estate. He cannot present to a church. But leases made by him for any period till the ward is twenty-one years old, may be good; and even if they extend beyond that time, they are only voidable, not void.

An act of partition, if otherwise equal and fair, made by a guardian, will bind the ward. A guardian ought to sell all moveables in a reasonable time, and turn them into money or land, unless the ward is near of age and may then want them. And he will be liable for interest of money in his hands which might have been put out at interest. He cannot change the nature of the ward's property without the sanction of the court, or unless it is obviously for the ward's benefit. If he take a bond for a debt as arrears of interest, where by suing &c. he might have obtained the money, he will be held responsible on the bond. He may pay out of the profits of an estate the interest of real incumbrances, though not of any other; yet he cannot borrow money for that purpose, so as to make the ward or his estate liable.

As questions of the liability of guardians so often arise, it is generally preferable for them to take the advice of the Court of Chancery before they do any important act. They are always, except in a very gross case, allowed the costs of so doing; and they may, without it, bring themselves into considerable difficulty. The answer of an infant, which must be put in by his guardian for him, and is in fact the guardian's answer, cannot be read against the ward, though it may against the guardian.

They are not allowed any thing out of the ward's estate for their personal trouble; but, in their accounts, all just allowances and reasonable expences are given to them. If they are robbed of the infant's property, or it be lost by unavoidable accident, they are not liable.

But all transactions and settlements between the guardian and ward are closely watched. Accounts settled during nonage are liable to be gone over again; though if a receiver be appointed, his accounts with the guardian cannot. Gifts or advantages made by the ward to the guardian are in general regarded as void, the guardian being supposed to have too great a control over the ward; and this is extended to gifts &c. even after the ward becomes of age, if shortly following that event, and there is the least ground to suppose an undue influence was exercised.

It is to be observed, that a guardian may use almost any means to prevent a marriage of his ward without proper consent. He may detain her clothes, &c.; and a carrier by whom they are sent is justified in delivering them up to the guardian.¹

With respect to the full age of infants, it is different for different purposes in males and females. A male at twelve can take the oath of allegiance; at fourteen is at years of discretion, may consent or disagree to marriage, may choose his guardian, and, if his discretion were actually proved, might, before the passing of the recent Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), make his will of personal estate; at seventeen he may be executor, though not an administrator; and at twenty-one he is at his own disposal in all things. A female at twelve may agree to marriage, and, if of real discretion, might (before the 1 Vict. c. 26) make a will of personal estate; at fourteen she may choose a guardian; and as to the rest, the same as a male.

The law knows in these cases no division of a day; therefore if a child is born one minute before twelve o'clock at night on the 16th February, it will be of age on the first minute after twelve on the 15th February twenty-one years thence, though in fact nearly forty-eight hours short of twenty-one years of actual existence.

Infant's General Disabilities.

These are rather immunities than disabilities, being intended to prevent them from injuring themselves by their own improvidence. Thus, as we have seen, they must sue and be sued by a guardian, or by a prochein ami. In criminal cases they cannot be capitally convicted under seven years of age; and it depends on the consciousness of good and evil in their minds until fourteen years old; after which time there is no doubt of their being responsible for all criminal acts.

With respect to civil immunities, an infant cannot be barred by non-claim or neglect of demand, nor laches, except in some very particular cases. He cannot in general bind himself by any contract, but that it is, after he comes of age, voidable. Yet he can present to a vacant benefice; and he may bind himself apprentice for seven years. And he will be liable for necessities supplied to him while under age according to his rank and condition in life; what are necessities always depending on the particular circumstances.

If, however, an infant holds any corporate character, he may in such corporate character exercise rights, and do acts, as persons of full age.

He may in general hold the office of park-keeper, forester, gaoler, sheriff, &c.; but not any offices in the administration of public justice, or of pecuniary trust, or where he cannot appoint a deputy. He cannot sit in either house of parliament, nor be a juror, nor a mayor of a corporation.²

¹ 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 63, notes.

² See 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 464—6, and notes.

CHAPTER XIX.

Of Idiots and Lunatics.

NON COMPOS MENTIS is a genus of four kinds:¹ 1. Idiots, who are of non-sane memory from their birth by a perpetual infirmity; and therefore persons are not such who have a glimmering of reason. But a man born deaf, dumb, and blind, is looked on in law as an idiot necessarily. 2. Those who lose their memory or understanding by the visitation of God, as by sickness or other accident. 3. Lunatics, who are periodically possessed of sane moments. 4. Drunhards.¹

By the 17 Edw. II. st. 1. cc. 9, 10, the crown has the guardianship of idiots and lunatics and their property; but the statute did not give the guardianship of their copyhold lands, on account of the prejudice which would accrue to the lord of the manor.

By the old common law there was a writ to inquire whether a man were an idiot, which was tried by a jury of twelve men; and if found purus idiota, the profits of his lands and the custody of his person were granted by the crown to some subject who had interest enough to obtain them.

Now the custody of lunatics &c. is generally committed to the lord chancellor, a jurisdiction not annexed to the office of the custody of the great seal, but granted to him by special authority under the queen's sign manual for this purpose. Hence no appeal lies in lunacy from the chancellor to any one but the queen in council.² Neither has the master of the rolls any jurisdiction in lunacy.³

An idiot is presumed in law to be incapable of ever attaining a competent degree of understanding to govern either himself or his estate;⁴ therefore the crown may grant the custody of his person and the profits of his estate during the life of the idiot, without rendering any account, except for necessaries. However, since the Revolution, the crown has always granted the surplus profits of the estate of an idiot to some of his family.⁵ But of a lunatic's estate the crown is merely a trustee, since such a person is presumed in law capable of recovering his understanding; the custody, therefore, of his person and estate is granted to one or more persons, styled his committee, only during the lord chancellor's pleasure; and this committee, deducting a suitable maintenance for the lunatic and his immediate family, if any, shall account to the lord chancellor for the surplus profits, and pay them over, either to the lunatic, if he recover, or to his legal personal representative after his death.⁶

A commission of lunacy is obtained by presenting a petition to the lord chancellor, accompanied by sufficient affidavits, that an inquisition may be ordered. On this a commission issued under the great seal, formerly to one or more commissioners appointed for the occasion, who thereupon sent their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury; or, where the property was small, a less expence was incurred by a reference to a master in chancery, who declared the state of mind

¹ Roehfort v. Ely, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 532, App. Chit. Burn. J. 563.

² Mad. Chan. 724, and Casca, n. (s).

³ Id., and 1 Collinson, 105.

⁴ Beverley's Ca. 4 Co. 126; 2 Inst. 11; Reg. Brev. 267; F. N. B. 532.

⁵ 1 Ridgw. P. C. 519, App. n. 1

⁶ Id. 520, App. n. 1.

of the party.¹ But, by the 5 & 6 Vic. c. 84, the lord chancellor was empowered to appoint two perpetual commissioners, who are now (8 & 9 Vic. c. 100) called "Masters in Lunacy," to whom, or one of whom, all commissions in the nature of writs De lunatico inquirendo are directed, and all matters connected with the persons and estates of lunatics are referred.

When a party is found lunatic, committees of his person and estate are appointed. The committee is allowed a sum certain out of the lunatic's property for his maintenance and support,² always having regard to the present comfort and interest of the lunatic, rather than to the future interest of the next of kin; though sometimes the court will order an allowance to be paid to some of the relatives.³

As to the right of the party or his friends to quarrel with the finding of the jury (which is called traversing the inquisition), the right exists that the party be examined by the lord chancellor in the Court of Chancery personally;⁴ and this right cannot be refused.⁵

All acts done by a person non compos mentis are void. He is wholly incapable of doing any act in the eye of the law; but he cannot himself avoid them.⁶ But mere weakness of mind is not sufficient to set aside an act done by its possessor, unless fraud be shewn by the other party,⁷ in which case equity will interpose, even where such weakness proceeds from drunkenness, if it be contrived by such other party.⁸ But the law does not regard drunkenness as a general excuse for any crime or folly, holding the maxim, "Qui peccat ebrius, luat sobrius."

A lunatic may, in a sane or lucid interval, contract a marriage; but otherwise it is absolutely void.⁹ To make a will, he ought to have a disposing memory, and it must be during a lucid interval, when he is able to make a disposition of his estate with understanding and reason.¹⁰ He cannot be punished for crime, but a person inciting him thereto shall be regarded as the principal offender; but he, or rather his estate, is liable for civil offences, and in certain cases of contract, as for necessities.¹¹

The committee of a lunatic, under the authority of the court, or by act of parliament, act for him. Thus, by 11 Geo. III. c. 30, the committee, under sanction of the court, may renew leases upon lives, may execute a power of leasing,¹² and may sell or charge lands to pay debts of lunatic, or expences of the commission of lunacy. But the surplus of the sale, after the purposes thereof are answered, go to the heir or next of kin, in the same manner as the property would have done if it had not been sold. So, by 1 Wm. IV. c. 65, with such sanction, he may make agreements touching the lunatic's estate, grant leases, con-

¹ 2 Mad. Chan. 726, 732.

² See id. 740, &c.; and Chit. Eq. Index, 671, 2.

³ 2 Mad. Chan. 743; and as to the mode of the committee's passing his accounts, see id. 744.

⁴ Exp. Southeste, Amb. 109; 2 Mad. Chan. 726. See generally as to traverse, and by whom, cases in 1 Chit. Ind. 670; 2 Mad. Chan. 734 et post.

⁵ Sherwood v. Sanderson, 19 Ves. 280; Exp. Ferne, 5 Ves. 832; Exp. Wragg, id. 450.

⁶ Beverley's Case, 4 Rep. 123; Foster v. Marchant, 1 Vern. 262.

⁷ Osmond v. Fitzroy, 3 P. W. 130; 1 H. P. C. 29, 30.

⁸ Cook v. Clayworth, 18 Ves. 12; Kendrick v. Hopkins, Cary, 33; 1 Inst. 247; 1 Hawk. c. 1, § 6; 1 H. P. C. 32; 1 Chit. Burn. Just. 100, tit. Alcohol.

⁹ 3 Ch. Burn. J. 665; 15 Geo. II. c. 30

¹⁰ 6 Co. Rep. 23; 3 Ch. Burn. J. 665.

¹¹ 3 Ch. Burn. Just. 663.

¹² Foster v. Marchant, 1 Vern. 262.

vey in performance of contract, and surrender or renew leases. So he may transfer and convey stock belonging to the lunatic, or standing in his name as trustee, and may sell lands for payment of debts.¹

The statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 74 provides for the lunacy of trustees and mortgagees generally.

Board of Visitors of Lunatics.—As these unfortunate persons are necessarily subject to the control of others, who might sometimes be tempted to abuse the powers entrusted to them, the legislature has interfered in a variety of ways for their protection. The act 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 36 empowered the lord chancellor to appoint a Board of Visitors, consisting of three physicians and one barrister, with a secretary, for superintending, inspecting, and reporting upon the care and treatment of all persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind by inquisition; and the two commissioners, now masters in lunacy, appointed under the 5 & 6 Vic. c. 84, are ex officio visitors jointly with this board. Every person found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind by inquisition, must be visited at least once a year by one of such medical visitors, and a report made to the lord chancellor of the state of mind and bodily health, general condition, and the care and treatment of each such person. Such reports to be filed in the office of the visitors, but kept secret (being open only to the inspection of the visitors, their secretary, and the lord chancellor, or such persons as he may specially appoint), and to be destroyed on the death of the patient, or on the supersedeas of the commission. For defraying the expences of the board, the lord chancellor may order a per-centage, not exceeding $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, on the annual income of each lunatic, to be paid by the committee or receiver of his estate.

Lunatic Asylums, &c.—The asylums for the reception of lunatics, both of a public and private nature, have also been made the subjects of strict legislative regulation. The last statute, which, repealing all prior enactments, consolidates the law on this subject, is the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 100. By this act a board is appointed, called “The Commissioners in Lunacy,” for the purpose of licensing and visiting houses for the reception of insane persons in London and Westminster, the county of Middlesex, and borough of Southwark, and every other place within seven miles of the said cities and boroughs; all which places are styled in the act “the immediate jurisdiction” of the commissioners. Elsewhere the quarter sessions have the like authority to license such houses, and appoint visitors thereof, as also to appoint either the clerk of the peace or some other person to act as clerk to such visitors.

The commissioners meet on the first Wednesday in February, May, July, and November; and persons desirous of having a house licensed for the reception of lunatics within the immediate jurisdiction of the commissioners must give fourteen clear days notice to the commissioners prior to one of such meetings. Elsewhere a like notice is to be given to the clerk of the peace previous to the general quarter sessions. Such notice must contain the name of the person applying, and (if he does not intend to reside in the house himself) the name and previous occupation of the proposed superintendent, and if for a house not previously licensed, must be accompanied with a plan of the premises, on a scale of at least one-eighth of an inch to a foot, with a full description thereof, and of the greatest number of patients proposed to be received therein. In case of any future alteration in the premises, a similar notice must be given. Any untrue statement is a misdemeanor.

¹ See 43 Geo. III. c. 75, § 3; 58 Geo. IV. c. 78, extending these provisions III. c. 80, § 2, extending to copyholds; to Ireland; and 1 Wm. IV. c. 65.

Licences are granted for not exceeding thirteen calendar months; and a fee of 10s. for every patient, and 2s. 6d. for every parish pauper proposed to be received, (not being in any case less than 15l.) is payable thereon, besides the stamp duty, which is 10s. But if a licence is granted for a shorter period, the commissioners or justices may reduce the payment to not less than 5l.

Every licensed house containing 100 patients must have a resident physician, surgeon, or apothecary; and every house containing less than 100 and more than 50 must be visited twice a week by a physician, surgeon, or apothecary. The commissioners or visitors, however, may permit any house licensed for less than 11 patients to be visited by the medical attendant once in four weeks, instead of twice a week. Such resident or visiting medical attendant must draw up and sign a statement once a week of the health of all the patients and of the condition of the house, to be entered in a book, called "The Medical Visitation Book," which is to be kept in every such house, and regularly laid before the visitors.

Three commissioners are to visit all licensed houses within their jurisdiction four times a year at least, without notice; and two visitors are to visit houses licensed at quarter sessions twice a year. A book is to be kept, called "The Visitors' Book," for the result of inspection and inquiries; and another called "The Patients' Book," for observations as to the state of the patients. A copy of the plan given on obtaining the licence must also be hung up, and a queen's printers' copy of this act bound up in the Visitors' Book.

Two or more commissioners, or any two visitors, may visit any house at night.

No person (except a parish pauper) is to be admitted into any licensed house without an order under the hand of the person by whom he is sent according to the form in Schedule C, and a medical certificate of two physicians, surgeons, or apothecaries, who have separately examined the patient not more than seven days previous. If special circumstances, however, prevent the patient being examined by two medical practitioners, he may be admitted upon a certificate signed by one, provided it state such special circumstances, and be signed by some other medical practitioner within three days after admission. No parish pauper is to be admitted without an order under the hand and seal of a justice, or under the hand of the officiating clergyman and one of the overseers of the poor, and also a medical certificate by one physician, surgeon, and apothecary. At the time of admission of any patient a minute must be entered, in a book kept for the purpose according to Schedule E, of the name of the patient, and also of the name, occupation, and place of abode of the person by whom the patient is brought; and, within two days afterwards, the proprietor or superintendent must send a copy of the order and medical certificate, with a notice according to Schedule E, to the commissioners, and another copy to the clerk of the visitors.

Within two days after the death, discharge, or removal of a patient, the proprietor or superintendent must make an entry in a book kept for the purpose according to Schedule G 1, and within the same time send a notice thereof and of the cause of death, according to Schedule G 2, to the commissioners, or to the clerk of the visitors, if out of the commissioners' jurisdiction.

Any person keeping a house for the reception of two or more insane persons without a licence, is guilty of a misdemeanor. And any person receiving to board or lodge in a house not licensed, or taking the care or charge of even one insane person, must have the order and medical certificate according to Schedules B and C.

The admission of a patient into any licensed house contrary to these regulations, or any physician, surgeon, or apothecary signing an untrue medical certificate, or the proprietor or regular professional attendant of such house, or the father, brother, or partner of any such, signing a medical certificate, or the proprietor or superintendent neglecting to transmit any notice, copy of order, medical certificate, or statement required by the act, is a misdemeanor.

County Lunatic Asylums.—By the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 126, provision is made for the erection and regulation of county lunatic asylums, and the more effectual care and maintenance of pauper lunatics.

For the management and superintendence of every such asylum, a committee of visiting justices is to be appointed yearly, at a special meeting of the general quarter sessions held within twenty days after the 20th of December, who shall have power to make regulations, appoint officers, and make orders upon the officers of unions and parishes for the maintenance of lunatics. To each asylum a chaplain, medical officer, and a clerk are to be appointed (removable by the committee); and the medical officer of each parish may visit the asylum three times a week. Any two justices may require any poor person deemed insane to be brought before them, and upon due examination cause him or her to be sent to such lunatic asylum.

Where the legal settlement of an insane person cannot be found, two justices may direct the charges of his removal and maintenance to be paid by the treasurer of the county; but if his legal settlement be afterwards ascertained, they shall make an order on the treasurer or overseers of the parish to which he belongs for the repayment of such expences.

If any insane person is wandering about, though not chargeable, justices may proceed as in the case of persons chargeable; but if the estate of such person be more than sufficient to maintain his family, they may order the overseers to levy sufficient to repay their expences. But nothing herein is to prevent any relation or friend from taking such insane person under their own care and protection.

All insane paupers committed to any county lunatic asylum are to be kept safely, and not suffered to quit without an order of discharge from the visitors; and any officer, servant, or assistant permitting any such person to escape, is liable to a penalty of 20*l.* or not less than 40*s.*

CHAPTER XX.

Of Corporations.

CORPORATIONS are divided into two kinds; sole, and aggregate.

A corporation aggregate consists of several persons, united together in one society, and is kept up by a perpetual succession of members, so as to continue for ever; as the corporation of London.

A corporation sole is composed of one person; as the king, or a bishop.

Corporations, again, are divided into ecclesiastical and lay. Of the former are all archbishops, bishops, archdeacons, parsons, and vicars, which are sole corporations; and deans and chapters, which are bodies aggregate. Lay corporations are again divided into civil, as any trading company, the Bank of England for instance; and eleemosynary, as hospitals, and other perpetual charitable institutions.

Corporations are either founded on prescription, or they are erected and created by act of parliament, or by royal letters patent.

Every corporation must have a name, by which it must sue or be sued; but neither is its name immutable, nor will a slight variation of the name in a deed, in general, be material, or fatal to its interests.

Another attribute of corporations is perpetuity; from whence, in all aggregate corporations, follows the power of electing fresh members as often as the former ones drop off. They must sue and be sued, grant and receive all things, in their corporate name, and do all other acts, as a natural person may. By the common law they could purchase lands, and hold them for the benefit of themselves and their successors: but now, since the passing of the Mortmain acts, they cannot purchase or hold lands, but by licence from the crown, or by act of parliament; though they may freely aliene or lease by deed such as they lawfully hold. They have a common seal, which verifies all their acts, except some few trifling acts, which may be done by their head or other officer without deed; as retaining servants, authorizing a distress on a tenant, giving notice to quit to a tenant from year to year; and they may, under particular enactments, give promissory notes and bills of exchange, &c. They may also make bye-laws and regulations for their own governance, provided they are not against the law of the land.

A corporation can only appear by attorney, and not personally; and there are other incidents of a like nature, as its incapacity to commit assault or treason. The modes of election to a corporation, and all things consequent thereon, are generally regulated either by its charter, or else by prescription or immemorial usage. If by none of these, then it may be by bye-law. If a party be duly elected, and his admittance is refused, he may compel the body to admit him by a mandamus of the Court of Queen's Bench, or by information. And the same means must be resorted to in order to compel an election, or to force one duly elected to take upon him the office to which he is appointed.

¹ 1 Chit. Bla. Com. 467, &c., and notes; 2 Chit. Com. Law, 213, &c.

The abuses of all civil corporations may in general be redressed by the Court of Queen's Bench, which, under its authority delegated by the crown, acts as the general visitor of all such institutions.

Corporations may be dissolved either by act of parliament, or by the natural death of all its members, none having been appointed to fill up vacancies. It may also surrender its franchises, or forfeit its charter. Individual members may either be removed, or may resign of their own accord. The cause of removal is always triable by a mandamus by the Queen's Bench.

By dissolution, the rights and liabilities of a corporation become at once extinct; debts due from it cannot be recovered, and debts due to it in like manner are at an end; nor has any individual member afterwards any right or liability in either case.

CHAPTER XXI.

Of Friendly Societies.

THE 10 Geo. IV. c. 56, repealing all prior acts, consolidated the law on this subject, but has since been amended by the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 40, and 9 & 10 Vic. c. 27.

By the first-mentioned act, as amended by the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 40, it was enacted, that it should be lawful for any number of persons to form themselves into a society for raising, by subscription of the members, or by voluntary contributions, or by donations, a fund for the mutual relief and maintenance of the members, their wives, children, relations, or nominees, in sickness, infancy, advanced age, widowhood, or any other natural state or contingency whereof the occurrence is susceptible of calculation by way of average, or for any other purpose which is not illegal; and for the members to assemble together, and make rules for the regulation of such society,¹ and to alter and amend the same as occasion shall require. But doubts having been entertained as to what purposes might or might not be comprehended under this provision, the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 27, repealing so much of it as relates to the objects or purposes for which such societies may be formed, enacts, that a society may be established under the said acts for any of the following purposes :—

1. For the lawful insurance of money to be paid on the death of the members to their husbands, wives, or children, kindred, or nominees, or for defraying the expences of the burial of the members, their husbands, wives, or children: Provided, that no person under the age of six shall be allowed to become a member of such society, and that no insurance shall be effected on the life of any child under six years of age.
2. For the relief, maintenance, or endowment of the members, their husbands, wives, children, kindred, or nominees, in infancy, old age, sickness, widow-

¹ These societies are expressly exempted from the provisions of the 39 Geo. III. c. 79, and 57 Geo. III. c. 19 (Corresponding Societies and Seditious Meetings Acts), by the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 27, § 9.

- hood, or any other natural state of which the probability may be calculated by way of average.
3. Toward making good any loss sustained by the members by fire, flood, or shipwreck, or by any contingency of which the probability may be calculated by way of average, whereby they shall have sustained any loss or damage of their live or dead stock, or goods or stock in trade, or of the tools or implements of their trade or calling.
 4. For the frugal investment of the savings of the members, for better enabling them to purchase food, firing, clothes, or other necessities, or the tools or implements of their trade or calling, or to provide for the education of their children or kindred, with or without the assistance of charitable donations: Provided always, that the shares in any such investment society shall not be transferable, and that the investment of each member shall accumulate or be employed for the sole benefit of the member investing, or of the husband, wife, children, or kindred of such member; and that no part thereof shall be appropriated to the relief, maintenance, or endowment of any other member or person whomsoever; and that the full amount of the balance due according to the rules of such society to such member shall be paid to him or her on withdrawing from the society; and that no such last-mentioned society shall be entitled or allowed to invest its funds, or any part thereof, with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt.
 5. For any other purpose which shall be certified to be legal in England or Ireland by her majesty's attorney or solicitor general, and in Scotland by the lord advocate, and which shall be allowed by one of her majesty's principal secretaries of state, as a purpose to which the powers and facilities of the said acts ought to be extended: Provided, that the amount of the sum or value of the benefit to be assured to any member, or any person claiming by or through him or her, by any society for any purpose so certified and allowed as hereinbefore mentioned, shall not exceed in the whole 200*l.*; and that this limitation shall be inserted in the rules of every society established for any purpose so certified and allowed; and that no such last-mentioned society shall be entitled or allowed to invest its funds or any part thereof with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt.

But it is provided, that when a society is formed for any purpose in addition to that of providing relief, maintenance, or endowment in case of infancy, old age, sickness, widowhood, or other natural state as aforesaid, the contributions for every such other purpose shall be kept separate and distinct, or the charges defrayed by extra subscriptions of the members at the time such contingencies take place.—4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 40, § 2; and 8 & 9 Vic. c. 27, § 3. And by § 4, the rules of every society established after the passing of this act shall provide, that a book or books be kept, in which all monies received or paid on account of any particular fund or benefit for which the rules of the society provide shall be entered in a separate account, distinct from the monies received and paid on account of any other benefit or provision.

The rules of every such society at its first establishment, and on every alteration thereof, must be certified by the barrister appointed for that purpose, now styled the Registrar of Friendly Societies. To this end, two copies, signed by three members, and countersigned by the clerk or secretary, (accompanied, in the case of an alteration of the rules, with an affidavit of the clerk or secretary, or one of the officers, that the provisions of the act have been complied with) must be sent, with the fee of one guinea, to such registrar, for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are calculated to carry into effect the intention of the parties framing them, and are in conformity to law; and the registrar shall advise with the said clerk or secretary, if required, and give a certificate that the rules are in conformity with law, or point out in what parts they are repugnant thereto.

But the registrar shall not certify the rules of any society established after the passing of this act (9 & 10 Vic. c. 27) for the purpose of securing any benefit depending on the laws of sickness or mortality, unless such society shall adopt a table which shall have been certified to be a table which may be safely and fairly adopted for such purpose under the hand of the actuary to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, or of some person who shall have been for at least five years an actuary to some life-insurance company in London, Edinburgh, or Dublin; and the name of the actuary by whom any such table shall have been certified shall be set forth in the rules, and printed at the foot of all copies of such table printed for the use of the society.

One copy of the rules, when certified, is returned to the society, and the other retained by the registrar; and the rules are binding and in force from the time they are thus certified.

The objects of the society, and the purposes to which the funds are to be applied, must be declared by the rules; as also in what shares and proportions, and under what circumstances, any member or other person is to be entitled to the benefit thereof.

It must also be provided by the rules of every society, that a general statement of its funds and effects (specifying in whose hands the same are), and of the various sums received and expended since the last account, shall be annually prepared by the proper officers, attested by two or more members as auditors, and signed by the secretary; and that every member shall be entitled to a copy thereof on payment of a sum not exceeding 6d.

The rules, when certified, can only be altered at a general meeting of the society duly convened, and with the assent of three fourths of the members present.

These societies may subscribe any part of their funds into a savings bank; or they are entitled to the same advantage as savings banks, of paying any sum, not less than 50*l.* at a time, direct into the Bank of England, to the account of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, and of receiving interest for the same at the rate of £3. 0*s.* 10*d.* per annum.¹ Societies enrolled prior to the 28th July, 1828, under the repealed act (59 Geo. III. c. 128), are entitled to 3*d.* per cent. per diem interest.

Minors are capable of being members, and of acting as such, in the same manner as adults.

Any member of a friendly society, the rules of which do not prescribe the time when or the conditions on which members shall be allowed to withdraw themselves, shall be allowed to withdraw at any time from such society on giving written notice to the secretary or other proper officer of his or her intention to do so, and on payment of all arrears due; but, after giving such notice, he shall not be entitled to have any benefit from the funds, or be liable to any further subscription or payment other than the amount of the arrears due at the time of giving such notice.—9 & 10 Vic. c. 27, § 2.

¹ But see the exceptions to this privilege made by 9 & 10 Vic. c. 27, when declaring the purposes for which societies may be established under these acts.

The society may appoint proper officers, who, if required by the rules, must enter into a bond (a form of which is given in the schedule to the act) to execute their respective offices duly; and the treasurer and trustee must give bond to the clerk of the peace, who is to sue in case of forfeiture, on being indemnified by the society.

Standing committees may also be appointed according to the rules to do all acts therein mentioned, and other acts described in a book kept for the purpose.

The treasurers and trustees are to lay out and invest all surplus contributions in real or heritable securities, or in the public stocks, savings banks, or government securities, &c., and apply the interest to the society's benefit.

These societies have a priority over all other creditors; and executors of officers must pay money due to the society as such officers before any other debts. The debt, however, must be due officially; and therefore if a society lend money to the officer upon any contract, it is not entitled to this priority; but the mere taking a security where a debt is incurred, and there is an impossibility or even a difficulty in obtaining the money due, does not, it seems, take away such advantage.

All actions or suits concerning the society must be carried on in the names of the trustees or treasurers. But these officers are not personally liable for any sums except those they respectively receive.

In case of neglect on the part of treasurers or trustees, application may be made on petition to the Court of Chancery. This proceeding is to be without fee or reward to any person, and the court will appoint a counsel and attorney to act also without reward.

In case a trustee or other person seised or possessed of any lands or other property of the society is out of the jurisdiction of the court, or is an idiot or lunatic, or it is uncertain whether he be living or dead, it shall be lawful for the registrar, in the name of such person, to convey, assign, or otherwise assure such property to the new trustee appointed in his stead; and where stock is concerned, the registrar may order a transfer thereof.

Cases of fraud may be determined before magistrates, who may punish the guilty party by fine and imprisonment, and levy a distress on the offender's goods to recover the money surreptitiously abstracted &c. and costs. If the rules direct reference in case of dispute to arbitration, and the society refuse to grant arbitration, justices of peace may determine the dispute; and in case a member is expelled, the arbitrators or justices may order him to be reinstated, or award him a compensation out of the society's funds.

Disputes between the trustees or managers and any member or officer, for the settlement of which, according to the laws now in force, recourse must be had to one of the superior courts of law or equity, may be referred in writing to the Registrar of Friendly Societies; and where the value of the matter in dispute does not exceed 20/.,

every such dispute shall be so referred, unless the attorney or solicitor general shall certify that such dispute ought to be decided by the judgment of a superior court of law or equity. And the award, order, or determination of the said registrar shall be binding and conclusive on all parties, without appeal.—9 & 10 Vic. c. 27, § 15.

Payments to persons who appear at the time to be the next of kin of a member dying intestate are valid, although it subsequently turn out that they were not next of kin; and the real next of kin's only remedy is against the party receiving the money. Where a member dies intestate, payment of money due, not exceeding 20*l.*, may be made by the society without requiring the production of letters of administration.

Within three months after the end of December, 1835, and so at the expiration of each subsequent period of five years, every such society is required to make a return of the rate of sickness and mortality experienced by it within the preceding period of five years, to the registrar, and according to a form prescribed by him; or on neglect thereof, after twenty-one days, it will cease to be entitled to the privileges of a society established under these acts. And by 9 & 10 Vic. c. 27, with such return must be sent a report of the assets and liabilities of the society; and this provision must be inserted in the rules of every society established after the passing of this act. A penalty of 5*l.* is imposed on the officer whose duty it is to make such return, for neglect thereof.

The rules of every such society, powers of attorney for the transfer of shares in the funds, receipts for dividends or for money paid to or by the society, bonds taken under the act, instruments on appointment of agents, certificates &c. of revocation of agency, and all instruments required by the act, are exempt from the stamp duties. And no fee is payable for oaths taken before magistrates in order to obtain payment of sick money.

The dissolution of any society, unless all the objects of its establishment are accomplished, can only take place by the consent of five-sixths in value of the existing members, and also the consent of all persons then receiving or entitled to receive relief, either on account of sickness, age, or infirmity. And, for the purpose of ascertaining the votes of such five-sixths in value, every member is entitled to one vote, and an additional vote for every five years he has been a member, but not exceeding in the whole five votes. Neither on a dissolution can the fund be divisible for other than the general objects of the society, or the party abetting the illegal dissolution is liable as in case of fraud, as already shown.

CHAPTER XXII.

Of Savings Banks.

MANY acts of parliament for authorising and regulating savings banks have been passed since the 57 Geo. III.; but the whole are consolidated in the 9 Geo. IV. c. 92, amended by the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 14, and the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 83.

The object of these institutions is to enable poor persons to deposit small sums of money to a limited amount, whereon they may receive interest; and if the interest remains in the bank, it becomes principal, so that compound interest may be received. This is therefore a very convenient mode of investment for small sums, since the depositor may put in and withdraw money at any time free of expence, even for stamps.

Persons proposing to establish a bank for savings, must cause two written or printed copies of the rules, signed by two of the intended trustees, to be submitted to the barrister appointed to certify the rules of savings banks, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the rules are in conformity to law; and in the case of savings banks already established, two copies of all new rules, or alterations of original rules, must in like manner be submitted to the said barrister for the same purpose. And such barrister shall either certify on each of such copies that they are conformable to law, or point out such parts as may be repugnant thereto. When the rules and regulations have been certified by the barrister as aforesaid, one of the copies is to be returned to the institution, and the other to be sent to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt; and a copy of such rules so deposited, examined and proved to be a true copy, shall be received as evidence of such rules, and no certiorari shall be brought to remove them into any court of record.—7 & 8 Vic. c. 83, § 19.

No treasurer, trustee, or manager shall derive any benefit from such savings bank; though clerks may. Treasurers, actuaries, and cashiers, entrusted with the receipt or custody of any money, and all officers receiving salaries or allowances for their service from the funds of such savings bank, must give security by bond, with one or more sureties to be approved of by not less than two trustees and three managers, for the just and faithful execution of their respective offices.

The funds are vested in the trustees, and, on the death or removal of any trustee, vest in the succeeding trustees without any assignment or conveyance; and all actions or suits, criminal as well as civil, are carried on in their names.

Trustees or managers are not personally liable, except for their own acts, or where they are guilty of wilful neglect or default.

Persons having any of the funds or securities, books, papers, or property relating to the bank, must, upon demand made in pursuance of an order of not less than two trustees and three managers, or at a general meeting of the trustees or managers, give in their accounts, to be examined and allowed or disallowed, and, on like demand, must pay over all moneys, and assign and transfer or deliver up all securities and effects, books, papers, and property in their hands or custody, to such persons as the trustees or managers appoint.

The trustees must invest the funds, not less than 50% at a time, in the Bank of England or Ireland, and not in any other security; but this is not to prevent depositors from withdrawing their money at any time.

Central banks in towns are authorized to invest the money of branch banks in the neighbourhood of such towns in the Bank of England or Ireland; provided, that the treasurer of such branch banks certify to the treasurer of the central bank, that the amount contributed by any one subscriber in any one year does not exceed the proportions hereafter limited.

If any order or declaration produced to the officer, for the purpose of paying moneys into the Bank of England or Ireland, contain any matter which is false or untrue, the sum paid becomes forfeited.

All moneys paid into the Bank of England or of Ireland on the account of savings bank are invested in Bank annuities or exchequer bills. Upon the payment of any money into the Bank by trustees of savings banks, the officer of the commissioners may issue a receipt, signed by one of the cashiers of the Bank for the amount of such payment, carrying interest at the rate of £3. 5s. per cent per annum. The interest on the money mentioned in the receipt is to be calculated half-yearly up to the 20th November and the 20th May, and carried to the account of the savings bank as additional principal; but no interest shall be paid for any fractional part of a penny.

Before the trustees make any order or draft for payment, they must execute an appointment under the hands and seals of not less than two trustees, the execution of which is attested by two managers, empowering some person to be agent for receiving the money; and every such appointment must be produced to the officer of the commissioners fourteen days at least before the payment of the money. The trustees may at any time revoke such appointment.

The trustees may draw for the whole or any part of any sum placed to their account, by drafts on the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt; which drafts being indorsed by the officer of the commissioners, and the interest added thereto, are to be paid by the cashiers of the Bank of England.

When by the interest received beyond the rate of interest payable to depositors, the joint stock or property of any savings bank shall be increased beyond what is required to meet its expences, the trustees or managers shall, within six months after the 20th of November in each year, ascertain, certify, and pay over to the commissioners the amount of such increased stock and property, reserving such portion as may appear necessary to meet current expences.

The interest payable to depositors is not to exceed £3. 0s. 10d. per cent. per annum. It may be calculated yearly, or twice a year, and added to the principal—if yearly, to be computed to the 20th November; if half-yearly, to the 20th May and the 20th November, or up to such times nearest to those periods as the interest shall be payable according to the rules.

Minors may become depositors: if under seven years of age, they may sign the declaration by proxy. At the age of fourteen or upwards, they may sign powers of attorney, except in cases of insanity or imbecility, upon proof of which repayment may be made (in the case of trust deposits) to the trustee.

The trustees may pay any sum of money in respect of any deposit by a married woman to her, unless the husband give to the trustees notice of such marriage, and require payment to be made to him.

Trustees or treasurers of any charitable or provident institution, or charitable donation or bequest, for the maintenance, education, or benefit of the poor, may subscribe any part of the funds of such institution or society into the funds of any savings bank, to the amount of 100*l.* per annum, provided the amount do not at any time exceed 300*l.* in the whole, exclusive of interest. And friendly societies may subscribe the whole or part of their funds into a savings bank, without limitation. The receipt of the treasurer &c. of such friendly society or charitable institution is a sufficient discharge.

No sum can be paid or subscribed into any savings bank by any person without disclosing his name, together with his profession, business, occupation, calling, and residence. Trustees or managers may receive from a person acting as trustee on behalf of a depositor, whether such person is himself a depositor or not, any sum not exceeding the annual amount hereafter mentioned; provided that such trustee make such declaration on behalf of the depositor, and subject to the like conditions, as is required in the case of any person making a deposit on his own account; and all deposits made by a trustee are inserted in the books of the bank in the joint names of the trustee and the person on whose account the deposit is made. But no repayment can be made without the receipt or receipts of the trustee and the person on whose behalf the deposit was made, or of the survivor or survivors, or the executors or administrators of such survivor, except in case of the insanity or imbecility of the party on whose behalf the deposit was made, upon proof of which repayment may be made to the trustee.

Depositors in one bank are not to make deposits in any other; and every person on making his first deposit must sign a declaration, that he or she is not entitled to any deposit or subscription in or any benefit from the funds of any other savings bank; and if such declaration be not true, the deposit becomes forfeited to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt. But members of friendly societies and other charitable institutions, which are enabled to subscribe their funds into savings banks, are not thereby disabled from making deposits, either on their own account or as trustees for others.

The whole of any person's deposits may be taken from one bank and placed in another, upon production of a certificate of the amount from the managers of the bank from which they are withdrawn.

The amount of deposits by each depositor is limited to 30*l.* (exclusive of interest, in each year) ending on the 20th November; nor can a depositor exceed the sum of 150*l.* in the whole. And whenever the sum standing in the name of a depositor amounts in the whole to 200*l.* (principal and interest included), no interest is to be thenceforth paid on such deposit, so long as it continues at that amount.

A depositor, after having withdrawn a sum of money from a savings bank, may re-deposit, at any time within a year reckoning from the 20th November, any sum of money, provided it and the previous deposits made in the course of the year, taken together, do not exceed in such year the sum of 30*l.* additional principal money bearing interest.

By the act 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 14, depositors may purchase government annuities, not exceeding 30*l.* nor less than 4*l.* per annum: they may be granted to husband or wife separately, but no joint annuities are allowed.

In case any depositor shall die leaving not exceeding 50*l.* exclusive of interest in the savings bank, and probate of his will or letters of administration, or notice thereof, be not produced to the trustees within a month from his death; and in the latter case, if not proved or letters of administration taken out within two months; the trustees may pay the money to the widow or party entitled to his effects; and if the depositor be illegitimate and die intestate, the trustees, with the authority of the barrister appointed to certify the rules of savings banks, may pay the money in such manner as if the depositor had been legitimate.

Every depositor must, once a year, produce his deposit book at the institution.

Powers of attorney &c. given by trustees or depositors, to make deposits, sign documents, receive money, &c., are, as in the case of friendly societies, not liable to stamp duty.

Annual statements of accounts are to be transmitted by each savings bank to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, from which certain general accounts are prepared and laid before parliament.

By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 71, military savings banks are established, under the control of the secretary at war; which act is amended by the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 27.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Of Insurance, and Insurance Companies.

INSURANCE, or assurance, is a contract whereby one party, in consideration of a stipulated sum, undertakes to indemnify the other against certain perils or risks to which he is exposed, or against the happening of some event. The party who takes the risk upon himself is called the insurer, or sometimes the underwriter, from his subscribing his name at the foot of the policy; the party protected by the insurance is called the insured; the sum paid to the insurer as the price of his risk is called the premium; and the written instrument in which the contract is set forth and reduced into form is called the policy of insurance.

The nature of this contract is throughout a contract of indemnity, and this principle ought always to be kept in view in considering questions relative to insurance.

I. SEA INSURANCES.

Who may insure.—The only disability to the party insuring is in the case of an alien enemy. From reasons of public policy, no insurance can be effected on the property of an alien enemy nor can it be enforced in law or equity, either during the war or at its termination. And though the policy be effected in the name of a British subject as trustee, or the property be of British manufacture and exported from England (in case of sea insurances), or though the war broke out subsequently, yet the contract is ipso facto void. But if a war break out after the loss has happened, as well as after effecting the policy, then indeed the right to recover would only remain in abeyance, and could be enforced after the cessation of hostilities, if the crown had not (as it might do by prerogative) seized the alien's property; and if the policy were effected in the name of a trustee who was a British subject, he might recover for the loss even during the war. An alien enemy may, however, legally effect an insurance under a licence from the crown granted during a time of peace.

What may be insured.

1. The Quality of the Subject Matter of Insurance.—We have already seen as to the property of an alien enemy. The slave trade being now completely abolished by the law of England, it follows that any insurance on slaves, or on any property or other subject matter engaged or employed in accomplishing any of the objects or contracts in relation to the objects of slave trade declared unlawful, is not only absolutely void, but, by the 5 Geo. IV. c. 113, subjects the parties to the consequences of felony, viz. transportation for not exceeding fourteen years, or imprisonment and hard labour for a term not greater than five nor less than three years.

A vessel fitted out for such illegal purposes, with every thing belonging to it, and the goods of the owner on board, are forfeited and liable to seizure; and therefore no part can be insured.

The wages of seamen cannot be made the subject of insurance, on the grounds of public policy, since it might tend to produce improper conduct on the part of seamen, which would subject them, but for the insurance, to a loss or forfeiture of wages. But a seaman may insure goods purchased by wages already received, or actually due; and the remuneration or privileges of a captain of a vessel may also be insured; but if such remuneration depends on his good conduct, the policy, it seems, would be void.

2. The Quantity and Amount of Interest.—In order to protect against the many fraudulent losses and seizures of ships by enemies, the 19 Geo. II. c. 37 was passed, whereby it was declared that no insurance should be made on any ship, or goods therein, "interest or no interest," or "without further proof of interest than the policy," or by way of gaming or wagering, or without benefit of salvage to the assurers, and that all such policies should be void, except in the case of privateers. Therefore the party insuring must have an interest in the property insured. But this does not extend to foreign ships.

We must therefore consider what is a sufficient interest. It is not requisite that there should exist any actual property, but only an interest in the thing insured, that is, to have a benefit accruing from the existence of the thing insured, and a prejudice by its destruction, emanating from a right to the property, or a right out of some contract concerning it. It may be either absolute or defeasible, legal or equitable. Commissioners as trustees for prize vessels, and captors of prizes, have an insurable interest. The register of a ship is a material document in this case; for although four persons advance money for the ship as partners, and the names of only two are inserted in the register, those whose names are not inserted have not an insurable interest; for the register is conclusive evidence that a person not named therein is not owner. The consignees of goods, whether as purchasers, creditors, or agents, have an insurable interest, although their title is liable to be defeated by a stoppage in transitu. But a consignee appointed only for the purpose of doing some act respecting the goods consigned, who has no legal property in the goods, and is in no degree beneficially interested by agency, commission, or otherwise, although he may insure for the benefit of the consignor, yet cannot insure for his own benefit. An insurable interest may also arise from expences incurred, which form a lien or charge on the ship or cargo. Freighters have in general an insurable interest; but a mere loan of money to the owner or captain for the ship's use does not constitute a valid insurable interest, unless its repayment be contingent on the safety of the ship or cargo. The freight or profit derivable from the carriage of goods, or hire of a vessel under charterparty, or other express or implied contract, clearly constitutes a good insurable interest. So expected profits may be insured. With respect to the period at which an insurable interest must be vested, it may be remarked, that it is not necessary the insured should be interested at the very time of effecting the policy, it being sufficient if there be an insurable interest at the commencement of the risk.

Different Kinds of Policies.

An open or common policy is where no sum is mentioned in the policy as the value of the property; and here the sum recoverable is the amount of loss proved.

A valued policy is where the property insured is in the policy valued or estimated at a certain sum. In this case the value need not be proved, but the sum mentioned in the policy is recoverable.

A double insurance, is where several policies are effected by or for the benefit of the same person, and upon the same subject matter. These double insurances are not void; but the person insuring can receive satisfaction only to the amount of his loss. This he may recover against which set of underwriters he pleases; and they may call upon the other set to contribute in proportion to the sums they have insured.

Re-assurance is where the insurer, for his own protection, insures the property in another office. The stat. 19 Geo. II. c. 37, provides that there shall be no re-assurance, unless the insurer shall be insolvent or bankrupt, or dead; in which cases, such assurers, or in case of his death his executors, administrators, or assigns, may make re-assurance to the amount before by him assured, expressing in the policy that it is a re-assurance.

Of the Voyage and Trade insured, and of Perils or Risks.

Where the voyage is illegal, the policy is void. An insurance therefore on goods purchased in a hostile state on the account of British merchants, to be imported into this country, even in a neutral vessel, is illegal, because it tends to the aiding of the enemy, and by the maritime law is a cause of confiscation; and in general it is considered illegal to touch in the course of the voyage at a hostile port, either for the purpose of trading or calling for further orders. But it seems established, that a natural-born subject of her majesty, domiciled in a neutral state, may, in respect of his domicile, enjoy the commercial privileges of the inhabitants of such neutral state; and a trading with alien enemies under a licence from the crown may, as we have already remarked, be valid; but if the licence is in any manner qualified, it must be strictly followed, as it will be strictly construed.

Trading in violation of a blockade or embargo, or the provisions of a treaty, or royal proclamation, is illegal; and a policy thereon is also void. So is a trading on voyages which are prohibited by the navigation laws; or an infringement on the East India Company's charter, or contrary to the laws against smuggling. But a trading contrary to the revenue laws of a foreign state is not ipso facto void, unless the insurer be kept in ignorance of the extraordinary risk he runs.

Any illegality at the commencement of an entire voyage will render the whole illegal, and a policy intended for its protection will be altogether void; but if there are two voyages, as an outward and homeward voyage, distinct from each other, the one may be valid and the other invalid, and the policy good as to one and bad as to the other. And if one voyage is lawful, and the other is capable of being rendered so by obtaining a licence, and they are to be performed in the alternative, and that which is lawful is performed, it will be presumed that the licence would have been obtained, had it been requisite, so as to render the policy available.

The risks and perils which may be insured against are all those to which property in such situations is liable; and although an enemy's property cannot be insured, yet that of a neutral or British subject may be insured against all unlawful seizures or detentions by British vessels. Besides the other usual risks and perils of the sea, an insurance provides against the consequences of barratry of the master or mariners; and it has been determined that, under the usual policy, the insured may recover in respect of a loss by fire occasioned by the misconduct of the master and mariners. Barratry is any fraudulent or criminal act against the owners of ships or goods by the master or mariners, in breach of the trust reposed in them, and to the injury of the owners; as running away with the ship, wilfully carrying her out of the course prescribed by the owners, deserting convoy without leave, sinking or deserting the ship, embezzling the cargo, smuggling, or any other offence whereby the ship or cargo may be subjected to arrest, detention, loss, or forfeiture.¹

Of the Insurer or Underwriter.

Formerly no societies, or persons in partnership, could insure against losses at sea, except the Royal Exchange Assurance and the London Assurance Companies. But this prohibition was removed by the 5 Geo. IV. c. 114, and policies of insurance may now be entered into either by individual insurers, or by companies of persons united in partnership; and these companies or societies are either corporate or unincorporated. Individual insurers are called underwriters, the contract of insurance being authenticated by the subscription of their names.

¹ It has been recently decided, that the underwriters of a policy of insurance are liable for a loss arising from a peril insured against, though remotely arising from the negligence of the master and mariners.—Redman v. Wilson, 14 M. & W. 476.

The Policy of Insurance.

The policy is a written contract, signed by the insurer, or an agent on his behalf, or, in the case of a corporation, sealed with the corporate seal.

In the first place it requires a stamp, according to the circumstances. A material alteration cannot be made without the consent of both parties, or it will render the policy invalid and incapable of being enforced in any shape, independent of the circumstance of the stamp being affected thereby. But an alteration merely to correct a mistake, and make the policy conformable to the original intention of the parties, does not require a new stamp. The 35 Geo. III. c. 63 enacts, that no policy shall be stamped after it is effected; but it contains an express provision that nothing in the act shall prohibit an alteration which may lawfully be made in the terms or conditions of a policy duly stamped after it is underwritten, or to require an additional stamp, provided the alteration is made before notice of the determination of the risk originally insured, and if the premium originally paid exceed the rate of 10s. per cent on the sum insured, so that the thing insured remains the property of the same insured, and so that the alteration do not prolong the term insured beyond the period allowed by the act, and no additional sum be insured by means of such alteration. The extension of the time for the ship's sailing is within the provision of this latter enactment.

The name of the party insuring, or the usual designation of the firm, must be contained in the policy, under the 58 Geo. III. c. 56; and it should contain a true description of the subject of insurance, and disclose whether it is effected on ship, freight, bottomry, respondentia goods, profit, or other interest, together with the name of the ship; and where goods are insured, the insured cannot trans-ship them to another ship, except in case of urgent necessity, as where the first has been lost or damaged by the perils of the sea or other similar accident. But a mere error in the name does not vitiate the policy, provided the identity can be proved.

The commencement and duration of the voyage or period for which the insurers become responsible must be fully stated, the line of the voyage, the several ports at which the ship is entitled to touch, and the circumstances attending sailing with convoys, and the particular perils insured against must be set forth particularly. A clause should also be inserted, that "in case of any loss or misfortune, it shall be lawful to the insured, their factors, servants, and assigns, to sue, labour, and travel for, in, and about the defence, safeguard, and recovery of the ship" (or goods &c.) "or any part thereof, without prejudice to this insurance, to the charges whereof we the assurers will contribute each one according to the rate and quantity of his sum herein assured." This clause is said to have been inserted in consequence of doubts formerly entertained whether the insured could exert himself in the recovery and preservation of the property, without prejudicing his right to abandon.

The premium paid, the sum insured, the date or time of subscription, and the name of the insurer, must also be inserted in the policy. There is also usually a common memorandum at the foot of the policy, whereby the underwriters are protected from liability for certain partial loss on certain articles.

The construction of the policy is governed by the terms in which it is expressed, by the usage of trade, and the intention of the contracting parties. The only difference between policies and other instruments in this respect is, that the greater part of the printed language of them, being invariable and uniform, has acquired, from use and practice, a known and definite meaning. The policy is to be liberally construed for the benefit of the insured, and with a due regard to its design and object as a contract of indemnity. Parol evidence is sometimes admitted to explain doubtful phrases, or to ascertain the usual customs and practices of trade.

It is a general rule, that the insured cannot give the ship a different destination from that specified in the policy, although a change of the place specified may have become a matter of expediency, or even of necessity. But the mere intention to vary the port of destination will not vitiate the policy, especially if it be not fixed and absolute, and the loss occur before carrying such intention into execution. A deviation cannot in general be made in the voyage specified in the policy without endangering the policy; but where a departure therefrom is caused by necessity, or by an imperative or urgent obligation, as the absolute safety of the vessel, or the lives of those on board, it is not regarded as a deviation, but is excused in law. The ordinary occasions which will justify such departure are, to join convoy, stress of weather, want of repairs, the approach of an enemy, succouring another vessel in distress, a mutiny, desertion, arrest or sickness of the crew, or any other similar inevitable accident.

In all cases of insurance there is an implied warranty on the part of the insured, that the ship shall be seaworthy in regard to repairs and condition, manning, stores, and equipment; and if it prove not to have been so at the time of the commencement of the risk, the insurers are discharged. So also the ship must be provided with all the requisite documents and papers, or, as it is termed, properly documented; and if a loss ensue from the want of them, the insurers will not be liable; and if there is an express stipulation in the policy requiring them, and a loss happen from another cause, the want of them is a sufficient discharge to the insurers.

II. INSURANCES ON LIVES.

An insurance on life is a contract by which the insurer, in consideration of a premium proportioned to the age, health, and other circumstances of the person on whose life the insurance is affected, agrees to pay a certain sum on the event of his death, either within a certain fixed time, or generally at any indefinite period. The advantages resulting from this mode of investment are very great, and ought to be resorted to by every young man the first moment he is able to lay by any portion of his annual income, especially where he has no certain fixed property, sufficient for the support of a wife or children after death, and his income depending on his own exertions must fail in case of his illness or death.

To enable a party to insure the life of another person, it is necessary, as in the case of marine insurances, that he should have an interest therein; for the 14 Geo. III. c. 48 declares, that no insurance shall be made on the life of any person, or any other event, wherein the person for whose benefit the policy is made shall have no interest; and if any such insurance is made, the same is void.¹ The name of the party to be benefited must be inserted in the policy; and no more than the amount or value of such interest (as in the case of an insurance by a creditor on the life of his debtor) can be recovered. A creditor has an insurable interest; but it seems that if he has any other security for his debt, he is only entitled to recover from the insurance office the deficiency that the other security leaves unsatisfied. His debt must also be a valid one; therefore a mere gambling debt is not sufficient. But a plea that the debtor was an infant when he contracted the debt, is not available. A trustee has also an insurable interest, although not clothed with any beneficial interest. So also has a cestui que trust.

Where an insurance has been effected by a bankrupt on his own life at an annual premium, the right to the policy passes to his assignees. So it is in general liable to the claims of creditors, as the sum received is part of the assets of the deceased party.

A warranty is usually inserted, that the person whose life is insured is in good health. This means that he is in reasonable good health; and though he be at the time labouring under a particular disorder, yet if it be proved that his death ensued from other causes, still the insurers will be liable. Nor is it to be concluded that a particular disorder under which he is labouring is a disorder to shorten life, from the circumstance of his afterwards dying of it, if it be not a disorder necessarily having that tendency. The warranty in the policy forms a condition on which the validity of the contract depends, and any fraud or misrepresentation of material facts will tend to invalidate it.

Payment of premium must always be made at the time required by the rules of the insurance office; for a court of equity will not, upon the doctrine of cy pres (that is, performance as near as may be), direct a payment after the appointed time, so as to revive the policy.

Life policies usually contain a provision, that if the party whose life is insured depart the limits of Europe, or even go out of this country, or enter into the military or naval service, without the consent of the insurance company, or die by suicide, duelling, or the hand of justice, the insurance shall be void. In a case where such a clause was not inserted, death by the hand of justice was held not to invalidate the insurance.² And where an insurance is made by another person, death by suicide, duelling, or the hand of justice, is not excepted.

It is to be observed, that the assignment of a policy of insurance does not take it out of the order and disposition of the assignor, unless notice is given of the assignment to the insurers;³ but a letter by the assignee to the secretary of an insurance office, in which the writer says, "I am holder of the under-mentioned policies," and inquires what the office would give for them, was held a sufficient notice of the assignment.

¹ But see Godsall v. Boldero, 9 East, 27; and Barber v. Morris, 2 Moo. & Rob. 6. The law will not compel such payment; but the practice is otherwise. See also Halford v. Kymer, 10 Barn. & Cres. 724.

² Bolland v. Disney; 3 Russ. 351.

³ Williams v. Thorpe, 7 Sim. Rep. 257; and other cases, Chit. Eq. Ind. 545, 6.

⁴ Ex parte Stright, 2 Dea. & Ch. 314; Mont. 502.

III. FIRE INSURANCES.

This species of insurance is a contract by which the insurer, in consequence of a certain premium received by him, either in a gross sum or by annual payments, undertakes to indemnify the insured against all loss or damage which he may sustain in his houses or other buildings, stock, goods, or merchandise, by fire, during the time for which the policy is effected. In this kind of insurance, as in the others, the insured must have an interest in the property; and notice of any assignment of it must be given to the insurers, and their assent obtained.

A misrepresentation or concealment of material circumstances will invalidate the insurance; as where a party living next to a boat-builder, where immediately before the insurance a fire had happened, this fact being concealed, although not fraudulently, was held to release the office's liability. If premises are insured at the low premium, whereby the insured agrees not to have fires or hazardous goods therein, he cannot habitually use a fire, or keep such goods there; but the mere occasional introduction of either does not invalidate the policy, though a fire be the consequence; and even if the gross negligence of a servant causes a fire, the insurers are still liable.

The terms and conditions of insuring vary in the different offices. These must always be strictly adhered to and observed by the insured. A policy on linen, wearing apparel, &c., the insured not being a linen-draper, will not extend to a quantity of linen goods introduced for speculation and sale.

The policy is always for a stated period, as a number of years, one year, or half a year. On policies under a year, the policy must be renewed before the office closes on the day specified, forming the end of the half year for instance. But in policies for a year and upwards, the principal offices allow fifteen days after the expiration of the policy for renewal, and if a fire happen within those fifteen days, they hold themselves responsible for the loss; therefore it is sufficient if the renewal be before the end of such fifteen days, though the office may give a notice which will countervail this privilege. The insurers have always the option of paying the money insured for, or of replacing the property in kind.

The 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 69 has taken off the stamp duties on insurances of farming stock.

By the London Building act, 14 Geo. III. c. 78, which relates to the bills of mortality only, in case of a fire, the turncock is entitled to 10s. reward from the parish; and the keepers of the first large engine that arrives, completely ready to act, to a sum not exceeding 30s; of the second, not exceeding 20s.; and of the third, not exceeding 10s. If it is merely a chimney on fire, the rewards are to be paid by the occupier of the room to which the chimney belongs, if a lodger, or otherwise by the tenant of the house. The rewards are to be settled and recovered before the lord mayor in London, or a justice out of London.

We have already seen, that servants negligently setting fire to any building shall forfeit 100*l.*, or be sent to the house of correction for eighteen months. But no person is liable to an action for damages arising from accidental fire.

CHAPTER XXII.

Of Landlord and Tenant.

- I. THE NATURE OF LEASES IN GENERAL.
- II. BY WHOM TERMS OR LEASES MAY BE GRANTED.
- III. TO WHOM LEASES MAY BE MADE.
- IV. WHAT MAY BE THE SUBJECT OF LEASES.
- V. TENANCY FROM YEAR TO YEAR.
- VI. LODGERS AND LODGINGS.
- VII. ESTATES AT WILL.
- VIII. TENANTS BY SUFFERANCE.
- IX. MORTGAGOR IN POSSESSION.
- X. CESTUI QUE TRUST IN POSSESSION.
- XI. RENTS.
 1. Rents in General.
 2. The Different Kinds of Rent.
 3. Time when Rent is due, and how payable.
 4. Payment of Rent, and Excuses for Non-payment.
 5. In case of Damage by Fire, and Covenants to Insure.
 6. Remedies to recover Rent.
 - (a). By Distress.
 - (b). Other Remedies.
- XII. TAXES, RATES, AND ASSESSMENTS.
- XIII. REPAIRS AND CULTIVATION.
- XIV. FIXTURES.
- XV. TERMINATION OF THE TENANCY.
 1. By Effluxion of Time.
 2. By Cancellation of the Instrument of Demise.
 3. By Surrender.
 4. By Merger in a larger Estate.
 5. By Forfeiture.
 6. By Notice to Quit.
 7. By Disclaimer.
 8. By Death.
- XVI. RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF THE PARTIES AT THE END OF THE TENANCY.

I. THE NATURE OF LEASES IN GENERAL.

A lease is a grant of the possession of lands or other things to a person for life, for years, or at will.

If for life, it is a freehold interest; and to create this estate, unless effected by way of use, it was, till the passing of the recent Transfer of Property Acts, required that livery should be given, that is, a formal delivery of possession by the landlord.¹

But a lease for years may be completed by the mere entry of the lessee, and even before that he has an interesse termini. Before entry, however, he cannot bring an action of trespass; nor, if he take by common law, can he take a release of the reversion. But if the estate be created by way of use, actual entry is unnecessary; it is complete immediately the conveyance is executed.

¹ But all lands now lie in grant, as well as in livery, as regards the immediate freehold.—8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, § 2. See post.

A parol lease, if it do not exceed three years, is good under the Statute of Frauds. If for more than three years, and the lessee enter and pay rent, it becomes a tenancy from year to year, determinable only by a regular notice to quit.

A lease is usually in consideration of a yearly rent. The best way is to reserve it generally, as it then follows the reversion. A covenant for payment of rent should be inserted; otherwise, if once assigned, it may be re-assigned to a succession of beggars. And a provision for re-entry on non-payment of rent should always be inserted, in order to guard against there being no sufficient distress.

Unless there be a covenant against assignment, a lease may be assigned, that is, the whole interest of the lessee may be conveyed to another; or it may be underlet. If therefore it is intended that it should not, it is proper to insert an express covenant to restrain the lessee from assigning or underletting.

On conditions in leases to prevent alienation, or for any other purpose, it is to be observed, that where the condition gives a right of re-entry, the term (after breach of the condition) subsists till re-entry; and acceptance of or distraining for rent due after the breach dispenses with the forfeiture. Where the estate was forfeited on the breach of any condition, it formerly absolutely ceased, and the forfeiture could not be waived or dispensed with. The courts, however, are now inclined to hold leases not absolutely void in these cases, but only voidable, so that the forfeiture may be waived by any subsequent acceptance of rent or other act indicative of the intent of waiver.

A condition not to assign to a particular person is in any case good. But a condition restraining assignment will not prevent an underlease. Such conditions bind personal representatives when they are named. They do not, however, bind creditors or assignees in bankruptcy, who may, if they choose to adopt a lease, always sell or assign it to any person for the benefit of the bankrupt's estate. Nor does assignment by the sheriff under execution, or by any act of law, create any forfeiture. But the condition may be made so as to give a right of re-entry on the bankruptcy or insolvency, and then the assignment of the provisional assignee will not prevent the re-entry of the lessor.

These covenants, however, are entirely got rid of when consent has been once given to an assignment without restriction.²

II. BY WHOM LEASES MAY BE GRANTED.

All persons not under legal disability are capable of leasing for terms not inconsistent with the nature and quality of their estates, provided they have the actual or constructive possession of the premises to be let, and not a mere right of entry.

Tenants in tail may make leases to bind their issue, but not those in reversion or remainder, provided a fair and proper rent is reserved, and the other terms of the 32 Hen. VIII. c. 28 are observed and followed. So may a husband seized in right of his wife, provided she join in the lease, and provided the lease is by indenture, and not by deed.

¹ Dumpor's case (4 Co. Rep. 119) is the leading case upon this covenant, and is now settled law. See Dumpor's case, and Bramwell v. Macpherson, 14 Ves. jun. 173.

² For the recent statute, "to facilitate the granting of certain leases," see APPENDIX.

lessor and lessee, see 4 Western's Convey. 28 et seq.; Thorne v. Woolcombe, 3 Barn. & Ald. 591, per Lord Tenterden; 2 Sugden's Vendor and Purchaser, 269.

poll, or by parol. Such leases must begin from the date of the deed. If there be an old lease, that must be first absolutely surrendered, or within a year of expiring. They must be either for twenty-one years or three lives, or less. They must be of corporeal hereditaments, and of lands &c. commonly letten for the last twenty years past. The usual rent for the last twenty years must be reserved; and these leases cannot be made without impeachment of waste.

Ecclesiastical persons may in general lease for twenty-one years or three lives from the date of making the lease, at the accustomed or a greater rent. Houses in corporations or market towns, being corporate property, may be let for forty years, provided they be not the mansion houses of the lessors, nor have above ten acres of ground belonging to them, and provided the tenant keep them in repair. A concurrent lease must expire within three years. The tenant must be liable for waste. In college leases one third of the rent must be reserved.

Tenants for years, or from year to year, may assign or underlet; but tenants at will cannot. Neither can churchwardens make a lease of parish lands. The crown may generally lease for thirty-one years or three lives; and, under certain circumstances, the time may be extended to fifty years. The master of the rolls may also make leases for forty-one years.

Guardians of minors, and committees of lunatics, may grant leases under the direction of the Court of Chancery; but no such lease of the capital mansion-house, or park and grounds held therewith, is to extend beyond the minority of the infant. 1 Wm. IV. c. 65.

Leases by tenants in curtesy, dower, or jointure, are void absolutely on their death; and the acceptance of rent by the heir does not make the lease good, but the lessee continues mere tenant by sufferance.

The assignees of a bankrupt have, under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 77, general powers, and may make leases of the estate, if beneficial to the creditors; and the same powers are given to assignees of insolvents.

Executors and administrators may either assign a term come to their hands, or they may underlet, in the same manner as their testator or intestate might have done. But they ought to exercise great caution to see whether they have that power by the will. And it is questionable where the executor is an infant, and there is an administration durante minore etate, how far such administrator can grant leases. If a wife is executrix, the husband and wife have the power of leasing, as in the ordinary case of husband and wife.

Mortgagees and mortgagors cannot make leases so as to bind each other's interests; neither have tenants under process of execution, as by vilegit, statute merchant, &c., power to bind by lease beyond the period of the duration of their estates. Provided they are beneficial to the cestuique trusts, trustees for charities may make leases; but if otherwise, they may be set aside at the cost of the trustees by the Court of Chancery. Trustees should always therefore act with great caution, and under the advice of surveyors as to value &c., before doing such acts. Receivers, on the other hand, can never grant leases, except under the direct sanction and authority of a court of equity.

Leases of lands in copyhold capable of being leased may be granted by the lord of the manor or his steward; But copyholders cannot grant leases for more than one year without licence from the lord, or by special custom, without incurring a forfeiture of their estate.¹ A lease, however, for a year, and so on during the will of the lessor, is good. If licence is once granted, the lessee may underlet; and a lease which is void as against the lord of the manor is binding on the copyhold lessor himself.

Powers of leasing must be strictly followed.² Leases executed by agents in the name of the principal, they having sufficient power for that purpose, are good to all intents and purposes as though executed by the principal himself. So are leases by bailiffs of manors, if they have express authority; but not otherwise.

A disseisor (that is, one holding under a wrongful and adverse title) has full power to make a lease binding on all persons except him who has the right of possession and is disseised. But a lease by a disseisee is not good, because he is out of possession; though if delivered to a third person as an escrow, it will be good when he comes to the possession again.

Leases, like all other deeds, may be impeached on the ground of fraud, as if entered into by either party at a time when he is in duress, or when drunk, if made so by the contrivance of the other party.

III. TO WHOM LEASES MAY BE MADE.

Leases to an infant are voidable by him when he comes of age, or sooner. But in this case, where the lease was at a fair value, the infant not having declined it before the rent day next after his coming of age, he was held bound to it; and at all events he may be liable for use and occupation under the doctrine of necessities. And he cannot recover back any premium paid for it. If an infant is jointly interested in a lease as co-lessee with A, and A gets a renewal of the lease, if it turn out beneficial, the infant may claim to share in the benefit; but if not beneficial, he cannot be made to participate in the loss.

Married women cannot (except by special custom, as in London) take leases. If husband and wife accept a lease, she may, after his death, accept or reject it, in the same manner as an infant may, and is not bound by the covenants though she continues tenant.

Persons outlawed or attainted cannot accept leases, except for the benefit of the crown: but in civil cases the outlawry is only a bar as between the crown and the subject. The same rules apply as to the granting leases by such persons. In treason they are void against the crown; and in felony they are for the benefit of the crown during the felon's life.

Corporations may take by lease; but a corporation sole cannot take a lease in such a manner as that it shall go to his successor, but it will go to his executor.

Parish officers are enabled, by 9 Geo. I. c. 7, § 4, to take, either by purchase or lease, houses for the lodging of the poor.

Assignees cannot take leases of the bankrupt's estate for their own private benefit; neither can solicitors from their clients.

¹ A liability to forfeiture of the estate, much less a stranger — Doc dem. Robinson v. Bousfield, 6 Q. B. 492 which may be waived by the lord, but of which the reversioner cannot avail himself, ² Doc v. Burrough, 6 Q. B. 229. Id. 208.

IV. WHAT MAY BE THE SUBJECTS OF LEASES.

All corporeal hereditaments may be leased. Advowsons cannot, because they are a public trust. Tithes and tolls may; and so may commons and estovers under certain conditions, and rights of way.

Offices, provided no public detriment may happen therefrom (and therefore not those relating to the administration of justice) may be leased by deed, but not by parol; and to this extent only is the sale of offices allowable. Franchises (as fairs and markets), corodies, and annuities, may also be leased.

V. TENANCY FROM YEAR TO YEAR.

A tenancy from year to year may be said to exist where a man lets to another, without limiting any certain estate. Formerly such an interest was merely a tenancy at will. Now, however, the tenant having once entered on the premises as tenant, is entitled to receive, and bound to give, half a year's notice before quitting the possession; and the tenancy must end at that period of the year at which it commenced. Where a party enters under an agreement for a lease, a tenancy from year to year is in general implied.¹ So also where a tenant holds over at the end of his lease. A tenant from year to year is in general entitled to estovers, and to other benefits and privileges, the same as a tenant for a term.²

VI. LODGINGS AND LODGERS.

Lodgings consist of rooms occupied in a house which has but one common outer door, and differ from what we term chambers, where each set of apartments has a separate outer door leading to one common staircase, as in inns of court. These latter are separately rateable to the poor, and give separate estates of freehold according to the holding; while the former are all rateable as one house, and the holding confers no right on the lodger as a freeholder or householder, in respect of voting at elections or otherwise, for many reasons, although in some respects it does as a householder. If the owner of the house do not sleep therein, then indeed, in respect of burglary, each apartment is the house of its respective lodger; though at the same time a bailiff, having obtained peaceable admission into the outer door, may break open any of the private doors of lodgers, if necessary.

Lodgers are in all cases in the same situation with regard to distress for rent &c. as other tenants; except that, as regards notice to quit, it seems they are generally considered as less than tenants from year to year; and if they take them by the month or week, a month's or week's notice respectively would be sufficient. If they take them for a time certain, there is no need of notice to quit at the expiration of the time.

In such tenancies there ought always (though not absolutely necessary) to be a written agreement as to the amount of rent, the notice to

¹ The great and vexatious question, as to whether a paper purporting to be an agreement for a tenancy was an agreement merely, or should be construed as a lease, and in either case whether the landlord could or could not enforce the payment of his rent

by distress, or was left to his action for use and occupation, is now settled by the recent statute 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, § 3, which enacts, that all leases required by law to be in writing shall be void at law unless made by deed quit, the time of entry, and any other particulars agreed upon between the parties. And care should always be taken by the lodger (especially in unfurnished apartments) to see that his immediate landlord has paid all taxes and rent; for the goods of the lodger are liable to distress for arrears of these at any time while on the premises. A list of the furniture engaged with the apartments should also be had.

² See Doe v. Sumner, 14 Mee & W. 39

It seems, that if lodgings are let to a woman for the purpose of carrying on an improper intercourse with men, the landlord can recover nothing for the rent.

VII. ESTATES AT WILL.

An estate at will is the lowest estate that can arise by agreement between the parties. It depends on the will of both; this it does by implication of law, even when expressed to be at the will of one only. It cannot (when created) be the subject of a conveyance. It determines by the death of the lessee, and confers no title on his representatives, except, as we shall hereafter show, as to emblements; and any conveyance by the lessor determines the estate.

The law does not favour estates at will; therefore in most cases, as if the rent be reserved yearly or half-yearly, it is generally construed into a tenancy from year to year, unless such construction would create a forfeiture; and therefore the determination of the estate by the lessor, or by the act of God, as the death of lessor or lessee, does not generally deprive the lessee or his representatives of emblements; though it is otherwise if the lessee determines or forfeits the estate. In a strict tenancy at will, if the lessor determine the estate before rent is due, he loses the rent; but if the lessee determines the tenancy, he must pay rent up to the next day when it would become due. Probably the lessor or his representatives would be held entitled to the rent, whenever the lessee or his representatives take or claim a right to emblements, except where the lessor determines the estate. A lessee at will can, however, receive a deed of release, after entry, for then there is privity between the lessor and lessee.

There are now few instances where a tenancy at will exists. It may arise, however, 1. Where there is an express letting at will; 2. Where the raising a tenancy from year to year would work a forfeiture of the lessor's estate; 3. Where there is an entry with the consent of the owner, but no conveyance, or express agreement for payment of rent, to raise a constructive yearly tenancy. This species of entry includes an entry under feoffment before livery; entries under other defective securities; entries under contracts for leases where rent has not been paid; where a mortgagor is allowed to continue in possession; and where a cestuique trust is let into possession.

This tenancy may be determined by the express declaration of either party, or by the death of either party, or by acts of ownership by the landlord, or his alienation of the reversion, or by the tenant's waste or deserting or assigning over the premises. Where, in this species of tenancy, rent is payable quarterly, the lessee, after a quarter of a year is commenced, may determine it, but he must pay that quarter's rent; but if the landlord determine it, he loses the rent.

VIII. TENANTS AT SUFFERANCE.

Tenant at sufferance is where a person has held by a lawful title, and continues in possession after his right has determined, without either the agreement or disagreement of the person then entitled. It may arise, amongst other cases, 1. Where tenant at will keeps possession after the death of lessor; 2. Where a lessee holds over after the expiration of his term; and 3. Where a tenant pur autre vie continues to hold possession after the death of the cestuique vie. This tenancy can only arise by construction of law. There is no privity between a tenant at sufferance and the person entitled to the possession; consequently a release to a tenant at sufferance will not operate to enlarge his estate. It cannot be the subject of conveyance or transmission. While it exists, it is not adverse to the person entitled to enter, though such person may, if he chooses, consider it so. The descent or conveyance of the reversion does not appear to affect this kind of tenancy.

Where a tenant for life attempts to alien in fee by a conveyance which does not operate as a forfeiture, as by lease and release or bargain and sale (which conveyance will only in fact pass his life estate), the person in possession under the release or sale, after the death of tenant for life, will become tenant at sufferance to the reversioner, and adverse possession will only take place from the commission of some wrongful act. In the case of the crown, there is no tenancy at sufferance; if the tenant holds over, he is an intruder.

IX. ESTATE OF MORTGAGOR IN POSSESSION.

Mortgagor in possession is considered, either as a tenant at will, a tenant at sufferance, or a receiver, according to the form of the conveyance.

Where the mortgagor is the occupant, with an express agreement for his continuing in possession till default, he may be considered as tenant for years; or if the agreement cannot be considered as a grant for that time, the mortgagor may be tenant at will. Where there is an agreement for possession of mortgagor till default, and the money is not paid, but he continues in possession, he appears, till payment of interest, to be tenant at sufferance. And where there is no express agreement on the subject, but the mortgagor being in possession continues so, with the tacit consent of mortgagee, here he seems to be strictly tenant at will. If then the mortgagee were to assign without the mortgagor joining, the mortgagor would be tenant at sufferance to the assignee till payment of interest. When a mortgagor is tenant at will, the death of either mortgagor or mortgagee determines the estate. When the latter dies, the mortgagor is tenant at sufferance to his representatives till payment of interest. If the former die, and his heir or devisee enter, and hold without recognizing the mortgagee's interest, by paying interest &c., an adverse possession takes place. Therefore, where a tenancy at sufferance exists, payment of interest makes it a tenancy at will.

Where the estate is in possession of tenants, and the mortgagor takes the rents, no actual tenancy exists between the mortgagor and the mortgagee; the mortgagor is considered as a receiver, with liability to account. When mortgagor is tenant at will, he is not entitled to emblems, and may be at any time ejected by mortgagee. And the Court of Chancery will restrain the mortgagor in possession from committing waste, by injunction.

X. ESTATE OF CESTUIQUE TRUST IN POSSESSION.

In equity, the cestuique trust is considered the real owner, and the possession of the trustee is considered as his possession. But at law the trustee alone is looked upon as the tenant; so much so, that where the estate is fee simple, it would escheat on failure of heirs of the trustee. At law, therefore, the cestuique trust in possession is tenant at will to the trustee. Consequently, the death of either determines the tenancy at will. If the trustee die, the cestuique trust is tenant at sufferance to the representative of the trustee, real or personal, according to the nature of the trust property; and if the cestuique trust die, his heir is a new tenant at will.

XI. RENTS.—1. Rents in General.

Rent is properly a sum of money, or other thing, to be rendered periodically, in consequence of a reservation in a grant or demise of lands or other tenements, the reversion of which is in the grantor or person demising.

It must be a profit, money or money's worth, by payment, render, or corporeal service. It must not be a part of the thing itself; though it may be part of its future produce. It must be certain, or capable of being reduced to a certainty by either party. It is due and payable on the lands demised, if no other place is mentioned. The tenements out of which it issues must be of a corporeal nature, so as to give a remedy by distress.¹ It must be reserved to one of the grantors, and not to strangers; though it may be afterwards granted over.

Rents may be created by bargain and sale, lease and release, covenant to stand seised, or grant; and they may be limited in tail, with remainders over. When once granted, they may be released to the person seised of the lands, or conveyed to a stranger by grant, and that even to commence in futuro, under the Statute of Uses; and as a person may be seised of a rent to a use, such use is immediately vested by the statute. If a rent be created by deed, it cannot be released without deed, either at law or in equity.

2. The different Kinds of Rent.

A rent service is any particular service that was in olden times to be performed by the tenant, instead of the present usual mode of remuneration for the use of the land in the shape of money; as, for instance, a covenant to plough the landlord's lands, or the like; and these answer to the present money rent. Rent charges are, for instance, where a tenant in fee conveys away his land, reserving to himself the payment of a sum of money out of it, recoverable by a distress. Rent seck is the same as rent-charge, only without the power of distress. Quit rent is a rent undisturbably payable by copyholders in lieu of all other services. Rack rent is a rent of the full value of the tenement. Now, however by 4 Geo. II. c. 28, all rents are alike recoverable by distress.

¹ See contra, 2 Christ. Dia. Com. 41.

3. The Time when Rent is due, and how payable.

Rent is not due till midnight of the day on which payment of it is reserved; but, to perfect a forfeiture for nonpayment, if it be demanded a sufficient time before sun-set of that day to allow the tenant to see to count the money, as it is said, and the person demanding it remain till the sun's actual setting, it is sufficient. If no day is mentioned for payment, and so much per annum is payable, it is not due till the end of the year; and if so much per month, at the end of every month, &c. The rent should be demanded on the land or premises, for the tenant need not seek out his landlord in order to exculpate himself. However, rent due to the crown is to be paid by the tenant into the exchequer, since it would be below the dignity of the crown to be obliged to seek out its tenants.

4. The Payment of Rent, and Excuses for Nonpayment.

Rent, as between the parties themselves, is of a higher nature than even specialty debts; but, as respects the tenant's executors, it is regarded as equal to specialty debts, and is to be paid equally with them. If rent, by desire of the landlord, is remitted by post, and it is put into the office, not given merely to a bellman, and it is lost, the landlord must bear the loss of it. If paid by a bill of exchange or promissory note, which is dishonoured, the landlord has still his other remedies by distress &c., for it is in this case no payment; though if a bond is taken, and judgment is recovered, the usual remedies by distress are gone. A proper receipt stamp should always be taken for the rent. Ground rent, land tax, and other taxes to which the landlord is liable, may be deducted out of the rent; and where a landlord distrained for the whole rent reserved, without deducting the land-tax, although the broker deducted it, it was held that the tenant might properly bring his action on the case for excessive distress. So if the tenant is liable to be ousted or distrained upon if a payment is not made by him to which the landlord is liable, he may deduct the amount from his rent; and if the landlord, when bound, neglects to repair, or the tenant is obliged by sudden emergency, the costs of it may be deducted. And there are many cases in which payments to a landlord by a bankrupt after bankruptcy are allowed to stand good.

5. In case of Damage by Fire.—Covenants to Insure.

Where a lessee covenants generally to pay rent, he is bound to pay it though the house be burnt down. And a lessee who covenants to pay rent and to repair, with express exceptions of casualties by fire or tempest, is liable upon the covenant for rent, though the premises are burnt down, and not rebuilt by the lessor after notice; for whatever be the default of the lessor in not repairing, and though it is a hard case, yet the lessee must at all events perform his covenant, by which he is expressly bound, to pay rent during the term. Where the premises were destroyed by fire during a tenancy from year to year, and were no longer habitable, the landlord was held to be still entitled to recover the rent in an action for use and occupation; and the tenant in such case, to get rid of his liability, should give a regular notice to quit. Though formerly otherwise, the doctrine at present entertained by the Court of Chancery is, that the tenant under such circumstances has no equity, and cannot restrain the landlord from bringing an action at law upon the covenant; and it has been held, that the tenant, with a covenant by him to rebuild, has no equity to compel his landlord to expend money received from an insurance office on the demised premises being burnt down, nor to restrain the landlord from suing for the rent until the premises should be rebuilt. Therefore it is always advisable to have a covenant or provision inserted in the lease or agreement, that rent shall cease in case of such accident till the premises are rebuilt and become inhabitable.

A tenant of a house from year to year, who is not under any agreement to repair, may quit without any previous notice to his landlord, upon the premises becoming unsafe and useless for want of repair; and he will not be liable for any rent after the occupation has ceased to be beneficial. If the landlord enter the premises of a yearly tenant to do repairs, and so much noise and inconvenience be created, that the tenant cannot prevail upon his lodgers to stop, or he is himself disabled from carrying on his business, he may leave the premises without giving any notice, and without being liable for the rent, even if a fresh quarter be commenced, as no beneficial occupation can be implied.

By an adverse entry of the lessor, or any one claiming through him, into any part of the premises demised, the rent is suspended; but if the lessor enter by virtue of a power reserved on the one hand, or as a mere trespasser on the other, and the lessee be not evicted, it will not operate as an excuse for nonpayment of the rent.

6. Remedies to recover Rent.

1. By DISTRESS.—A distress is the usual mode by which a landlord may recover his rent, and is by a learned writer on the subject said to be one of the most equitable and efficient remedies known to the English law.

We have already seen, that by the 4 Geo. II. c. 28, a distress may be made for any rent in arrear. We have also seen how far the remedy by distress is affected by taking a security of any other kind.

If, when the landlord comes to distrain, the rent is tendered, the distress cannot be made.

To authorize a distress, there must be an actual existing demise at a fixed rent, although if the tenant is in possession under an agreement for a lease, very slight circumstances are laid hold of to justify a distress. But if the landlord has treated a tenant as a trespasser, he cannot distrain; for he cannot blow hot and cold, regarding him as a trespasser one moment and a tenant the next.

The distress may be deposited, or, as it is termed, impounded, on any part of the premises as is most convenient. But if the goods are removed, notice must be given of the place to which they have been taken, and such notice must contain an inventory of the things distrained.

The Sale.—Unless the owner replevy the distress within five days after notice of the distress, the distrainer may have them appraised by the sheriff, &c., and proceed to sell by auction. The proceeds, after paying the arrears and expences, must be retained by the sheriff for the owner of the goods. Therefore, on the sixth day he may proceed to sell and remove the goods; and if he remain on the premises after that time without the consent of the owner, he may be treated as a trespasser.

A second distress may be made if the value of the first is not sufficient to pay the arrears of rent; so also if the replevy be nugatory.

Expences of the Distress.—These are always paid by the party distrained on. Where the distress is for less than 20*l.*, the expences are as follows:—For the levy, 3*s.*; man in possession,¹ per day, 2*s.* 6*d.*; appraisement 6*d.* in the pound; the stamp according to the value; all expences of advertising &c., if any, 10*s.*; catalogues, sale, and commission, 1*s.* in the pound on the net produce of the sale. Any act of extortion subjects the offender to heavy penalties, under the 57 Geo. III. c. 93, § 2.

When the distress exceeds 20*l.*, the practice is to charge 1*s.* in the pound for the levy, and 3*s.* 6*d.* per day for the man. A copy of charges is in all cases to be given by the officer.

Wrongful Distresses.—If the distress is altogether illegal, the party has his remedy either by action of replevin, of trespass, or on the case for damages, according to the circumstances. If a mere irregularity takes place, an action for special damages gives the tenant his remedy. If the distress be excessive, the remedy is by special action. If there were nothing else to distrain, then, however great the value, it cannot be deemed excessive.

By 11 Geo. II. c. 19, goods fraudulently or clandestinely conveyed off the premises to prevent a distress, may be seized any where within thirty days after the removal, unless bonâ fide sold to a person not privy to the fraud. And every person assisting in such removal or concealment forfeits double the value of the goods, to be recovered by action of debt; or if the value of the goods be under 50*l.*, two justices, on application from the landlord, and having proof of the fraudulent removal, may order the parties to pay double the value of the goods, or, on default, to be committed to hard labour for six months. And by § 7, landlords, with the assistance of a constable, may break open a dwelling-house, oath being first made before a justice of reasonable grounds to suspect that the goods are concealed there.

It is material to observe, that the remedies under this statute for goods clandestinely or fraudulently removed away to avoid a distress, extend only to the tenant's own goods, and not to those of a stranger, as of a lodger. It is even considered that a creditor, with the consent of the tenant, may take possession of the goods of the latter for a bonâ fide debt, and remove them from the premises, if apprehensive of a distress, without being liable to the penalties of the act. It is also important to remark, that the statute applies only when the rent is actually due; for the tenant may remove his goods any time previously to the rent day, and they cannot be followed under the provisions of this act; the rent, when due, would be a debt on simple contract only, to be recovered like similar debts by action in a court of law. Farther it is essential to observe, that the presence of a constable is necessary whenever force is resorted to by a landlord following goods fraudulently removed.

¹ The man in possession is bound to provide for himself, in respect of food, cooking, and lodging, as a bed, &c.; and if he go out of the premises, he may be kept out, or any other process may acquire precedence over the distress.

As regards the liability of persons for assisting to remove goods to prevent the landlord from distraining, strict proof is required of being privy to the fraudulent intent. Proof of the mere act of assistance is not sufficient.¹

2. Remedies to recover Rent otherwise than by Distress.—It is to be observed, that where goods are already taken in execution by another person, the landlord can only get one year's arrear of rent, which must be paid by the person who has sued out the execution before he can proceed to sell under it. But if the rent became due after the execution, then the sheriff may proceed without any payment to the landlord; and to render the sheriff in any case liable, he is entitled to notice from the landlord before the goods are removed; nor is he ever liable beyond the value of the goods removed.

In case of the bankruptcy of the tenant, by 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 74, no distress for rent shall be available for more than one year's rent; but this the landlord is entitled to, even although the goods are in possession of the messenger under the commission. He has, however, no lien on the goods after they are removed. For the remainder of his rent he may prove as any other creditor. The same provisions are made in case of insolvency.

Outlawry in a civil suit is also a bar to the landlord's right to distress above the value of one year's rent.

On an extent at the suit of the crown, the landlord is left to his remedy by action, and has no lien whatever on the tenant's goods.

An action at law is always open to afford the landlord relief, and he may sometimes have relief in equity where his remedy at law is in any way prejudiced.

XII. TAXES, RATES, AND ASSESSMENTS.

The tenant is primarily liable to pay all taxes &c., as between him, the landlord, and the public; but, in the absence of express or implied contract to the contrary, the landlord is ultimately liable to pay to the tenant, or allow him out of the rent, the land tax, ground rent, and sewers' rate.² The assessed taxes and parish rates are payable by the tenant. A covenant by the tenant to pay "all taxes and rates" will, however, include the landlord's taxes, as land-tax &c., and therefore the tenant must pay them; but it will not extend to those subsequently imposed, and to which the landlord is made liable by the act imposing them. But if the contract is to pay rent "clear of all taxes &c.," it seems the tenant must pay those newly imposed also.

We have before seen, that taxes paid by the tenant, to which the landlord is liable, may be deducted out of the rent, and in some cases may be recovered by an action on the covenant, or for money paid.

XIII. REPAIRS AND CULTIVATION.

The burthen of repairs is in general thrown on the tenant, on the principle that "qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus;" but this is mostly the subject of agreement between the parties.

Repairs are either substantial or ordinary; the former being those of main walls and other essential parts of the edifice, and the replacing of beams, girders, roofs, and other main constructive timbers; the latter, of windows, doors, shutters, and the like.

¹ Brooks v. Noakes, 8 B & C. 537.

² See Palmer v. Earlt, 14 M. & W. 499.

A tenant for life, although without being impeachable for waste, is obliged to keep the houses in repair; and a mortgagee in possession is bound for ordinary repairs. A tenant from year to year is only bound for ordinary repairs, and such as happen through voluntary negligence. But a strict tenant at will is not bound for any repairs. In the absence of contract, the tenant is in no case liable to make good damages by fire; neither, as we have already seen, is the landlord bound to rebuild, but in such case the tenant's only remedy seems to be the abandonment of his lease. Where a tenant holds over after the termination of his lease, which contained a clause that he should repair, he will be considered as still liable.

What repairs are to be performed under a contract generally depends on the construction which the contract will bear. If it be "substantially to repair, uphold, and maintain," he is bound to keep up inside painting. Breaking a door-way through a wall into an adjoining house, is a breach of a general covenant to repair; but ordinary and natural decay is not.

Under a general covenant to repair, all new erections made after the commencement of the tenancy must in like manner be kept up, and must in general be left for the landlord's benefit. But on this point there are many exceptions for the benefit of trade; of which we shall say more hereafter, when we come to speak of fixtures.

Where a tenant covenants to repair, "the landlord putting the premises in repair," the landlord is bound to repair in the first instance, although the particular part of the premises was in proper repair at the commencement of the tenancy.

Though formerly it was held that a tenant could not be sued on his covenant to repair before the end of his tenancy, yet it is now determined that he is liable, if the premises are out of repair, at any time during the term; and a covenant to repair at a stated time must be strictly obeyed. The good sense of this is manifest, since the freehold might otherwise be injured in the mean time, as for instance by not painting external or even internal wood-work.

The remedies in case of breach of such covenants are by an action of covenant if under seal, or by assumpsit if otherwise. No suit in equity can be maintained for specific performance, as the court does not entertain jurisdiction in such cases.

In husbandry leases there is a difference from others, which is this, that an implied covenant to repair (i. e. where none is expressly entered into) does not operate to oblige the tenant in all cases to repair other than the dwelling-house occupied by him; the burthen of the repairs of outbuildings and other erections on the farm falling on the landlord or the tenant according to the custom of the country. But courts are in general desirous of extending the liability even in this respect to the tenant. Express covenants in husbandry leases are in all respects construed as in other leases.

With regard to cultivation, the relation of landlord and tenant creates an implied obligation on the part of the tenant to manage the farm fairly and in a husbandlike manner, according to the custom of the country; but this does not extend to particular modes of cultivation, out of the ordinary course of agriculture. The usual customs of the different counties are very succinctly detailed in Mr. Harrison's edition of Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant.

Where in a farming lease any covenants as to the mode of farming are stated, it is desirable to state the modes proposed particularly and specially; for though it is usual to say, that the business shall be conducted "according to the usage of the country," or "according to the course of good husbandry," such general modes of expression are open to objection on the ground of their uncertainty.

Where there is an express covenant against the removal of farming produce off the premises, the 56 Geo. III. c. 5 has provided, that the sheriff shall not be allowed to sell such produce so as to cause a breach of the covenant, and the tenant is bound to give the sheriff notice of the covenant; whereupon the landlord must be informed of the state of the circumstances, and when needful the sheriff must postpone the sale. The produce may be sold, but it must be dealt with by the purchaser in the same manner as the tenant would have been required by his covenant.

It is the duty of tenants to keep up the fences and preserve the boundaries of the land demised to them. They cannot in general dig up hedge-rows without making some proper hedge or fence, according to the custom of good husbandry.

Of trees, timber, and underwood, we shall have occasion to treat fully in a subsequent part of this work; suffice it here to observe, that in general the tenant has only a right to cut underwood, and not trees; and it would be waste for him to do so.

XIV. FIXTURES.

The general rule of law respecting fixtures, so far as relates to landlord and tenant, is, that whatever is fixed to the freehold becomes a part of it, and is subject to the same rights of property as the soil itself.

If chattels be not let into the soil, or into the walls of a house, they are not fixtures at all, and may be removed at will. The general rule as to annexations to the freehold is, that whenever the tenant has affixed any thing to the demised premises during the term, he cannot again sever it without the consent of the landlord. The tenant may, however, so erect buildings even as to be entitled to remove them, as by placing them upon blocks, pillars, or plates; but it seems he cannot remove the blocks &c. if they are let into the soil.

There are, however, certain exceptions to this general rule. Thus, where erections have been made for the purposes of trade, they may in general be removed. It is difficult to say with precision how far this rule may or may not be extended. When, however, articles can be removed without causing any serious detriment to the freehold, or when they are capable of being removed without themselves being entirely demolished, or without losing their value, the removal is lawful. A building entirely of brick could therefore hardly be removed. But where it has merely a brick foundation, and the erection is mainly of wood, it may be removed. A steam engine may be removed. So cider mills, salt pans, furnaces, coppers, brewing-vessels, fixed vats, machinery in brewhouses, collieries, or mills, and green-houses, stoves, and trees in only insisting that the debtor is also a creditor in some other manner, in respect of which the opposite debt is counterbalanced either in part or in the whole.

By the common law, where an action was brought for one debt, a debt due from the party commencing the action could not be pleaded as a set-off, and the only relief was in equity; but the 2 Geo. II. c. 22, § 13, and 8 Geo. II. c. 24, § 4, have given a remedy for this evil, providing that evidence of such set-off may be given under the general issue, or it may be pleaded specially in bar to the action; and upon these statutes it has been determined, that a set-off is allowable in actions of debt, covenant, or assumpsit. But set-off is not allowable in actions on the case, trespass, or replevin, nor in the case of uncertain damages, nor in debt on bond conditioned for performance of covenants, nor against an avowry for rent (though in this case the defendant may plead the payment of ground rent to the ground landlord), nor against a distress, nor in the case of general damages in covenant and assumpsit; but where a bond is conditioned for payment of an annuity, or of liquidated damages, set-off is allowable.

What Debts may be set off.—In order to constitute a set-off at law, the debt to be set off must be such as might be the foundation for an action of debt, covenant, or assumpsit. If a creditor purchases goods to be paid for in ready money, the creditor may nevertheless set off his demand against the action for the price of the goods. So a verdict obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff in a prior action may be set-off against a subsequent one brought by the plaintiff. So also of a judgment, even pending a writ of error for its reversal. But unliquidated damages cannot be set off, except in bankruptcy, on which subject we shall treat fully in a subsequent part of this work.

In order to constitute a good set-off at law, the debt must be legally due; and in equity it must be equitably due. Therefore, if a debt be barred by the Statute of Limitations, it is of no avail even as a set-off. Debts, too, to be used as a set-off, must be due in the same right as those against which they are sought to be pleaded. Thus, a joint debt due from the plaintiff and another cannot be set off against a several demand by the plaintiff; though, if it were a joint and several debt it might, for then the plaintiff alone may be sued for it. And a debt owing by the wife before marriage cannot be set off against a demand by the husband alone. A, being indebted to B in 1000*l.*, executed a bond to him for securing that amount and interest; B subsequently died, having by will appointed C and D his executors and residuary legatees. The bond fell to C as part of his share of the residue. C died intestate, and L, his widow, took out administration to him, and also administration de bonis non to B. As such administratrix to B, she filed a bill as specialty creditor against the representatives of A; and it was held that they could not set off a demand in respect of sums which they alleged to have been omitted and improperly charged in the account of C, but that they must file a cross bill, because there could be no set-off at law or in equity where either debt is due in autre droit.¹

¹ Gile v. Luttrell, 1 Y. & J. 180. See Bush, Amb. 107; Medlicott v. Bowes, 1 also Lec v. Carter, 2 Atk. 84; Whittaker v. Ves 207.

With respect to setting off a joint or several demand, it has been held, that a joint simple contract creditor may proceed against a clear residue of assets of a deceased partner, the survivor being insolvent, and that he might set off against a debt due to the deceased from the survivor and himself as his surety, a debt to the survivor from the deceased, which was agreed to be applied in liquidation of the debt secured.¹

Where an action at law is commenced, and the defendant has a demand against the plaintiff of such a nature that it cannot be made available as a set-off at law, but is a good equitable set-off, he may file a bill in equity to restrain the action, and may have the benefit of the set-off in equity. Thus, where an attorney sues at law for his bill of costs, an allegation by the client, that the costs were occasioned by the solicitor's negligence, is a clear case of equitable set-off.² Or where there is a loan, and a promise to repay not provable at law.³ So an equitable set-off has been allowed upon mutual credit, though there were no mutual debts upon which a set-off could be sustained at law.⁴

But where a cross demand is acquired after a verdict, it is not a ground for an injunction in equity to stay the proceedings on the verdict.⁵ And the Court of Chancery refused, but without costs, a motion for special directions to the master, requiring him to deduct, in his taxation of costs of the parties, the costs which he should allow to the defendant, from those which he should allow to the plaintiff, who had become insolvent after the decree had been passed and acted upon.⁶ So if the defendant at law neglect to plead a set-off at law, a court of equity will not assist him.⁷ And if the set-off be of such a nature that it could be pleaded at law, it is clear that a court of equity will not entertain any jurisdiction.⁸

As regards the setting off against and in favour of costs, in a suit for the administration of assets, a debtor to the estate, who is entitled to have his costs of suit out of the fund, will not be allowed to receive the costs without setting off the debt due from him.⁹

In equity, the court will not direct the costs of a suit and of an action between the same parties to be set off the one against the other;¹⁰ especially if the solicitor in equity claims a lien on them.¹¹

Where costs are due to a man and he becomes bankrupt, it becomes a debt due to the assignees, and the party liable must pay them in full, and cannot set-off a debt against them by proving it under the commission.¹²

As to setting off costs at law, though A has a separate demand against C, A may set off the debt and costs in a joint action by him against B and C against those recovered against A in an action by B.

¹ Cheetham v. Crook, 1 M'Clel. and Y. 307.

² Piggott v. Williams, 6 Mad. 95.

³ Taylor v. Okey, 13 Ves. 190.

⁴ Whyte v. O'Brien, 1 Sim. & S. 551.

⁵ James v. Kyunier, 5 Ves. 108.

⁶ Rumney v. Beale, 10 Pri. 113.

⁷ Exp. Ross, Buck. 125.

⁸ See Cooper v. Hutton, 12 Pri. 303; Harvey v. Wood, 5 Mad. 459; Townson v. Benson, 3 Mad. 203; Hurst v. Pease, 4 Pri. 339; Dinwiddie v. Bailey, 6 Ves. 136.

⁹ Harmer v. Harris, 1 Russ. 155.

¹⁰ Wright v. Mudie, 1 S. & S. 266; contra, Shino v. Gough, 2 Ball & B. 33.

¹¹ Smith v. Brockesby, 1 Anst. 61.

¹² Exp. Rhodes, 15 Ves. 539.

and C.¹ And the court will even permit the costs of one action to be set off against those of another, where the one is several and the other a joint action under the general jurisdiction of the court; the party applying undertaking to satisfy the attorney's lien for his bill in the cause to the costs of which he is chargeable, and to enter a general remittitur in that in which he is entitled to costs. And the costs of one judgment may be set off against the debt and costs in another. But a defendant cannot set off the debt and costs against the judgment recovered by the plaintiff, if the plaintiff have still another demand against him. And one judgment cannot be set off against another where the interest of third persons have intervened between the recovery of the two judgments, except, perhaps, in the case of bankruptcy; yet a defendant may set off a judgment recovered from the plaintiff against the demand for which he is suing, and the costs incurred, though the plaintiff is in execution on the judgment.²

We will only farther observe on this subject, that the principle of set-off being rather in the nature of a defence, than a compensation for the debt against which it is applied, the debt is not extinguished by the set-off. Thus, in Pitts v. Carpenter ³ it was held, that the plaintiff, to whom a larger debt than 40s. was originally due, but whose demand was reduced by the set-off to less than that sum, might nevertheless bring his action in a superior court, and was not within the provisions of a local court act confining debts for less than 40s. to an inferior jurisdiction.⁴

OF FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES AND SETTLEMENTS BY DEBTORS.

By several statutes the claims of creditors are especially regarded and protected; and equity has always been so far disposed to afford its protection to creditors, that they have frequently been styled the favourites of courts of equity. Thus, with regard to fraudulent conveyances, by statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, § 2, and 29 Eliz. c. 5, every alienation and conveyance of lands, goods, and chattels, or any lease &c. of the same, made with intent to delay or defraud creditors, is void as against them, though good as against the debtor himself. It is questionable whether copyholds are within these acts. The compromise of a doubtful right may under circumstances constitute a fair and valuable consideration. Though a conveyance for the payment of debts taken abstractedly is within the statute, and standing alone may be void, yet if creditors join, or have notice, they cannot in general impeach the deed.⁵

Voluntary settlements are in general void as against pre-existing creditors. But the rule is the other way where the debts arise subsequently to the making of the settlement:⁶ and even though the grantor be indebted in a large sum at the time of making the settlement complained of, yet if that debt be secured (as for instance, by mortgage), it is not prima facie considered void or fraudulent upon creditors.⁷ Most cases are now, however, determined by the criterion, whether

¹ Glaister v. Hewer, 8 T. R. 69.

² See Ellis, Debt. & Cred. 213—15.

³ 1 Wils. 19.

⁴ See Ellis, Debt. & Cred. 210—219

⁵ Exp. Cawkwell, 19 Ves. 233.

⁶ Battersbee v. Farrington, 1 Swan, 106; S. C., 1 Wils. 88.

⁷ See Exp. Pye, 18 Ves. 149; Bill v. Curitor; 2 Mylne & K. 503; Garard v. Lord Landerdale, 3 Sim. 1; & 3 Western's Conveyancing, 145.

or not there is any intention to defeat or delay the creditors; and it is not necessary to prove that the party making the deed was at the time in insolvent circumstances.¹

If a party make an absolute conveyance, and yet continue in possession of the property, that is strong evidence of the absence of bona fides, and the conveyance will be set aside.²

The sale of an estate, attended with circumstances showing an intent to defraud creditors on the part of the vendor, may also be set aside.³ And if a gift by a father in insolvent circumstances to his children be so large as to convey a presumption of fraudulent intent, that too will be set aside; which is regarded as a very strong position.⁴

The secrecy of a transfer is regarded as a badge of fraud.⁵ So a voluntary settlement with a power of revocation, or any thing that amounts to such a power, is evidence of fraud.⁶

So, though a man be not then indebted, yet if he make a settlement to meet the event of his becoming so, it is equally void.⁷

Upon marriage, or for other good or valuable consideration, a conveyance to a man till such time as he shall become bankrupt, and then over, may be perfectly good and valid as against his creditors.⁸ But it is very doubtful whether a man could convey his own property to trustees on trust for himself till his bankruptcy, and then for some other party.

Although the consideration of marriage may take a settlement out of the reach of creditors, yet if the limitations of the settlement are carried beyond the parties contemplating the marriage and their issue, as for instance to any collateral branches of the family, the settlement may so far be void against creditors. Sometimes it has been held to go too far if it extend any benefit to brothers or sisters or uncles. But the law upon this point is at present in a very unsettled state.

A settlement after marriage is in general void, unless it be in consideration of some accession to or increase of property through the wife. But where the husband is not indebted at the time, it has been held that such a settlement is good;⁹ and where a husband had been living in adultery with another woman, and he and his wife separated, and he then in consideration thereof made a settlement on her, the consideration was held to be sufficient.¹⁰ And if a settlement after marriage is made in pursuance of articles agreed upon before marriage, it is then as perfectly good against creditors as though it were made before marriage.

If a trader unduly conveys away his property, he commits an act of bankruptcy; and even the conveyance of all a trader's effects on trust for the benefit of all his creditors is an act of bankruptcy, though a fiat must be founded thereon in six months to be of any avail.¹¹ In reference to such an act of bankruptcy it is to be observed, that if the

¹ Richardson v. Smallwood, 1 Jac. 552.

² Stone v. Grubham, 2 Bulstr. 248;

³ Fonb. Eq. 276. Russell & Hammond, 1 Atk. 1.

⁴ Herne v. Moeres, 1 Vern. 465.

⁵ Partridge v. Gopp, 1 Eden. 169; Ambler.

⁶ Row v. Dawson, 1 Ves. 51.

⁷ Tarback v. Marbury, 2 Vern. 510.

⁸ Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 481;

⁹ Higginbotham v. Holme, 19 Ves. 88.

¹⁰ 12 Ves. 136; 5 Ves. 384; 2 Bro. C.C. 90.

¹¹ Hobs. v. Hull, 1 Cox. 445. See Stephens v. Olive, 2 Bro. C.C. 90.

¹² 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, ss. 4, 73. See post, 768.

deed be drawn contrary to the trader's intention, it will not be sufficient to support the fiat.

Again, creditors are favoured by a statutory protection against the fraudulent devises of debtors. The 3 W. & M. c. 14, § 2, declares such wills and testaments of lands &c., and of rents out of the same, to be void as against creditors; sect. 4 excepting devises to pay debts and children's portions according to marriage settlements.

If a man owing money to others release by his will a debt due to himself, though it is good against his executors, it is void as respects his creditors.¹

And although an heir is considered as entitled to special favour in a court of equity, yet it will never favour him so as to be instrumental in depriving a just creditor of any advantage he may gain.

So the defective execution of powers, and the loss of deeds and securities, are oftentimes supplied, when for the benefit of creditors. The doctrine of reputed ownership in case of bankruptcy, and the provisions against the fraudulent assignment of personal property on the eve of bankruptcy &c., are all for the benefit of creditors. So again, by the 47 Geo. III. c. 74, the real estates of traders within the meaning of the bankrupt laws are, upon their death, rendered subject to the payment of simple contract debts as well as of those by specialty. Thus, also, where several persons agree to become partners, the act of one binds the rest, and the estates of all are liable to the partnership debts.

These are the leading instances in which the law guards the interests of creditors; but there are a great number of cases upon the subject, too numerous to be mentioned in detail.²

OF ARRANGEMENTS BETWEEN DEBTORS AND CREDITORS.

On this branch of the subject we shall have to treat of—

1. COMPOSITIONS
2. DEEDS OF TRUST.
3. LETTERS OF LICENCE.

These are modes of arrangement between debtors and creditors, which are in general so advantageous to both parties, not only saving the expences of litigation, but expediting the receipt of a part (if not the whole) of their debts by the creditors, that it is to be regretted they are not much more frequently resorted to. Indeed, to facilitate these arrangements, the legislature has recently passed an act, 7 & 8 Vic. c. 70, which, by providing means for carrying them into effect under the sanction of a court of bankruptcy, has removed some of the objections against them, and will no doubt lead to their more frequent adoption. As we shall give the act at length hereafter, when we come to treat of the relief afforded to insolvents by petition to a court of bankruptcy, we must refer the reader thither, merely observing in this place that it applies only to those debtors who are not traders liable to the bankrupt laws.

¹ Sibthorp v. Moxom, 3 Atk. 581; Drakeford v. Wilkes, id. 540.

² See the cases collected, 1 Chit. Eq. Index, 285 et seq.; and Ellis, Debtor and Creditor, 154—197.

1. Composition is an arrangement whereby creditors agree to receive a proportionate part of their respective debts in lieu of the whole. It is generally resorted to where the debtor is out of the jurisdiction of the courts of this country, or where (being a trader) his estate is too small to bear the expence of a fiat of bankruptcy. Compositions, if fairly entered into on both sides, are much favoured in equity; though at law, unless they are under seal, they are not considered as absolutely binding, even when followed up by acceptance, unless confirmed by the guaranty of some third person to pay the composition, or the debtor's effects are assigned upon trust for that purpose, or there is some other such like consideration.

The debtor must be careful to comply with and follow the agreement most scrupulously, or else the creditor may become emancipated from it, and treat the debtor as though no such arrangement had been entered into. For instance, if a particular time, place, or manner of payment be agreed on, the letter, or at least the spirit, of the agreement must be performed; and if the agreement is to pay a sum less than the real debt by instalments, and the debtor's bankruptcy intervenes, the creditor may prove his whole debt, as though no composition had taken place, deducting the amount of any instalments he has received. So if the debtor agrees to assign the whole of his effects, and he subtracts a part, the agreement is at an end.

Creditors, by doing any act in conformity with the composition, may become as much bound by it in equity as though they had actually signed the deed; and it is to be observed, that if a creditor compound with one party to a bill or promissory note, the other parties liable to its payment are thereby released.

As already shown, if on this arrangement a creditor stipulates secretly for any advantages superior to the generality of the creditors, whereby they are injured, the private agreement is void as being fraudulent, and perhaps the whole arrangement might be set aside. But where a party is discharged under the insolvent acts, or by certificate on bankruptcy, he may afterwards, if he pleases, give any one creditor a bond or other security to pay up the deficiency of the debt, provided it has no connection with any prior promise that would be void.

2. Deeds of Trust form another mode whereby an arrangement of debts may be effected. In this case the debtor assigns his estate and effects, or a certain part thereof, to trustees for the payment of his creditors' demands. It is, however, to be remembered that by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 4, the very act of executing such a deed by a trader constitutes, of itself, an act of bankruptcy, if a fiat be sued out within six months from its execution and insertion in the Gazette. An assignment of this nature by joint traders must have the consent of the separate as well as the joint creditors.

The deed is generally signed by a body of creditors who agree to it in the first instance, and contains a proviso for the benefit of those who shall come in and claim the benefit under it within a certain time. Creditors, however, coming in after the specified time are not excluded; though, after such time, according to the case of Dunce v. Kent,¹ a bill in equity may be filed to compel creditors to come in or renounce all benefit. Such a right seems, however, to be very questionable.

The construction of trust deeds is always in favour of an equal distribution among creditors; and law as well as equity favours this view. So that when a debtor is sued by one creditor, and he assigns all his property for the benefit of all his creditors, although unknown to them, and perfectly voluntarily, the law considers it a righteous act.

3. A Letter of Licence is sometimes resorted to in order to afford the debtor time to turn himself round and arrange his affairs, so as to enable him to acquire the means of paying his debts. It does sometimes happen (though for the honour of humanity, not very often) that a creditor is so obdurate that, though he knows his debtor to be wholly without the present means of paying his debts, he prefers, either from revenge, or upon the chance hope of some of his friends coming forward and discharging the debt, to consign his unfortunate debtor to a prison. If he do so from the latter motive, it is an unjust infliction on those who never injured him; and if the former be his motive, it reminds us of the moral in the fable of the boy and the goose which laid him golden eggs. Here his motive is as foolish as it is morally improper. Creditors do wisely who (presuming their debtor to have some sparks of honesty in his character), by forbearing to sue him, afford him an opportunity of redeeming himself by honest industry. This they may do by signing what is called a letter of licence, permitting him without molestation to carry on his business, or to compound with his creditors; and, generally speaking, they agree by this instrument, one with the other, that whoever does molest the debtor shall forfeit his debt.¹

OF LIENS.

Lien is the right of a creditor having possession of property belonging to his debtor, under certain circumstances, to hold it until his demand is satisfied; and it arises by operation of law or equity, in which respect lies the material distinction between it and a pledge, which latter arises by contract merely. Lien is held to be a personal right, and cannot therefore be assigned.

Legal liens are of two kinds, general and special; and then, again, a lien may be equitable.

A general lien consists of a right to retain possession of a chattel till payment of the debt incurred in and about that particular chattel, and also till payment of a general balance incurred in the course of the creditor's trade, though not in general for other debts.

A specific or particular lien is the right to retain for the debt incurred in and about the particular chattel retained, and for that only.

Equitable lien is a species peculiar only to courts of equity, and arises where actual possession cannot be had, and yet it is reasonable a lien should exist. In other respects courts of equity and of law hold the same doctrines upon the subject of lien.

One of the first requisites of a legal lien is actual possession, by one's self or by one's agent. Such possession must be continuous; for if once it is parted with, the lien is in general gone. It must also be righteous: thus, if a person pays the freight of goods that he may obtain wrongful possession of the goods, he has no lien for the amount of the freight; but if, having a lien on the goods, and in order to obtain possession it is necessary that he should pay the freight, then he has a lien for the freight so paid.¹

¹ See Ellis, Debtor and Creditor, 198—209.

Where a debtor deposits deeds with his own wife to hold for a creditor, this is not a sufficient possession by the creditor to create a lien; and if a firm abroad send goods to a correspondent with directions to him to apply part of the proceeds to another firm in England, of which one of the partners abroad is a partner, the firm in London has no lien on such proceeds while they are in the possession of the correspondent. So if a debtor deliver to a creditor an order to receive money in the hands of a carrier on the road, the creditor has no lien before delivery of the order to the carrier. If a bankrupt misapplies securities of his customer, and, to secure the latter, the former incloses in a cover bonds, stating that they are deposited as a collateral security to the customer whose property they are, and they are then deposited in an iron chest with other securities belonging to other customers, the particular customer acquires no lien.

Neither does a general assignment of a trader's effects constitute a good lien; for it amounts to an act of bankruptcy, if taken advantage of as such.²

In regard to general liens: Some traders have this right by the special custom of their trade; as factors, packers, policy brokers, bankers, calico printers, fullers (at Exeter), wharfingers, and brokers. So an attorney³ has a general lien for costs on all papers that come to his hands in the way of his business, though they are not papers in the cause in which he makes his demand. But this general lien is confined to debts incurred in the particular trade or business of the creditor, and does not extend to other debts.

As to special liens: A miller, a dyer, a printer, a carrier, an innkeeper, and all other traders not before specified, have only this more limited right. They may, however, acquire a kind of general lien by contract. Thus, if a miller by agreement is to grind a certain quantity of corn, and he re-deliver a part of it, he may detain the rest for the demand for grinding the whole. So, if a printer is to print a certain number of parts or numbers of a work, he has a lien on the last, if he pleases, for the price of the whole.

As to equitable liens: In bankruptcy, at all events, the holder of a bill of exchange has a lien on property which had been deposited or agreed to be pledged by the drawer with the acceptor to cover the liabilities of the parties thereto, even although the holder were not aware of the existence of any such deposit.⁴

An equitable lien may be created by the mere deposit of title deeds or the muniments of property. Thus, the holder of dock warrants is held to be the owner of goods in the docks.⁵

¹ Lempriere v. Pauley, 2 T. R. 487.

² Exp. Smith, 1 Ves. & B. 518.

³ See tit. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT, p. 238—291.

⁴ Exp. Waring, 2 Rose, 182, 19 Ves. 345;

2 G. & J. 464. Exp. Parr, 18 Ves. 65. Exp. Perfect, Mont. 25. Exp. Copeland re Thompson, 3 Dea. & Ch. Exp. Powis re Thompson, id.

⁵ Exp. Davenport, 1 Dea. & Ch. 497.

If the vendor of an estate delivers possession to the vendee before payment, he has a lien on the land. So if the vendee pays part of his purchase money and a good title cannot be made, he has also a lien on the land.

But these liens, as will be seen hereafter,¹ may be lost by taking any distinct security, as a pledge of stock, or mortgage on other property.

On the subject of equitable mortgages, which are in other words mere liens, like indeed legal mortgages, we shall take occasion to treat at large in the second part of this work, under the subject of Property, and the titles thereto.

Where persons acting as factors for the purchase of goods have paid the whole money, and drawn a bill of exchange, which is protested, equity will follow (or, as it is termed, earmark) the specific effects; as in the case of a sale by a factor (there being no partnership) who laid out his money in the purchase of goods, sent them to his correspondent in England, and drew a bill of exchange, which, the correspondent having failed, was sent back protested, the goods having arrived at that time, it was held that there was a lien on those goods against other creditors till the price of them was repaid.²

How Lien is Lost.—Where a specific lien only exists, and possession is parted with, though the property afterwards come back to his possession, the creditor has no lien for the previous demand. Thus, where a coachmaker repairs a carriage, and gives up the possession to the owner, who afterwards puts up the carriage in the coachmaker's yard, there is no lien for the repairs. So if the master of a ship parts with his possession of goods, he loses his lien for the freight; or if the owner of a vessel delivers it up to the charterer.

The sending goods to wharf with an order not to part with them until the charges &c. are paid, is not such a parting with the possession as to constitute a waiver of the lien. But where a party entitled to lien is party to an agreement to sell the goods by private contract, and delivers part of them, he is said to have parted with his lien of the whole. Wherever possession is acquired by the mere receipt of the symbol of the whole, so the lien may be parted with, as well as the possession, by delivery of such symbol to another party, as the key of a warehouse, or the dock warrants before mentioned.

If the creditor part with possession by force of law, as a captain of a ship under the obligation to remove a cargo to the king's warehouse, he does not thereby lose his lien. But a very little is in general sufficient to destroy lien; as if the vendor of goods points out the goods, and they are marked with the vendee's mark; or if the vendor takes another security, or even agrees so to do, as a bill of exchange.³

OF STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

Stoppage in transitu is a species of lien, but differs from that already alluded to in this, that, whilst possession is necessary to give a lien,

¹ See post, tit. VENDOR AND PURCH.

² See Ellis, Debtor and Creditor, 220—

³ Exp. Dumas, 2 Ves. 582; 1 Atk. 234; 241; and Chit. Eq. Index, tit. Lien.

Godfrey v. Furzo, 4 P. W. 186; Mase v. Cadell, Cowper, 233.

it is incident to stoppage in transitu that the possession has been parted with. It is where a party consigns goods to another, and, whilst they are in the hands of a third person, as a carrier or bailee, the consignor claims the restoration of them to him without their being delivered to the consignee. A lien once parted with by a cessation of possession cannot be recovered by a stoppage in transitu.

The vendor has a right of stoppage of all such part of the goods as is not paid for; though if a third party has paid part of the price, and the goods get into his hands, the vendor's right is gone. But, in general, the vendor's right over-rides that of the carrier's lien, or any creditor of the consignee, or even his assignees in bankruptcy, if the vendor can stop them before they reach the bankrupt's hands; though equity will not interfere to stay the sailing of a ship to prevent it.

A vendor has this right generally speaking; and a purchaser on his own credit by order of another person, to whom he consigns, is a vendor of this description; but a surety for the purchaser has no such right.

Stoppage in transitu is not a determination of the contract; and therefore a vendor having exercised this right may nevertheless maintain an action against the vendee, calling on him to complete his contract, or rather to pay damages for the non-completion. Money remitted by a debtor to a creditor cannot be stopped by this means upon the bankruptcy of the creditor.

How long the transitus continues depends on each particular case, and there are many nice distinctions upon this subject. Thus, where A, upon an order from B abroad, delivered a quantity of goods to C, to be delivered to B, and C sent them to his correspondent abroad, with directions to send them to B's order, and the correspondents on the receipt of them wrote an acknowledgment of them to B, and stated that they awaited his directions; A was held still to have the right to stop them.¹ In another case Lord Ellenborough considered the transitus to be at an end when the goods had arrived at a third place to be at the direction of the vendee, and had been afterwards sent out by order of the vendee in a new course of conveyance by the vendee's direction.²

If goods are delivered by the vendor to a third party to have work done on them by the direction and at the expence of the vendee, the right of stoppage still exists.

Though formerly held otherwise, corporeal touch is not now considered to be necessary to determine the transit; but the delivery may be either actual or constructive. Thus, where, upon the vendee's bankruptcy, the provisional assignee went to the inn where the goods had arrived in London, and put his mark on them, although he did not take actual possession of them by reason that a creditor of the vendee had previously attached them, it was held that he had constructive possession,³ though it might have been questionable, if it had been the duty of the carrier to have carried them further, as for instance, to the vendee's warehouse, in pursuance of the vendor's original direction.⁴

If the vendee has parted with the property, or has assigned the bill of

¹ Stokes v. La Riviere, cited 3 T.R. 466;
³ East, 397; 2 Selw. N. P. 1110.

² Dixon v. Baldwin, 5 East, 184.

³ Duff v. Budd, cited in Ellis's Debtor and Creditor, 251.

⁴ Id. ib.

lading to a third party fairly and bonâ fide for valuable consideration, the vendor's right of stoppage is at an end; and this is so, even although the third party knows that the vendor has not been paid, provided there is no fraud. Nor does it signify whether the bill of lading be indorsed in blank, or to a particular person.¹

Stoppage in transitu avoids a policy of insurance effected before the stoppage. Clay v. Harrison, 10 B. & C. 99.

OF INTEREST ON DEBTS.

Interest may be defined to be the recompence for forbearing to require immediate payment of money. The legal rate of interest varies in different countries; but in England, by the 12 Ann. stat. 2, c.16, the highest rate of interest that may be taken, without subjecting the receiver to the penalties of usury, is 5l. per centum per annum.

But by the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 98, § 7, no bill of exchange or promissory note made payable at or within three months after date, or not having more than three months to run (extended by 1 Vict. c. 80, to bills not having more than twelve months to run), shall, by reason of any interest taken thereon or secured thereby, or any agreement to pay or receive or allow interest in discounting, negotiating, or transferring the same, be void, nor shall the liability of any party thereto be affected, by reason of any statute or law in force for the prevention of usury; nor shall any person drawing, accepting, indorsing, or signing any such bill or note, or lending or advancing any money, or taking more than the present rate of legal interest in Great Britain and Ireland respectively for the loan of money on any such bill or note, be subject to any penalties under any statute or law relating to usury, or any other penalty or forfeiture.

If any usury, or design to evade the statute, appear on the face of a contract, not only is no interest recoverable, but the debt also from which the interest would arise is forfeited at law, nor can it be proved in bankruptcy. But if it does not appear on the face of the contract, and it is necessary to come into equity to obtain a discovery of the fact, inasmuch as you cannot call upon a party to discover that which will subject him to penalties or forfeiture unless you waive the forfeiture, you must state such waiver on the bill, and offer to pay that which shall be found really to be due, otherwise the bill will be demurrable.²

If, however, usurious interest is not contracted for, the security is not invalidated by taking usurious interest subsequently;³ though there are penalties which attach independently of the above-mentioned forfeiture.

The above statute of Anne does not extend to Ireland, the East Indies, or any of the British colonies.

Where additional interest is taken by reason of a greater hazard, or in the shape of commission by bankers or bill brokers, it is not usury, provided the contingency be not merely colourable. Upon this principle bottomry bonds are not in general usurious, because a real risk is run, though they are capable of being so constructed as to amount to usury.⁴

The charge of 10s. per cent is usually allowed to bankers and bill brokers; and although the party lending the money be not a banker,

¹ Ellis, Debtor & Creditor, 242—255.

² Whitmore v. Francis, 8 Pri. 616.

³ Exp. Jennings, 1 Mad. 331.

⁴ Chesterfield v. Janssen. 1 Atk. 340; 2 Ves. 143.

nor engaged in trade, and although the money is his own, such a charge is not usurious, if it is fairly referable to trouble and expence incurred by the lender bonâ fide.¹ Where a bill broker, in order to get a bill discounted at 4l. per cent, took upon him the responsibility of indorser, and charged his principal 5l. per cent discount, which was the lowest rate at which he could have done the business except for his indorsement, it was held that he might charge 10s. for his trouble and commission in addition thereto without its amounting to usury.²

As we may take occasion to speak of usury more fully hereafter, we shall not digress further at present, but confine our attention to when and what interest is payable on debts.

In equity, when interest is payable on a decree, it is computed up to the day on which the master's report is confirmed. But interest is not allowed on book and simple contract debts prior to the confirmation of the master's report, even although founded on a claim under a will devising real estates to the payment of debts.

The mere direction in a deed to pay debts does not infer either contract or trust to pay interest upon debts by simple contract.³ And a provision by will to pay interest on debts has been held not to extend to simple contract debts.⁴

Formerly, at law, nothing could be levied in respect of interest subsequent to the judgment. But now, by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, judgment debts carry interest at the rate of 4l. per cent per annum from the time of entering up the judgment, and such interest may be levied under the writ of execution.

Where interest has been given in equity, after a decree on further directions, on demands not carrying interest, it has been under circumstances of misconduct in delaying the execution of it; but the court is generally adverse to it.

On mortgages the interest is prescribed by the deed. In a case where interest was reserved at 5l. per cent, with a condition to take 4l. per cent if regularly paid, equity held that the 4l. per cent only could be taken, considering the 5l. per cent as a penalty, which equity scarcely ever enforces.

The court sometimes allows compound interest on mortgages, by making annual rests in the mortgage account; but this is purely discretionary in the court. Unless under the sanction of the court, it can never be demanded on the foundation of a previous agreement. And although a mortgagee may, when interest becomes in arrear, take a further mortgage to secure it, provided intermediate incumbrances are not thereby prejudiced, yet he cannot stipulate that if the interest be not paid at the appointed time it shall be converted into principal.

If there is no agreement for interest on a bond, the law nevertheless presumes a condition for payment of it; but it is a rule,⁵ that interest shall never be given so that the amount with the principal shall exceed

¹ Exp. Gwyn, 2 Dea. & Ch. 12.

² Exp. Goss, 2 Dea. & Ch. 240.

³ Hamilton v. Haughton, 2 Bli. 186.
See Stewart v. Noble, Vern. and Scriv.
528; Shirley v. Ferrers, 1 Bro. C. C. 41;
Lloyd v. Williams, 2 Atk. 108.

⁴ Tait v. Northwick, 4 Ves. 816.

⁵ Clark v. Seton, 6 Ves. 411. See also

Grant v. Grant, 3 Russ. 598; Duval v. Terry, Show, P. C. 15; S. P. 2 Ch. Ca. 182, 186; Hale v. Thomas, 1 Vern. 350, and note there, as to cases where the creditor has been delayed in his recovery at law by the act of a Court of Equity. See also other cases, Chit. Eq. Index, tit. Interest, the penalty of the bond, although there may be special circumstances in which it may be given.

111.

The general rule is, that the law, in cases of simple contract debts, does not imply a contract on the part of the debtor to pay interest on the sum he owes, although the payment of the principal or debt may have been frequently demanded. Thus, interest is prima facie not due or claimable on a demand for goods sold, although the price was to have been paid on a certain day, or on a balance struck on an account for goods sold, or on a debt for money lent to or paid for the defendant, or which had been received by him (though fraudulently) for the plaintiff's use; nor is it allowed on a sum insured, or in an action on a foreign judgment, or on an attorney's bill, or for work and labour, or upon a replevin bond, or recognizances of bail in the Queen's Bench. And an auctioneer is not, it seems, in general liable to pay interest on a sum deposited in his hands on a sale by auction.

But in some instances the law impliedly gives interest. Thus, the acceptor of a bill of exchange, and the maker of a promissory note, are respectively liable to pay interest thereon, in the nature of damages, from the time the interest became due, without proof of any demand of payment; and the drawer or indorser of a bill, or the indorser of a note, is liable to pay interest from the time he receives notice of the dishonour.

So if there be a contract to pay a debt by a bill of exchange or promissory note, and the debtor refuse to give it, he is liable to pay interest from the time when the instrument, if given, would have become due. But if the delay of payment of a bill or note has been occasioned by the default of the holder, the jury may refuse to allow interest. And if at the time a bill fall due there be no person legally authorized to receive it, as if the holder be dead intestate, and administration be not then taken out, even the acceptor shall be charged with interest only from the time the administrator demands payment of the principal.

Money awarded to be paid on a particular day carries interest from that day, if duly demanded thereon. And it has been allowed on the affirmation of a judgment on a promise to execute a mortgage. And a bond conditioned for the payment of money implied carries interest from the time of the obligor's default.

In all cases interest is allowed if there be an express contract for the payment thereof; and an agreement between the parties that it should be paid may be inferred from the course of dealing between them, as if it had been frequently charged without objection in former and similar accounts.

The invariable custom or usage of any particular trade or business to charge interest may also evidence and establish a contract to that effect; and even compound interest is allowed, if consistent with the course of dealing between the parties. But it seems that a debtor is not bound or affected by the custom of his bankers to charge interest upon interest by making rests in their accounts, unless it be proved that he was aware of such their practice.¹

By the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, § 28, it is provided, that upon all debts or sums certain, payable at a certain time or otherwise, the ¹ Chit. Jun. on Contracts, 195—197, 1st ed.; Ellis, Debtor and Creditor, 335—355.

Jury, on the trial of any issue, or on any inquisition of damages, may, if they think fit, allow interest to the creditor at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest from the time when such debts or sums certain were payable, if such debts or sums be payable by virtue of some written instrument at a certain time, or if payable otherwise, then from the time when demand of payment shall have been made in writing, so as such demand shall give notice to the debtor that interest will be claimed from the date of such demand until the time of payment. Provided, that interest shall be payable in all cases in which it is now payable by law.

And by s. 29, the jury on the trial of any issue, or on any inquisition of damages, may, if they think fit, give damages in the nature of interest over and above the value of the goods at the time of the conversion or seizure, in all actions of trover or trespass de bonis asportatis, and over and above the money recoverable in all actions on policies of assurance made after the passing of this act.

And by s. 30, if any person shall sue out any writ of error upon any judgment whatsoever given in any court in any action personal, and the court of error shall give judgment for the defendant therein, then interest shall be allowed by the court of error for such time as execution has been delayed by such writ of error for the delaying thereof.

OF THE PRIORITY OF DEBTS.

The following observations, as to the order of priority in which debts of different natures stand towards each other, apply to the payment of debts and the distribution of assets by executors and administrators, or where such distribution takes place under a decree in equity in a creditor's suit. Bankruptcy, it must be observed, has a very different effect, since administration under its auspices breaks down all the distinctions, and places every species of debt upon the same footing. In bankruptcy a judgment debt has no advantage or precedence in payment over one due by parol only; and it is only debts due to the crown, and certain others, such as those due to landlords for rent, or to clerks and servants, to a limited extent, that are not thus levelled and brought into an equality.

Independently, then, of bankruptcy, the order to be observed in the payment of debts stands thus:—

1st, Debts due to the crown, by record or specialty.

2dly, Sums due to the post-office for letters; and sums due from deceased or insolvent overseer of the poor to the parish by 17 Geo. II. c. 38, § 3.

3dly, Debts due by a judgment obtained in a court of record,¹ or by a decree of a court of equity.

4thly, Debts by recognizance and statute, if forfeited; if not, neither of these are preferred to—

5thly, Debts by specialty. These are such as are due on mortgages, bonds, covenants, and other instruments under seal. Of the claims of mortgagees and landlords it is to be observed, that the former, by having possession of the land, has virtually a priority over other creditors; and so has a landlord, from his summary power to distrain.

¹ A judgment obtained in the Lord Mayor's Court gives no priority, Holt v. Murray, 1 Sim. 485.

6thly and lastly, Simple contract debts, or such as are due on instruments not under seal, written agreements unsealed and unstamped, bills of exchange and promissory notes, and ordinary debts, unsecured by any of the foregoing means. It is said that debts of this nature, due to the crown, or to servants for wages, have a priority to other simple contract debts.

If a person takes from a crown debtor by simple contract an equitable mortgage by the mere deposit of the deeds, the crown has no priority over such equitable mortgagee; and where the crown seized the property thus mortgaged, the court ordered the equitable mortgagee to be paid out of its produce in the first instance.¹

Of debts due by specialty, judgment, &c., and of equal degree in their nature, those that are prior in point of date, and are earliest completed, take the precedence; though in the case of administration by executors and administrators, they may prefer which they please of the same particular class, provided no action or suit is commenced to recover the one not preferred; or if the executor or administrator be himself a creditor, he may retain his own debt before all others of the same rank.

As, by the commencement of an action, the executor is bound to give priority to the debt for which it is brought over others of the same degree, it is desirable that no time should be lost by creditors in this state of circumstances. Where the general body of creditors are likely to be injured by this sort of procedure, it is recommendable that some creditor, or even the executor himself, should file a bill in equity for the administration of assets. Upon this the action at law is stopped, and all creditors of similar rank come in on an equal footing.

The order of payment, however, of certain debts is subject to be varied by circumstances other than their dates. Thus, of two judgment creditors, he who first sues out a sci. fa. has the priority.

As far as relates to purchasers bonâ fide for a valuable consideration, a judgment affects the lands, tenements, and hereditaments of the party only from the time it is signed. To ascertain which, the master, in signing the judgment, must mention on the record the time of signing it, and the same must be stated in the margin of the judgment roll when the judgment is entered.² But as to all other persons besides purchasers, the judgment (when not signed by leave of the judge under the statute 1 Wm. IV. c. 7), as it affects lands, relates, it should seem, to the first day of the term of which it is signed; and it affects as well lands held in trust for the defendant as those of which he is actually seised.³ And although the defendant died before judgment was signed, yet it was held to relate to the first day of the term, and that execution tested the first day of the term might be taken out on his goods.

If a judgment be kept on foot merely to defraud other creditors, or

¹ Gasberd v. Ward, 6 Price, 511.

² 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 13—15, extended to the counties palatine by 8 Geo. I. c. 25, § 6

³ Id. § 10.

if there be any defeasance of it in force, such judgment shall not prevail to preclude them of their debts. A later judgment has, however, priority over a prior statute or recognizance; neither does it depend on the nature of the original cause of action. A judgment obtained after a conveyance of an estate to pay debts gains no priority; and if a writ of error is brought against a judgment, as the judgment is suspended, the executor may pay a debt due by statute or recognizance in priority to it. So if a judgment be not docketed, it gains no priority over simple contract debts.

Although a first mortgagee may tack, as it is called, that is, add to his present security a judgment obtained subsequently to a second mortgage, and so gain priority for the first mortgage and judgment over the second mortgage, yet a prior judgment creditor cannot tack a subsequent mortgage with like effect.¹

Of mortgages the date creates the priority in general. But if a mortgage is made for money advanced and to be advanced, a second mortgage made with notice of the first, and before any subsequent advance is made, is nevertheless subject to the further advance, the subsequent loans being considered as belonging to and forming part of the original transaction.

As before shown, a subsequent mortgagee can buy up a judgment prior to the date of the first mortgage, and so gain priority over the first mortgagee. We shall have occasion to say more of mortgages hereafter.

Although a bond be not yet due, the obligation is a present duty, and therefore must be paid in priority to a simple contract debt. But, as regards payment by an executor, if one bond is due and the other is not, the former has priority; though if the obligee forbear to demand payment till the latter becomes due, the executor may prefer either. If the bond be on a contingency not yet happened, simple contract debts may be paid first; though not otherwise. So voluntary bonds, and such as are voidable only but not absolutely void, must not be preferred to simple contract debts.²

CHAPTER XXV.

Of Principal and Surety.

THE contract of suretyship takes place when one person, to obtain some trust, confidence, or credit for another, engages to be answerable for him. As defined by Mr. Fell, in his work "On Guaranties," a guaranty is a promise to answer for the payment of some debt, or the performance of some duty, in case of the failure of another person who is in the first instance liable to such payment or performance.³

¹ Baker v. Harris, 16 Ves. 307; Exp. Knot, 11 Ves. 617.

² See Ellis, Debt. and Cred. 383—405.

³ Copes v. Middleton, 1 Turn. & Russ. 224, is a leading case upon this subject.

The first requisite, then, to the existence of a surety is, that there be a principal debtor, and one whose obligation or debt is a valid one in point of law. The surety does not become a principal debtor, so as to discharge the principal; but he must engage to do the same act as, and no more than, the principal; otherwise the character does not subsist. To create this character, it is required by the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 4, and 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, § 6, that the engagement be in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or his lawful agent; so that a verbal promise is not binding.

It is also necessary that there should be a consideration for the agreement. What is a good and sufficient consideration we shall see when we enter upon the investigation of the law of Contracts; for all considerations which are good in relation to contracts in general, will be so for the purpose of suretyship. Forbearance from suing the principal debtor is generally the consideration of guaranties; but in all cases the consideration must be definite and certain; wherefore a consideration not to sue for "a time," "some time," or "a little time," is bad, because it is indefinite; though if it were "for a reasonable time," it would be good, as a jury would determine what is a reasonable time. The consideration must also be something executory, i. e. to be done. It is not, however, necessary that the surety should derive any benefit to himself from the performance of the consideration.

The consideration, as well as the contract, must, since the case of Wain v. Walters,¹ be in writing. It need not be in any formal set of words; but "I guarantee the payment of any goods which J. S. delivers to A. B," and such like forms, are sufficient, because the consideration is contained in the latter part, viz. the delivery of the goods. But the following, by reason of the absence of a statement of the consideration, was held void, viz. "We hereby promise that your draft on W. C., due at Messrs. M., at six months, on the 27th November next, shall be then paid, out of money to be received from St. S. Church; say, amount 174*l.*" The cases on this subject affording instances of these requisites are very numerous, and are sufficiently collected by Mr. Theobald.²

If, however, on an action being brought, the surety pay the money into court, the written proof of the contract and consideration is not needful or required.

The undertaking must, however, be express, explicit, and certain; and therefore the merely writing, "Indeed, I have no objection to guarantee you against any loss from giving A. B. credit," without notice that the plaintiff meant to accept, or some proof that the defendants had subsequently consented to its being conclusive as a guaranty, was held not to be binding. It is here to be observed, that the term, "I have no objection to become guaranty," is not inchoate, but is a mere offer to become surety, and not in itself the becoming a surety.

With regard to the power of agents to create suretyship, we need only refer to the chapter on Principal and Agent.³ So with respect to guaranties by and to partners, we shall find the particulars of the subject in the chapter on Partnership.

¹ 5 East, 10.

² Principal and Surety, p. 13, &c.

³ Ante, p. 262, &c.; see also 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 4.

With regard to the extent of the surety's liability, if a person is surety for the fidelity of another in an office of limited duration, or the appointment to which is only for a limited period, he is not obliged beyond that period. If the engagement is for a particular individual, it will not extend to the acts of his partner; and it will in general cease on a subsequent partnership of the principal debtor. So if for more persons than one collectively and jointly, it will not continue, on the death of one of them, in respect of the subsequent transactions of the survivors.¹

How the Suretyship may be extinguished.

A suretyship may be put an end to by payment, or performance of the contingency; by release; by accord and satisfaction; by bankruptcy and certificate of the surety, or by discharge under insolvency; by the Statute of Limitations; or by lapse of time, and consequent presumption of release.

As to its extinguishment by the bankruptcy of the surety, the certificate in general discharges the bankrupt from all debts proved, or which might have been proved under the commission. And by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 51, where credit has been given to the bankrupt, and the debt shall not have become payable at the bankruptcy, the creditor may prove and receive dividends nevertheless, rebating five per cent interest for the time it has still to run.

In Exp. Adney,² which was decided on the 7 Geo. I. c. 31, Adney guaranteed the payment of a promissory note and became bankrupt, and the Court of King's Bench held that the debt was not provable, as it had not at the time of the bankruptcy matured into a debt, but was only an engagement to stand indebted at a future time and on a certain event; and therefore bankruptcy was no discharge. So in Allsop v. Price.³ So in Exp. Thompson,⁴ A covenanted to pay an annuity on default of B; A became bankrupt before any default; and it was held that the annuitant could not prove against A's estate, he not having contracted a debt until default made.

If, therefore, at the date of the bankruptcy, the debt is not due and payable from the principal, or rather if the liability of the surety is still contingent, his bankruptcy is not a discharge. But if the contingency has happened, and the surety has become absolutely liable to pay, either then or at a future day, it is otherwise.

The case of a drawer or indorser of a bill or note is, however, different; for whether he is in reality a surety or not, yet the law regards him as a principal, and liable as soon as he puts his name to it, and proof can be made against his estate under the 51st section; so that his bankruptcy is a discharge.

In order that the suretyship should be extinguished by bankruptcy, the liability must be not only such a one as is provable, but it must be such as is properly called a debt; therefore a mere demand for compensation in the nature of stipulated damages is not provable, and consequently not discharged by the surety's bankruptcy.

¹ Theobald, Prin. and Surety, 1—92.

² Cowper, 460.

³ Dougl., 160.

⁴ 2 Dea. & Chit. 126, S. C.; Mont. & B. 219. But see Johnson v. Compton, 4 Sim. 47.

As to sureties for annuities, the 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 55 provides, that it shall not be lawful for any person entitled to an annuity granted by any bankrupt to sue any person who may be collateral surety for the payment, until such annuitant shall have proved under the commission for the value of such annuity, and for the payment thereof. And if such surety, after such proof, pay the amount proved, he shall be thereby discharged from all claims in respect of such annuity. And if such surety shall not (before any payment of the said annuity subsequent to the bankruptcy shall have become due) pay the sum so proved, he may be sued for the accruing payments, until such annuitant shall have been paid or satisfied the amount so proved, with interest thereon at the rate of four per cent per annum from the time of notice of such proof and of the amount thereof being given to such surety. And after such payment, such surety shall stand in the place of such annuitant in respect of such proof, to the amount so paid. And the certificate of the bankrupt shall be a discharge to him from all claims of such annuitant or of such surety. Provided, that such surety shall be entitled to credit in account with such annuitant, for any dividends received by such annuitant under the commission, before such surety shall have fully paid or satisfied the amount so proved as aforesaid.

If the principal is discharged by his bankruptcy, and the creditor omits to prove under it, so is the surety; as, for instance, where default has been made before bankruptcy; for then the creditor can prove his debt under the bankruptcy, by the 46th and 47th sections, in the ordinary mode, and might recover the deficiency from the surety.

The surety's liability may also be discharged by the statute of limitations; and this commences its operation from the time when the surety's liability originated, that is, from the time when the principal made default. An acknowledgment of the liability, or promise to pay, in writing by the surety, if it accord with the 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, will continue his liability; and so will a payment on account. But how far a part payment by the principal would have that effect is not exactly determined, though it seems to be clear that it would not.

So also the surety may be discharged, in cases where the Statutes of Limitation do not apply, by a lapse of time, whence the presumption of payment arises. "This," in the words of Lord Mansfield,¹ "differs from that length of time which operates as a bar to a claim. A jury is concluded by a length of time that operates as a bar, where the Statute of Limitation is pleaded; and, though the jury may be satisfied that the debt is due and unpaid, it is still a bar. But length of time used merely by way of evidence may be left to the consideration of the jury, to be credited or not, and to draw their inference one way or the other, according to circumstances. For instance, there is no Statute of Limitation that bars an action upon a bond,² but there is a time when a jury may presume the debt to be discharged; as where no interest appears to have been paid for sixteen years. But if a witness is produced to prove the contrary, as by showing the party not to have been in circumstances to pay, or a recent acknowledgment of the debt, the jury must say the contrary."²

¹ Cowp. 102.

² Although there was not at that time, there is now a Statute of Limitation for debts due on specialty: the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 41 has fixed the period of twenty years as a bar to claims of this nature.

The surety's liability ceases in general when the principal becomes discharged by any means; but where such discharge is occasioned by act of law, then the surety is not discharged; as in the event of bankruptcy, or the like.

If the creditor agrees to accept a composition from the principal debtor, the surety is discharged. So if the principal is released, or the creditor agrees to release him, or if the principal debtor and creditor make any new arrangement inconsistent with or altering the terms of the original agreement of suretyship, or in the mode of performing them, or if time be given to the principal without the surety's consent. But merely taking a new security from the principal, without agreeing to give him time, will not discharge the surety. Neither is the surety discharged by time being given, if the agreement were authorized or subsequently ratified by the surety.

Forbearance or mere passiveness for any length of time on the part of the creditor towards the principal does not discharge the surety; for, unless called on by the surety, the creditor is not bound to sue the principal. If, however, after such request on the part of the surety, the creditor remain inactive, the surety becomes discharged.

Neither is the surety discharged by the creditor making advances beyond those to which the liability of the surety is limited; or by new credit being given to him upon an account different from that to which the surety is a party.

If, indeed, the liability of the surety is made by the terms of the contract to depend upon any act of the creditor, as upon his making a demand upon the surety, and no time is mentioned, such act must take place, or such demand must be made in a reasonable time, according to the nature of the case, otherwise the liability never attaches. Thus, in the case of Payne v. Ives,¹ the defendant guaranteed thus—"I undertake to indorse any bill or bills Mr. J. S. may give to Messrs. Payne and Co. in part payment of an order for lace which is now being executed for him; Messrs. Payne & Co. to allow 5*l.* per cent on the amount of the said bills for the guarantee." The order referred to was intended for India, and immediately after it was executed J. S. paid the plaintiffs 500*l.* in money and wine, and in June they drew on him for 337*l.* at eighteen months date, the usual credit in the India trade. For seventeen months and ten days the plaintiff retained the bill without making any application to the defendant to indorse it, and at the expiration of that time J. S. became insolvent. The plaintiffs brought an action on Ives's refusal to indorse or accept the commission tendered, which was resisted on the ground that the length of time that the plaintiff had kept the bill without tendering the commission or demanding the indorsement was a waiver of the contract of guaranty, and the Court of King's Bench held the defence to be good.

Again, if the creditor parts with, or through neglect loses, securities which he holds for payment of the debt, or any fund which he would be entitled to apply in discharge of his debt, the surety becomes exonerated, at least to the extent of the value of such securities; because the surety is entitled to the benefit of all the securities which the creditor holds.

¹ See Dell v. Banks, and another
3 D. & R. 664.

² Mann & Gr. 258; Clarke v. Wilson;
3 Mee. & W. 208.

The concealment from the surety of any of the terms of the principal contract prevents any obligation arising from the engagement of the surety, and renders the engagement a nullity. Thus, in a mercantile contract, if the surety is not informed of the price of the goods, the market price is to be understood; and therefore any private bargain between the creditor and the principal debtor for a different price annuls the liability of the surety.

If the surety by any event becomes the principal debtor, then the suretyship is extinguished as such; for a man cannot be surety for himself.

If two persons agree to guarantee, in moieties, a debt composed of a sum already advanced and of another to be advanced; if the latter be not done, there is no suretyship. Or if the agreement of suretyship stipulate for a credit for eighteen months, but the credit mentioned in the invoice is only twelve months, it was held that, unless it were a mistake, the surety was not liable; the reason being, that the creditor must perform the conditions on the part of the surety according to the strict letter of the contract, claims against sureties being strictissimi juris. Neither is a substantial performance merely of such conditions sufficient, if a strict and literal performance is possible.

A surety cannot, however, relieve himself from his obligation as such by giving notice to the creditor that he will not be any longer answerable. Thus A, on taking B as his clerk, took a bond from him and a surety to secure his duly accounting for his receipts. No time was fixed for the continuance of the service, but it was to be determinable at the option of either party. The surety died. His executrix gave A notice that she should no longer consider herself liable on the bond. A read the notice to B, and required him to execute a new bond with another surety, which was done. B died, and deficiencies were found in his accounts subsequent to the notice; and it was held that the executrix was still liable on the first bond.¹

Neither does a surety become discharged by the creditor signing the principal's certificate in the event of bankruptcy.²

Of the Surety's Rights against his Principal, and also against the Creditor.

As soon as the surety's obligation to pay is become absolute, he is entitled, before payment, or even demand by the creditor, to call on his debtor to exonerate him, and may file a bill in equity against the principal to compel him to provide for his exoneration. Until, however, the debt is absolute, equity will not grant this relief, either by ordering the principal to pay the money into court by way of a deposit, or by any other mode.

In cases where the surety has paid the debt of his principal, he can demand reimbursement, either in law or in equity; if at law, it would in most cases be by action of indebitatus assumpsit, the count being for money paid at the request and for the use of the principal; but when the surety has taken security from his principal, he will generally have to resort to that security. And if security given by a principal is made to fall due before the payment of the debt, the surety may enforce the security without waiting till the debt be paid. But no surety has a right to reimbursement where the payments made by him were under an unlawful engagement, the unlawfulness of which was known to him at the time of payment; nor can such be recovered from the principal, either as money lent for his use, or upon a counter security.

¹ Gordon v. Calvert, 2 Sim. 252; and Brown v. Carr, 2 Russ. 600; and see other cases affirmed by L. C., 4 Russ. 581.

² Theobald's Prin. and Surety. 92—169; pal and Surety, IV.

Where the debtor has become a bankrupt, if the surety pay the debt before the issuing of the fiat, the debt then becomes a debt to the surety, and he may prove as any common creditor; but if the surety have not paid the debt when the fiat issued, but pay it afterwards, his rights are secured to him under the commission by the 52d section of the Bankrupt Act, 6 Geo. IV. c. 16. Thus it will be found, that the surety must have paid the whole of the debt, or a part in discharge of the whole, so as to do away with the claim of the creditor; for if he fail in this, he is not aided by this section. To pay, therefore, only a part of the debt, not being in discharge of the whole, but merely to discharge himself, leaving the creditor still a claim upon the estate of the debtor, gives him no title to prove the part which he did pay, as a debt by virtue of the section above cited. But if the surety pay the whole of the original debt, or a part in discharge of the whole, he will have the benefit of this section, whether the creditor have proved under the commission or not: if he have proved, then the surety is entitled to stand in the shoes of the creditor as to dividends and other rights under the commission; and if he have not proved, then the surety himself may prove. In either case the certificate absolves the bankrupt from liability to his surety in respect of such payments. Also, by the 52d section, the bail of a bankrupt is expressly entitled to similar benefits; he may prove under the commission, and therefore cannot recover in an action against the bankrupt. There is another class of persons who are aided by this section, namely, those whom it designates as "liable for any debt of the bankrupt." Thus, where one partner assumes the obligation of paying the debts of the firm, here, as between such partner and his copartners, equity regards the debts as having fallen upon him; but, as the co-partners are still liable as between them and the creditors, it is viewed as a liability for the debts of another, and retiring partners so circumstanced are called sureties, although they do but slightly partake of the character. They are enabled by the above-cited section to prove against the estate of their co-partner, as persons liable for the debt of a bankrupt partner.¹

In cases where the surety, bail, or person liable for the debt of one who has become bankrupt, does not pay the debt till after the bankrupt has obtained his certificate, the surety, bail, or person liable are not barred from obtaining a reimbursement of the sum paid, notwithstanding the certificate.²

An acceptor of a bill for the accommodation of another who becomes bankrupt, is looked upon as one liable for the debt of another, and is entitled to prove under the 52d section.³ He is put to this method of recovering from the party whom he has accommodated, and cannot bring an action.

¹ 2 M. & S. 195.

² 3 D. & R. 269.

³ 13 East, R. 427.

It is necessary, however, that the debt should be really existing at the time of the fiat issuing, in order to entitle the surety to prove under it; and, therefore, where one was surety for the payment of rent, and the tenant became bankrupt before any rent was due, the surety brought his action and recovered, the court being of opinion that this did not come within the meaning of the act 49 Geo. III. c. 121, § 8.¹

And under the 55th section of the Bankrupt Act, an annuity surety is not liable for the arrears of the annuity until the annuitant shall have proved under the commission against the grantor for the value, and the certificate discharges the grantor from all claims both of the grantee and the surety.

But where a debtor has been discharged under the act for the relief of insolvent debtors, the creditor may still recover his debt against the surety; and the surety, in his turn, may recover against the insolvent,² even although the liability was absolute before the insolvency. So, also, in the case of annuities granted by insolvents, the above-mentioned act provides for the valuation of such annuities, and discharges the insolvent from the annuity as towards the grantee; but it leaves the surety still liable to the grantee, and the insolvent to the surety, for whatever payments the surety may have made on account of the annuity after the insolvency.³

As between the surety and the creditor, the principle is, that the surety having paid the creditor his demand shall stand in his place, and have all the securities held by the creditor, and derive the same benefit from them as the creditor might.⁴ And if the surety is under any peculiar personal disability, which prevents his obtaining the benefit of funds or securities set apart for the creditor, equity will step in and restrain the creditor till the surety shall have had the means of resorting to those funds or securities.⁵ But the mere existence of funds out of which the creditor might have obtained payment for his debt, is no ground at law on which to rest a defence to the creditor's suit against the surety, the law being satisfied with nothing short of actual payment of the money; but it is a ground for application to a court of equity, that a creditor is making an unjust use of one security in preference to another.

The royal prerogative, however, is superior to this equity, and the crown is not compelled to proceed first against the real debtor in cases where it is concerned, nor need it state that the principal has been applied to for the payment, or that he is insolvent. But a surety to the crown, who has paid the debt, is entitled, on the principle above stated, to stand in the place of the crown in respect of securities belonging to the debtor; and it is usual to allow him the aid of crown process against the debtor.

In some instances the surety is discharged from his liability when the creditor agrees to take a composition for his debt; and where he is not thus discharged, the surety is entitled to a rateable proportion of

¹ J. B. Moore, 644.
² Bing, 23.
³ 1 M. & P.

⁴ 14 Ves. 162.

⁵ 2 Anstruther, 544.

the composition. So, where on a debt of 1000*l.* the creditor accepts a composition of 10*s.* in the pound, the surety being liable for no more than 500*l.*, the surety is liable for a deduction of 10*s.* in the pound from the 500*l.* on which he is surety, the creditor not being allowed to place the aggregate of the composition paid by the debtor as a gross payment, excluding the surety from all benefit of it.¹

It is also a principle of law, that a creditor shall not enforce any agreement or security by which an advantage would be had over the surety beyond what he contemplated and consented to.² Therefore any compromise between the creditor and his debtor, in consideration of which the security is enhanced or any advantage is taken of the surety,³ is looked on as a fraud on the surety, and the contract cannot be enforced against the debtor.

Contributions between Co-Sureties.

The principle of contribution arises where two or more having been responsible for another's debt, one has paid it; and the rule is, that he who has not paid shall be made to come in and contribute his part.⁴ The claim for contribution was first acknowledged in equity, but it is now well established at law also, with a modification. In equity, all the sureties being solvent, the debt which one has paid will be equally divided amongst the whole, or, if any have become insolvent, among the solvent.⁵ At law, however, the solvency of co-sureties is not considered; so that if any become so, the surety who has paid can recover no more than an aliquot part from each, the number of sureties being the matter considered: thus, where there are three sureties, and one has paid the debt and another has become insolvent, the one who has paid will have to bear his own and the insolvent's share, for it will not, as in equity, be divided between the two who are solvent.⁶

If a surety has been reimbursed a part of the payment that he has made, either by the debtor, by a counter security, or in any other way, he must deduct the sum reimbursed, and can only claim contribution on the balance.⁷ A surety may, either expressly or by implication, waive his right to contribution. Where three were co-sureties, and they had agreed that, if the debtor did not pay, each would pay his part, and one of the three became insolvent; here the surety who paid the debt claimed a moiety of the solvent co-surety, but the court thought that the intention of the parties had been that each surety should contribute no more than his share, which would be a third, and so it decreed. Also, if one become surety at the instance of his co-surety, he is not in general to be held liable to such co-surety for contribution,⁸ on the contrary, it is a question whether such surety, if the creditor oblige him to pay, might not demand a complete indemnification from his co-surety.

A surety has a right to demand contribution, not only on the debt that he has paid, but also for such necessary and reasonable expences as he may have paid in consequence of the default of the debtor; for in-

¹ 7 Bing. 489.

² 4 East, 372.

³ 1 Anstruther, 202

⁴ Pitt v. Pussord, 8 M. & W.; Calton v. Simpson, 8 Adol. & Ellis. 136.

⁵ 1 Chan. Rep. 19.

⁶ 2 Bos. & Pul. 268.

⁷ 3 Car. & Payne, 467.

⁸ 2 Esp. N. P. C. 478.

stance, the expences of the writ issued against him by the creditor to compel payment is regarded as a necessary legal demand, until which the surety need not pay. But the surety would not be justified in defending the action of the creditor, and therefore could not claim contribution on the expence of such wrongful defence.

A surety has a right to demand contribution from all his co-sureties of the same degree, without respect to their being engaged jointly or severally; and if they are engaged severally, it matters nothing whether they are engaged all in one instrument or in several instruments, nor whether they know of one another's engagements.¹ The payment by one of these sureties is a benefit to the whole of them, and therefore they ought to contribute. But where one engages to pay the debt if the debtor and his surety do not, this is surety for the debtor and his surety; in such case, if the creditor make the first surety pay the debt, that surety cannot come upon the subsequent surety for contribution, for he was himself a principal as towards the subsequent surety, who expressly engaged to pay if the others failed to do so.² The terms of the engagement of the last surety take the case out of the general principle of contribution.

An agreement by the creditor to give time to one of the sureties does not take from the co-surety his liability to contribute.³ In case of the bankruptcy of one of the sureties, if the debt was paid by the co-surety before the commission issued, he might then prove under the commission; but if not, it does not seem that he could, and therefore the co-surety might here sue for contribution.

The Liabilities and Discharge of Bail.

Bail, in its original signification, means a guardian or keeper; and a man bailed is where any one, being arrested or in prison, is delivered, by the person suing him, into the hands of others, whose engagement as his bail is, to have him ready to appear at a time specified, or to answer for him by paying what may be recovered against him.

The bail, then, having taken this responsibility, stand in the shoes of the person who has commenced the suit; and they have all the powers over the person of the defendant that the plaintiff had. If he be at large, they may re-seize him and have him committed;⁴ and, in most particulars, the relative obligations of the three parties (the plaintiff, the defendant, and the bail) resemble those of creditor, debtor, and surety.

Since the abolition of arrest for debt, bail is not required except where it can be proved that the defendant is about to leave the country.

There are two kinds of bail; bail to the sheriff, and bail to the court, commonly called bail above.

The leading principle as to liability and discharge of bail is, that where the plaintiff either had not from the beginning, or has lost, the right of arresting and detaining the defendant, the right of the bail to do so is also lost, for they derive their right from the plaintiff, out of whose hands they took the defendant. There are many ways in which

¹ 2 Bos. & Pul. 270.

² 14 Ves. 160.

³ 1 J. B. Moore, 2.

⁴ Com. Dig. tit. Bail, A.

the right of detaining may be lost, some by act of law, and some by act of the plaintiff.

If a defendant becomes bankrupt and obtains his certificate before the time when the bail has become fixed, they are discharged, because the certificate releases the defendant from his liability to the plaintiff,¹ and his bail cannot render him. But where the certificate of the bankrupt is signed by the creditors, but not allowed by the chancellor till the bail has become fixed, the bail are not discharged.² The rule is, that bail fixed by a regular judgment shall not be relieved, unless the bankrupt was, at the time when they were fixed, in such a situation that he could not be sued.³

If the defendant succeeds to the peerage, becomes a member of the house of commons, or receives sentence of transportation for felony, or is sent out of the country as an alien, or dies, before the bail are fixed, the bail are discharged, because in either of these cases the power of the plaintiff over the person of the defendant is taken away, and the bail cannot render him.

If the plaintiff proves under a commission of bankruptcy against the defendant before the bail are fixed, they are discharged; for here the plaintiff makes his election to resort to the defendant's estate, instead of proceeding against him personally.⁴ Also, if the plaintiff agrees to give the defendant time, whether before or after judgment, and whether the bail are fixed or not, the bail are discharged. In the case of Willison v. Whitaker,⁵ the plaintiff after judgment agreed to take bills from the defendant payable at a future day and accepted by a third person. The defendant, thus, had freedom from arrest until the time for paying the bills, and consequently it was held that the bail were discharged. But this case is distinguished from one in which it is stipulated that the security shall not preclude proceedings during the time when the bills are running.⁶

A mere remission of legal diligence on the part of the plaintiff will not discharge the bail; and therefore where a plaintiff, after obtaining judgment, offered to take a composition, saying he would not arrest the defendant for three weeks, the court held that this did not exonerate the bail.⁷ But where a defendant offered to surrender himself on a certain day, and the plaintiff gave him time on condition that his bail should continue liable, and the bail, ignorant of the fact, signed an agreement to continue liable; proceedings being taken afterwards against the bail, the court held the bail to be discharged when the defendant's surrender was dispensed with, and not renewed by the agreement signed by them in ignorance.⁸

If a plaintiff accepts from the defendant a cognovit for payment of his debt by instalments, the bail are discharged, unless they are parties to the transaction.⁹ The reason given by the court was, that here the plaintiff had agreed to take the money in a different way from that which he was before pursuing, and if the defendant had been surrendered by the bail after the cognovit the court would have discharged

¹ 14 East, 598; 1 Burr. 245.

² 7 Taunt. 589.

³ 2 Wm. Bl. 811.

⁴ 2 Taunt. 246.

⁵ 7 Taunt. 53.

⁶ 7 Taunt. 126.

⁷ 5 Taunt. 614.

⁸ 7 J. B. Moore, 568.

⁹ 4 Taunt. 456.

him. Yet there is some conflict of cases here; for it was ruled by Lord Tenterden, that if the cognovit did not enlarge the time for payment beyond what the defendant would have by law, the bail were not discharged though they were ignorant of the cognovit.¹ So, again, bail are not discharged by the plaintiff taking a cognovit upon which he may sign judgment instantly, because upon the entering up of judgment, the bail might still have rendered the defendant.²

If before bail above is put in, the plaintiff accepts a cognovit from the defendant, the bail to the sheriff are discharged; for the acceptance of the cognovit is an admission on the part of the plaintiff that the defendant has appeared in court, and when he has done this the sheriff has done his duty.³

It is a general rule, laid down concisely by Mr. Justice Bayley in Thomas v. Young,⁴ "that the plaintiff could not give a partial indulgence to the principal without the consent of the bail; and that if he did, he discharged them, for the bail could not after this have rendered the principal."

And in the cases of Charlton v. Morris (6 Bing. 427), and Clift v. Gye (9 B. & C. 422), the court manifested great jealousy of proceedings taken against bail where due notice of the transactions between the plaintiff and defendant had not been given to them.

Bail above are discharged by their own bankruptcy and certificate, if they are fixed before they obtain their certificate.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Of Trustees and Cestuique Trusts.

THE term trust (from which that of trustee is derived), in its common acceptation, comprehends all personal obligations for paying, delivering, or performing any thing, where the person trusting has no real legal right in the security, but thereby confides altogether to the faithfulness of the trustees, or those entrusted. In its less comprehensive signification, and that sense in which we are about to view the subject, it means "an obligation upon a person, arising out of a confidence reposed in him, to apply property faithfully and according to such confidence." The party upon whom this obligation lies is called the trustee; the party for whose benefit he is to perform such obligation, and apply the property, is called the cestuique trust; and the party creating the trust may be termed the settlor, devisor, grantor, or testator, according to the subject of the trust, or the nature of the deed which prescribes it.

It would be an object of very little utility in this place to enter into any disquisition on the origin of trusts; it will be sufficient to state one of the most generally ascribed inducements for their introduction

¹ Roche v. Stevenson.

² 1 Taunt. 161.

³ 4 B. & Ald. 91.

⁴ 15 East's R. 616.

into this country. A trustee is the party in law who is supposed to have the entire property and ownership in the thing confided to him, so that his right can only be controlled in a court of equity. During the reign of Edward III. (which is the supposed date of the introduction of trusts into England), when forfeitures for treason or supposed treason became very common, the creation of trusts was resorted to in order to save the lands of the parties guilty, or likely to be pronounced guilty, of that crime. They therefore granted away their lands to a stranger, upon trust that he should hold and dispose of them in such and such ways. If the grantor in such case became guilty of treason, the land was safe in the hands of the trustee as legal owner, who was bound to apply it according to the exigencies of the deed conveying it to him; and if the trustee himself became guilty of treason, the land continued subject to the same trust; so that in either case forfeiture was prevented, or rather evaded. But there were many other motives for the introduction of trusts; as the anxiety of the clergy of former days to increase their possessions in evasion of the Mortmain acts, whereby they contrived that lay persons should hold lands upon trust for them (which they were forbidden to acquire in certain modes directly); the desire of men to dispose of property by their wills; and other similar reasons.¹

Who may be Trustees, and the Nature of different Trusts.

Although there were formerly much doubt and controversy upon this subject, it is now clearly established, that the king or queen regent, bodies politic or corporate, tenants in tail, for life, or for years, or even an occupant, a husband for his wife (in respect of property given to her separate use), infants, and generally all persons capable of confidence and of possessing real or personal estate, may hold as trustees.

No person, however, can be considered a trustee unless some interest be actually vested in him or her; and a married woman cannot be a trustee for her husband.

The cestuique trust must be a person capable of enjoying the thing entrusted. An alien cannot, therefore, be a cestuique trust of lands, because he cannot, by the laws of the country, enjoy the same, but must, if at all, hold them for the benefit of the crown. If the characters of cestuique trust and trustee unite by any accident in the same person, the trust is determined.

Trusts may be public or private; and, whether of the one sort or the other, trustees may become such, either expressly (by appointment, or by devolution from descent or representation) or by implication merely.

No person can be made liable as a trustee without his consent, either actual or implied; and an acceptance, or such a degree of interference with the trust property as may be construed into an acceptance of the trust, is necessary to constitute a trustee.

The trust also must be lawful, or else neither law nor equity will enforce it. By the 29 Car. II. c. 3, (the Statute of Frauds), §§ 7, 8, 9, it is provided, "that all declarations or creations of trusts or confidences of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, shall be manifested or proved by some writing signed by the party who is by law enabled to declare such trust, or by his last will in writing, or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect. Provided, that where any conveyance shall be made of any lands or tenements by which a trust or confidence shall or may arise or result by implication or construction of law, or be transferred or extinguished by any act or operation of law, then and in every such case such trust or confidence shall be of the like force and effect as the same would have been if this statute had not been made. And all grants and assignments of any trust or confidence shall also be in writing, signed by the party granting or assigning the same by such last will or devise, or else shall likewise be utterly void and of none effect."

¹ See Willis on Trustees, 1-29.

There is not, however, any form prescribed for the creation of trusts; and it need not necessarily take place by deed, as a mere letter, note, or memorandum in writing, or any written confession thereof, is sufficient. And, however informal or untechnical the words are, so that sense and certainty can be collected from them, a court of equity will interpret the intention of the parties.

Trusts thus expressly created, when of real estate, devolve by the death of the trustee on his heir at law, or, if an effectual will be made, on the devisee; when of personalty, on his administrator or executor. If there be co-trustees, the trust survives to the survivor, and so to his heir or devisee, executor, or administrator.

Implied, resulting, or constructive trusts arise in all those cases where it would be contrary to the rules and principles of equity that he in whom the property becomes vested should hold it otherwise than as a trustee. Thus, where money was given to a trustee to purchase promotion in the army for one who, after the death of the donor, was compelled by bad health to retire from the service, yet as the intention was evidently to provide for him, and he had as far as he was able co-operated with the views of the donor, the money was declared to be held in trust for him, although the specified object of the trust had failed.¹

There are, of course, many other instances in which this species of trust arises.² Generally speaking, where a man purchases an estate or other property in the name of another person, the latter is regarded as a mere trustee; but if a father purchase in the name of his son unprovided for, or a husband in the name of his wife (as she cannot be his trustee), the purchase is prima facie intended to be a provision for them and for their own benefit. If a trustee purchase an estate in his own name, and in the deed recites, or by any other manner admits it to have been purchased with the trust money, a trust results for the benefit of the person who was entitled to the money, or the benefits it was intended to produce; and if it were purchased partly with trust money and partly with his own, there is a resulting trust for the cestuique trust to the extent in value that was purchased with the trust fund. A purchaser, if he has notice (actual or constructive) that what he buys is trust property, is himself constructively a trustee. But if a purchaser who had no notice intervene between him and the original trustee, the second purchaser, though he had notice, may protect himself.

If the trustee of a lease renew it in his own name, he shall hold the renewed lease on the original trust; and if he be co-cestuique trust with an infant, and the renewed lease prove beneficial, the infant may participate in it, though, if it be not beneficial, he cannot be compelled to bear the burthen of it.

¹ Turn. & Rus. 207.

² See Chit. Eq. Ind. 1292, 3.

So at law, a surviving partner is entitled absolutely to the partnership estate and effects, unless expressly provided against; but in equity he is constructively a trustee for his deceased partner's personal representatives to the extent of the share of such latter partner.

It has been before observed, that a man cannot be a trustee for himself; but there is one instance in which this strange anomaly does take place, and that is in the case of a mortgagee in fee, who together with his heirs holds in trust for himself and his executors, which may be thus further explained. If the mortgage remains unredeemed, his heir shall continue to enjoy the estate; but when redeemed, his executors take the price of redemption; therefore he and his heirs hold the land in trust, when the mortgage money shall be repaid, to pay it over to the mortgagee and his executors or personal representatives.

A bankrupt or insolvent gaining any property which ought to be distributed under the bankruptcy or insolvency, is a trustee for the assignees. So a stakeholder of any kind is but a trustee for both parties.¹

Of the Estate of Trustees.

The estate of the trustee conveys to him the legal burthens, and invests him with the legal privileges. He is actually seised of the freehold, and is liable to all onerous services. However, though formerly otherwise, trustees, and mortgagees out of possession (which latter, strictly speaking, are mere trustees), cannot now vote for any office, such as coroners, sheriffs, members of parliament, &c., in respect of their estates as trustees.² The trustee of a copyhold must be admitted, and is regarded as the legal owner to all intents, except the most beneficial one, viz. the enjoyment of the fruits of it.

The trustee, as the legal owner, is entitled to the possession of the property; but he will not be permitted, in equity, to keep possession of real estate against the cestuique trust, nor to disturb the possession of the latter when he has entered, if he be competent to sustain the estate, and the trust be not affected, the estate of the trustee being merely regarded as for the benefit of the cestuique trust.

By recent statutes, the estate of the trustee is not forfeited for treason or felony, as the crown may and usually does direct the execution of the trust to which it is liable. Neither does the trustee's bankruptcy or insolvency affect such estate as far as the interest of the cestuique trust is concerned. If the trust property be money, and it can be specially identified (or, as it is termed, earmarked), as by being in a certain coin or in certain numbered bank notes, or being kept in a certain box, or if it be any other species of specific chattel that can be identified, it does not pass to the assignees; though in the converse case, if it could not be traced or identified as the identical trust property, or the actual produce thereof, it would, and the only relief would be as in the case of other and ordinary creditors.

If a feme sole being a trustee marry, the husband takes no estate by curtesy; but the general opinion seems to be, that she cannot pass the legal estate even to the cestuique trust without her husband's joining. The execution of the trust devolves entirely on the husband, except where the wife's personal acts are required; though if he survive her, the trust devolves on her heir or next of kin.¹

¹ Willis on Trustees, 30—71.

² See ante, pp 25, 185.

With respect to trustees or mortgagees who have been found lunatic, idiot, or of unsound mind by inquisition, the 1 Wm. IV. c. 60 enables the committee, under the direction of the lord chancellor, to convey property as effectually as the lunatic himself might; and where any stock is standing in the name of such lunatic &c. as trustee or executor, the committee may in like manner receive the dividends, and transfer or dispose of them. If no commission of lunacy has issued, by sec. 5, the lord chancellor may direct any person he may think proper to appoint for that purpose to convey property, transfer stock, &c.; though, where any sum of money is payable to such lunatic, no such order can be made if it exceed 700*l.*; but if it be under that amount, the lord chancellor may direct to whom and in what manner it shall be paid. By sect. 6, where an infant is seised of property in trust or as mortgagee, the infant is empowered to convey, by the direction of the Court of Chancery, as effectually as if he were of full age. If trustees are out of the jurisdiction of the court; or if it be uncertain, where there were several trustees, which of them was the survivor, or whether they or he be living or dead; or where the heir or executor of a known trustee deceased cannot be found or is unknown; or if a trustee, or heir, or executor, refuse or neglect to convey, assign, transfer, &c., within twenty-eight days (or thirty days in the case of an executor) after a proper deed of conveyance is tendered for his execution; then by §§ 8, 9, 10, the Court of Chancery may in like manner direct some proper person to convey, &c. All these orders may be applied for by petition; though, by sec. 12, the court may direct a bill to be filed, in case of any disputed rights, to establish and settle them. Section 13 provides, that the foregoing persons who are enabled to convey &c. may be compelled to do so if they refuse. If the mortgagee be an infant, and the mortgage is to be paid off, the money may be paid into the Bank of England in the name of the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery in trust for any cause depending (if any), or (if none) to the credit of the infant, subject to any special directions of the court.²

The act extends to trustees having an interest as well as to those having none (who are termed bare trustees), and the representatives of vendors and persons in whose names purchases take place are deemed to be trustees within the act; and it extends to all constructive or resulting trusts in like manner. And where the trustee, mortgagee, &c. is a married woman, her husband is deemed the trustee; and the act also extends to petitions in the cases of charities or friendly societies. By this act the lord chancellor is also empowered to appoint new trustees upon petition without a bill being filed, if the interests of the trust require it. So that now all impediments to the interests of trust property are capable of being removed.

Of the Estate and Interest of the Cestuique Trust.

The interest of the cestuique trust is in no way regarded in law; but, as observed by Lord Mansfield,¹ the trust is the legal estate in a court of equity by imitation. In the eye of this court, Lord Hardwicke said, an equity of redemption had always been considered as an estate in land. It will descend, may be granted, devised, and entailed, and that equitable entail barred by common recovery. This proves that it is considered as such an estate whereof in consideration of law there may be seisin, for without such seisin a devise could not be good of a trust. He who has the equity of redemption is considered as the owner of the land. It is said to be a settled right in equity which a man cannot come at but by subpcena, and that husband and wife being in the perception of rents and profits during the coverture are seised of a freehold by imitation of the law. The allowing tenancy by the curtesy of a trust is founded on the maxim, that equity follows the law, which is a safe and well fixed principle, for it makes the substantial rules of property certain and uniform, be the mode of following what it will; so that by the great authority of this determination, on clear law and reason, the cestuique trust is actually and absolutely seised of the freehold in consideration of equity, and therefore the legal consequences of an actual seisin of the freehold follow.

¹ Willis on Trustees, 72—95.

² See 3 Western's Conveyancing, 207 et seq.

The cestuique trust is the proper party to exercise the rights of voting, of serving offices, and doing all other acts, as though there were no trust and the estate were solely in him. Though, however, he may sue alone in equity, it must always be borne in mind that at law he can do nothing of the kind, as courts of law wholly disregard him, and all rights there must be arrived at through the name of the trustee.

In equity the trust estate may be entailed or limited, aliened, or devised by the cestuique trust, provided the extent of his interest would enable him to do these acts had there been no trust intervening.

Unless it be vested in trustees for the sole and separate use of the wife, a trust estate of the wife will entitle the husband to be tenant by the curtesy; but, except in the case of a trust term to attend the inheritance, the wife cannot have dower or free bench thereout.

The estate of the cestuique trust is, by the 39 Hen. VIII. c. 20, forfeited to the king on the high treason of the cestuique trust, though not for felony merely or outlawry. If a term merely be limited in trust, the trustee's treason, felony, or outlawry in a personal action forfeits it, and the trust estate of the cestuique trust is liable to an extent; and if the estate be freehold, it is liable to execution on a judgment at the suit of an individual; though leaseholds, terms of years, equities of redemption of terms of years, or equitable interests of any kind engrafted on the legal estate of leaseholds or terms of years, are not so liable. But in bankruptcy or insolvency such equitable estate, of whatever kind, passes to his assignees, provided they manifest their acceptance.

So trust estates in the hands of the heir are legal assets for payment of the ancestor's debts by specialty, and a trust term is equitable assets, unless it is merely a term to attend the inheritance. Legal assets are such as constitute the fund for payment of debts according to their legal priority. Equitable assets are such as can only be reached by aid of a court of equity, and are divisible pari passu among all the creditors, as where the debtor has made property subject to his debts generally, which without his act would not be so subject, or where the interest is purely equitable, and not converted into legal assets by any statute.

¹ Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden. 223; 1 Sir W. Bla. 121.

As before observed, equity will give the possession of the trust estate to the cestuique trust, provided it is compatible with the ulterior trusts, and the cestuique trust is able to receive and support it, though he is merely considered as a receiver and a tenant at will to the trustee. Between the trustee and cestuique trust there can be no adverse possession, and therefore the Statute of Limitations or length of time will not operate against the cestuique trust's rights.¹

Of the Duties and Power of Trustees.

If a trustee refuse to accept a trust, equity will interpose, and either appoint a new trustee or take the execution of it upon itself. But if he does accept it, he takes it for the benefit of the cestuique trust, and cannot possibly do so for his own. Moreover, the cestuique trust will not be bound by any act of the trustee which is contrary to the trust.

The trustees are bound to take every step to defend the title to the property, and to prevent waste or decay. They should execute their office as nearly as they can in accordance with the intention of the party or parties appointing them; and in cases of doubt and difficulty they are always justified in filing a bill in equity, so as to have the opinion and direction of the court as to the course they ought to pursue, in which cases, if they commence such proceedings upon reasonable grounds and with fair intentions, they are invariably allowed their costs at all events out of the estate or from some other party. They are bound to manage the trust property with provident care and diligence for the benefit of the cestuique trusts, and not for their own, and they will only be liable personally for losses that occur from their wilful default. They must keep clear accounts, as they are at all times liable to be called on to render them. If they retain any of the trust money in their hands, they ought to keep it distinct from their own, so that it may at any time be recognized; and if they make use of it, they are liable to pay interest; though the court will not make rests in their accounts so as to charge them with compound interest, even although they are trustees for a charity,² unless there is fraud, or a direction in their appointment for accumulating the fund.³ If they mix the trust funds with their own or their partnership property, they are liable to produce their books, whether private or partnership. They are bound to invest their property in real or government securities, and are seldom justified in an investment on personal security.

Besides the powers expressly given to trustees by the deed which appoints them, they have impliedly the fullest powers for enabling them to do all things (though not expressed) which are necessary to carry the trusts into execution; as, for instance, if a sale is necessary, they may sell, though not expressly authorized by the deed or will; or, they may mortgage. As before observed, however, it is better for them, previous to their doing any thing for which they have no express authority, to take the opinion of the court upon it, by doing which they can run no risk. If for the benefit of the estate, they may in general

¹ Willis on Trustees, 96—120.

² Att. Gen. v. Solly, 2 Sim. 518

³ Stackpole v. Stackpole, 4 Dow. 209; Raphael v. Boehm. 11 Ves. 92.

⁴ See the 10 & 11 Vic. c. 96, for better securing trust funds, and for the relief of trustees.

make leases. So they may grant the office of steward and receiver. But, generally speaking, they cannot appoint stewards, game-keepers, and the like, unless to meet the exigencies of the estate.

The power, interest, and authority of trustees in the subject matter of the trust is equal and undivided; and they cannot, like executors, act separately, but must all join both in receipts and conveyances, though when one trustee renounces and gives a release to the others, he is considered as having disclaimed, and the others are held competent to act alone.

If any thing be due to the trust from the cestuique trust, the trustee may withhold the trust fund which would otherwise have been payable to the cestuique trust. Unless the instrument appointing them expressly so provide, trustees cannot take any thing from the trust fund in recompence for their trouble in the execution of their trust; and it has lately been decided in the Exchequer, in a case not yet reported, that if the trustee be an attorney, he cannot make his charges for business done, even though the assistance of an attorney would at all events have been required. This decision does not seem quite consonant with justice, and its correctness may be much doubted, although it is quite right that some limit should be provided for their charges.

Neither can trustees ever be allowed, except in very peculiar cases, to purchase the trust estate for their own benefit, nor indeed to make any private advantage of it to themselves.¹

Of the Responsibilities of Trustees.

When trustees fail in their duty, they (and, if it be not a mere personal duty only, their heirs) are chargeable in equity for breach of trust. They are, however, generally presumed to be doing their duty until the contrary be shown.

If trustees assign property to a third party who is ignorant of the trust, as regards the assignee and the cestuique trusts, the transaction is binding, though they have their remedy against the trustee. But if the third party have notice, no act of the trustee in breach of his duty is binding against them, and therefore an assignment under such circumstances would not be allowed to stand. And trustees must never assume the ostensible ownership of the trust property. But appearing only as trustees, they are bound to exercise all that care and discretion over the property that a provident owner would himself observe. And they are liable to all the duties and impositions which the law casts upon mere ordinary individuals in similar circumstances.

Whenever trustees violate their duty, whether public or private, either by fraudulent alienation, by refusing to give possession to the cestuique trust (where the latter is competent to take possession &c.), by endeavouring to evict him improperly, by neglecting to receive and pay over the rents and profits of land, or by refusing to convey, at the request of the party entitled to call on him to do so, or are in any other manner, in the management of the trust property, guilty of fraud, misrepresentation, concealment, or other wilful misconduct, or even negligence or want of due caution, or omit doing what is plainly beneficial for the estate, a court of equity will give relief to the cestuique trust.

¹ Willis on Trustees, 121—166.

It is also the duty of trustees to give the parties interested accurate information of the disposition of the trust property, to keep correct accounts ready to be rendered, and to invest monies which are not otherwise required. If this is neglected from an improper motive, the court will visit them with the costs of suit personally, and the payment of interest on money in their hands, generally at the rate of four per cent at least. If the fund invested be the produce of real estate, the court will also in general direct that annual rests shall be made in their accounts so as to charge them with compound interest. But this is seldom or never done where it arises from personal estate.¹

They are also bound to invest money in real or government, and not on personal securities, or else they will be liable for any loss that may occur.² But if the founder of the trust had left property on personal security, without any direction for a change of it, the trustees are justified in leaving it so invested. They are sometimes enabled to lend on personal security by the terms of the trust deed or will; but even then they run great risk, unless great discretion is used, as for instance, if they lend on bond, or mere bill of exchange, or the like. And as the court of chancery only adopts (in general) the three per cent consols as a mode of investment, trustees may be liable to make good any diminution of the interest of other funds, if they think proper to run the risk of such an investment. They should therefore resort to the three per cent consols, or to the reduced bank annuities only, whereby they will avoid all risk.

It has been said to be a breach of trust on the part of the trustee to sign the certificate of a debtor to the trust who has become bankrupt, unless he has the consent of the cestuique trust. At law, if trust money be laid out by the trustee in purchase of any chattel, the chattel or other produce of the money may be claimed by the cestuique trust; and in equity they may elect whether they will take the produce or hold the trustee personally responsible.

If a trustee part with the trust fund, even to one of the cestuique trusts, or with his consent, to the injury of the others, that cestuique trust who received the benefit is first to be resorted to, to make good the loss; but if such cestuique trust be a married woman, her consent will not affect her rights against the trustee.

Trustees are generally exonerated from the consequences of accidental loss, provided they have taken all due and reasonable care to avoid it. And where they have properly left money in bankers' hands, and a failure ensues, or where they entrust another from necessity or according to usual custom, they will not be held responsible. But if they place money in bankers' hands mixedly with their own private funds, they are liable in case of the bankers' failure, especially if they have received interest on it.³ And if a trustee confide entirely to a solicitor, he is liable for the solicitor's defaults.

They must sell property under the most advantageous circumstances, or courts of equity will stop or annul the sale, holding the trustee liable for the loss and costs, if any.

¹ See Att. Gen. v. Solly, 2 Sim. 518.

² A trustee should avoid mixing trust

³ See Shepherd v. Moulds, 4 Harc. 500; moneys with his own. Melland v. Gray; Watts v. Girdlestone, 6 Beav. 189; Challon 2 Coll. 295.

v. Shipham, 4 Harc. 555.

Trustees are not chargeable for the acts or receipts of their co-trustees, except where they have expressly bound themselves to be so, or where their misconduct or inactivity has thrown such a responsibility upon them. In this respect they differ from executors. Every executor may act independently of his co-executors; and when they join in signing receipts, each of them is held answerable for the whole sum. But as one of several trustees cannot give a discharge, and as every person who pays money to the credit of a trust estate may require all the trustees to join in giving him a receipt, only those into whose hands the money actually came will be answerable for it. Nevertheless, trustees who have joined in signing a receipt are prima facie considered as having received the amount; and those who mean to exonerate themselves from that inference should show that the money acknowledged to have been received by all the trustees was in fact received only by some or one of them, and that they merely joined for the sake of conformity. And the rule, that trustees are not liable for losses occasioned by the misconduct of their co-trustees, does not extend to cases where it has been through their own default or negligence that their co-trustees have unnecessarily been invested with the power which has enabled them to occasion the loss.

As a trustee is answerable for any misapplication of the trust fund by his co-trustee when it has been occasioned by needless confidence which he has reposed in him, so will he also be liable for misconduct which has been connived at by him, although he has derived no advantage from it.

The responsibility of a trustee amounts only to a simple contract debt, unless he acknowledges it by specialty. If the trustee be a trader at the time of his death, or if his debts are charged on his real estate by will or otherwise, the cestuique trust will be entitled to the benefit of these circumstances.

Removal of Trustees.

Courts of equity will remove trustees in all cases of misconduct or of inability or refusal to act, or where the interests of the cestuique trust demand it; as where a trustee is guilty of breach of trust, or absconds on a charge of forgery, or being a female if she marry a foreigner, or if a trustee go abroad, or where co-trustees refuse to act with him, or where he becomes infirm and is desirous of being discharged.²

The 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 70 empowers the lord chancellor, where a trustee becomes bankrupt, to appoint a new one in his place; and the Court of Review has now the same power. In some cases the court requires that a reference should be made to the master or other officer of the court to ascertain the fitness of the person proposed; but where the trust fund is small, a reference is dispensed with.³ Failure of duty on the part of a trustee, from a misunderstanding of it, is not a ground for removal.⁴ If a party wishes to be discharged from the trust, a reference is sometimes directed, to inquire if he is accountable for any acts done by him in the character of trustee; and if not he will be discharged.⁵

¹ Willis on Trustees, 167, 198.

² See the cases, Willis on Trustees, 199.

³ Exp. Inkersole, 2 G. & J. 280.

⁴ Att. Gen. v. Cooper's Co. 19 Ves. 192.

⁵ 6 Ves 455.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Of Executors and Administrators.

THERE is no character or situation, perhaps, which requires so much precaution as that of an executor or administrator.

An executor is he to whom the execution of a man's last will or testament is confided by direction of the testator himself expressed in such document; except in the case of an executor de son tort, who takes upon himself the office by intrusion, and thereby becomes liable to all the trouble and responsibility of the office without any of its advantages. The appointment of an executor is essential to the making of a will or testament of personal estate. As far as the will relates to real estate, the executor (if he have any thing to do with such estate) is, properly speaking, a trustee or devisee in trust, and it is in that character he carries the trusts into execution.

In general, all persons are competent to sustain the character of an executor. Thus the king may be executor, though he may appoint others to act for him; so may corporations. An infant may be so appointed even while en ventre sa mere; but by 38 Geo. III. c. 87, § 6, he cannot act till twenty-one, till which time an administrator durante minori ætate must be appointed. So a married woman with her husband's consent; an alien friend or enemy, here under safe conduct; a person outlawed or attainted; paupers, or insolvents. A disability, however, arises from the party being guilty of certain offences against religion, or from his being the subject of a foreign country resident there, or being here without licence, or from a party's going and residing abroad, or from intellectual incompetency. And persons excommunicated, Popish recusants, Roman Catholics refusing to take the oaths of allegiance and abjuration, persons denying the Trinity, are all disqualified.

An executor is either appointed by the testator's will (actually or constructively), or he becomes such by assuming the office by his own intrusion or interference; in which latter instance he is styled an executor de son tort.

Constructive appointment is where, without expressly naming or appointing a party executor, the testator recommends or commits the duties of executing the will to him, or by conferring on him those rights which properly belong to the office. The appointment may also be absolute or qualified: absolute, where he is so constituted certainly, immediately, and without restriction in regard to the testator's effects or limitation in point of time; qualified, as where he is appointed executor at or up to a given period, or in regard to certain parts only of the effects.

The appointment may be solely, or in conjunction with others in which latter case they are all regarded as one person in law.

Executor de son tort.—A party becomes executor de son tort (or in his own wrong) by taking possession of and converting assets to his own use; living in the house, and carrying on the testator's trade; paying mortgages, debts, or legacies; maintaining suits on behalf of the estate; and by a variety of other modes. But merely performing acts of humanity or necessity to the testator's family or estate (such as locking up goods, burying the deceased, or providing necessaries for his children or cattle) will not amount to such an intermeddling as would render the party liable to be sued as an executor de son tort.

We may here observe that an executor de son tort cannot retain for his own debt out of the assets, as we shall presently see that a rightful executor may. A wrongful and rightful executor only differ in respect that the first is to take no benefit by his own wrongful interference; but as regards other creditors, there is no difference. And an executor de son tort, as well as a rightful executor, may administer the assets in due course of law, and in doing so stands in precisely the same situation as a lawful executor.

An executor derives his title from the will; and therefore at the moment of the testator's decease his right is complete, and, before obtaining probate of the will, he may exercise every act which is incident to his office, such as arranging the funeral, taking possession of the estate wherever he can find it (though he should do so peaceably), paying and releasing debts, selling and disposing of the property, commencing actions or suits, and the like.

Before, however, he can bring an action to trial, or a suit to a hearing, he must have obtained probate, so as to maintain his title in court; and if obtained before hearing, the probate relates back to the time of issuing the writ. The probate is the legal proof of the will, of which we shall say more presently.

Administrators.—An administrator is one to whom the law entrusts the distribution of a deceased person's estates and effects, where the party dying (who in this instance is called the intestate) has either left no will or other special directions as to such distribution, or where the party whom the deceased appointed executor is incompetent, generally or temporarily, or refuses to take the office upon himself. In the first instance he is simply termed administrator. In the others he is either, 2dly, administrator pendente lite, being appointed by the spiritual courts during the pendency of a suit either to establish the rights to administration or to controvert the alleged existence of a will; or 3dly, he is administrator durante minori ætate, that is, during the minority of a person appointed executor, or entitled to take out administration; or 4thly, he is administrator cum testamento annexo, that is, where the deceased left a will, and either appointed no executor, or where the executor appointed declines to act, or dies before he obtains probate of the will; or else, 5thly, he is administrator de bonis non administravit, that is, where an executor or administrator dies, without leaving any representatives on whom the trust devolves, and there is property of the original testator or intestate not yet disposed of; or 6thly, he is administrator durante absentia, that is, one appointed for the convenience of the estate during the temporary absence of the proper executor or administrator.

Administrators are the officers of the ordinary, whose jurisdiction it is to see to the due distribution of the estates of deceased persons. The appointment in all cases takes place by the ordinary granting letters of administration to the particular individual, of which more hereafter.

In the second, third, and sixth instances of administration, as the appointment is simply for the benefit and protection of the estate, it is purely discretionary in the ordinary whom he will invest with the office; but in the first, fourth, and fifth instances, it is a matter of right in some parties to have themselves so appointed. Such parties are the next of kin of the deceased. Who are such next of kin will more clearly appear when we come to treat of the mode of distribution which the law has directed of the intestate's effects. It may be observed, however, that though the ordinary is compellable to grant administration of the goods and chattels of the wife to the husband or his representatives, yet of the husband's effects he may grant administration either to the widow or the next of kin, or to both at his discretion; and though, among the kindred, those are to be preferred that are the nearest in degree to the intestate, yet of persons in equal degree the ordinary may take which he pleases. Therefore, in the first place the children, or, on failure of children, the parents of the deceased, are entitled to the administration; then follow brothers, grandfathers, uncles or nephews, including the females of each class respectively; and lastly, cousins. The half blood is admitted to the administration as well as the whole; the brother of the half blood shall, therefore, exclude the uncle of the whole blood; and the ordinary may grant administration to the sister of the half, or to the brother of the whole blood, at his discretion.

Distribution of an Intestate's Effects.—By the 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 10 (commonly called the Statute of Distributions) it is enacted, that the remainder of the personal estate of a person dying intestate, after payment of debts and funeral expences, shall, at the expiration of one full year from the death of the intestate (which time is allowed for the purpose of paying a due regard, as the statute expresses it, to the creditors), be distributed in the following manner; viz. One third part thereof shall go to the widow of the intestate, and the residue be divided in equal proportions among his children; and, if any of them are dead, the share of such shall go to their legal representatives, that is, their lineal descendants. If there are no children, or legal representatives of them existing, then one half the estate shall in all cases go to the widow, and the other half be distributed equally among all the next of kindred to the intestate in equal degree, or the representatives of such of them as may happen to be dead, if such next of kin are brothers and sisters, but not else; the representatives of no other relations being admitted, except of children, brothers, or sisters. If there is no widow, the whole estate shall be divided among the children. If there is neither widow nor children, the whole of the estate shall be distributed among all the next of kin in equal degree, or their representatives, if, as before observed, such next of kin be brothers or sisters.

Out of the above rule of distribution all such children are excepted (except the heir at law) as may have had any estate settled on them by the intestate in his life-time, or may have been advanced by him, by marriage portions or other gifts, equal to the share which would be due to them under such distribution. But if the estate or portion so given them by the intestate in his life-time is not equal to their distributive share, they or their representatives are then entitled to so much only of their father's estate under this statute as will make the shares of the children as equal as possible. The eldest son and heir at law, however, or any other son who may be heir by particular custom, as the youngest son under the custom of Borough English, though he may have land by descent of ever so large a value, and though he may have had land given him by his father (the intestate) in his life-time, is nevertheless entitled to his proportion of the personal estate equally with the other children. But if the heir at law has had any advancement from his father in money, he must, like the other children, allow for that, to make his share of the personal estate equal with their's.

In all cases where children have been advanced in their father's life-time by gifts of a marriage portion or otherwise, and the father afterwards dies intestate, if this marriage portion is not equal to the share due under the Statute of Distributions, the rule is, for such children to allow what they have so received to be part of the personal estate of the deceased, and then to take their distributive share out of the whole. Thus, if a man dies worth 2000*l.*, leaving three daughters, one of whom in his life-time has received 500*l.* from him, in order to make an equal distribution under the statute, the advanced daughter must bring this 500*l.* into hotchpot, that is, mix it with the other personal estate of the father, making that by this means the sum of 2500*l.*, to one-third part of which each daughter is entitled, or 833*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* and which the two unadvanced daughters will accordingly receive out of the 2000*l.*, the estate of the father at his decease, thereby leaving the sum of 333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* for the advanced daughter, which, with her former portion, will make her share equal to that of the others. It is to be remembered, that where the intestate leaves a widow, her third part or share is in all cases to be in the first place deducted out of the whole personal estate, before any distribution is made among the children.

A man's nearest of kin (who take his personal estate, under the above statute, together with his widow, in the proportions before mentioned, or, in case there is no widow, the whole of such estate) are, in the first place, his children and their representatives, who are particularly provided for in the act. In case there are no children, but only grandchildren, then the personal estate belongs to such grandchildren. If he leaves no wife, children, or grandchildren, or issue of them, and his father is living, such father takes the whole of his personal estate. If his father is dead, then, by the 1 James II. c. 17, his mother (if he has no brothers and sisters) takes the whole; but if he leaves brothers and sisters, the mother and they divide his effects in equal proportions; whether such brothers and sisters are of the half or the whole blood, this making no difference in the succession to personal estate. If he leaves a wife, and also a mother and brothers and sisters, the wife has one-half of his effects, and the remainder goes to his mother, brothers, and sisters equally. If his wife, father, and mother are all dead, then between all his brothers and sisters equally, and the children of such of them as may be dead; and if he has only one brother or sister, the whole estate goes to such one. If he has neither children, father, mother, brothers, nor sisters, it goes to the grandfather, or if he is dead, the grandmother.¹ If none of these are living, then such of his uncles and aunts, and nephews and nieces, as may be living at his death, take his personal estate equally amongst them. Lastly, if there are none of the above relations, his first cousins take it equally, share and share alike. But no person is ever admitted to take as a representative of another, except the issue of the intestate's children, or the children of his brothers and sisters.

In order to elucidate and explain the above, a few observations may be necessary. And 1st, It is a rule, that in all cases where there is only one person who is next of kin to the intestate, there being no other relation in equal degree, that one person takes the whole, as if there be but one child, or if there be no children and only one grandchild, and as in the case above mentioned of the father of the intestate.

2dly, Where representation is allowed, all the children of such deceased person as may be entitled to a share take such their parent's share among them all. As if a man dies intestate, leaving two children, a grandchild by another of his children, and two grandchildren of another, each of his two children take one-fourth part, the grandchild of one of the deceased children another fourth part, and the two grandchildren of the other deceased child have the remaining fourth between them. The reason of this is, that the grandchildren do not take this share in their own right as next of kin, but as representatives of their deceased parent, they are here said to take per stirpes, or according to their roots, all the branches having the share which their root, whom they represent, would have had if living. But if a man leaves only grandchildren (as, for example, two grandchildren by one son, three by another son, and five by a daughter), here each of the grandchildren take one-tenth part, because in this case they claim their share in their own right as next of kin, and all are so in an equal degree: they are thus said to take per capita.

3dly, So if a person dies without children, grandchildren, father, or mother, and his estate is divided between his brothers and sisters, and their children, the same rule is adopted as in the above case of children and grandchildren; as if there are two brothers, one sister, and three nephews and nieces (children of a deceased brother or sister), here the two brothers and the sister living each take one-fourth part, and the three nephews or nieces the remaining fourth between them, as personal representatives of their deceased parent. But if there are only nephews and nieces living, then they take the whole in their own right per capita, dividing it equally among them, and not per stirpes, or according to their roots.

4thly, If there be neither children, grandchildren, father, mother, brothers, nor sisters, but a grandmother living, she takes the whole of the estate, and his uncles and aunts (if he has any) do not share with her, contrary to the case of his own mother and brothers and sisters.

5thly, In case of the intestate leaving only uncles and aunts and nephews and nieces (children of a deceased brother or sister), the uncles and aunts take equally with the nephews and nieces, being all next of kin in equal degree.

¹ In a case where the next of kin were a mother by the mother's side, it was determined grandfather by the father's side, and a grand- they should each take half of the estate.

6thly, If the intestate leaves his wife with child, such child, when born, shall have an equal share with the other children, or such other share as it would have been entitled unto if born and living at the time of his death.

The following table shows the manner in which the Statute of Distributions operates in almost every instance that can occur:—

A Table showing how the Personal Estate of an Intestate is to be distributed.

If the Intestate has left	His Estate is divided as follows:
Wife and child or children,	One-third to wife, rest to child or children and if children are dead, then to their representatives, that is, their lineal descendants; except to such child or children (not heirs at law) who had estate by settlement of intestate in his life-time equal to other shares.
Wife and no child,	Half to wife, rest to next of kin in equal degree to intestate, or their legal representatives.
No wife or child,	All to next of kin and their legal representatives.
Child, children, or representatives of them,	All to him, her, or them.
Children by two wives,	Equally to all.
If no child, children, or representatives of them,	All to next of kin in equal degree to intestate.
Child and grandchild,	Half to child, half to grandchild, who takes by representation.
Husband,	Whole to him.
Father, and brother or sister,	Whole to father.
Mother, and brother or sister,	Whole to them equally.
Wife, mother, brothers, sisters, and nieces,	Half to wife, residue to mother, brothers, sisters, and nieces.
Wife, mother, nephews, and nieces,	Two-fourths to wife, one-fourth to mother, and other fourth to nephews and nieces.
Wife, brothers or sisters, and mother,	Half to wife (under statute of Car. II.), half to brothers or sisters, and mother.
Mother only,	Whole, (it being then out of the statute of 2 Jac. II. c. 17.)
Wife and mother,	Half to wife, half to mother.
Brother or sister of whole blood, and brother or sister of half blood,	Equally to both.
Posthumous brother or sister, and mother,	Equally to both.
Posthumous brother or sister, and brother or sister born in life-time of father,	Equally to both.
Father's father and mother's mother,	Equally to both.
Uncle or aunt's children, and brother or sister's children,	Equally to all.
Grandmother, uncle, or aunt,	All to grandmother.
Two aunts, nephew and niece,	Equally to all.
Uncle, and deceased uncle's child,	All to uncle.
Uncle by mother's side, and deceased uncle or aunt's child,	All to uncle.
Nephew by brother, and nephew by half sister,	Equally per capita .
Brothers or sisters, and nephews or nieces,	Whole, the nephews and nieces taking per stirpes , and not per capita .
Nephew by deceased brother and nephews and nieces by deceased sister,	Each an equal share per capita , and not per stirpes .
Brother and grandfather,	Whole to brother.
Brother's grandson, and brother's or sister's daughter,	To daughter.
Brother and two aunts,	To brother.
Father and wife,	Half to father, half to wife.

It will be observed that this statute secures as just a distribution of the personal assets as under ordinary circumstances would probably be directed by the most deliberate will; and in general the word relations in a will is construed by reference to the Statute of Distributions.

Before quitting this subject it will be necessary to say a few words on the customs of the city of London, of the province of York, and of other places having peculiar customs of distributing intestates' effects. There were formerly in different parts of the kingdom, particularly in Wales, in the province of York, and in the city of London, several customs, the remains of the old common law, which prevented persons from disposing of more than one-third part of their goods and personal property; which restriction continued till very modern times, when, in order to favour the power of bequeathing, and to reduce the law throughout the whole kingdom to one uniform standard, three acts were passed (the 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 2, explained by 2 & 3 Anne, c. 5, for the province of York; 7 & 8 Wm. III. c. 38, for Wales; and 11 Geo. I. c. 18, § 17, for London), whereby all persons within those districts, as well as elsewhere, are now enabled to dispose of the whole of their estate by will, and the claims of widows, children, and other relations to the contrary are totally barred. But although in these places the restraint which persons were formerly laid under by these customs, with respect to devising, has thus been removed, yet the Statute of Distributions expressly excepts and reserves these customs, and they still remain in full force, so far as respects the distribution of the estates of such as die without will. The mode of distribution, therefore, according to these customs, we shall now proceed to notice.

In the city of London and province of York, the effects of the intestate, after payment of his debts, are divided in the following manner; viz. If the deceased leaves a widow and children, his personal estate (deducting the widow's apparel and furniture of her bed-chamber, which in London is called the widow's chamber) is divided into three parts, one of which belongs to the widow, another to the children, and the third to the administrator; if only a widow, or only children, they respectively in either case take one half, and the administrator the other half; if neither widow nor child, the administrator has the whole. This share thus given to the administrator, and called the dead man's part, the administrator used to apply to his own use, till the statute 1 Jac. II. c. 17 declared that the same should be subject to the Statutes of Distribution; now, therefore, this one third part is distributed in the same manner, where these customs prevail, as the whole of the estate is in other cases of intestacy. So that if a man dies worth 1800*l.*, leaving a widow and a child or children, the estate shall be divided into three parts; of these three parts the widow shall have one, or 600*l.*, by the custom, and the child or children another 600*l.* also under the custom, and the remaining third or 600*l.* (being the dead man's share) is to be divided as directed by the statute, that is, one third to the widow, and the remaining two thirds to the child or children; so that in the whole the widow has 800*l.*, and the child or children 1000*l.*; which 1000*l.* is to be divided among the children, if more than one, or, if there is only one child, to belong to such one. If he leaves a widow and no child, the widow shall have three-fourths of the whole personal estate; that is, one half of the whole by the custom, and half of the remaining half under the statute; and the remaining one-fourth part shall under the statute be distributed to the next of kin. If, however, the wife be provided for by a jointure before marriage in bar of her customary part, she is not entitled to any thing by virtue of the custom; but she will nevertheless have her share, under the Statute of Distributions, of that one-third which the custom gives to the administrator, and which he is directed to distribute accordingly, unless she is barred of that by special agreement. And if any of the children are advanced by the father in his life-time with any sum of money (not amounting to their full proportionate part), they must allow for that to the rest of the brothers and sisters, in the same manner as has been mentioned with respect to distribution of the whole estate under the statute, but not to the widow, before they are entitled to any benefit under the custom; and if they are fully advanced, the custom entitles them to no further dividend.

Thus far, in the main, the customs of London and of York agree. But, besides certain other less material variations, which it would be here needless to mention, there are two principal points in which they considerably differ. One is, that in London the share of the children (or, as it is called, the orphanage part) is not fully vested in them till the age of twenty-one, before which they cannot dispose of it by will; and if they die under that age (whether married or not), their share survives to the other children; but at the age of twenty-one it becomes their absolute property, and may be disposed of by will, or, in case of their dying without will, distributed under the statute, like their other personal estate. The other difference is, that in the province of York the heir at common law who inherits any lands, either in fee or in tail, is excluded from any filial portion, or reasonable part.

In all the above cases, by children must be understood legitimate children, i. e. such as are born in lawful wedlock; a bastard being in law accounted the son of no one, and therefore incapable of taking by descent or under the Statute of Distributions. And if a bastard, who can have no relations or next of kin (except his wife and children), dies intestate, without a wife or any issue (children or grandchildren), leaving a personal estate, in this case the crown is entitled to such personal estate, and administration thereof will be granted to any one whom the crown shall appoint by letters patent, and which is generally to such persons as appear to have the most equitable claim.

If a married woman dies without any will (as she generally must), administration of all her goods belongs of right to her husband, as her next of kin, or most lawful friend, within the Statute of Distributions. And this is confirmed by the 29 Car. II. c. 3, which enacts that the Statute of Distributions shall not extend to the estates of married women who shall die without will, but that their husbands may demand and have administration of their rights, credits, and other personal estate, and recover and enjoy the same as they might have done before the making of that act; and the husband is accordingly entitled to the whole personal estate, and becomes her personal representative to all intents and purposes. And if the husband dies after the wife, before administration taken out by him, his executors or administrators, and not the wife's next of kin, are entitled.

But where the wife is executrix to another, then, as to the goods which she had in that capacity, administration must be granted to the next of kin to the person to whom she was executrix, his personal estate belonging to them.

General Rules for the Guidance of Executors and Administrators.

Immediately on the death of the deceased, and before it is known who is executor, any person may, without risk, adopt means to secure the property and the will, or perform any other work of humanity or necessity, without rendering himself liable as an executor de son tort. The safest course, however, for a stranger to pursue, where the property is considerable, is to obtain letters merely ad colligendum bona defuncti, which only authorizes the securing of the property. Courts of equity will not appoint a receiver until letters of administration are taken out, unless good cause is shown for the delay. The executor's duty is to preserve all specific articles bequeathed, and not to sell them, unless there is clearly insufficient to pay debts without, in which case he may sell them.

If the executors neglect to secure property, or suffer personalty to remain more than six days on the land of the deceased which devolves on some person other than the executor, they are liable to the consequences personally. They may, after proper application, enter the house of the heir or devisee &c. to take away personal property, but cannot break open chests &c. for the purpose, but must resort to law. They are not bound to give an inventory or receipt for property thus delivered up.

As to the will, by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, § 22, if any person shall, during the testator's life, or afterwards, steal, or for any fraudulent purpose destroy or conceal any will, codicil, &c., he is liable to seven years transportation, or fine and imprisonment, as for a misdemeanor. If criminally withheld, a magistrate may interfere for its being delivered up; if not criminally, the spiritual court is the proper jurisdiction. A solicitor has no lien on it for costs or otherwise.

A person who, from nearness of relationship or other circumstances, may reasonably suppose himself appointed executor, may open the will on the testator's decease; but the discreet course is to convene all the nearest connexions of the deceased, who should be present at the reading of the will.

The executor, or expected administrator, must, within a reasonable time, provide for the funeral and burial of the deceased, unless he has directed his body to be given for dissection. It is a vulgar error to suppose that a creditor can arrest the body of a deceased debtor; as also, that the passing of a funeral over a private right of way makes it a public one.

If a husband neglects to bury his wife, a stranger may do so, and obtain reimbursement from the husband, even though she lived apart from him, and had a separate maintenance; or if the executor be absent, a stranger may act in like manner, and charge such executor. The funeral should be conducted in a style adapted to the rank and means of the testator; but if he were insolvent, 20*l.* is all that executors or administrators would be allowed to charge as against creditors. In Lord Holt's time, the only expences allowed in funerals of insolvent persons as against creditors were for the coffin, ringing the bell, and fees to the parson and clerk and the bearers; to which Dr. Burn adds, for the shroud and digging the grave. Nothing is allowed for the pall or ornament, or for feasts or entertainments, nor for family mourning.

Besides the acts that have already been alluded to as what an executor may do before probate, it is his duty to present for payment bills or notes (the property of the deceased) at the exact time when they fall due, and to give immediate notice of dishonour.

An executor may be sued, if he has acted, before probate. And service of notice to quit on a widow, before administration granted, is sufficient. It has been held, that an expected administrator may file a bill in chancery, although he cannot sue at law, before letters of administration are granted, and that, provided he obtain them at the hearing, it is sufficient.

An expected administrator may also in general, before obtaining letters of administration, do all such acts as have been expressed to be proper for an executor to do before probate; and such preliminary steps may often be obviously necessary, as letters of administration are seldom issued till after the expiration of fourteen days from the death.

An executor or administrator should, as soon as possible after the death, cause an inventory and valuation to be made of the personal estate of the deceased up to the time of his death, by two competent and disinterested persons, usually sworn appraisers, who should sign the same, in case they may be required afterwards to authenticate the valuation; and this should be done before any sale or disposition is made of the property; and the executor or administrator is required, by 55 Geo. III. c. 184, § 38, to swear that the value of the property is under a certain amount. Such inventory is now not exhibited in the spiritual court, unless upon citation for that purpose; and the right of such citation may be lost by length of time.

Executors and administrators should also, as soon as possible, ascertain (by advertisement or otherwise) what debts were owing by and to the deceased, and of the latter, whether they are good or bad. In the offer to pay debts due by the deceased, great care is requisite that the executor or administrator do not make a personal engagement, so as to render himself individually responsible.

Executors should, as soon as they have ascertained the probable amount of the personal estate, take out probate of the will. They are liable to 100*l.* penalty, and ten per cent on the property, if they do not do so within six months after the death; but in case of dispute as to the right to probate, two months after settlement of it is allowed.

If the property is sworn under its value, and there is no fraud, the additional duty may be paid; and so if it is sworn to above its value, part of the duty may be returned. It does not seem that desperate or doubtful debts need be included in the amount sworn to.

With respect to where application should be made for probate or letters of administration, this depends on the locality of the property.

If it be all in one place, then it must be obtained from the jurisdiction of that particular diocese; but if there are bona notabilia (i. e. property to the amount of 5*l.* value) in several dioceses, then it must be obtained in the Metropolitan Prerogative Office of Canterbury, if all the property is in that province; or of York, if there; or of both, if in both provinces.

Land devised to pay debts is not regarded as bona notabilia at all, being mere equitable assets. But simple contract debts, bills of exchange, notes, and other choses in action due to the deceased, are bona notabilia of that diocese where the debtor resides. There are some nice distinctions as to what diocese under certain circumstances the property belongs to.

On obtaining probate in the common form, the executor, with two of the witnesses of the will (if living), and usually with his proctor, presents the original will to the judge, and proves it; the executor makes affidavit duly to administer according thereto; and the judge thereupon annexes his probate and seal thereto. The will is deposited in the registry of the ordinary of the metropolitan, and a probate copy on parchment is delivered to the executor, with a certificate of its being proved, which are termed the probate copy and probate. The executor then swears as to the amount of the property; and this is prima facie evidence for and against the executor of such amount.

Probate to one executor is good for all co-executors, unless they formally renounce.

Administration is not, in general, obtained until fourteen days after the death, and is granted in pretty nearly the same manner. Proof is required of the right to take it out; and a bond is also taken, with two sureties, in about double the amount of assets sworn to, for faithful administration; and on it parties injured may in general sue, by means of its assignment to them. An administrator, after obtaining letters of administration, stands in most respects in exactly the same situation as an executor.

Executors and administrators should, as speedily as possible, collect in the deceased's estate and effects, and reduce them into money as speedily as possible, unless otherwise directed by the will. If they carry on the deceased's business, the profit belongs to the estate, while the loss falls on themselves, unless they do so under the direction of the Court of Chancery, or merely for the purpose of winding up the affairs. We have already seen as to their duty of investing property. It is their duty to prosecute, by suit or action, all claims which the deceased had against other parties, and to defend those against the deceased which are not ended by his death (as all personal actions are); but, in all cases of doubt or difficulty, they should take the voice of those interested in the property before doing so.

Executors are in general allowed their costs out of the estate, where they act righteously and with a tolerable degree of prudence, even though unsuccessful, especially in equity. They should not, however, refer a dispute to arbitration, at least without restricting the arbitrator from awarding against them personally. Nor, indeed, is a reference even with that qualification, but without the consent of creditors and legatees and of the next of kin, prudent; for if an executor refer generally, and the arbitrator should award him to pay, he will be personally liable. So if an arbitrator should award that a debt claimed by an executor as due to the estate is not due, and the same be thereby lost, the executor will be personally liable to pay the amount. Also if an executor compromise or give time, or take a new security, and the debt be thereby lost, he must sustain it. But an executor, to get rid of a bad tenant, may release an arrear of rent, and even give him money out of the assets to obtain possession; and if it appear that he acted bonâ fide and did what he considered for the best, he will be allowed the same.

Executors and administrators should always be ready to account; but filing a bill in equity, after a proper demand and neglect or refusal, is the only means of forcing them to do so.

If there is any fair doubt of the solvency of an executor, a court of equity will call upon him to give security, or else will restrain him from managing the estate, and appoint a receiver for that purpose.

Of General Compromises with Creditors.—An executor (when there are not assets enough to pay all the creditors) ought, even without a bill filed, to convene a meeting of creditors, and propose an equal distribution; and if, upon the faith of an agreement to that effect, he execute an assignment of assets, one of the creditors who assented cannot afterwards refuse to come in, nor can he sue the executor.¹

Of Retaining.—As an executor or an administrator cannot sue himself, the law allows him, when he has been legally invested with his representative character, to retain, out of any assets that may come to his hands, to the extent of all funeral and testamentary expences and debts that have been legally paid by him out of his own pocket, and also any debt due to himself, before he pays any other creditor in equal degree. It has long been an acknowledged principle in courts of equity, that an executor paying to creditors as much as the value of his testator's personal assets, acquires an absolute right to them. Indeed, this principle equally extends to trustees of real estate; though, in general, a trustee is not allowed to purchase any part of the trust. And, for the same reason, he may retain his own debt, notwithstanding a decree has been made in a suit by other creditors for administration of assets equally, and notwithstanding assets out of which he seeks to retain his debt came to his hands after the decree; but he cannot retain, in respect of his own debt, any assets against a creditor of a higher degree. It would even seem that an executor may retain a debt due to himself and really unsatisfied, though barred by the Statute of Limitations. Where there are joint executors or joint administrators, they must inter se retain their debts ratably, and in proportion to the assets. It is optional to plead a retainer, or give it in evidence under a plea of plene administravit; but it is in general better to plead it specially, as the replication must then narrow the evidence. To prevent a struggle between creditors in order to pay themselves, it is settled that an executor de son tort is not entitled to retain, though he obtain letters of administration pending the suit against him. He may rejoin to the same puis darrein continuance, so as to sustain a previous plea of retainer, to which the creditor had replied that the defendant was executor de son tort.²

¹ Chit. Gen. Prac. 532.

² Id. 534, 5.

An executor or administrator should, in case of a deficiency of assets, pay debts of a higher nature first, and so on down to those of the lowest; otherwise, in case of deficiency, he would be held to have committed a devastavit, and be personally liable to the extent misapplied. The order of payment may here be shortly recapitulated; viz.

1st, Funeral charges.

2dly, Expences of proving the will, or taking out letters of administration.

3dly, Crown debts by record or specialty.

4thly, Debts having priority under particular statutes.

5thly, Debts of record in general; as judgments, and the like.

6thly, Recognizances, and statutes merchant and staple.

7thly, Rent, and covenants and contracts as tenant.

8thly, Debts or unliquidated damages secured by bond or covenant under seal.

9thly, Simple contract debts.

10thly, The legacy duty. This, by the 55 Geo. III. c. 184, is to be paid before payment of legacies or a division of the residue; and if not so paid, it becomes the personal debt of the executor or administrator as well as of the legatee, and which (having paid the legacy without deduction) he may afterwards recover from the legatee at any time.¹ The duty is to be paid on the aggregate amount of the residue of the testator's property at the time of the executor delivering into the Stamp office the note of what he intends to retain as residuary legatee. A gift or donatio mortis causæ is subject to this duty; and if a will forgive a debt, that too, being in the nature of a legacy, is liable to duty.

11thly, Legacies. With respect to specific legacies (or, as they are termed, bequests), that is, when any specific chattel, as a horse, a library of books, or the like, is left eo nomine to any person, it is, as before observed, the duty of the executor or administrator to preserve it entire, and not to sell it, unless there are otherwise insufficient assets to pay debts. Specific legacies only abate for the payment of creditors. Neither are such legatees in general liable to pay the duty on their legacies, but the general estate must bear that burthen.

An executor or administrator should be extremely cautious in giving his assent, however slight, to a legacy, whether general or specific, or even using expressions of congratulation or approbation respecting it, until he is confident there is a sufficiency of assets to pay all the debts and legacies in full; for such assent frequently vests a thing bequeathed in the donee, and it may turn out that it will be required to pay debts, or that the legatees in general will have to abate. The last and a very important case on this subject, containing most of the law thereon, is that of Doc dem. Sturges v. Tatchell.²

In general, legacies ought not to be paid within a year after the testator's death; and even then an indemnity and undertaking to refund may be required. If the executor &c. act otherwise, he does so at his own risk.³

¹ If a legacy is directed by the will to be paid without deduction, the estate must bear the burthen, and the legatee must be paid in full.

² 3 Barn. & Adolph. 675. See also Shadbolt v. Woodfall, 2 Coll. 30.

³ If an executor indorse a bill or note, he renders himself personally liable. King v. Thom, 1 Term. Rep. 487. So if he draw a note, unless he expressly states that it is to be paid out of the assets. Childs v. Morris, 2 Br. & B. 460.

Among legatees there is no priority or preference, not even on behalf of the executor or administrator; but all must be paid in full, or all must abate in proportion. The expressions or construction of the will may, however, give a priority.

13thly, As to remuneration to the executor or administrator for his trouble and loss of time, none is in general allowable by the law of this country, unless expressly given; therefore a liberal testator should take care to provide a fair remuneration by the express terms of his will. In a late case in the Exchequer,¹ the court held that a trustee and executor, who was a solicitor, could not be allowed his professional charges, although, had he not acted as a solicitor, some other person would have been required to have done so, who would have been entitled to such charges. This case, however, has been much doubted by the bar. An executor in India is allowed five per cent on all assets collected there. An executor with annuity would be allowed the expences of collecting rents, and sometimes of an accountant or solicitor's assistance. So he is, in general, allowed interest on advances made by him from necessity.

14thly and lastly, The payment of the residue.

Who is entitled to the residue, depends on the construction of the will. Previous to the passing of the 1 Wm. IV. c. 40, if no express disposition were made of the residue of the personal estate by the will, the executors were by law entitled to the whole of it; and courts of equity so far followed the law, as to hold such executors to be entitled to retain such residue for their own use, unless it appeared to have been the testator's intention to exclude them from the beneficial interest therein, in which case they were held to be trustees for the persons who would have been entitled to it under the Statute of Distributions if the testator had died intestate. But that act enacts, that the executors shall be deemed by courts of equity to be trustees for the person or persons (if any) who would be entitled to the estate under the Statute of Distributions in respect of any residue not expressly disposed of, unless it appear by the will, or any codicil thereto, that the executors are intended to take such residue beneficially. But where there is no person so entitled under the Statute of Distributions, this act does not affect any right in respect of such residue to which the executors would have been entitled if the act had not been passed.

Before dividing the residue, the heir or next of kin should always be advertised for.

The residue is only recoverable in equity or in the ecclesiastical court. If it issues out of or is charged on land devised to be sold, or from equitable assets, then the former must be the court resorted to.

In intestacy no distribution need take place before the end of a year after the death, and then a bond to refund may be required. If, however, an executor or administrator retain the residue after the year without good reason, he is liable to pay interest.

To enable a party entitled to a residue to sue an administrator on the administration bond, it has recently been decided at law (contrary to the ecclesiastical and spiritual court) that there must have been a decree of the latter court. When, however, such bond has been forfeited, a creditor, as well as the next of kin, is entitled to sue upon it, in the name of the archbishop or his ordinary; and they cannot refuse.

¹ Exp. Southwell, Trin. T. 1833.

² See 1 Chit. Gen. Prac. 5-0—554.

Before the passing of the recent Law Amendment act, 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, there was no remedy provided by law for injuries to the real estate of a deceased person which had been committed in his life-time, nor for certain wrongs done by a person deceased in his life-time to another in respect of his property, real or personal. To remedy this, the second section of that act enacts, that remedies for the first kind of injuries may be obtained by action of trespass, or trespass on the case, provided the cause of action arose within six months before the death, and the action be commenced within one year after the death; and it directs that the damages to be recovered shall form part of the personal estate of the deceased. In like manner similar actions may be maintained against the executors, if the cause of action arose within six months prior to the death, and they be commenced within six months after the death; and the damages shall be a debt to be paid pari passu with other simple contract debts of the deceased.

So by § 14, an action of debt on simple contract is maintainable in any court of common law against the executors or administrators.

And by § 31, executors and administrators, suing in right of their testator or intestate, are, in the event of nonsuit or verdict against them, liable to pay costs, as though they were suing in their own right.

And by § 37, the executors or administrators of a deceased landlord are enabled to distrain on the goods of the tenant for arrears of rent due to the deceased, in like manner as the deceased himself could have done.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Of Partners.

PARTNERSHIP is a contract by which two or more persons join together their money, goods, or labour, for carrying on some business or undertaking in common, upon an agreement that the gain or loss shall be divided proportionably between them. Although the partners' shares need not be equal, yet they must be joint.

Public trading companies, established by royal charter of incorporation, letters patent, or by act of parliament, are for the most part exempt from the general law of partnership, by which each individual partner is personally liable for the whole of the debts of the partnership. But, unless such responsibility be so limited, public companies differ not in this respect from private copartnerships, and the members of each are jointly and individually liable for all the debts of the company.¹

¹ Under the 6 Geo. IV. c. 91, charters of incorporation were sometimes granted merely for the purpose of enabling public companies to sue and be sued in the name of their public officers, without limiting the responsibility of the shareholders to the public. By the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 91, this privilege might be granted to unincorporated companies and associations. And now the 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vic. c. 73, after reciting that divers associations are and may be formed for trading or other purposes, some of which it would be inexpedient to incorporate by royal charter, although it

Private copartneries and joint-stock companies differ in other respects. In a private copartnery, no partner, without the consent of the company, can transfer his share to another person, or introduce a new member into the company: each member, however, may, upon proper warning, withdraw from the partnership, and demand payment of his share of the common stock. In a joint-stock company, on the contrary, no member can demand payment of his share from the company; but each member may, without their consent, transfer his share to another person, and thereby introduce a new member.¹

Contract of Copartnership.—To constitute an ordinary partnership (to which we are now about to confine our observations) no charter or licence is necessary, nor any thing more, as affects the world, than their bare consent for this purpose; and though there is usually some deed of copartnership entered into, yet the mere existence of a mutuality of interest in the profits of a business or a branch of it, or of the ostensible character of joint traders, is sufficient to render them liable to be treated and considered as partners.

All persons capable of contracting may become partners. But an infant, as between him and the world, will not be liable to the burthens of the partnership (for he may plead his infancy); and a feme covert can in no way be a partner, for the husband is entitled to all her share in the subject matter of the partnership.

The free and personal choice of the parties is essential to the existence of a partnership. So that the executors &c. of a deceased partner do not become partners with the old firm, though entitled to participate in the profits till the winding up of the concern. And, for the same reason, though one partner can charge his own share in the concern to its utmost value, yet he cannot give a stranger an interest in the partnership without the consent of the copartners.

Another ingredient of a partnership is, that the object of it should be within the policy of the law, and for a lawful purpose.

If a partnership be formed for one particular purpose, another cannot be pursued, against the consent of any one partner, though an indemnity from loss be offered to him.

Where there is an implied contract of partnership only, the copartners are each presumed to have an equal share in the property inter se, and as regards the world; and though towards the world each is liable might be expedient to confer on them some of the privileges incident to corporations created by charter, empowers her majesty, by letters patent under the great seal, to grant to any such company, although not incorporated, any privileges which, according to the rules of the common law, it would be competent to grant by a charter of incorporation; such as, that the members shall be liable for the engagement of such companies only to such extent per share as shall be limited by such letters patent; and that the companies may sue and be sued by their public officer, providing, however, that any member may be joined with such officer as a defendant in equity for the purpose of discovery, or in cases of fraud.

¹ By the 7 & 8 Vic. c. 110, provisions are made for the registration, incorporation, and regulation of joint stock companies; and by 7 & 8 Vic. c. 111, for facilitating the winding up of their affairs when unable to meet their pecuniary engagements. The 8 & 9 Vic. c. 16, called "The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act," comprises in one general act a variety of provisions relating to the consolidation and management of such companies, which are applicable to every joint stock company thereafter incorporated by act of parliament for the purpose of carrying on any undertaking, except so far as they may be expressly varied by any such special act.

for the whole loss, yet inter se each is only liable to the extent of his own share and interest.

A partnership may sometimes subsist as regards individuals and the rest of the world, though not as between the individuals themselves. Thus, where it was agreed between A and B, that A should furnish the goods, and that A and B should share the profits, it was held that there was no partnership between A and B inter se, as it was merely a mode of remuneration of the trouble and credit of B by the division of profits, though, as regarded third persons, they were liable as partners. So if the amount of a clerk or servant's remuneration is dependent on and derived as such from the profits of a concern, though, as regards the world, he is liable as a partner, he is not a partner as regards his employers.

There are three classes of partners, whose contract and liability as regards the world and inter se we shall now shortly consider: 1st, An actual ostensible partner; 2dly, A secret or dormant partner; and 3dly, A nominal partner.

The first is one who not only participates in the profit and loss, but appears and exhibits himself to the world as a person connected with the partnership, and as forming a component part thereof. As partner, he is clearly answerable for the debts of the partnership, and entitled to a share in the profits; and therefore, in joint stock companies, a person paying his deposit on shares, and afterwards signing the deed of partnership, has been held to be a partner from the time of his deposit, and liable from that time.

The second description of partner is where a person is participant in the profits and losses, but, his name being suppressed and concealed from the world, his interest is consequently not apparent. It is laid down, that whoever has a right to share in the profits of a trade or particular adventure, or has a specific interest in the profits themselves as profits, becomes chargeable as a partner to third persons in respect of transactions arising out of the trade or particular adventure in the profits of which he is to participate. Executors of a deceased partner, whose names are not added to the trade, but who continue his share of the partnership property in the concern for the benefit of his infant child, and who on a division of the profits and loss carry the same to the account of the infant, though they take no part of the profits themselves, are liable as dormant partners. The responsibility of this class of partners cannot, any more than that of the other classes, be altered as regards the world by any private agreement; though, like the others, it may be inter se; and therefore a dormant partner may be called on to pay the whole debts of the partnership.

As to constituting a person a partner, a distinction prevails between his having an interest in the profits themselves as profits, and being entitled to a given sum of money in proportion to a given quantum of the profits, as the reward of or compensation for labour and services. Thus, a remuneration to a clerk or servant of a portion of the money of his principal does not constitute him a partner. Lord Eldon observed, that "if a man stipulates that, as a reward for his labour, he shall have, not a specific interest in the business, but a given sum of money in proportion to a given quantum of the profits, that will not make him a partner; but if he agree for a part of the profits as such, giving him a right to an account, though having no property in the capital, he is, as to third persons, a partner." The distinction is certainly very fine drawn; but it is too well established to be questioned in the present day.

A retiring partner, who receives an annuity fairly proportioned to the interest he possessed in the profits and good-will at the time of his secession from the partnership, is absolved from continued responsibility to third persons, provided the fact of his retiring is sufficiently promulgated to the world. But if he continue to receive any share of the profits as such, he does not become exonerated; or if the amount of the annuity is indefinite, and depending on the accidents of trade.

Under the third class, or nominal partners, are those who have no actual interest in the trade or its profits, but who, by allowing their names to be used, hold themselves out to the world as apparently having an interest. As observed by Lord C. J. Eyre, "a case may be stated, in which it is the clear sense of the parties to the contract that they shall not be partners; that A is to contribute neither labour nor money, and, to go still further, not to receive any profits; but if he will lend his name as a partner, he becomes as against all the rest of the world a partner, not upon the ground of the real transaction between them, but upon principles of general policy, to prevent frauds, to which creditors would be liable if they were to suppose they lent their money upon the apparent credit of three or four persons, when in fact they only lent it to two of them, to whom without the others they would probably have lent nothing."

To create this liability, the allowed use of the name on bills of parcels used by the firm seems sufficient, and either a positive consent, or at least a knowledge and constructive permission of the assumption.

If a retiring party give ample notice of his seceding, the unauthorized use of his name will not render him liable; but if he permit his name to remain over the shop door, or, being a carrier, suffer it to remain on the cart, his liability will continue; as it will also where from circumstances it will be presumed he acquiesced in the use of his name.

Exceptions to the general rights of individuals to enter into copartnership have sometimes been provided in favour and for the protection of certain establishments. Thus, in favour of the Bank of England it was enacted, that it should not be lawful for any body politic, other than the Bank of England, or for any other persons whatsoever united in covenants or partnership exceeding the number of six persons, in England, to borrow, owe, or take up any sum of money on their bills or notes payable on demand or in a less time than six months from the borrowing thereof. But this restriction was removed by the 7 Geo. IV. c. 46, so far as relates to bodies politic or corporate or persons carrying on the business of bankers at a distance exceeding sixty-five miles from London; who are allowed to issue notes payable on demand at places exceeding sixty-five miles from London, but not to have any house of business or establishment, or to draw upon any partner or agent or other person resident within that distance. And by the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 98 (the act for the renewal of the Bank Charter) the exclusive privileges of that corporation are, if not still further abridged, somewhat more accurately defined. This act enacts, that no body politic or corporate, or society or company or persons in partnership exceeding six persons, shall make or issue, in London or within sixty-five miles thereof, any bill of exchange or promissory note, or engagement for the payment of money on demand, or upon which any person holding the same may obtain payment on demand. But joint-stock banks, or copartnerships of bankers exceeding six persons, established under the 7 Geo. IV. at a greater distance than sixty-five miles from London, and not having any house of business or establishment as bankers within that distance, are allowed by this act to make their notes payable at the places where issued not being within sixty-five miles, and also in London, and to have an agent or agents in London, or at any other place at which such notes are made payable, for the purpose of payment only; but no such bill or note is to be for any less sum than 5*l.*, or to be re-issued in London or within sixty-five miles thereof.¹

There were also formerly some exceptions to the general law of partnership in favour of the Royal Exchange Assurance and London Assurance Companies; all societies or partnerships, with the exception of these two chartered companies, having been prohibited from engaging in the business of insuring ships or goods at sea, and from lending money at bottomry. This prohibition, however, was removed in the year 1824 by the 5 Geo. IV. c. 114, and the business of marine insurances is now placed on the same footing as all others.

Interest of Partners in the Partnership Property.—Partners are at law joint tenants of their merchandise, except that there is no right of survivorship between them, but the share of a deceased partner goes over to his executors or administrators. This, however, is the only respect in which it differs from an ordinary joint tenancy, the nature of which we shall more fully discuss in a subsequent part of this work. All living partners have therefore a unity, or the same species, of interest in the stock in trade, whether each individual partner contributes exactly in the same proportion or not; but their several degrees of interest must be regulated according to the stipulated proportions and the conditions of the partnership. To whatever share a partner may be entitled, or in whatever sum a firm may be indebted to him, he has no exclusive right to any part of the joint effects, until a balance of accounts is struck between him and his copartners, and it is ascertained precisely what is the actual amount of his interest.

¹ Under the previous Bank Charter Acts, it had been generally understood, that, by the acts conferring exclusive privileges on the Bank of England, banking establishments of every description consisting of more than six persons in partnership were prohibited within the prescribed limits, including banks of deposit merely, as well as banks of issue; but this act (3 & 4 Vic. c. 98) declares, that any company or partnership, although consisting of more than six persons, may carry on the business of banking in London or within sixty-five miles thereof, provided they do not borrow, owe, or take up in England any sum of money on their bills or notes payable on demand, or at any less time than six months from the borrowing thereof, during the continuance of the exclusive privileges of the Bank of England.

For further regulations as to joint stock banking companies, see the acts 1 & 2 Vic. c. 96, 2 & 3 Vic. c. 68, 3 & 4 Vic. c. 111, 5 & 6 Vic. c. 85; (by which the two first-mentioned acts are rendered perpetual), and especially the act 7 & 8 Vic. c. 113, which enacts that no company of more than six persons shall carry on the business of bankers according to the provisions of that act.

If partners buy real estate, either in land or houses, for the partnership purposes, they become to all intents and purposes tenants in common thereof; and if the property therein becomes vested in point of law in one or more as the survivors, courts of equity, going beyond the law in this instance, consider such survivors to be trustees for all the quondam partners or their representatives. So if a partnership lease be renewed by one partner in his own name only, he is a trustee for the others.

It does not appear to be distinctly decided, whether a deceased partner's share in such real estate is to be considered as real estate going to his heir, or as personal and belonging to his executors; but the prevailing opinion is, that it is personal estate.¹

How far the Acts of one Partner may bind the Firm.—It may be laid down as a general rule, that partners are bound universally by what is done by each other in the course of the partnership business, contrary to the general principle of law, that no one is liable upon any contract unless privy to it. For this purpose they are all considered but as one person, it being presumed that by entering into partnership each party reposes confidence in the other, and constitutes him his general agent as to all the partnership concerns; since it would be a great impediment to commerce, if, in the ordinary transactions of their trade, it were necessary that the actual consent of each partner should be proved, or that it should be ascertained that the transaction was really for the benefit of the firm. It is therefore a clear and undeniable position of law, that one partner may by his acts bind his copartners in any transaction relating to the partnership, even although it may be out of the regular course of their business, and contrary to an express arrangement between themselves. As, for instance, if two horse-dealers, being partners, agree between themselves never to warrant horses, yet if one does warrant a horse, the other is bound. But such authority to bind the firm is never implied, except in measures which are necessary to carry on the trade.

In partnership transactions one partner may indisputably bind the rest by drawing, accepting, or indorsing bills of exchange, promissory notes, or other negotiable securities; and it is also indisputable, that in every case in which a firm becomes, through the instrumentality of a single member, partners to a negotiable security, and the transaction which occasioned the giving the security was bonâ fide and fairly referable to the partnership concerns, the act of a single partner in pledging the joint credit will have a conclusive binding effect upon all collectively.

Although, also, the transaction be not referable to the business, it will be binding on the partnership, if the sanction (express or implied) of the copartners were given. Thus, if the salvation of the partnership depended on the solvency of one of the partners, the application of the partnership property to the amount of a demand against him in a certain state of circumstances would primâ facie be considered as under the sanction of the rest. But cases of this kind always depend, more or less, on evidence one way or the other; as, if the transaction were fairly entered in the partnership books, their cognizance and ac-

¹ Gow on Partnership, 1—36.

² Bayley, 180; 11 Adolph. & Ellis, 339
But not so if engaged in any profession or business not requiring the acceptance of bills, as attorneys, farmers, &c. Levy v. Payne, 1 Carr & M. 438 quiescence will be presumed. So subsequent approbation is as effective for this purpose as a prior authority.

In the hands of a person aware of and collusively partaking in the fraud committed upon the partnership by the individual partner pledging the firm in a separate transaction, the joint security would not be available, and the creditor would take it at his peril. And, generally speaking, where there is any indication in the transaction that the goods supplied to an individual partner are to be appropriated to his own sole use and benefit, the courts will not consider the partnership bound by any security given by the individual partner.

Upon the same principle, where one partner clandestinely draws or accepts bills &c. in the name of the firm, partly for a demand which the payee has against the partnership and partly for such partner's own debt, the payee can only recover upon the former part of the consideration against the partnership. At the same time a bonâ fide holder of a negotiable security so taken, ignorant (at the time of obtaining it) of the fraud on the part of the partner, might enforce it against all the partners collectively, provided there were no want of due caution and circumspection on his part. And therefore negotiable securities apparently issued by the firm, though in fact sent into the world by one partner alone in fraud of the others, are good to all intents and purposes, except in the hands of a party cognizant and partaking of the fraud.

If, indeed, persons are partners in a single or particular transaction only, and not general partners, they are not liable even to a bonâ fide holder on a bill issued by one of them in relation to a different concern.

The authority of one partner to bind the rest by a bill or note is only presumed to exist primâ facie, and is liable to be rebutted by evidence; and where a holder knew, or had any notice, that by the terms of the partnership deed no such authority existed, he cannot recover, though in point of fact the value of the bill were advanced for and actually applied to partnership purposes; and such power always ceases immediately on a dissolution of the partnership.

The foregoing observations as to the right of one partner to bind the firm in bill transactions, apply in a great measure equally to a purchase or sale of partnership property; and with whatever view goods are bought or applied, a sale to one partner is in legal effect a sale to the partnership, if the case is free from all charge of collusion, and not affected with notice of any kind. One partner may therefore, in general, buy goods, order insurances to be effected, pledge partnership property, give a joint guaranty, and the like, so as to bind his copartners.

But one partner cannot bind the rest by bond or deed, unless his signature is on behalf of the firm and with their express sanction, or in their presence; but the partner himself will be bound. In bankruptcy, however, one partner can bind the rest even in deed; but this is a mere exception to the general rule. A release also by one partner may bind all the copartners, if it be intended to affect their rights. So a receipt by or payment to one is sufficient.

So also in legal proceedings, partners being identified in interest, the acts and admissions of one with reference to the common objects are the acts and declarations of all, and are binding upon all.

In general, however, one partner cannot bind the firm by an agreement to refer to arbitration.¹

Legal Remedies between Partners.

We will now proceed to inquire into the remedies which partners have against each other; and first, of the legal remedies, and afterwards of those which must be sought in a court of equity.

Formerly an action of account was resorted to; but that form of action having become obsolete,² it is now usual to have recourse to a bill in equity where such species of remedy is sought.

A much more efficacious remedy for partners than the action of account is an action of covenant. This can be resorted to only where the deed of partnership is under seal, and is for the purpose of obtaining commensurate damages for the breach or non-performance of any of the covenants contained in it. It seems, however, that an action is not maintainable for non-performance of a covenant to refer disputes to arbitration, such a covenant having a tendency to exclude the jurisdiction of the superior courts.

The most usual remedy at law, however, is the action of assumpsit, which is resorted to where there is a breach of an agreement to become a partner, or where the articles of partnership, not being under seal, are infringed.

As a court of law has now no power to take an account between partners, before an action of assumpsit for money laid out and expended can be commenced, an account must be taken in equity; though if an account has been taken, and a general and final balance ascertained, then the action of assumpsit may proceed.

When one partner retains a sum of money belonging to another, and not received on account of the partnership, quoad this sum they are like two indifferent persons, and an action of assumpsit may be maintained to recover it.

Each subscriber to a scheme, who pays his subscription on a prospect that the scheme will continue, and does no act rendering himself liable to the expences of attempting to bring it into operation, may, if it afterwards prove abortive, or be abandoned, recover back the whole money advanced by him, without deducting any part towards the expences incurred, even though the scheme would have been open to the objection of illegality had it been carried on. In the case of Nockels v. Crosby,³ it is laid down as a general principle, that where persons set a scheme on foot, and assume to be directors or managers, all the expences incurred before the scheme is in actual operation must in the first instance be borne by them.⁵ When it is in operation, the expences and charge of management should be borne by the concern, and then it may be fair that the preliminary expence should be repaid, in the same way as the subscribers at large reap the benefit. But even then the previous expences are not to be paid out of the concern, unless they are adopted when it is in operation.

¹ Mr. Western, in the 3d volume of his Conveyancing, p. 313, with the authority of Lord Loughborough, says, "this may be done," and has introduced a precedent for the purpose. See Halfhide v. Fenning,

² Bro. C. C. 336; and Mitchell v. Harris, 2 Ves. Jun. 132.

³ See 1 Archbold's Nisi Prius, 293.

⁵ 3 Barn. & C. 814.

One partner being employed to do certain work for the partnership in his individual capacity, cannot at law sue his copartners for the price of it, as he would in fact be suing himself, and those whom he sued would have a right to call on him for contribution.¹

For the reason last-mentioned, an action for contribution cannot be maintained against a general partner, and redress can only be obtained by a suit in equity. But, as concerns partners in single transactions, one of them may enforce contribution by an action of assumpsit.

In all cases it is to be remembered, that a party must show that he stands on fair ground when he calls on a court of justice to administer relief to him; therefore whenever the prosecution of his claim discloses the transaction to have been such as is prohibited by law, the rule Ex turpi causâ non oritur actio will apply.

Although partners covenant that all differences arising between them or their executors or administrators shall be referred to the decision of two indifferent persons to be elected by the partners themselves, yet on the death of one an action cannot be maintained by his representatives against the other for refusing to nominate a referee; and many cases exist in which, an award or a submission to a reference having been pleaded, the court has nevertheless gone into the merits.

It is very doubtful whether one partner can maintain an action of trover against another; it has been settled that such action will not lie between joint tenants or tenants in common. Where one partner is tenant to another, an action of ejectment may be maintained.² So also, in cases of wilful waste or destruction.³

Equitable Remedies against Partners.

In most instances of partnership dissension, relief is sought from a court of equity, which obtains its controul over this subject under its general jurisdiction in matters of account; for, in most cases of dispute between partners, it is necessary that an account should be taken between them.

To entitle a partner to file a bill for an account, it is needful that there be nothing illegal in the constitution of the partnership. Where two persons had been jointly engaged in the business of underwriters (which was then prohibited by act of parliament in favour of the chartered companies), a bill filed by one for an account of profits was dismissed on that ground.

But where the transactions do not contravene the policy of the common law or the provisions of a statute, this remedy is not confined to private partnerships; for a court of equity has jurisdiction against a corporation in the nature of a partnership, on a bill filed for an account of profits.

Before, however, the court interferes with voluntary associations, it

¹ This principle has been qualified with respect to joint-stock companies carrying on the business of bankers under the 7 Geo. IV. c. 46 and other acts before enumerated; and actions, suits, or other proceedings at law or in equity may be brought by such companies in the name of their public officer against any of the members, or by any of the members in like manner against such companies.

² Fox v. Frith and another, 10 Mee & W. 131.

³ Fennings v. Lord Grenville, 1 Taunt, 241; Bernadiston v. Chapman, 4 East, 121; Buller, N.P. 34; Barton v. Williams, 5 Barn. & Ald. 395.

will see that it is under an obligation to act, and can effectually do so for the benefit of persons interested; and where such associations have not conformed to or observed the articles by which they were formed, the court will not interpose.

And with respect to partnerships in general, there has been said to be no instance in which one partner can file such a bill for an account merely, and not seek also a dissolution of the partnership. However, the point does not seem yet to be fairly settled; for in *Harrison v. Armitage*¹ the vice-chancellor entertained such suit without a prayer for dissolution, while in Loscomb v. Russell,² which is a later case, we are informed, a contrary decision was again come to.

It is a general rule on bills of this description, that all the partners and persons interested must be made parties, however numerous they may be, as the court cannot otherwise do complete justice. But where one partner agrees to give a third person a moiety of his share, such third person may file a bill against that partner to compel performance of the agreement without making the rest parties; and indeed the courts are now much inclined to relax the above general rule, when from the great number of parties it would be inconvenient to bring all before the court, and therefore allow three or four to sue on behalf of themselves and the rest.

The principal objection to a relaxation of the rule arises where a dissolution is sought; for there, though those suing may seek and wish for a dissolution, yet those who are not parties to the suit may desire quite the contrary, and then the court could not adjudicate in their absence.

In equity, a plea of a stated account, in order to be of any avail, must show that the account was in writing, and the balance likewise, or at least set forth what the balance was; at the same time there is no absolute necessity that the account should be signed by the parties who have mutual dealings, to make it a stated account, as acquiescence in it without objection for a length of time will render it a stated account.³ And if the bill charge fraud or errors in such stated account, the plea must deny such statements unequivocally. Where an account has been settled and closed for six years, the Statute of Limitations is a bar to its being again opened.

In equity, a covenant to refer to arbitration has as little binding effect on the parties as at law; it can neither be made the foundation of a suit for specific performance, nor pleaded in bar to a suit by one partner against another. Where, however, the agreement itself furnishes the means of redress for the particular subject of complaint, it may be used by the defendant as an objection to the summary interference of the court upon the subject matter of such agreement; and there are cases in which the court has obliged the parties to resort to such arrangement in the first instance.⁴

Where an account is to be taken, each partner is entitled to be allowed against the other every thing he has advanced or brought into the partnership, and to charge his copartner in that account with what he ought to have but has not brought in, and with what he has taken

¹ 4 Mad. 143.

² Before V.C., Aug. 1830.

³ See cases, Chit. Eq. Ind., tit. Account.

⁴ Waters v. Taylor, 15 Ves. 18; Carlen v. Drury, 1 Ves. & B. 154.

out beyond the proportion to which he was entitled ; and nothing is to be considered as his share but his proportion of the residue in the balance of the account. But this is, of course, subject to any other arrangement between the parties.

It has been decided in the Exchequer, that if two persons enter into trade, intending originally that both should reside upon the premises, and one of them afterwards removes to another dwelling, leaving the other in possession and management of the whole business, the latter, on taking the account, is not entitled to charge usual and necessary expenses incurred in treating customers, where balances have been struck yearly without noticing or demanding them.

If one partner borrow money of the firm on a promissory note or otherwise, he is liable to pay interest, though he gave a greater sum in the joint stock than the amount of the loan.

One partner paying a partnership debt out of his own funds is entitled to contribution by the others. Courts of law and of equity now exercise concurrent jurisdiction upon this subject. If one of the parties jointly bound be insolvent, contribution for his share cannot be recovered against the others, but it is the subject matter of equity only ; for the legal remedy is founded upon the principle, that one pays that to which all are liable.

If fraud has been practised to induce a man to become a partner, and a premium is fraudulently obtained, equity will order repayment of the premium, and treat the articles of partnership as a nullity. And where a party was allowed to retire, and was paid for the same, under the understanding that he was not to set up the same trade within a certain distance, a court of equity will prevent him opening trade within the prescribed limits, upon parol evidence of the understanding. Indeed, in almost all cases of fraud equity will interpose.

With respect to the interposition of a court of equity to decree specific performance of an agreement to enter into partnership, it will be exercised, it seems, provided the agreement be that the partnership shall exist for a time certain. But if it is general in this particular, equity will not interfere, since the defendant may, at any subsequent moment, dissolve the partnership, and so render any decree abortive. Yet, even in that case, where it is desirable to the plaintiff to be vested with the legal rights for which he has contracted, though but for a moment, the court has entertained such a suit. In no case, however, will the court, on making such a decree, give an account of past profits, but the plaintiff in equity must resort to his legal remedies.

Wherever there is a flagrant breach of the partnership covenants, the court will interfere and dissolve the partnership ; as where a partner raises money for himself on the partnership credit, or prevents another from enjoying his partnership rights ; and the court will sometimes appoint a manager or receiver to manage and wind up the affairs in the interim. As we have already stated, the court will sometimes interfere, though no dissolution is sought to be obtained.

The first ingredient to these suits is the establishment of the fact that a partnership exists ; if that fact is disputed, it must be established at law before a court of equity will entertain any suit between partners.¹

¹ Gow on Partnership, 93—115.

Legal Remedies against Strangers.

We shall now proceed to inquire into the rights of partners as to choses in action, and at the same time point out what remedies are afforded them for the assertion of such rights when invaded by strangers.

These rights arise chiefly out of executory contracts. A promise to one in the course of the business is a promise made to all, and all may avail themselves of it. In case of doubt, the criterion to determine the nature of the promise must be the nature of the consideration, and from whence it proceeds. A promise of this nature has no continuance independently of the particular individuals of whom the partnership is then formed; so that there is no transmission to successors in a mercantile house, but all running agreements with a partnership cease when any change takes place by death or otherwise.

Immoral or illegal contracts, of course, avail nothing against any party.

The only instance in which an action for a personal tort is maintainable by partners, is in the case of a slander or libel on the partnership as such, whereon they may sue jointly.

If one partner, X, in a house A, be also partner in a house B, inasmuch as a partnership action must be brought in the name of all its members, and as a man cannot be both plaintiff and defendant in a suit or action, suing himself, it follows that the house A cannot, under any circumstances, sue the house B upon any promise or engagement. Neither would it alter the principle if X were dead, and represented by his executors or administrators.

If a guaranty, intended for the benefit of a firm, is entered into with one only of the firm, the whole firm may sue on it, and one partner cannot alone sustain an action on it under such circumstances. And, as already adverted to, if any change takes place in a partnership, a guaranty given to the firm before the change cannot be sued on by those afterwards composing it; and therefore where guaranties are entered into on behalf of clerks &c., they ought to be renewed upon any change in the firm. But there is some doubt against this principle, where the engagement is not with the members by name, but with the firm by its known name, especially in the case of incorporated societies; and in such cases, it seems, the liability continues, notwithstanding a change of the individual partners. Societies incorporated by act of parliament are, in general, enabled to sue and be sued in the name of their secretaries for the time being.

In actions founded on contract, or ex contractu, the general rule is, that if the cause of action be joint, all the joint contractors, if living, must concur and join in bringing the action; or if some are dead, the action must be brought by the survivors. Partners, therefore, in actions instituted to enforce contracts made by them, must all join, otherwise a nonsuit will be the consequence. Neither is it a sufficient answer to the objection arising from non-joinder of parties, that the partner omitted is either bankrupt or infant; for in the former case his assignees must be joined, and in the latter there is no objection to the infant's suing conjointly with the rest. A dormant partner, though he may be, yet need not be joined. Neither need a nominal partner, having no interest in the concern. If, however, there are three partners, and the defendant has paid to two of them their proportion of the debt, the third alone may sue the defendant for his proportion of it without objection. The executors of a deceased partner need not be joined, as the whole interest in the partnership at law vests in the surviving partners, and such executors or administrators can only resort to the courts of equity to obtain their share of the thing recovered, and to which, as before shown, they are entitled.

Actions arising out of some wrongful injury committed by a stranger affecting partnership property, or ex delicto, are of less frequent occurrence than those resulting from breach of contract. The foregoing rules as to joinder of parties, nevertheless, in general apply to this species of action, though there is more laxity allowed; and to take advantage of any non-joinder, the defendant must plead it in abatement, or he cannot afterwards avail himself of it on the trial.

In actions brought by partners, as in those commenced by individuals, any set-off that the defendant has may be made use of in reduction or extinguishment of the debt on which the action is brought.¹ As to the right of set-off: Where an action is brought by all the partners, nothing is capable of being set-off against their demand, except a joint debt due to the defendant, as the debt must be due in the same right. Where an action is brought by a surviving partner, a debt due from him as surviving partner, may be set off against a debt due to him in his own right; and è converso, a debt due to the defendant as surviving partner may be set off against a demand upon the defendant in his own right.²

The Legal Remedies against Partners.

The very constitution of the relation of copartners furnishes a presumption that each individual is an authorized agent for the rest. though such presumption conveys no right to a creditor who has express notice to the contrary, or where the transaction takes place in fraud of the rest.

We have already shown the instances in which one partner alone may bind the rest; whence it may readily be collected that in those instances, as well as where the entire firm contracts, there can be no doubt of the legal remedies against the copartnership.

A partnership cannot acquire property in goods obtained by the fraud of one of the partners, to which the rest are not privy. But the fraudulent conduct of one partner does not afford his copartner a legitimate excuse for the nonfulfilment of a joint contract entered into by the former on behalf of the partnership.³

If a person giving credit to a partnership at the instance of one of the firm knows at the time in any way that it is contrary to the partnership agreement that the single partner should so bind the firm, or if it is notorious that the partners have separate departments and separate interests, the partnership cannot be sued jointly; but the particular

¹ As to set-off, see ante, p. 385.

² Gow, 116—139; and see further as to the evidence in such actions by partners, id. 139—144.

³ Rapp v. Latham, 2 B. & A. 795; Hume v. Bollond, 1 Ry. & M. 371; Stone v. Marsh, 6 B. & C. 551; S. C. 1 Ry. & M. 364.

partner trusted is individually liable. If the partnership concern be that of coach proprietors, they are all jointly liable to passengers for breach or neglect of duty.

In cases that are destitute of any intrinsic circumstances operating the discharge of the innocent partners from responsibility, under a contract entered into fraudulently by a single partner for his own benefit, it is incumbent upon the party with whom he deals to observe the most ingenuous conduct; for if he can be considered as apprised of the nature of the transaction, and still more if it be manifest that the transaction has only a separate relation to the individual partner, it will be unavailing in him to attempt to affect the firm, unless he can show that the single partner had the authority of his copartners to pledge their credit. If, indeed, he had obtained from the individual partner a joint negotiable security, though conscious at the time of the misapplication, he may, by sending it into circulation, render it available against the firm in the hands of a bond fide holder.

A joint contract, however, entered into by one or more individuals is binding only upon those who have a joint interest in it at the time of its inception; for no subsequent act by any person who may afterwards become a partner, not even an acknowledgment that he is liable, will entail upon that person the obligation of fulfilling such a contract if it clearly appear that a partnership did not exist at the time the contract was made. The joint interest must be contemporaneous with the formation of the contract itself, to superinduce the corresponding liability to perform it. But where two or more persons are to share in goods to be purchased, and, by virtue of a previous agreement, a joint interest in the goods attaches the instant they are purchased, there, although one of them purchase, concealing at the time the names of the others, or, in fact, without any express authority from them to purchase on the joint account, it is nevertheless the same as if all the names had been announced to the seller, and they are all liable for the value of them. It is not, however, sufficient to constitute a joint liability for the capital brought into the trade, that there is to be a subsequent participation in the profits to be derived from it. In such a case the right to participation can only take its origin from the time of the introduction of the capital; and although communion of profit is a strong circumstance to explain a contract in itself doubtful, and to produce a legal presumption that a partnership existed at the time among the participants, yet where the nature of the contract clearly appears, it cannot have such a retrospect as to alter it, and to substitute the responsibility of several for that of an individual contractor. If also a purchase is made by one on an agreement between him and other persons, that each shall have a distinct share of the whole, and there is neither a communion of profits nor a joint interest in the articles purchased, the liability as partners does not attach.¹ And the same rule applies where others take an interest under a sub-contract only.

In addition to the possession also of a joint interest, it is necessary that credit should be given to the firm, and not merely to the single partner; though if a dormant partner be discovered to have existed at the time of the transaction, he must be sued in conjunction with the visible partner who was trusted. And indeed it has been determined,¹ that where one member of a club ordered goods for the benefit of all, every member who either concurred in the order or afterwards assented to it was liable, although the member who gave the order alone appeared as the debtor in the creditor's books; unless it also appear that credit was intended to be given solely to him.

¹ Hoare v. Dawes, 1 Doug. 371.

Where partners have once become jointly liable, any private agreement between themselves, as is usual on a dissolution, that one shall be or remain alone responsible, can in no way affect the right of the creditor to look to all for payment, even though he assent to the arrangement and take collateral securities from the individual partner for the joint debt. If, however, without the assent of the other partners, the creditor renews the security with the single partner, and takes his separate security, or where by any other mode of dealing between the creditor and a single partner the rest are in any way injured or debarred of their remedies against the single partner, the joint liability becomes extinguished. Neither are the rights of the creditor or the responsibility of the partners varied by the secession of some of the old members and the introduction of new ones into the concern, although the creditor continue to deal with the new firm, without notice that he looks to the old firm for payment.

If, indeed, a person be merely a nominal partner, without participation in the profits, and the creditor knows that fact, he will not be liable to the creditor in conjunction with the rest.

In order to obtain rights of any kind, it is necessary that the subject of them be free from any taint of illegality. But one partner cannot defeat a creditor's claim, by setting up that the contract was illegal because there was a secret partnership which was illegal, as was the case with underwriters prior to the alteration of the law by 5 Geo. IV. c. 114. Neither can a partner set up a known partnership in abatement of a demand made upon him individually, in a case in which his conduct has been fraudulent both as regards his copartners and the creditor who seeks to fix him individually.

Partners are not generally responsible for the criminal acts of each other. If all join in one trespass or tort, of course all are liable; but an action for it would arise from their personal misconduct, and not upon the ground of the existence of partnership. In general, acts done in the course of the partnership trade in violation of law will only implicate those who are actually guilty of them. But actions for torts may sometimes be maintained against partners jointly; as where a coach or a steam boat runs down or otherwise damages the plaintiff's property. So in an action of trover it is not necessary that there should be a joint conversion in fact, in order to implicate all the partners; for such a conversion may arise by construction of law. And if copartners are engaged in smuggling, which is a species of tort, on an information filed for the penalty, they are jointly as well as separately liable. So also in the instance of a libel, the joint proprietors are liable not only civilly but criminally. In actions quasi ex contractu (as they are termed), which, although in their form actions for a tort, are substantially founded on contracts, they are clearly responsible for the acts of each other; as where carriers are guilty of the loss of a parcel, and the like.

The same rules apply to dormant partners. When discovered, they are equally liable as if their names had been used, although unknown as partners at the time of furnishing the subject matter of the demand. But in transactions unconnected with the joint trade, no liability will be entailed on the dormant partner where his joint responsibility was not originally regarded, and the fact of his being a partner was unknown at the time the claim arose. Therefore, where one partner accepted a bill in the name of the firm, but not in a partnership transaction, it was held that the indorsee could not maintain an action on such acceptance against a dormant partner whose name did not appear and who was not known to be a partner, nor the bill taken on his credit.¹

Equitable Relief against Partners.

In many instances more effectual relief is administered in equity than the forms and technicalities of courts of law allow them to grant; for the former, contrary to the doctrines of the latter, adopt the general mercantile law to its full extent for their guidance; and on the ground that each partner is liable for a partnership debt, a court of equity not only sanctions the remedy which the law gives against a surviving partner, but, ascribing a several as well as joint operation to partnership contracts, will likewise decree satisfaction out of the estate of the deceased partner. We have already briefly shown how far it is requisite to join all the partners as parties in a suit; as nothing more, therefore, remains to be considered on this branch of the subject, we shall proceed to consider the rules as to a dissolution of partnership, and, first,

The Causes of a Dissolution of Partnership.

A partnership may exist as to an individual transaction; and consequently when that particular transaction is completed, there is an end of the partnership. General partnerships are either formed for a definite or indefinite period, both of which may be dissolved by agreement, by the act of God, by the act of the parties, or by the operation of law.

1st. Dissolution by Act of God.—This ensues either from the death or from the confirmed insanity of one of the members. By the former the contract is ipso facto dissolved, not only as to the deceased, but as between the survivors, unless it is otherwise provided by the partnership deed. The deed may also provide that the widow or children, or other person or persons, shall continue to enjoy the rights of partnership on the death of one; but in the absence of such express provision, the partner dying has no power to appoint a successor. However, if the surviving partner claims any thing under the will making such appointment, he must abide by the will in toto, and so admit such appointee into the partnership, or relinquish his claim under it. In the event of a dissolution by death, it is not necessary to give public notice of the death in order to free the estate of the deceased from future liability; and therefore, as it can work no injury, a court of equity will not prevent the surviving partner from continuing the use of the deceased's name.

¹ Gow on Partnership, 145—169.

Insanity is not an absolute de facto dissolution; neither is it by any means a settled rule, that a court of equity will decree a dissolution on account of it. In most cases it depends on the existing state of circumstances, whether the disease is permanent or temporary, and the degree of injury that would arise from the continuance of the partnership; for it is possible that by the terms of the partnership the unfortunate individual may not be required to take any active part in the business, and therefore no inconvenience can arise from his state of mind. In such cases, depending solely upon the particular circumstances, the jurisdiction of equity (whereby alone a dissolution from this cause in any event can take place) is most difficult and delicate, and to be exercised with very great caution; and the court will always direct an inquiry to be made before one of the masters in chancery, to ascertain how far a dissolution is needful.

2dly. By the Act of the Parties.—A partnership for a stipulated period can only be dissolved adversely by the effluxion of the specified time; but if the partners are all willing, they may of course agree to and effect a dissolution.

When the partnership is formed for an indefinite duration of time, a dissolution may be brought about by a notice given by one partner to the other, signifying his dissent to the further continuance of the partnership, there being no necessity to resort to a court of equity for its aid or intervention. Regularly a partnership constituted by deed for an indefinite period can only be dissolved by an instrument of as high a nature, according to the maxim, unumquodque dissolvitur eo ligamine quo ligatur. But although the partnership is commenced by articles unsealed, in which is contained an agreement for a partnership deed, it is nevertheless in legal effect a partnership formed by parol, and may consequently be dissolved by verbal notice, though a written one is always preferable. And where there is a partnership constituted by deed, a notice that it is dissolved, signified by the parties for the purpose of being inserted in the Gazette, is sufficient evidence of the dissolution for all purposes against the parties signing it.

The existence of engagements with third persons not yet concluded forms no objection to the dissolution, though the dissolution cannot be made to affect the rights of those third persons.

If the articles of partnership contain any provision as to notice of dissolution, it must be strictly followed; but if a partnership be commenced for a limited period, with a right reserved to each partner of dissolving it on giving a year's notice, and, after the period limited for its continuance, the partners by mutual consent continue the partnership, it may then be dissolved at the option of either party. There may be an implied contract for its continuance up to a limited period, although there is none expressed; and the circumstance of a lease being taken for a certain number of years for partnership purposes may, though it does not necessarily, raise such an implication.

When the dissolution of a partnership, to which any partner is entitled, is opposed by some of the members, a court of equity will interfere; and under such circumstances it may be more prudent to file a bill, which may not only pray a dissolution, but likewise an account, and an injunction to restrain those dissentient from executing securities or otherwise meddling with the property in the meantime. There is an instance of an application to a court of equity to prohibit the dissolution of a commercial partnership; and it has been said that, on proper grounds, such an application may be sustained.

It may be doubted whether, as against a client, who having employed solicitors in partnership has a right to their united exertions, the solicitors are at liberty to dissolve their partnership and turn their client over to one of them; it should seem they have not, as against him, the power of dissolving their partnership. But, however that may be, the retiring partner could not be considered as a discharged solicitor. The client, after such dissolution of partnership, cannot employ both, and it would be impossible to maintain that, if he employ one, the other is let loose and discharged from all those obligations which he had undertaken. A solicitor under such circumstances, if retained against his former client, must (however high his personal character) be considered, hypothetically, as employed for no other reason except the very improper one, that he had been previously employed by the other party; and, upon the clearest general principle, that cannot be admitted.

The marriage of a feme sole partner would, it seems, operate as a dissolution.

3dly, A partnership, whether for a definite or indefinite period, may be dissolved by operation of law.

Where, from the failure of, or other similar event attaching on the object of the original institution of the partnership, it becomes impossible to carry on the partnership, a court of equity will dissolve it. And if the conduct of partners be such as to render it impossible to carry on the partnership on the terms on which it was entered into, or if one partner be entirely excluded by the others from his interest in the partnership, or if there be a gross breach of good faith, or a violent or lasting dissension between them, the partnership will be dissolved even on the complaint of one partner only. So the court will dissolve friendly societies not enrolled if they are founded on a principle calculated to produce a failure of the undertaking.

An act of bankruptcy of one partner, followed by a fiat and adjudication, is an absolute dissolution as to that partner; and it so affects the solvent partner that he cannot afterwards deal with the partnership property, since the bankrupt's share, as it stands at the time of the act of bankruptcy, vests at once in the assignees. If, however, the fiat be issued fraudulently, and for the mere purpose of working a dissolution, it will be annulled.

An execution, under which all the interest of one partner is seized, is also a cause of dissolution.

The Consequences of a Dissolution.

The consequences resulting from a dissolution of partnership are either a total or partial destruction of the partnership,—a complete annihilation of the firm, or a dissolution merely for the purpose of making an alteration in it.

When it is actually ended as regards all the former partners, no number short of the whole can make any disposition of the partnership property which is inconsistent with the winding up of the concern, and therefore they can create no fresh obligations; but until the affairs are wound up, the connexion between them subsists, and in that sense, until such settlement takes place, the partnership may be said to continue, and the ex-members of the firm may be sued as existing partners.

The arrangement of the affairs being the sole object of a dissolution, a court of equity will in all cases interpose where the conduct of partners is of a description not likely to be attended with such a result. Therefore, if one partner trade with the joint property on his separate account, or interfere with it otherwise than towards a settlement of the joint affairs, or if, in closing the concern, some of the members seek to exclude others from their just share, a court of equity will appoint a manager or receiver to wind up the concern; but a receiver will never be appointed unless a strong necessity appears. Sometimes, as in the case of the bankruptcy of one partner, the co-partner is appointed receiver, though without a salary.

At the dissolution the joint property consists of the remainder of the stock which existed at the formation of the partnership, with the additions made to it in the course of trade during its continuance. Real estate purchased by the partnership forms also a portion of the joint fund, whether conveyed to one partner only or to all. So, though a lease is renewed in the name of one partner only, though done by him clandestinely, it is considered as for the benefit of the firm. So mines, for many purposes, are partnership property, and liable to partnership debts. But that only is to be considered as copartnership property which belongs jointly to all the partners, whether it arise simply from contributions inter se, or be composed partly of contributions and partly of acquisitions made by or profits derived from the use and application of the capital formed by such contributions. And therefore a distinct and independent fund belonging to different but not to all the individual members of the firm, which is not commensurate with the joint property, and does not succeed to the place of it, does not fall within the meaning of, and is not distributable as joint estate; if it were so distributable, the partners uninterested would be relieved from the weight of debt which otherwise they must bear, at the same time, probably, that the separate creditors of the actual owners might have claims against it, and would therefore be entitled to priority of satisfaction. This latter description of property constitutes, as regards the entire partnership, the separate estate of those members, short of the whole, to whom in point of fact it belongs. For instance, if one joint owner of a ship insure his share or interest and a loss happens, the money recovered on the policy will be separate and not joint property.

When the common property is ascertained, each partner on dissolution may insist on a sale of the whole concern. The whole must then be valued and sold, and each partner's aliquot proportion of the pecuniary produce paid to him; and therefore no one can insist on retaining any specific part of the joint property. A sale of the whole is the first thing directed by a court of equity in this event.

Out of the joint property the creditors of the partnership as such have a prior claim upon its produce; and in the event of there being no joint creditors, or of their being paid in full, and there being a surplus divisible among the individual members, the separate creditors of each partner must next be paid out of the share to which each individual partner is entitled; which share is, however, liable in the first instance to be reduced by the allowance to be made in account to any partner who has advanced money for, or who has any other claim against the partnership.

The foregoing observations are also applicable to a partial dissolution, if the same do not take place by agreement and arrangement. In this event, however, it is generally agreed that the retiring partner shall receive a sum of money, or an annuity, proportioned to his share in the concern, in return for which he makes over to the partners continuing the trade whatever interest he had in the joint property. If the consideration of his retirement be any thing in the nature of an annuity, he must take care that the amount is independent of the quantum of profits derived to the continuing partners; for otherwise he may, as before shown, in fact continue and be considered a dormant partner.

The effect that the premium paid to a retiring partner has on the joint creditors is always open to a question of bona fides. If it appear that there was mala fides as regards creditors in the transaction, they may in equity obtain relief against the payment; but if the transaction were bonâ fide, whatever may happen to the remaining partners, as though their insolvency take place shortly afterwards, the retiring partner will not be affected thereby.

It may as well be here observed, that if on one partner's retiring it is intended that he shall assign his good-will also, he should be made expressly to covenant not to carry on the same trade within a certain number of miles distance.

The retiring partner should also take care to give public notice at least in the London Gazette, and express notice to all persons then dealing with the firm, that the partnership is as to him at an end; or otherwise, if the fact of his retirement be unknown to parties subsequently trusting the firm, it will not determine his liability to them for the subsequent partnership debts.

In no case can the dissolution of the partnership, either absolute or partial, determine the liability of any one member for the partnership debts incurred prior to the dissolution. And the only course for a retiring partner is either to see that the partnership debts up to that time are fully satisfied, or obtain the consent of the creditors that he shall be no longer responsible, or else to make the remaining partners covenant to indemnify him against the event of his being afterwards called on to bear any portion of such debts.

In many instances of dissolution the remaining partner is by agreement exclusively authorized to arrange the joint affairs, and to receive the partnership credits as the fund out of which to discharge the partnership debts. Where this is the case, and notice as well of the dissolution as of the private arrangement between the partners is given, a debtor to the firm cannot, by colluding with the outgoing partner, obtain from him a discharge of the debt. A receipt given by the latter for the debt, though dated anterior to the dissolution, will be fraudulent and void, and will not estop the remaining partner from disclosing the transaction and recovering payment. So if the remaining partner have the exclusive right in equity to all the debts, and a debtor is conscious of that right, a payment to the outgoing partner will not affect the claim of the remaining partner; but without notice such a payment would discharge the debtor. And where, on a dissolution, it was agreed that the joint debts should be received by an agent appointed by both partners, to which arrangement a debtor acceded, but afterwards one of the partners countermanded the authority given to the agent, and personally demanded the debt, a receipt from such partner in the name of both was held to be a discharge to the debtor.

It remains to be observed, that where there is not a renunciation by the outgoing partner of his right to his proportion of the capital, his copartner, if he continue the trade after a dissolution and employ the common capital in it, will be bound to account for the profits which may be derived, although if the profits are made solely by the skill of the remaining partner, it is said to be the practice of courts of equity to allow him a compensation commensurate with his exertions. But where the profits arise out of the use of the partnership stock mixed with the separate property of the remaining partner, it has been doubted whether the outgoing partner is entitled to insist upon a participation. A court of equity will enforce an agreement made on a dissolution that a particular book used in the trade should become the exclusive property of one of the partners, and that a copy of it should be delivered to the other.¹

It would be anticipating the subject of bankruptcy, of which we shall treat in a subsequent part of this work, were we in this place to treat of the consequences of a dissolution by bankruptcy; we shall therefore, leave the consideration of this branch of the law of partnership to subsequent pages, and proceed to investigate—

The Consequences of a Dissolution by Death.

These may be considered, 1st, as they relate to survivorship; 2dly, as they affect suits between the survivors and the representative of the deceased partner; 3dly, as they apply to suits either by the survivors against third persons, or à contra; and 4thly and lastly, as they regard proceedings against the assets of the deceased partner.

We have already seen, that, as regards partnership property, there is no right of survivorship whatever either in equity or at law; it only exists for the purpose of enabling the survivors to get in outstanding debts. &c., which, when so recovered, become liable to the joint right of the representative of the deceased. In like manner in real estate and leaseholds such representative has a right in equity to participate. The only subject for doubt is as to the good-will of the business, namely, whether such representative has a right to have that sold and to participate in the price which it fetches. Two pre-eminently learned chancellors, Lord Rosslyn and Lord Eldon, have differed upon this point. But a very intelligible distinction has been suggested between a commercial and a professional association. In the case of Farr v. Pearce,¹ Sir John Leach expressed his opinion, that it would be difficult to maintain that where a partnership is formed between professional persons, as surgeons, and one dies, the other is obliged to give up his business and sell the connexion for the joint benefit of himself and the estate of his deceased partner. When such partnerships, therefore, are determined, unless there are stipulations to the contrary, each partner must be at liberty to continue his own exertions; and where the determination is by the death of one, the right of the survivor cannot be affected, such being very different from commercial partnerships. At all events, if any right to the good-will goes over to the deceased partner's representatives, the deceased cannot, as we have already seen, give a third party (as a legatee in a will) any interest in the partnership, unless the surviving partner, by assenting to take a benefit under it, binds himself in equity to the fulfilment of the testator's intentions as to such third party. It is, however, very common, and certainly proper, for the articles of copartnership to provide for such contingencies as these.

¹ Gow, 230—256; and see Exp. Trueman, 1 Dea. and Ch. 464.

We have already seen, that when death operates a dissolution, in the absence of any special agreement upon the subject, the representatives of the deceased take no interest as partners, though they have an interest in the property till the concern is wound up; but such representatives have a right to require the special appropriation of the joint property to the payment of the joint debts, and a division of the surplus. If, within a reasonable time, the survivor do not account with them and come to a settlement, equity will grant an injunction, restraining him from disposing of the joint stock, and from receiving the outstanding debts. And a surviving partner has the same right in respect of the winding up the affairs.

The surviving partner having at law the right to the custody, care, and management of the joint estate, a court of equity will not, generally speaking, on a bill filed against him for an account, deprive him of his legal right by appointing a receiver. But if he be guilty of acts of gross mismanagement or improper conduct, inconsistent with his duty and the interests of other persons concerned, then equity will exercise its power to appoint a receiver to collect the debts and dispose of the property. But if both partners die, equity will, as a matter of course, appoint a receiver, if either of their representatives require it.

As no injury can arise to the estate of a deceased partner from the continued use of his name by the old firm, equity will not enjoin them from making use of it, even although it is a species of fraud upon the public.

No notice is necessary to third persons of the death of a partner: the partnership is dissolved, and all liabilities for subsequent acts cease. The surviving parties are to be sued alone for the partnership liabilities and obligations, for which they are liable to the full extent. But they are not liable for the separate debts of the deceased partner, unless, after payment of all the joint debts, they have a surplus of the partnership effects in their hands. If the joint effects be insufficient to pay the partnership debts, the separate estate of the deceased partner, if he have any, is liable for the deficiency.

¹ 3 Mad. 78.

With respect to actions by or against the partnership, in case of death the right of action, either by or against the firm, rests in the survivor. In actions brought by him, the representatives of the deceased, having no title at law, cannot be joined, though they have an interest in the thing recovered; and in actions against the firm, the survivor in like manner bears all the burthen, though he may call for contribution out of the deceased's estate; or in case of the survivor's insolvency, the creditor has relief in equity against the deceased's assets. In this case, as in bankruptcy, the separate creditors of the deceased have a prior claim to payment out of his separate estate to the creditors of the partnership; and the liability of the separate estate of the deceased to partnership debts only extends to debts contracted at the time of his death.¹

CHAPTER XXIX.

Of Ambassadors and Consuls.

THE rights of ambassadors are established by the law of nations, and are therefore matter of universal concern. These, so far as they relate to commerce, are fully discussed in 1 Chitty's Commercial Law.² We shall here only consider their general personal privileges, if indeed they can be considered personal at all.

The common law recognizes them in their full extent by immediately stopping all legal process sued out through the ignorance or rashness of individuals, which may intrench upon the immunities of a foreign minister, or any of his domestic servants. And the more effectually to enforce the law of nations in this respect, when violated through wantonness or insolence, the 7 Ann. c. 12 declares that all process whereby the person of any ambassador or his domestic servant may be arrested, or his goods distrained or seized, shall be utterly void; and that all persons prosecuting, soliciting, or executing such process, being convicted by confession or the oath of one witness before the lord chancellor or the chief justices, or any two of them, shall be deemed violators of the law of nations and disturbers of the public repose, and shall suffer such penalties and corporal punishment as the said judges, or any two or more of them, shall think fit. Thus, in cases of extraordinary outrage, for which the law has provided no special penalty, the legislature has entrusted to the three principal judges of the kingdom an unlimited power of proportioning the punishment to the crime.

A person claiming the benefit of the privilege as domestic servant to a public minister must be really and bonâ fide his servant at the time of the arrest, and must clearly show by affidavit the general nature of his service and the actual performance of it, and that he was not a trader or the object of the bankrupt laws; for, by the law of nations, a public minister cannot protect a person who is not bonâ fide his servant. It is the law that gives the protection; and though the process of the law shall not take a bonâ fide servant out of the service of a public minister, yet on the other hand a public minister shall not take a person who is not bonâ fide his servant out of the custody of the law, or screen him from the payment of his just debts. This privilege, however, has long been settled to extend to the servants of a public minister being natives of the country where he resides, as well as to his foreign servants, and not merely to servants lying in his house (for many houses are not large enough to contain and lodge all the servants of some public ministers), but also to his real and actual servants lying out of his house. Nor is it necessary, to entitle them to the privilege, that their names should have been registered at the secretary of state's office and transmitted to the sheriff's office; though, unless they have been so registered and transmitted, the sheriff or his officers cannot be proceeded against for arresting them. And it cannot be expected that every particular act of service should be specified; it is enough if an actual bonâ fide service be proved; and if a service be sufficiently made out by affidavit, the court will not, upon bare suspicion, suppose it to have been merely colourable and collusive. Where the servant of an ambassador did not reside in his master's house, but rented and lived in another, part of which he let in lodgings, it was held that his goods in that house, not being necessary for the convenience of the ambassador, were liable to be distrained for poor rates. And where the wife of a foreign ambassador's secretary was arrested upon a writ issued against husband and wife, the court refused to quash the writ, though the husband swore that before and at the time of the arrest he was in the actual employment of the ambassador, and in daily attendance upon him in writing dispatches and other official documents.¹ This act does not extend to consuls, and they have therefore been held liable to arrest.² But in that case the party was a merchant residing here, and merely acting in the capacity of consul.

¹ Gow, 348—371.

² See Index, tit. Ambassador and Consul.

The privileges of ambassadors and other foreign ministers are not, strictly speaking, personal privileges, but rather belong to the sovereigns whom they represent; and therefore such privileges cannot be waived by any means.³

If a bill in equity is brought against an ambassador of this country who is abroad to redeem or foreclose a mortgage, the court will order all proceedings to be stayed for a year and a day, unless the ambassador sooner returns. They have always a right to the essoin of a year and a day, and afterwards to renew it if occasion require.⁴

An ambassador or consul resident abroad bringing a bill is not required to give security for the costs of suit, as plaintiffs residing abroad usually are.⁵ But an ambassador's servant residing here, and claiming his privilege of freedom from arrest, will be required to give such security if he commences a suit.⁶

¹ Chit. Stat. p. 13, note.

² Vivesh v. Becker, 3 M. & S. 284.

³ Barbuit's case, Forr. 281.

⁴ Pilkington v. Stanhope, 2 Vern. 317.

⁵ Colebrook v. Jones, Dick. 154.

⁶ Goodwin v. Archer, 2 P. W. 452. S. P. Adderley v. Smith, Dick. 355.

CHAPTER XXX.

Of Barristers.

To the members of this profession is intrusted the privilege of advocating the rights of all persons who have the misfortune to become involved either as plaintiffs or defendants in legal disputes. They are of several degrees, and take precedence, with the right of pre-audience in courts of justice, in the following order:—

The Queen's Attorney General
 ——— Solicitor General
 ——— Premier Serjeant
 ——— Ancient Serjeant
 ——— Advocate General
 ——— Serjeants
 ——— Counsel

Serjeants at Law
 The Recorder of London
 Common Serjeant of London
 Advocates of the Civil Law Barristers behind the bar not holding any of the above appointments.

Those of each class take precedence among themselves according to the date at which they came to the rank they hold. Thus, barristers according to the date of their call to the bar, and serjeants according to their appointment as such, and so forth. But, independently of this, the crown has power to give any counsel precedence over those of older standing, by granting letters patent of precedence, which specify the extent of precedence.

The queen's attorney or solicitor general, besides being the legal advisers of the crown in all affairs, are ex officio the prosecutors in various revenue and criminal matters, and are made parties to all suits and informations in equity concerning either the rights of the crown or the administration of charity funds.

The queen's counsel are the retained additional counsel of the crown, who, without a special licence for the particular purpose, can never be concerned in any proceeding against the interests of the crown.

The serjeants had formerly great privileges in the Common Pleas, inasmuch as no other counsel could plead in that court, except as junior to a serjeant. But by the 9 & 10 Vic. c. 55, intituled "An act to extend to all barristers practising in the superior courts at Westminster the privileges of serjeants-at-law in the court of Common Pleas," that court has been thrown open; so that any barrister may now plead therein as in the other courts of Westminster Hall.

As all rank is conferred at the will of the crown, when a person is first called to the bar he is required to take the usual oaths of allegiance, supremacy, &c.

The profession of a barrister is strictly speaking honorary; in conformity with which it has been long established, that he cannot maintain an action for his fees. They are, in fact, considered as a gratuity, and on that account cannot, when once given, be recovered back by the client under any circumstances.

A barrister likewise has, as far as he pursues his instructions, and so long as he confines himself to the matter before the court, and observations pertinent thereto, perfect freedom of speech, and cannot be made liable for any thing uttered by him in the course of his professional duty. They can never be obliged to discover that which they know in professional confidence. And if a counsel is so improvident as to betray the secrets of his client's case to his opponent, so that his client receives an injury therefrom, he may, it has been said, be made responsible for the consequences.

In equity they are required to sign many of the pleadings as a pledge of their propriety, and if in such case they put their signature to documents containing scandalous or other improper matter, they may be visited with disagreeable consequences, which in instances which occurred long ago (for, to the honour of the profession, there are none of modern date) amounted to be virtually disbarred and restrained from practising.¹

If any person contracts that he shall have any part of a thing to be recovered in reward for his assistance towards doing so, it amounts to champerty and maintenance of suit, which is altogether illegal under the 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9, and other acts, and is strongly discountenanced by all courts.² And if a barrister even take any part as a reward for his services, though not in pursuance of a prior contract, an old case declares that it would for ever remain a blemish upon his reputation.³

The consent of counsel, given in court, is in general held to be binding on their clients, as it is given upon their own conception of their instructions, and that although they had no instructions so to consent, provided they were at the time apprised of all those facts of which the knowledge was essential to the proper exercise of their discretion.⁴

Where two counsel happen to appear for the same client, upon instructions furnished by two different solicitors, the matter before the court must stand over in order to verify the retainer of the attorney.⁵ But the question, whether a counsel is retained for one client or for another, is one in which the lord chancellor has lately declared he has no right to interfere.

Both barristers and attorneys are entitled to attend at sessions, to take upon them the causes of others, and to prosecute for the crown. Where a sufficient number of barristers attend at sessions, it is usual to give them sole audience, and the attorneys are in consequence not heard in person. Where the bar do not attend, as in most boroughs and cities, it is usual to hear the attorneys as advocates; and though it may be doubted whether in strictness they are entitled to prosecute indictments, it is customary and certainly convenient to allow them that privilege. Where the bar has not been accustomed to attend, but two or more barristers wish to do so, it is usual for them to intimate their desire to the chairman, and to request that they may have pre-audi-

¹ See Chit. Eq. Ind. tit. Barristers.

² See Chit. Eq. Ind. tit. Champerty.

³ See Penroe's case mentioned in Keeney v. Brown, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 502.

⁴ Mole v. Smith, Jac. & W. 673: Furnal v. Bogle, 4 Russ. 142.

⁵ Butterworth v. Clapham, 1 J. & W. 673.

ence; and if this request be granted, the attorneys cannot afterwards be heard in their presence, unless all the counsel happen to be retained on one side. It appears that neither counsel nor attorneys have a legal right to be present in any preliminary proceeding before a grand jury, nor in an examination for felony before a magistrate; but in the latter instance it is often allowed in courtesy. Formerly the attendance of counsel before commissioners of bankruptcy on behalf of a witness was not a matter of right, though in courtesy it was allowed; but, by the recent changes in the system of bankruptcy, parties have now a right to employ counsel on their behalf. At a public meeting before one or more commissioners, it has been required by the commissioners at Basinghall-street, and it is usual, for the barrister retained to attend in his forensic costume, although he may be opposed to an attorney who appears in his usual dress. But at a private meeting this ceremony is dispensed with.

In a recent work¹ there are many valuable and useful observations as to the course of study, the admission, and general conduct and duty of this part of the profession, which are well worthy the attention of all who desire to enter it.

We may observe, lastly, that barristers of all descriptions are entitled to the rank of esquires; and, for the benefit of their clients, they are privileged from arrest for debt while attending their professional duties in court, eundo, morando, et redeundo, in the same manner as witnesses are privileged. So likewise all actions against them must be commenced, and the venue be laid, in Middlesex.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Of Physicians, Surgeons, and Apothecaries.

THE profession of a physician, like that of a barrister, is also purely honorary, and he cannot, any more than the latter, maintain any action for the recovery of his fees.

In order to guard against the evil consequences of quackery and ignorance, which at that time greatly predominated, the College of Physicians was established in London by a charter of Henry VIII., confirmed by the 14 & 15 Hen. VIII., and it is now a corporate body with the usual corporate rights and qualities.

Physicians in England are to be examined and approved by the college, and have testimonials from the president and three elects of the college, unless they be graduate physicians of Oxford or Cambridge. Persons practising as physicians in London, or within seven miles thereof, not so qualified, forfeit 5*l.* for each offence. A Scotch diploma does not seem to be sufficient to justify a physician in practising in London.

¹ 2 Chit. Gen. Pr. 37—45; and see id. 71.

It may be very questionable, in the present day, whether the rights of the college do not amount to a monopoly prejudicial to the benefit of mankind. For the science of medicine, however it may have advanced within the last quarter of a century, is still in its infancy; and inasmuch as no person can pass an examination before the college unless his general theory coincides with that of his examiners, the consequence must be, that if he attempt to introduce a new system, or even improve the old one, he must either break through the collegiate rights, or conceal such of his ideas as are at variance with those of his examiners. However dangerous it might seem to admit of quackery, yet in the present enlightened age every thing is soon brought to its right test; and if a single real benefit could be drawn from even quackery itself, it is desirable that the world at large should enjoy the advantage. The college therefore, in our view, acts wisely in not often bringing their privileges into public discussion.

By the 32 Hen. VIII. c. 40, four physicians are chosen by the college to search apothecaries' wares; and if they find any such, they may, in company of the warden of the mystery of apothecaries, destroy all adulterated drugs, &c. The penalty on physicians for refusing to act is 2*l.*, and on apothecaries refusing to allow the search, 5*l.* for each offence.

Although, by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 40, § 1, the president of the commonalty and fellowship of the faculty of physic in London and the commons and fellows of the same, are discharged of watch and ward there, and shall not be chosen constable, or to any other office, yet it seems to have been holden that the act does not extend to other physicians not mentioned in it. And it seems that a practising physician being chosen constable in pursuance of the custom in respect of his lands in a town, has no remedy for his discharge; for there is no precedent of the kind, and his calling is private. Yet if he be chosen constable of a town which hath sufficient persons besides to execute the office, and there is no special custom concerning it, perhaps he may be relieved by the Queen's Bench.

By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 50, § 2, members and licentiates of the College of Physicians in London are exempt from serving on juries.

If a physician or properly licensed person give medicine to a person with a proper motive and due care, though death itself ensue, he is not liable for manslaughter; but it is questionable what would be the consequences to an unlicensed person. Indeed, it was said in Mr. St. John Long's case,¹ that, whether licensed or not, if the death ensue from his particular treatment, and he has shown gross ignorance in his art, or gross inattention to the patient's safety, or gross rashness in the application of a dangerous remedy, he is criminally liable, and guilty of manslaughter. This decision is, however, very questionable in principle.

It does not seem that a medical man is privileged to withhold any private or secret communication made to him by a patient, when interrogated by a competent authority.

¹ 4 Car. & P. 398, 423.

Upon questions of skill and judgment, the opinions of competent judges are admissible in evidence; but, in general, mere matter of opinion is not so. Thus, on a trial, where the defence is insanity, a witness of medical skill may be asked whether such and such appearances, proved by other witnesses, are in his judgment symptoms of insanity; but it is questionable if he can be asked, whether, from other testimony given, the act with which the prisoner is charged is in his opinion an act of insanity, which is the very point to be decided by a jury. A physician who has not seen the particular patient may, after hearing the evidence of others, be called on to prove on oath the general effects of the disease described by them, and its probable consequences in the particular case.

Apothecaries, to enable them to practise, must be examined by the Apothecaries Company, and must produce testimonials and certificate of having practised as apprentice for five years; and the penalty for not having a certificate is 20*l.* if as principal, and 5*l.* if as assistant merely. If an action is brought against a person for practising without a certificate, it lies on him to show that he has a certificate. By § 21 of the act, an apothecary not duly licensed cannot recover any charges. So neither can he recover even for the phials in which the medicines were sent. If duly licensed, he may charge for the medicine or for the attendances, but he cannot sue for both. And a surgeon, though he may sue for attendance, cannot sue for medicine furnished, unless he be also certificated by the Apothecaries Company; except, indeed, for medicines necessarily furnished in a surgical case.

By the 55 Geo. III. c. 194, § 5, if any apothecary either refuse or neglect to mix and compound, make, prepare, apply, give, or administer medicines when required, or shall improperly mix the same, he forfeits 5*l.* for the first offence, 10*l.* for the second, and his certificate for the third.

Apothecaries and surgeons are in general exempt from all public offices.

Anatomy.—Until the passing of the 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 75 (with the exception that the bodies of convicted murderers were, after execution, delivered up for dissection) there were no legitimate means by which human bodies could be obtained for the study of anatomy; and the procuring of them for this purpose gave rise to frequent offences against the laws, and latterly even to murder itself, for the sole object of selling the bodies of the persons so murdered. That act was accordingly passed, not only for the purpose of preventing such crimes, but for promoting, under certain regulations, the study and practice of anatomy. With this view, every person teaching or practising anatomy is required to have a licence from the secretary of state, which is to be obtained upon an application countersigned by two justices of peace; and inspectors (not fewer than three) are to be appointed by such secretary, at a salary not exceeding 100*l.* each, for the purpose of visiting places where the practice of anatomy is carried on, who are to make quarterly returns of all bodies brought for anatomical examination to each of such places within their respective districts. And any person carrying on or teaching anatomy at any place, or receiving or possessing for anatomical examination, or dissecting any body after removal, unless such party, or the owner of the place, or some party by this act authorized to examine bodies anatomically, shall, at least one week before the receipt or possession of a body for such purpose at such place, have given notice to the secretary of state of the intention to practise anatomy at such place, is guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by three months imprisonment, or a fine not exceeding 50*l*. But nothing herein is to be construed to prohibit the post mortem examination of any human body directed by a competent legal authority.

Any executor or other person in lawful possession of a dead body (not being an undertaker or other person entrusted with it for the purpose of interment merely) may permit it to undergo anatomical examination, unless the deceased had expressed his desire at any time in writing during his life, or verbally in his last illness, that his body should not undergo such examination, or unless the surviving husband or wife or other nearest known relative object thereto. And if any person, by writing in his life-time, or verbally in the presence of two witnesses in his last illness, direct that his body shall be examined anatomically after his death, or nominate any party by this act authorized to make such examination, and before the burial such direction or nomination be made known to the party having possession of the dead body, such person shall direct such examination to be made, unless the surviving husband or wife, or any one or more of the deceased person's nearest known relatives, object thereto. But in no case is the body to be removed for anatomical examination until after forty-eight hours from the decease, nor until after twenty-four hours notice to the inspector of the district; and a certificate of the cause of death, signed by the medical practitioner who attended the deceased during his last illness (or if no such medical man attended, then by some physician, surgeon, or apothecary called in to view the body, and who shall not be concerned in such removal) is to be delivered with the body to the party receiving the same for anatomical examination. And such party shall transmit the certificate within twenty-four hours to the inspector of the district, with a return stating the day and hour and from whom the body was received, the date and place of death, the sex, christian and surname, age, and last place of abode; and shall also enter the said particulars, with a copy of the certificate, in a book to be kept by him, which he shall produce, whenever required, to the inspector. The body, before removal, is to be placed in a decent coffin or shell, and after undergoing anatomical examination is to be interred in consecrated ground, or in some public burial ground belonging to persons of the same religious persuasion; and a certificate of the interment is to be transmitted within six weeks to the inspector.

Previous to the passing of this act, the dissection of the body after death constituted part of the sentence pronounced upon persons convicted of the crime of murder; but this being considered to have a tendency to strengthen the natural repugnance generally entertained against the anatomical examination of human bodies, so much of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 37 as authorized the bodies of persons convicted of murder to be delivered up for dissection is repealed; and, instead thereof, it is enacted, that the court may direct the bodies of such criminals, after execution, either to be hung in chains, or buried within the precincts of the prison.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Of Pawnbrokers.

ALL persons receiving goods by way of pawn or pledge, for the repayment of money lent thereon at a higher rate of interest than five per cent, are deemed pawnbrokers.

Every person exercising the trade of a pawnbroker must take out a licence, renewable annually ten days at least before the end of the year, for which he shall pay, within the cities of London and Westminster and the limits of the twopenny-post, 15*l.*; elsewhere, 7*l.* 10*s.*, on pain of forfeiting 50*l.* No person can keep more than one house or shop by virtue of one licence. But persons in partnership carrying on trade in one house only are not obliged to take out more than one licence.

The principal regulations as to persons carrying on this business are contained in the 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 99, and are as follow:—

Every pawnbroker shall cause to be painted or written, in large legible characters over the door of his shop, the christian and surname or names of the persons carrying on the said trade, and the word Pawnbroker or Pawnbrokers, upon pain of forfeiting 10*l.* for every shop or place made use of for one week without having the same put up; to be recovered, upon confession, or on the oath of one credible witness, by distress, by warrant under the hands and seals of two justices, half to the informer and half to the poor; and, for want of sufficient distress, the offender may be committed to gaol or house of correction for not exceeding three calendar months nor less than fourteen days, unless such penalty and the reasonable charges are sooner paid.

Pawnbrokers, before they redeliver the goods pawned, may demand and take, over and above the principal sum advanced, the following Rates of Profit.

For every pledge upon which there shall have been lent any sum not exceeding 2*s.* 6*d.*, one half-penny for any term not exceeding one calendar month, and the same for every month afterwards, including the current month in which such pledge is redeemed, though such month be not expired.

s.	d.	s.	d.		s.	d.
If 5	0	have been lent	0	1 per month.	If 12 s. 6 d.	0 2½ per month.
7	6	0	1½ " "	15 0	0 3 " "
10	0	0	2 " "	17 6	0 3½ " "
					20 0	0 4 " "

And so in proportion for any sum not exceeding 40*s.*

And if exceeding 40*s.* and not exceeding 42*s.*..... 0 8 per month.

If exceeding 42*s.* and not exceeding 10*l.*, after the rate of threepences for every 20*s.* by the calendar month, including the current month, and so in proportion for any fractional sum.

Which sums are to be in lieu of and as a satisfaction for all interest due, and charges of warehouse room.

Where any intermediate sum lent upon pawn shall exceed 2*s.* 6*d.* and not amount to 40*s.*, the pawnbroker may take a profit as aforesaid of 4*d.* and no more for the loan of 20*s.* by the calendar month, including the current month.

But persons applying for the redemption of goods pawned within seven days after the end of the first calendar month after they have been pledged, may redeem the same without paying any thing for such seven days, and if before the expiration of fourteen days of the second calendar month, upon paying the profit payable for one month and a half; but after the expiration of the said fourteen days, the broker may take a profit of the whole second calendar month; and the same regulation and restriction apply to every subsequent month.

Pawnbrokers must give farthings in exchange, or abate the odd farthing.

Pawnbrokers are required to put up in large legible characters, in some conspicuous part of their shop, a list of the rates of profit allowed by this act to be taken, and of the sums allowed to be charged for duplicates, and of the expence of obtaining a second duplicate where a former one has been lost or mislaid.

Where more than 5s. is lent on any pawn, the pawnbroker, before advancing the money, shall enter in a book to be kept for that purpose, a description of the goods, the sum lent thereon, the day of the month and year, the name of the person pawning, and of the street and number of the house (if numbered) where he resides, and whether he be a lodger or housekeeper, by using the letter L if a lodger, and the letter H if a housekeeper, and also the name and place of abode of the owner, according to the information of the person offering the pledge; and if the sum lent shall not exceed 5s., such entry shall be made within four hours after the goods have been pawned. Pledges upon which more than 10s. are lent are to be entered in a separate book; and such entries are to be numbered progressively, beginning a fresh series of numbers in each calendar month.

At the time of taking the pawn, a note or memorandum, being a duplicate of the entry in the book, and containing also the name and place of abode of the pawnbroker, is to be given by the pawnbroker to the person pawning; which duplicate the party pawning is required to take; and unless he take the same, the pawnbroker shall not receive the pledge. Such duplicate, where the sum lent is under 5s. shall be given gratis;

If the sum lent is				the broker may take
£.	s.	d.		£.	s.	d.
0	5	0	and under	0	10	0
"	"	0	10	1	0	0
"	"	1	0	5	0	0
"	"	5	0 or upwards

Which duplicate shall be produced to the broker before he shall be obliged to re-deliver the goods, except as hereafter excepted.

When goods are redeemed, the pawnbroker shall write upon the duplicate the profit taken by him, and keep the duplicate for one year.

Any person pawning or exchanging or unlawfully disposing of the goods of any other person without his consent may be apprehended on the warrant of a justice; and being convicted, by the oath of one witness or on confession, shall forfeit not more than 5l. nor less than 20s. and the value of the goods. If not forthwith paid, the justice shall commit him to the house of correction, to be kept to hard labour, for not more than three calendar months, unless the forfeiture be sooner paid; and if within three days before the expiration of the term of commitment the forfeiture be not paid, the justice may order such person to be publicly whipped. The forfeiture, when recovered, is to be applied towards making satisfaction to the party injured, and defraying the costs of the prosecution; but if the party injured decline to accept of such satisfaction and costs, or if there be any overplus, the same shall be paid to the overseers for the use of the poor.

Persons counterfeiting, forging, or altering duplicates, or uttering, vending, or selling such, knowing the same to have been counterfeited, forged, or altered, with intent to defraud any person, may be committed to the house of correction for not exceeding three calendar months; and any person, or his servant or agent, to whom such note shall be uttered or offered, which he shall have reason to suspect has been counterfeited, forged, or altered, may seize the person offering the same, and deliver him to a constable, who shall convey him before a justice.

If any person offering by way of pawn, pledge, exchange, or sale, any goods, shall refuse to give a satisfactory account of himself, or of the means by which he became possessed thereof, or shall wilfully give any false information as to whether such goods are his own property, or of his name and place of abode, or of the name and place of abode of the owner; or if there be any other reason to suspect that such goods are stolen or otherwise illegally or clandestinely obtained; or if any person not entitled shall attempt to redeem the same, it shall be lawful for any person, or his servant or agent, to whom the same are offered, to detain such person and the same goods, and deliver him immediately into the custody of a constable, who shall convey such person and the said goods before a justice. And if the justice, upon examination, have cause to suspect that the goods were stolen or illegally or clandestinely obtained, or that the person offering to redeem the same hath not any pretence or colour of right so to do, he shall commit such person into safe custody for such reasonable time as may be necessary for obtaining proper information, in order to be further examined. And if upon either examination it appear that the goods were stolen or illegally or clandestinely obtained, or that the person offering to redeem the same hath not any pretence or right so to do, he shall commit such offender to prison, to be dealt with according to law; and where the nature of the offence shall not authorize such commitment by any other law, the same shall be for any time not exceeding three calendar months.

If any person shall knowingly buy, or take in pawn or exchange, any goods of any manufacture, either mixed or separate, or any materials plainly intended for or put into a state or course of manufacture, before such goods are finished for the purpose of wear, or any linen or apparel entrusted to any person to wash, scour, iron, mend, manufacture, work up, finish, or make up, he shall, on conviction before a justice, forfeit double the sum given for or lent on the same, to be paid to the poor; and such goods or materials shall also be restored to the owner in the presence of such justice.

If the owner of any such unfinished goods, or of any linen or apparel so entrusted to wash &c., shall make out, on his oath or on the oath of a witness, before a justice of peace, that there is just cause to suspect that any person has taken in pawn or exchange any such goods without his knowledge, or if the owner of any goods unlawfully pawned, pledged, or exchanged, shall make out, on his own oath or on the oath of a witness, that he has had such goods unlawfully obtained or taken from him, and there is just cause to suspect that any person hath knowingly and unlawfully taken the same in pawn or by way of pledge or in exchange, such justice may issue his warrant for searching, within the hours of business, the house, warehouse, or other place of any person so charged on oath as suspected of having received the same; and if the occupier of the place shall, upon request, refuse to open the same, and permit such search, any peace officer may break open such house, warehouse, or place within the hours of business, and search for the goods suspected to be there, doing no wilful damage; and if the goods so pawned or exchanged be found, and the property of the owner be made out to the satisfaction of the justice, by the oath of one witness or by the confession of the person charged, such justice shall cause the goods to be forthwith restored to the owner.

If any pawnbroker refuse to deliver up any pledge on which a sum not exceeding 10*l.* shall have been lent, on tender of the principal money lent and the rate of profit allowed by this act within the year (or within a year and three months in case of notice having been given), any justice of the peace, on application of the owner, shall summon the pawnbroker before him, and direct the goods so pawned to be forthwith delivered up, or on refusal commit him to prison until the goods be delivered up, or satisfaction be made to the party entitled to the redemption.

The person in possession of the duplicate is to be deemed the owner, and entitled to the redemption of the goods, unless previous notice has been given by the real owner not to deliver such goods, or that the same are suspected to have been fraudulently or feloniously taken or obtained, and unless the real owner proceed in manner hereafter mentioned for redeeming goods pledged where duplicates have been lost, mislaid, destroyed, or fraudulently obtained from the owner.

In case any pawnbroker shall have had such notice, or if any duplicate be lost, mislaid, destroyed, or fraudulently obtained from the owner, and the goods remain unredeemed, the broker, at the request of any person representing himself as the owner, shall deliver a copy of such duplicate, with the form of an affidavit of the particular circumstances attending the case written thereon, as stated to him by the party applying; for which copy and affidavit, in case the money lent shall not exceed 5*s.*, the broker shall receive one halfpenny; and if above 5*s.* and not exceeding 10*s.*, he shall receive 1*d.*; and if above 10*s.*, he shall receive the like sum as he is entitled to take on giving the original duplicate, to be paid by the person applying. And such person having proved his property in such goods to the satisfaction of some justice, and verified on oath the truth of the particular circumstances attending the case mentioned in the affidavit (the taking of such oath being authenticated by the hand-writing of such justice), the broker shall suffer such person to redeem the goods, leaving the duplicate and affidavit with him.

All pawned goods are deemed forfeited and may be sold at the end of one whole year; unless notice be given in writing, or in the presence of a witness, within the year, by the person entitled to redeem them, in which case they are to be kept for three months beyond the year, and during such time the owner is entitled to redeem them. All goods so forfeited, on which above 20*s.* and under 10*l.* has been lent, are to be sold by public auction, notice of such sale being twice given, at least three days before the auction, in a public newspaper, upon pain of forfeiting to the owner not more than 5*l.* nor less than 2*l.* Pictures, prints, books, bronzes, statues, busts, carvings in ivory or marble, cameos, intaglios, musical, mathematical, and philosophical instruments, and china, are to be sold by themselves, and without any other goods, four times only in every year, viz. on the first Monday in the months of January, April, July, and October, yearly, and following days, if the sale exceed one day, and at no other time.

Pawnbrokers are to enter in a book a just account of such sales, expressing the day when and the money for which the goods were sold, with the names and places of abode of the auctioneer and purchaser; and if the goods are sold for upwards of 10*s.* or for more than is due thereon, the overplus (after deducting all necessary costs and charges) shall be paid, on demand within three years after the sale, to the person who pawned the goods, and who shall be permitted to inspect the entry on payment of 1*d.*, or, on refusal, the pawnbroker shall forfeit 10*l.* and treble the sum the goods were originally pawned for, to be levied by distress.

No person having goods in pawn shall purchase any such goods during the time they remain in his custody (except at such public auction); nor shall suffer the same to be redeemed with a view or intention of purchasing thereof; nor make any contract with any person offering to pawn the same, or with the owner of the pawn, for the purchase, sale, or disposition of the said goods, before the end of one year from the time of pawning the same; nor shall purchase, receive, or take any goods in pawn from any person who shall appear to be under the age of twelve years, or to be intoxicated with liquor; or purchase or take in pawn or exchange the duplicate of any other broker; nor buy any goods in the course of his trade before eight o'clock in the morning or after seven in the evening; nor employ any servant or apprentice or other person under sixteen years of age to take in any pawn; nor receive any goods by way of pawn or exchange before eight in the morning or after seven¹ in the evening between Michaelmas-day and Lady-day, nor before seven in the morning and after nine² in the evening the remainder of the year, except only on Saturday evenings, and the evenings preceding Good Friday, Christmas-day, and every Fast or Thanksgiving day, when pledges may be taken in till eleven o'clock, under penalty of not less than twenty shillings nor exceeding 5*l.*, to be levied by distress.

If it be proved upon oath before a justice, that any goods pawned have been sold before the time limited, or embezzled, or lost, or become of less value than when pawned, through the neglect or wilful misbehaviour of the person to whom they were pawled, such justice shall award a reasonable satisfaction to the owner; and the sum so awarded, in case the same shall not amount to the principal and profit due to such broker, shall be deducted thereout, and it shall be sufficient for the pawner to pay or tender the balance; and upon so doing such justice shall proceed as if the pawner had paid or tendered the whole money due for the principal and profit as aforesaid; and if such satisfaction to be allowed be equal to or exceed the principal and profit as aforesaid, then such broker shall deliver the goods so pledged to the owner without being paid any thing for principal or profit, and also pay such excess (if any), on penalty of 10*l.*, to be recovered as hereafter mentioned.

¹ 9 & 10 Vic. c. 98.

² Id.

The justice may require the production of any book, note, voucher, memorandum, duplicate, or other paper in the hands of the broker; and if he neglect to attend, or to produce the same in its true and perfect state, he shall forfeit not exceeding 10*l.* nor less than 5*l.*

Pawnbrokers neglecting to make any entry hereby required shall forfeit for each offence not exceeding 10*l.*; and for every other offence, where no other penalty is imposed, not more than 10*l.* nor less than 40*s.*, to be levied by distress and sale, half to the person complaining and half to the poor.

But no person shall be liable for any prosecution before any justice, unless information be given within twelve calendar months after the offence was committed; and such prosecution shall be before some neighbouring justice where the offence shall have been committed, except in London.

The churchwardens and overseers of the parish or place where any offence is supposed to have been committed, or some one of them, at the discretion of the justice, on having notice from him for that purpose, shall prosecute the offender at the expence of the parish or place.

No person who has been convicted of any fraud, or of obtaining money under false pretences, or of any felony, shall prosecute or inform against any person for any offence against this act.

Nothing herein extends to any person lending money upon pawn or pledge at the rate of 5*l.* per cent interest, without taking any greater profit for the loan thereof.

The provisions of this act extend to and include the executors, administrators, and assigns of any deceased pawnbroker, except that no such executor or administrator shall be answerable for any penalty personally, or out of his own estate, unless forfeited by his own act or neglect.

Any person aggrieved by the conviction of a justice or justices under this act may appeal to the quarter sessions, on entering into a recognizance with two sureties, at the time of conviction, in double the sum which he is adjudged to pay; but if the judgment be affirmed at the sessions, the appellant shall immediately pay the sum forfeited, together with the costs awarded for defraying the expences of the appeal.

By the 5 Geo. IV. c. 107, § 1, the commissioners of Chelsea Hospital are authorized to mark all their clothes, stores, &c. with the words

Chelsea Hospital, and persons pawning or receiving in pawn any such goods are liable to 10*l.* penalty, one moiety to the informer and the other to the hospital, to be recovered by distress, or else the offending party may be committed to prison for three months.

By 1 Jas. I. c. 21, it is provided, that the sale of any goods wrongfully taken to a pawnbroker in London or within ten miles thereof, shall not alter the property thereof.

And if plate be left to one for term of life, and he pawn it, the pawnee has no lien on it after the death of the pawner, for the person in remainder may recover it from him by action of trover.¹

A pawn cannot be taken in an execution against a pawnbroker; nor can it be used, without the consent (express or implied) of the owner.

It has been held by the Court of King's Bench, that a pawnbroker has no right to sell unredeemed pledges after the expiration of a year from the time the goods were pledged, if, while the goods are in his possession, the original owner tender him the principal and interest due.² On a motion for a new trial, Lord Tenterden said, "I am of opinion, that if the pledge be not redeemed at the expiration of a year and a day (and no notice given that three months further are to be allowed for its redemption), the pawnbroker has a right to expose it to sale as soon as he can consistently with the provisions of the act; but if, at any time before the sale has actually taken place, the owner of the goods tender the principal and interest and expences incurred, he has a right to his goods; and the pawnbroker is not injured, for the power of sale is allowed him merely to secure to him the money which he has advanced, together with the high rate of interest which the law allows to him in his character of pawnbroker."

In the late case of *Exp. Cording*³ it was decided, that a pawnbroker is not liable to the penalties and consequences mentioned in § 24 of the before-mentioned act for the loss and consequent non-delivery of goods pawned, where the loss is occasioned by accidental fire.

In *Cowie v. Harris*⁴ it was held, that if a pawnbroker, upon one contract or bargain of loan, advance more than 10*l.* (viz. 100*l.*), and pretend to divide the same as if it were in different loans, and for that purpose give several tickets, dated on different days, the transaction is a mere contrivance to conceal usury, and is illegal and void.

We have already noticed the duties and liabilities of bailees on pledge or pawn, whence may be gathered those which attach on pawnbrokers.⁵

¹ Hoare et al. v. Parker, 2 T. R. 376.

² 4 Barn. & Adol. 198.

³ Walter v. Smith, 5 B. & A. 439; S.C.,
1 D. & R. 1.

⁴ Mood. & M. C. N. P. 141.

⁵ Ante, p. 294.

BOOK II.

OF PROPERTY AND ITS INCIDENTS.

CHAPTER I.

Of Real Property; and first, of Corporeal Hereditaments.

Our inquiry is now to be directed to those rights which a man may acquire in and to external things, or such rights as have private property for their direct and immediate subject.

When mankind increased in number, craft, and ambition, it became necessary to appropriate to individuals not only the immediate use of that of which they had the visible possession, but the substance of the thing used, and which we may term the absolute property or dominion thereof. Though this dominion or property was at first limited to the period of actual corporeal possession, it was soon by universal consent extended to the duration of the life of the possessor; and, ultimately, the right of disposing of it at his death was ceded in like manner.

This division of property into real and personal ought to be attentively observed, and constantly remembered; for it separates the laws of England, as it were, into two distinct systems, and is preserved with an unbending tenacity, much more so than in the civil institutions of any other nation. Hence, landed and personal estate are almost constantly regarded as subject to different codes.

The objects of property are things, as contradistinguished from persons; and things, by the law of England, are distributed into two kinds,—things real, and things personal. Things real are such as are permanent, fixed, and immovable, which cannot be carried out of their place, as lands and tenements: things personal are goods, money, and all other moveables, which may attend the owner's person wherever he goes.

In treating of THINGS REAL, or real property, we shall consider—1st, Their several sorts or kinds; 2dly, The tenures by which they may be holden; 3dly, The estates which may be had in them; and 4thly, The title to them, or the means of acquiring and losing them.

Things real are usually said to consist of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. Land is a word of very extensive signification, and comprehends all things of a permanent substantial nature. Tenement is a word of still greater extent; and though in its vulgar acceptance it is only applied to houses and other buildings, yet in its proper, original, and legal sense it signifies every thing that may be holden, provided it is also permanent in its nature, whether substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial or ideal kind. Thus, liberum tenementum, a free tenement, or freehold, is applicable to offices, rents, commons, advowsons, franchises, peerages, and such like, as well as to lands and other solid objects. The term hereditament, however, is by much the largest and comprehensive expression, as it includes whatever may be inherited, whether corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed. Thus an heirloom is neither land nor tenement, but a mere moveable, yet being inheritable is comprised under the word hereditament; and a condition, the benefit of which may descend to a man from his ancestor, is also an hereditament.

Hereditaments, then, to use the largest expression, are of two kinds—corporeal and incorporeal. Corporeal consist of such as are sensible, visible, and tangible; incorporeal are such as are not the objects of sense, can neither be seen nor handled, but exist only in contemplation.

CORPOREAL hereditaments consist wholly of substantial and permanent objects, all which may be comprehended under the general denomination of land only; for land comprehends, in its legal signification, any ground, soil, or earth, whether arable, meadow, pasture, wood, moor, land covered with water,¹ marsh, furze, or heath. So it includes all buildings and structures upon it; so that a conveyance of the land will pass the buildings thereon.

The right to land also includes the right to the space upwards towards the heavens—" Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cælum ;" therefore the owner of the land has a right to remove all things of another which overhang it. So, again, he has a right, not only to the surface of the land, but to all the soil and its mineral contents, from the surface down to the very centre of the earth. Thus the right to mines.

The term close, in its general legal signification, means the separate interest of a party in a particular spot of land, whether inclosed or not. If a man make a feoffment (that is, by deed) of a house "with the appurtenances," nothing passes by those words but the garden, curtilage, and close adjoining to the house, and no other land, although usually occupied with the house; but by a devise of a messuage, even without the words "with the appurtenances," the garden and curtilage will pass, and, where the intention is apparent, even other adjacent property.

The term farm, though in common acceptation it imports a tract of land with a house, outbuildings, and cultivated land, in law signifies only the leasehold interest in the premises.

By a grant of water, neither the right to the body of water itself nor to the land under it will pass, but only a right of fishery.

¹ It is to be observed, that in prosecuting "acres of land covered with water," and a right to a piece of water, water-course, not as such a body of water, for water is &c., it is always described as so many common by the laws of nature.

CHAPTER II.

Of Incorporeal Hereditaments.

An incorporeal hereditament is a right issuing out of a thing corporeal (whether real or personal), or concerning or annexed to or exercisable within the same; consequently it is not the thing corporeal itself, nor is its existence more than in idea and abstract contemplation. Thus, a rent or an annuity is an incorporeal hereditament; for though the money, which is the fruit or produce of it, is doubtless corporeal, yet the annuity itself, which produces it, is incorporeal. So tithes, in like manner, are incorporeal. Incorporeal hereditaments are principally of ten sorts:—advowsons, tithes, commons, ways, offices, dignities, franchises, corodies or pensions, annuities, and rents.

ADVOWSONS.

An advowson is the right of presentation to a church or ecclesiastical benefice; and he who has the advowson is called a patron.

The patron has no right to the church or glebe himself, but only to present and appoint another person, who is in orders, to officiate as minister therein; and if, after such appointment, the patron takes corporeal possession of the church or its appurtenances, he is an intruder upon the property of the parson, to whom during his life the corporeal possession belongs. Advowson is therefore strictly an incorporeal hereditament.

Advowsons are either appendant or in gross: appendant, where they still continue annexed to the manor in which the church is situate; in gross, where they have once been separated from it by legal conveyance. It is to be remembered, that originally most churches were built by the lords of the manors in which they are situate, the tithes of the parish (when the division into parishes arose) being appointed by the lord to the clergyman to whom the living was given, and thence the lord of the manor is generally the patron of the parish church. So long therefore as the advowson is appendant, it is annexed to the manor or lands; but when once it is in gross, it is for the future annexed to the person of its owner, and not to his manor or lands.

Again, advowsons are either presentative, collative, or donative: presentative, which is the usual advowson, where the patron has a right to present to the bishop a clerk, whom he is bound to accept if he finds him canonically qualified; collative, where the bishop has the advowson in his own hands; and donative, where the king, or any subject by his licence, founds a church or chapel, and ordains that it shall be merely in the gift or disposal of a patron, subject to his visitation only, and not to that of the ordinary, and vested absolutely in the clerk by the patron's deed of donation, without presentation, institution, or induction. This is said to have been anciently the only way of conferring ecclesiastical benefices in England. If, however, this right of donation is once waived by the patron presenting to the bishop, and his clerk is admitted and instituted, it becomes for ever after presentative, and never regains its donative quality.

Although, however, as before observed, the person on whom a donative is bestowed does not require either presentation, institution, or induction, several things are necessary in order to complete and maintain the possession. 1. The donee must be a priest in holy orders by episcopal ordination. 2. Within two months after he shall be in actual possession of his donative, he must read the morning and evening prayers in his church or chapel (unless, in case of impediment, the ordinary extend the time, and then within one month after the impediment is removed), together with the form of giving assent thereto. 3. He must subscribe the declaration of conformity to the liturgy of the church of England, before the archbishop or bishop or ordinary of the diocese; and if the donative have a parish church, must take a certificate of his declaration of conformity, and read it in the parish church. 4. He must take the oaths of supremacy and allegiance before the patron. 5. He must subscribe to the Thirty-nine Articles of our church. 6. He must, within six months, take the oaths of supremacy, allegiance, and abjuration in one of the superior courts at Westminster, or at the general or quarter sessions. 7. He must read and assent to the Thirty-nine Articles at the evening and morning prayers within two months, if it be a place with the cure of souls. And 8. He must, within three months after, read the ordinary's certificate of his subscription, and again make the same declaration in the parish church.

Unlike the other species of advowson, a donative does not lapse, unless such be the terms of the foundation, or unless it has been augmented by Queen Anne's Bounty, when it is made subject to lapse by act of parliament. But the ordinary may, by ecclesiastical censures, compel the patron to fill the church, as his power refers to the parson, who is subject to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, although not to the place.

Donatives are not confined absolutely to any particular class of ecclesiastical preferment, as there are other benefices and dignities which resemble donatives, and are quasi donatives. For the most part archbishoprics and bishoprics are in the hands of the crown. So also deaneries and prebends may be, and frequently are, donatives.

The peculiarities of this kind of advowson are, that in case of a vacancy in the life-time of the ancestor, the heir, and not the executor, has the right of donation; and, in the time of a vacancy, the patron can take the profits to his own use. Donatives are freed from procurations, and the incumbent is exempted from attending at visitations. The presentation does not devolve to the king, as in other livings, when the incumbent is made a bishop. They are within the acts of uniformity when with care of souls, and within the statute against simony as well as that against pluralities if a donative be first taken. But if a donative is the second benefice taken without dispensation, the first would not be avoided within the Pluralities act.

Donatives are resigned by offer of resignation by the incumbent to the patron, and the patron's acceptance of it.

Alienation of Advowsons.—With respect to the alienation of advowsons, in general it may result from a wrongful act divesting the advowson from the person to whom by due course of law it would appertain, or it may be the consequence of those legal provisions by which property passes from one hand to another by the mere disposition of the law, or it may arise from the proprietor of the advowson disposing of it by way of conveyance.

The consequences of usurpation, whatever they formerly were, are now much diminished; for, by the 7 Ann. c. 18, no usurpation displaces the right of the patron, whether the advowson be appendant or in gross, but only operates for the present turn; so that if there be three coparceners and a usurpation takes place of the right of the second's presentation, the right of the third comes in again on the third turn or vacancy. A usurpation against a bishop is a bar as to him, but not to his successors.

Although disseisin of a manor whereto an advowson is appendant puts the disseisee out of possession of his advowson, he may notwithstanding present to the advowson before he regains seisin of the manor, if prior to any presentation by the disseisor.

When the right of entry is lost, and a party cannot enter on the property alienated by his own authority, but can only recover by action, the possession is said to be discontinued. In general, discontinuance is the effect of alienations made by husbands seised in right of their wives; by sole corporations, such as ecclesiastics seised jure ecclesie; or by tenants in tail. The two former are now restrained by statute. As an advowson must pass by grant, a conveyance by deed of the tenant in tail will not work a discontinuance. A conveyance of record by fine &c. would not create a discontinuance, which can only arise in things which may pass by livery. Hence an advowson in gross cannot be discontinued; but an advowson appendant will undergo all the consequences of a discontinuance of the principal, subject to certain qualifications.

Where the real proprietor being out of possession, and having no right to enter without recovering possession in an action, has afterwards the freehold cast upon him by some subsequent, though defective title, he is said to be remitted to his ancient estate; and as a remitter to the principal is a remitter to the accessory, by the remitter to the manor the patron is remitted to the advowson also.

The transfer of advowsons may also be effected by the act of law. Thus, if a widow receive for her dower a manor to which an advowson is appendant, she is entitled to such advowson. So if she is entitled to the third part only of a manor, the third presentation belongs to her.

There may be a curtesy of an advowson appendant, provided there has been seisin of the principal; but of an advowson in gross there is no need of seisin.

A guardian in socage shall not present, but the infant himself shall; and lord chancellor King confirmed the appointment of a child, though it appeared that the infant was under a year old, and the guardian himself guided the infant's hand in making his mark and setting his seal to the appointment.

In cases of descent the advowson follows the principal, and goes to the heir; but if a vacancy has occurred in the life-time of the ancestor, the executor presents to that turn, and not the heir, except in case of donative advowsons. In the case of descent among coparceners, if they disagree, the eldest has the first presentation, and so forth.

An advowson appendant to a manor is clearly legal assets, because, the manor being assets, what is appendant must be assets likewise; and, although the contrary is laid down, an advowson in gross is said by Lord Coke and others to be assets, as it may be sold, it comes to the heir by descent, and it may be recovered in value.

The transfer of advowsons may also be effected by conveyance of the proprietor. A person may have the same estate in an advowson as in any other real possession. So there may be an equitable owner of an advowson, as a cestuique trust, or a purchaser before conveyance; but a trustee or mortgagee will have but the bare right of presentation, and not of nomination.

Advowsons in gross may be transferred by every species of conveyance whereby other incorporeal property is transferable. So advowsons appendant, by every species of conveyance by which real property corporeal is transferred.

An advowson appendant cannot pass as an appurtenant where the manor itself is leased for years only, because no lease for years of an advowson is good; but otherwise, being strictly an appurtenant to the manor, it will be included under those usual terms or words whereby appurtenances in general pass.

In order to effect a transfer of an advowson from the crown, it must be specifically named in the grant; for nothing passes by royal grant but what is specifically mentioned as intended to pass.

Of the Grant of Avoidances.—There are two kinds of avoidances, or modes by which a vacancy may occur; the one, an actual vacancy in deed, by the death of the incumbent; and the other, an avoidance by law, arising at a moment when the church is actually full, and the incumbent is to be removed, either on account of resignation, plurality of livings, deprivation, incapacity, union of parishes or churches,¹ or simony.

An actual vacancy can in no case be granted by a subject; though, it seems, where a person is both patron and incumbent, he may devise the next presentation, as the vacancy has not at that time arisen; for the avoidance granted must be a future avoidance. The grant or conveyance must also be by deed, specifying the particular vacancy that is intended to pass. Nothing more than the interest which the grantor has can pass by the grant, and for the excess the deed is void. Thus, if a tenant in tail of a manor to which an advowson is appendant grant the next avoidance and die, and the issue in tail enter on the manor, the grant becomes void. So if a tenant for life grant the next avoidance, it is good so long as he lives, but void as against the remainder man. So if a tenant for years of a manor grant the next avoidance, neither he nor his executors can avoid the grant, so long as the term continues, by surrender of the term to the superior patron or otherwise.

The next avoidance is but a personal chattel, and though it be by the deed granted to a man and his heirs and assigns, it goes to his executors or administrators on his death.

¹ By the common law, when churches are poor, and unable to support the charges to which they are subject, they may be consolidated or united, with the consent of the parson, patron, or ordinary. See further, as to unions, Mirehouse on Advowsons, 106 et seq.

*Presentation.*¹—Presentation is the offering of a clerk to the ordinary to be instituted to a benefice, or it may be to a deanery, arch-deaconry, prebend, hospital, church, or chapel. It is made by writing, in the nature of a letter missive to the bishop of the diocese; and if by the crown, to a benefice of 10*l.* yearly value on the queen's books, a 20*l.* stamp is required.² Without this there can be no evidence of presentation.

The crown, as supreme, is the patron paramount of all benefices; and unless the patronage be in some subject, it must be in the crown. This supremacy was declared in the first instance by the 26 Hen. VIII. c. 1; and, though suspended in the reign of Philip and Mary, was restored by the very first act in the reign of queen Elizabeth.³ This is the foundation of the oath of supremacy.

If a church in the bishop's patronage become vacant in the life of the bishop and he die, or if a bishop collate a prebendary and die before induction, the crown, and not the bishop's executors, shall present, contrary to the case of a common patron.

The lord chancellor, or keeper of the great seal for the time being, has the right of presentation to all benefices appertaining to the queen of or below the value of 20*l.* in the queen's books; the only difference in a presentation by the queen and the lord chancellor is, that the former commands, and the other requests the presentation to take place.

It sometimes happens that one person has the right of nomination, and another that of presentation. When the queen has the latter right only, the right of nomination is not affected, but the lord chancellor must present the person nominated.

The queen may revoke her presentation at any time before induction; and if her presentee die before induction, though the queen have only one turn, she shall present again, but a common patron would in such case lose his turn.

As before observed, the right of presentation descends by the course of inheritance from heir to heir; though, if a vacancy occur during the life of the ancestor, and he die without having presented, the right to present is then a mere chattel, which goes, not to the heir, but to the executors. If the testator having presented die before the presentee is admitted, and the executor present a different person, the bishop may accept which of the two presentees he pleases. If, however, the patron and incumbent be the same person and he die, the heir shall then present, and not the executor; subject, however, to the devise of the patron, by which it may be affected.

If a woman has the advowson to her and her heirs, and she marry, the husband and she must jointly present. If issue is born, the husband after her death presents alone, as a tenant by curtesy; or if the wife have no issue, and she die before presentation during a vacancy, the husband shall present that turn as her administrator, or rather in his marital right to her chattels.

¹ We have already briefly shown the manner and requisites of a person becoming a parson or vicar, ante, p. 231.

² Ante, 151.

³ 1 Eliz. c. 1.

The widow of a patron shall have her dower out of an advowson by a right to present on the third vacancy, the heir having the first two.

Joint tenants must also concur in the presentation, or else the bishop may elect which he pleases, or he may refuse to admit the presentee of one only, and collate if they do not agree in time. But joint tenants may make partition, and present by turn according to agreement between themselves. If an advowson is vested in trustees, they become joint tenants, and all must join. With tenants in common, however, it is otherwise, as the one by presentation may bind the other. In case of coparceners, they must either agree in the presentation, or the eldest sister has the first right, the next elder the second, and so forth.

Corporations must present under the common seal, and by the true name of the corporation.

A mortgagee cannot take advantage of a vacancy; for though he, as the legal owner of that out of which the right of presentation arises, must present, yet the right of nomination is in the mortgagor, and for this reason, viz. that as the possession of the mortgagee is only for the purpose of repaying himself his debt, and he is trustee for the mortgagor for all the surplus, the right of presenting, not being capable of returning a profit in the eye of the law for which the mortgagee can account to the mortgagor in reduction of his debt, is considered as an excrescence belonging to the latter. For a somewhat similar reason, namely, because it is a maxim of law that he can meddle with nothing but that for which he can account, a guardian in socage cannot present, but the infant, however tender in years, is the party to exercise the right.

On the bankruptcy of a patron, the commissioners may sell the right of next presentation or the advowson; but if a vacancy occur before the sale, the bankrupt is the party in whom lies the right to present on that turn.

Though formerly thought otherwise, presentations may be revoked before admission and institution; but after that, the church is full, except as against the crown and the parson himself.

Of Lapse.—Lapse is a devolution of the right of patronage from the patron to the bishop as ordinary, to the metropolitan as superior, or to the queen as patron paramount of all the benefices within the realm; and it arises when the patron who should have presented has omitted his opportunity. The time within which the right should be exercised is six months, or 182 days, from the time the vacancy happened, or in some cases, as we shall see presently, from the time of his receiving notice thereof from the ordinary or bishop.

When, therefore, a clerk has received a presentation to a living, he should, within six months from the vacancy, tender the same to the bishop of the diocese, or his vicar general, or, in case the bishopric be vacant, to the guardian of the spiritualities within which the church is situate. If this is neglected and the six months run out, the patron's right to present is gone for that turn, and it devolves by lapse on the bishop.

As before intimated, the patron is sometimes entitled to notice of the vacancy before a lapse can occur, and sometimes not. Where the vacancy arises by death, creation, cession, or by statute, no notice is necessary. It is however said, that if the clerk die beyond seas, the six months run from the time when the patron could reasonably have gained intelligence thereof. So neither in the case of union of churches need the bishop give notice. But where the avoidance arises by acts between the ordinary and the incumbent, notice must be given to the patron, as in cases of deprivation or resignation, or if the avoidance is by canon or common law, as by the incumbent's taking a second living under value in the queen's books without dispensation. If the presentee of a lay patron be refused by the ordinary, in most cases (as for simony, adultery, or illiterature) the patron is entitled to notice; but where an ecclesiastical patron presents a clerk who is refused on the ground of illiterature, the patron must nevertheless present another fit person within the six months from the vacancy, although no notice of the objection be given to him. The reason of this difference between an ecclesiastical and a lay patron is, because the former is presumed to know what are the requisite qualifications of him whom he presents to fill the offices of the church.

If the ordinary die without giving the requisite notice, his successor must give the notice, and no lapse can accrue to the successor till six months after such notice. Where notice is requisite, it must be given to the patron himself from the bishop himself or other ordinary; and if the patron live in the same county, it may then be published in the parish church, and affixed to the church door. If there is a suit pending relative to the presentation to a church, and the bishop is therein a bonâ fide litigating party, no lapse to the bishop can accrue till the question is determined. But if two patrons are litigating the right between themselves, and each presents a clerk, the bishop may reject both, and so cause a lapse, unless one of the patrons or clerks pray him to award a writ of jure patronatus to determine the right.

The law of lapse has three gradations: 1st, After the neglect of the original patron, the bishop of the diocese may collate, unless the crown is patron. 2dly, After the end of the second six months, if the vacancy still exist, the metropolitan or archbishop of the province has the right to present during the next six months. 3dly, After which, the vacancy still existing, the crown shall present, against which no time runs. If the patron be the ordinary or the metropolitan, he has nevertheless but one six months in which to present. But no lapse occurs as against the crown, whether it be the original patron or its right accrue by a default in others and consequent lapse to it. If, however, the crown neglects to present, the ordinary may send a deputy to serve the cure, and sequester the profits of the church.

Simony.—In relation to advowsons, we shall, lastly, consider the subject of simony.

Simony is the corrupt presentation of any one to an ecclesiastical benefice for money, gift, or reward. To constitute it, it is necessary that a vacancy shall have occurred at the time of the payment of the money or making the contract, or at least in the immediate expectation thereof; the purchase of the next avoidance being otherwise purely legal and proper. Besides being contrary to many old church canons, simony is against the oath which every presentee is bound to take, that it has not been committed by any person to his knowledge in his own particular case. Several acts of parliament have been passed to prevent it by the imposition of severe penalties, viz. forfeiture of the turn and double the value of one year's profits of the living, and the presentee, if guilty, is declared disqualified for that living. And the penalty for corruptly resigning or exchanging a benefice with cure of souls is, that the giver and the taker shall lose double the money given, one moiety thereof and also of the forfeiture of double the value of the year's profits to go to the crown, and the other to the party suing. Besides these, the clerk who takes the oath before mentioned against simony is liable to be indicted for perjury if he be convicted of simony. If he is not privy or consenting to the simoniacal contract, he is then only deprived of his benefice; for the presentation is void, though the presentee were not privy thereto, but he may be presented again to the same living.

Although the money be not given to the patron, and he be ignorant of money being given by the clerk, yet is the presentation simoniacal. Any contract or contrivance whereby the strict letter of the law respecting simony is sought to be evaded is considered simony; as where a person who wanted to be made a bishop, conversing with a person who had interest at court on the subject of a see that was vacant, offered to bet him a large sum of money that he himself would not be promoted to the bishopric, this was clearly an attempted evasion of simony, and a mere collusion to disguise the real intention. So the purchase of the next avoidance from a patron, when the incumbent is sick and ready to die, or, as it is termed, in extremis, is clearly simony. Nor is it requisite that the purchase be made with a view to the promotion of any particular clerk. It must not be forgotten, that the law of simony only relates to the purchase of an actual vacancy, or one that is likely immediately to occur; and therefore if the purchase extended likewise to the advowson or right to future presentations, as to such the purchaser would have a full legal title. But if the contract be made for the purpose of carrying a simoniacal contract into execution, it is void as to so much as goes to effect that purpose; and if the sound part cannot be separated from that which is corrupt, the whole is altogether void.

Bonds to resign at any particular period may or may not be legal, according to the nature of the bond and the uses made of it. Thus, if it is a special bond to resign in favour of some certain person, as the patron's son, relation, or friend, at a particular period, it has been held valid; but a bond to resign generally at the will of the patron, and no particular object expressed, has lately been held to be absolutely void. In fact, courts always look as near as they can to the real object of the parties, and endeavour to sift out whether the intention be to evade the law; and they take care not to suffer an attempted infraction to go unpunished.¹

¹ See further, Mirehouse on Advowsons, per tot.; whence the foregoing summary has been in a great measure collected.

TITHES.

Tithes are the tenth part of the produce arising from land, from the stock upon land, and from the personal industry of the inhabitants.

They are of three kinds: prædial, or those which arise from the land itself, as corn, hay, hemp, flax, grass, fruit, herbs, and wood; mixed, or those which arise from the increase of animals receiving nutriment from the earth, as cattle, sheep, pigs, wool, milk, and eggs; and personal, or such as are acquired purely by man's own industry, as of mills and fisheries.

They are also divided into great and small tithes. The former are corn, peas and beans, hay, and wood; and the latter, all other prædial, and all mixed and personal tithes. If hay of any kind, as clover, instead of being cut as hay, be left for seed, the tithe is then a small tithe; and it is also settled, that hops, flax, potatoes, turnips, herbs, apples, fruit, cole seed, clover seed, rape seed, saffron, teagles, thyme, and tobacco, are small tithes, however large the quantity grown.

The rector is primâ facie entitled to all the tithes of the parish, great and small; and the vicar, in order to take any part of them from him, must either produce an endowment, or give such evidence of usage as pre-supposes anything ex parte the vicar against the rector. An endowment is not, however, always conclusive, but may be affected by evidence of usage contrary to it.

On the other hand, if an endowment of a vicarage is produced, under which a vicar has been accustomed, time out of mind, to take particular tithes and profits, it will be no ground for withholding such tithes from him, that they are not expressed in such endowment, since it may from long possession be presumed that the vicarage has, at some time or other, been augmented therewith; and, indeed, proof of perception of tithes during living memory, where none can be shown to have been enjoyed by the rector, is sufficient to establish the vicar's claim, although his endowment expressly negatives the vicar's claim, and gives them to the rector.

When the vicarage is not endowed, the impropiator of the small tithes is bound to maintain a priest; and, upon an information, the crown may assign a proper allowance or portion of the small tithes for such vicar's support, but not where there is any endowment, be it ever so small. Otherwise there is no difference between the rights of a lay impropiator and a spiritual rector.

Curates have generally no title to any part of the tithes, though there are places, especially in Wales, where a right of that kind does exist.

Glebe land is a portion of land belonging to or parcel of the parsonage or vicarage, over and above the tithes. As between the rector and vicar, no tithe in respect of this is generally payable; but by the endowment the rector may be obliged to pay the vicar his small tithes out of it. Of glebe it may here be briefly remarked, that by the 28 Hen. VII. c. 11, the emblements go to the executor or administrator of the spiritual party who sowed the land, and not to his successor; but if corn thereon be cut after the late possessor's decease, the tithe thereof belongs to the successor.

In extra-parochial places the tithes belong to the crown.

An exemption from the payment of tithes may exist, in part or totally, by a real composition, by prescription or custom, or by privilege.

A real composition is where an agreement has been made between the owner of lands and the parson or vicar, with consent of the ordinary and patron, that the lands should be discharged from tithes by reason of some land or other real recompence given in lieu thereof. No such composition can have been made since the 13 Eliz. c. 10, by which (among other spiritual persons) parsons and vicars are restrained from making any conveyance of the estates of their churches for longer than three lives or twenty-one years. Compositions of this kind, however, are often made at the present day by act of parliament upon the inclosure of open fields and wastes.

The constant payment or performance of a fixed tribute or service in lieu of tithes is evidence of a prescriptive or customary composition originating before the time of memory, which is called a modus. It is essential that the benefit accruing from the modus should be constant and invariable; and if it consists in money (which is most frequently the case) it must not much exceed the probable value of the tithe in those ancient days, when money was not abundant.

The crown, by its prerogative, is discharged from the payment of all tithes. So ecclesiastical persons are exempt as to the lands which they hold in their spiritual character: the vicar pays no tithes to the rector, nor the rector to the vicar. These personal privileges are confined to the crown and the clergy; for their tenant or lessee pays tithes.

But, lastly, those lands are wholly exempt from tithes even in the hands of laymen, which formerly belonged to such religious houses as were dissolved by the 31 Hen. VIII. c. 13;* for that act enacts that all persons who should come to the possession of the lands of any abbey then dissolved should hold them free and discharged of tithes in as large and ample a manner as the abbeys themselves formerly held them.

COMMUTATION OF TITHES.—It had long been considered a desirable object to provide a fair and adequate compensation for tithes in lieu of their payment in kind; and with this view the legislature, in the year 1836, passed the act 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 71, entitled "An act for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales," of the scope and intentions of which we shall here endeavour to present the reader with a short outline.

The act provides for the conversion of all the tithes in England and Wales (including all uncommuted tithes, portions and parcels of tithes, and all moduses, compositions real, and prescriptive and customary payments) into a rent-charge on the property liable; such rent-charge being a fixed amount as represented by a certain quantity of corn, but payable in money, and therefore variable from year to year according to the average prices of corn for the seven preceding years.

The mode provided for making the commutation is, first, to ascertain the gross average money value of all the tithes in a parish (or in a district allowed by the commissioners to be treated as a parish for the purposes of such commutation) for the seven years ending Christmas 1835; next, to apportion that amount on the several lands chargeable with tithes in the parish; and then to compute the quantity of corn which could be purchased with such sum, one-third of it being laid out in wheat, one-third in barley, and one-third in oats, at the average price of each sort of such grain as taken from the official returns for the seven years preceding Christmas 1835.¹ This gives the fixed amount of the rent-charge payable for the same lands &c. in every future year, as represented by a certain quantity of corn. But as the rent-charge is not to be paid in corn, but in money, the amount in money will be constantly variable, and will have to be ascertained from year to year by a similar computation of the value of that same quantity of corn according to the average prices for the seven years immediately previous and ending at the preceding Christmas, as taken from the like official returns.

The machinery by which the purposes of the act are to be carried into execution is a central board of commissioners, called, "The Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales," with power to appoint assistant commissioners, and an establishment under them adequate for the purpose.

Every commutation consists of two separate processes: first, the ascertaining of the total sum to be paid for the tithes of any parish or district; and secondly, the apportionment of such sum among the different lands &c. on which it is chargeable. There are also two methods by which either or both of these processes may be effected: first, voluntarily; and secondly, compulsorily.

A voluntary agreement as to the total rent-charge in any parish, executed by the owners of two-thirds of the titheable lands, two-thirds of the great tithes, and two-thirds of the small tithes, is, when confirmed by the commissioners, binding on the whole parish and on all parties interested.

When the total sum has been thus agreed on, the land-owners may meet and appoint valuers to apportion that sum among the several lands chargeable. If more than one, an even number of valuers must be chosen, one-half by the majority in point of number, and one-half by a majority in point of interest; though both majorities may agree and appoint the same person. At the same meeting the land-owners may settle the principles on which the valuers shall proceed, or they may leave them uncontrolled, to distribute the whole charge according to the best of their judgment, "having regard to the titheable produce and productive quality of the lands;" subject, however, to the provision, that all the lands are to have the full benefit of any modus or exemption attaching to them.

To give the fullest opportunity for effecting voluntary commutations, the compulsory powers of the commissioners were not to be brought into operation till the 1st October, 1838, except in the case of a compulsory apportionment after a voluntary agreement. But after that time, when a voluntary commutation had not been effected in any parish, or was not in progress, the commissioners were empowered to take the necessary steps for a compulsory commutation.

¹ The average prices of corn for the seven years preceding Christmas 1835, as taken from the official returns, were—Wheat, 56s. 3d.; barley, 31s. 3d.; and oats, 22s. per quarter. Or, reckoning by the bushel, wheat, 7s. 0½d.; barley, 3s. 11½d.; and oats, 2s. 9d.

In making a compulsory award as to the gross amount of the tithes in a parish, the commissioners are required to take the average value of the tithes if paid in kind, or of the compositions (if any), paid during the seven years ending at Christmas 1835, as the basis of the commutation. But in case of an appeal by the patron, or by one-half of the land owners, or of the owners of tithes (great or small), on the ground that the payments of those seven years do not fairly represent the permanent average value of the tithe, the commissioners may increase or diminish the average amount so ascertained to an extent not exceeding one-fifth, or twenty per cent, for the purpose of bringing it nearer to such value. And in cases of fraud, collusion, or special circumstances, a still greater latitude is allowed. There are also special provisions as to the tithe of hops, fruit, and garden produce. Moduses and the like are to be taken at their actual amount, the only change being that they will be called rent-charges instead of moduses, and will vary henceforth with the price of corn. But as the rent charge will be subject to all parochial and county rates, when the compositions have been paid free of such charges, an equivalent to what they would have paid had they been rated is to be added to the composition before the rent-charge is calculated.

When the award has been confirmed, the voluntary principle is again resorted to, and an assistant commissioner summons a meeting of land-owners to choose valuers, exactly as if the sum awarded had been voluntarily agreed on. But if a voluntary apportionment be not made in six months, the commissioners may appoint their own valuers and proceed to a compulsory apportionment. In whichever way effected, when completed, and confirmed by the commissioners, it becomes binding on all parties; the lands are for ever discharged from tithes, and the rent-charge is paid instead.

The rent-charge may be specially apportioned upon the several closes or portions, or according to an acreable rate or rates upon lands of different quality. And a land-owner may discharge any portion of his lands from rent-charge altogether by having the whole apportioned on other lands belonging to him in the parish held under the same title and for the same estate, provided that the land so charged be at least three times the value of the whole rent-charge on it.

In all cases of ecclesiastical tithe commuted by voluntary agreements, the consent of the patron is required; and such agreements are to be submitted to the bishop of the diocese for his observations and opinion before confirmation by the commissioners. And with the view of acquiring or enlarging glebe, land, to an extent not exceeding twenty acres, may, in the case of ecclesiastical tithes, be set apart, instead of an equivalent value of rent-charge, and the residue made up in rent-charge to be apportioned among all the land-owners, unless otherwise specially agreed.

The rent-charge, if held for life, or for any greater estate, is declared a freehold, and is made subject to the like liabilities, incidents, and exemptions, as tithes.

The rent-charges are not to merge in the estate out of which they issue, except when held by tenants in fee simple or fee tail, who, of course, may deal with them like other property held in fee, and, if they see fit, may declare them merged before the intervention of the commissioners, and so, by extinguishing them, withdraw them from the operation of the act.

The rent-charge is subject to all parochial and county rates. These rates are assessable on the actual occupier of the lands out of which the rent-charge issues, although payable by the owner of the rent-charge. The occupier paying them may deduct them out of his rent, if a tenant; and the landlord may deduct the amount from the owner of the rent-charge in settling accounts with him.

No one is personally liable for the rent-charge; but the remedy, as in the case of ordinary rent-charges, is by distress and entry on the lands out of which it issues, the party entering being liable to account upon a judge's order.

If the rent-charge be unpaid for twenty-one days, power is given to distrain after ten days notice, as in case of a distress for common rent; but the arrears that can be recovered are limited to two years. In case the rent-charge be not satisfied by the distress, a power to enter is given after forty days arrear; but, instead of the tedious process of an ejectment, a cheaper remedy is substituted, as any judge, on an affidavit of the arrears being due, may order a writ to be issued, directed to the sheriff, to inquire and assess what is due; and on the return of the inquisition, a writ of habere facias possessionem may issue, as on an ordinary judgment. The land may be held till the arrears and costs, as also the costs of cultivation, shall be satisfied. On this being done or whenever the land-owner thinks fit, he can call for an account (by summons in the usual way before a judge in chambers); and on the account being rendered, and the amount of arrears and expences satisfied, possession may be regained by a writ of supersedeas to the writ of possession.

The distress and entry extend to all lands in the parish held under the same landlord by the occupier of the lands liable to the rent-charge.

In the case of Quakers, it is not necessary to impound the distress, which may be made on their goods and chattels whether on the premises or not; and no entry is to be made unless the owner of the rent-charge is unable to find sufficient distress.

Under the word tithes used in the act, as the subject of commutation, are included all uncommuted tithes, portions, and parcels of tithes, moduses, compositions real, and customary or prescriptive payments. But the act does not extend (unless by a special provision in any voluntary parochial agreement, and specially approved by the commissioners) to any Easter offerings, mortuaries, or surplice fees, or to the tithes of fish or of fishing, or to any personal tithes other than the tithes of mills, or to any mineral tithes, or to any payment instead of tithes arising or growing due within the city of London, or to any permanent rent-charge or other rent or payment in lieu of tithes, calculated on rents of houses or lands in any city or town under any local act or custom, or to any lands or tenements of which the tithes are already perpetually commuted or extinguished by act of parliament. These exceptions are grounded for the most part on the general principle, that there is no land on which to charge the commutation.

COMMONS.

Right of common consists in the liberty to feed cattle, to catch fish, to dig turf, cut wood, or the like, on or from another man's land. It is therefore chiefly of four sorts, namely, of pasture, piscary, turbary, and estovers.

Common of pasture is the right of feeding one's beasts on another's land; for in those waste lands which are called commons, the property of the soil is generally in the lord of the manor, as in common fields it is in the particular tenants. This kind of common is either appendant, appurtenant, because of vicinage, or in gross.

Common appendant is the right belonging to the owners of arable land to put commonable beasts (which are beasts of the plough, or such as manure the land) upon the lord's ground. It is a general right attaching on the grant of lands, but only belongs to arable land, and can only be claimed for so many cattle as are necessary to plough and manure the tenant's arable.

Common appurtenant arises from no connexion of tenure, nor from any absolute necessity, but may be annexed to lands in other lordships, or extend to other beasts besides such as are usually commonable, as hogs, goats, and the like. It is not a general right, like common appendant, and therefore could only be claimed by immemorial usage or prescription, though it may also be created by modern grant.

Common because of vicinage or neighbourhood, Blackstone explains to be, where the inhabitants of two townships which lie contiguous to each other have usually intercommoned with one another, the beasts of the one straying mutually into the fields of the other; and he states it to be only a permissive right, intended to excuse what in strictness is a trespass in both, and so prevent a multiplicity of suits; and says, that therefore either township may inclose and bar the other out, though they have intercommoned time out of mind; neither hath any person of one town a right to put his beasts originally into the other's common, but if they escape and stray thither of themselves, the law winks at the trespass. But this description, as a definition, is objected to, as being rather a descriptive example or illustration than a definition. The lords of the contiguous manors may inclose the adjacent waste; but if an open passage be left between the two commons sufficient for a highway, the common by vicinage still continues.

Common in gross is a right annexed to a man's person only, being granted to him and his heirs by deed &c. It is entirely distinct from any landed property, and may be vested in one who has not a foot of ground in the manor.

There are other species of common, much of the same kind, in different parts of the country, such as cattle gates in the north, beast gates in Suffolk, &c.

All species of common of pasture are limited usually as to number and time; and therefore the possessor is not in general allowed to pasture more cattle than his own land will keep during the winter by its summer and autumn produce. The notion of common without stint is now exploded.

Of commons in general it is to be observed, that the lord of the manor may inclose for tillage or wood land as much of the common as he pleases, provided he leave sufficient for the use of such as are entitled thereto. The lord has the sole interest in the soil; but that in the common is mutual between him and the commoners, and they may both bring actions for injuries either against strangers or each other. Though the commoners have rights of turbary, piscary, digging sand, or taking any species of estovers upon the common, such rights will not prevent the lord from inclosing, if sufficient be left.

The high price of all kinds of agricultural produce during the late war gave rise to the very general inclosure of commons; and, to facilitate that object, a General Inclosure act was passed, 41 Geo. III. c. 109, amended by the 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 23; and to these have been since added the 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 115, the 3 & 4 Vic. c. 31; and, more recently, the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 118, amended by 9 & 10 Vic. c. 70.

Common of piscary is the liberty of fishing in another man's waters, as common of turbary is that of digging turf or the soil, either for sand, coals, minerals, stone, or the like. So common of estovers is a liberty to take a necessary and reasonable quantity of wood off another's land for the use or furniture of a house or farm, or for farming utensils.

RIGHT OF WAY.

This is another species of incorporeal hereditament. A right of way must originally have been granted under seal; but twenty years uninterrupted enjoyment may establish a prescriptive right. Such long enjoyment of a way is, of itself, in general a sufficient prima facie title; and forty years is conclusive, unless it is shown to have been enjoyed by consent or agreement expressly made for that purpose by some written document.¹ These periods of prescriptive right have now been established by statute 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71; see post, 565. It has been erroneously supposed that the permitting a funeral to pass across private grounds creates a public right of way; but this error has long been refuted.²

A purchaser or lessee of property with a supposed right of way should ascertain the title to the way; and if it be doubtful whether the prescriptive right may not have been destroyed by unity of seisin or other means, he should require a fresh express grant, or at least words sufficient to pass all ways theretofore used by the prior occupiers. The words belonging to are only synonymous with appurtenant, and not equivalent to used, and will not pass a way extinguished by unity of seisin, unless it be a way of necessity. A right of way may arise from necessity; as if a man let to another a field in the centre of his estate, a right of way to and from that field must exist as necessary to the enjoyment of the thing demised.

Injuries to a right of way may in general be remedied by abatement or removal of the obstruction, or by action on the case; but not by action of ejectment, or of trespass, unless in case of assault upon the person attempting to use his right of way.³

OFFICES.

These afford us another instance of incorporeal property, whether the estate in them be to a man and his heirs for ever, or for life, or for years, or during pleasure only. Although the office be granted for life, the crown by its prerogative may prevent the exercise of the functions of it, though the salary still belongs to the grantee.

¹ 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 214.

² Ibid. 25.

³ Ibid. 214.

No office in the administration of public justice can endure longer than for the life of the officer; and if granted for a term of years, it would be void as to the excess, since the executors and administrators may be wholly unfit to exercise the functions. No judicial office can be granted in reversion, since by the time the reversion falls in, the grantee may be totally incompetent. But mere ministerial offices, as they may be performed by deputy, may be limited in any manner.

Buying of offices is for the most part illegal. By act of parliament it is a misdemeanor to buy, sell, advertise, or in any way promote the sale of offices; and an agent advertising the same incurs 50*l.* penalty.¹

The incumbrance also of an office is in general illegal. Thus the salary of an equerry to one of the royal family is not subject to a sequestration.² The sale of the place of Jew broker in the city is illegal.³ So is the sale of the command of a ship in the East India service.⁴ So is the assignment of the half-pay of an officer.⁵

But the sale of a commission in the army is not per se bad.⁶ Nor is that of the office of clerk to the deputy registrar in the prerogative court of Canterbury,⁷ nor of registrar of a consistory court,⁸ nor under-marshal of London,⁹ nor of a menial office in the House of Lords.¹⁰

FRANCHISES.

A franchise, or liberty, is a royal privilege or branch of the crown's prerogative subsisting in the hands of a subject. It must therefore arise from a grant from the crown, or be held by prescription, which presupposes such grant. The kinds of franchises are various; the following are some of the principal. To be a county palatine is a franchise vested in a number of persons. It is likewise a franchise to be incorporated as a body politic, and each member of such corporation is said to have a franchise or freedom. Other franchises are, to hold a court leet; to have a manor or lordship, or at least a lordship paramount; to have waifs, wrecks, estrays, treasure trove, royal fish, forfeitures, and deadlands; to have a court of one's own; to have the cognizance of pleas; to have a bailiwick wherein the grantee only and his officers execute process; to have a fair or market, with liberty of taking toll, either there or at other public places, as bridges, wharfs, &c., which tolls must have a reasonable cause of commencement (as in consideration of repairs or the like), or the franchise is illegal and void; or, lastly, to have a forest, chase, park, warren, or fishery, endowed with privileges of royalty; on which last species of franchise we shall make a few observations.

¹ The 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 16, renders any agreement for the sale of an office for the collection of the revenue absolutely void; and by the 49 Geo. III. c. 126, such a contract is made a misdemeanor. See Garforth v. Fearon, 1 H. Bl.; Parsons v. Thompson, ibid.; Lee v. Coleshill, Cro. Eliz. 529; Norton v. Summers, Hob. 14; Co. Litt. 234; 3 Inst. 154; Willes, 241; Wiggins v. Bambridge, Willes, 571; Long v. Payne, 2 Wils. 133; Stanhope v. Eric, 8 T. R.; Waldo v. Martin, 4 Barn & C. 319.

² Fenton v. Lowther, 1 Cox, 315.

³ Exp. Lyon, Ambl. 89.

⁴ E. I. Comp. v. Neave, 5 Ves. 181; Hartwell v. Hartwell, 4 Ves. 815.

⁵ M'Carty v. Gould, 1 Ball & B. 389; Stone v. Lidderdale, 2 Ast. 533.

⁶ Id. 4 Ves. 815.

⁷ Aston v. Gwinnell, 3 Y. & J., 136.

⁸ Wheeler v. Trotter, 4 Swan. 174.

⁹ Exp. Butler, Ambl. 73.

¹⁰ Schellenger v. Blackely, 1 Ves. sen. 347.

The rights of forest, properly so called, can only belong to the crown. A chase is a right to the game on an open waste not capable of being inclosed, and does not include any right to the land itself. It is said that there are only 13 legal chases in England. A park (of which there are said to be 781 in England) is an inclosed tract of land privileged for beasts of the chase, and can only be legally constituted by a grant from the crown. It gives rise to privileges which do not exist elsewhere; as, for instance, the owner of the franchise or his servants may shoot or destroy dogs found hunting deer; and the deer are real property attached to the land, and go to the heir at law, and not to the executor, contrary to the usual quality of chattels.

Free-warren is another franchise founded on express grant from the crown, or a prescription which supposes it. It is an exclusive privilege to preserve and kill hares, rabbits, roes, partridges, pheasants, rails, quails, woodcocks, mallards, and herons, (but not grouse), in a tract of land, even in exclusion of the owners of the soil. The owner of this franchise may obtain full costs of suit against a trespasser in pursuit of game, although no game be in fact killed, and only one farthing damages are given. He may also shoot self-hunting dogs. Here also the game goes to the heir, and not to the executor.

The rights of free fishery, several fishery, and common of fishery, have also been considered franchises. Free fishery is an exclusive right of fishery in a public navigable river, or sometimes in an arm or the sea. Several fishery is the same in a private water, or river not navigable, and may include the ownership of the soil, which the former cannot. Common of fishery does not import any exclusive right; nor any property in the fish before they are taken, but merely a right to take fish in common with other persons who have a similar independent right.

The remaining species of incorporeal hereditaments are DIGNITIES, CORODIES (which is a right of sustenance, or to receive certain allotments of victual and provision for one's maintenance), ANNUITIES, and RENTS of all kinds.

CHAPTER III.

Of Tenures.

ALMOST all the real property in this kingdom is, by the policy of our laws, supposed to be holden of some superior lord, in consideration of certain services to be rendered to the lord by the tenant. The thing holden is called the tenement; the possessor or proprietor, whatever be his interest therein, is called the tenant; and the manner or condition of his possession, the tenure.

On the abolition of military tenures and their appendages by the 12 Car. II. c. 14, all tenures were converted into free and common socage, save only tenures in frankalmoign, copyholds, and the honorary services (without the slavish part) of grand sergeanty.

SOCAGE denotes a tenure by any certain and determinate service, and is constantly opposed by our ancient writers to knight's service, or military tenure, where the render was precarious and uncertain. It was divided into free socage, where the services were not only certain but honourable (as fealty only, or rent and fealty), and villein socage, where the services, though certain, were of a baser nature. As belonging to this species of tenure, we may rank petit serjeanty, tenure in burgage, and gavelkind.

Petit serjeanty consists in holding lands of the crown by the service of rendering annually some small implement of war, as a bow, a sword, or the like. The tenure by which the grants to the Duke of Marlborough and the Duke of Wellington for their great military services are held, is of this kind, each rendering a small flag or ensign annually, which is deposited in Windsor Castle. The more honorary part of the services of grand serjeanty, such as carrying the sword or banner, officiating as butler, carver, &c. at the coronation of the sovereign, are still reserved, though the slavish appendages belonging to it were abolished by the before-mentioned statute.

Burgage tenure is when the sovereign or some other is lord of an ancient borough, in which the tenements are held at a rent certain. A borough is usually distinguished from other towns by the right of sending members to parliament, and where the right of election is by burgage tenure, that alone is proof of the antiquity of the borough. There are a variety of customs affecting many tenements so held in ancient burgage, the most remarkable of which is that of borough English, which is, that the youngest instead of the eldest son shall succeed to the property on the death of the parent. For this custom various reasons are adduced, but the most rational seems to be, because the younger son by reason of his tender age is not so capable as the rest of his brethren to help himself.

Gavelkind, which exists principally in Kent, has these distinguishing properties: 1st. The tenant is of age sufficient to aliene his estate by feoffment at the age of fifteen years. 2nd. The estate does not escheat in case of an attainder and execution for felony; though if a tenant in gavelkind being indicted for felony absent himself and be outlawed, after proclamation made for him in the county (and formerly if he had taken sanctuary, or had abjured the realm), his heir shall reap no benefit by the custom, but the lands shall escheat to the lord, and the crown shall have a year and a day and waste in them, if holden of it, in like manner as the common law directs of lands not subject to this custom. 3rd. In most places the tenant had a power of disposing of the lands by will, before the Statute of Wills in the reign of Henry VII. was made. 4th. The lands descend not to the eldest, youngest, or any one son only, but to all the sons together.

FRANKALMOIGN is that kind of tenure by which religious corporations, sole or aggregate, hold lands of the donor, to them and their successors for ever. Formerly the services were such as to pray for the soul of the donor; but, since the Reformation, this kind of service has of course been abolished, and the tenure cannot now be created. In general, such corporations hold the lands discharged of any kind of service and absolutely, though if the service be defined, as to distribute a certain amount of money in alms, or the like, the visitor (that is, either the heir of the donor, or such other person as he appointed visitor, or else the crown) has a remedy to enforce the performance of the service.

COPYHOLDS.—Another, and in the present day a very important tenure, is that of copyhold, or tenure by copy of the court rolls at the will of the lord. Manors are in substance as ancient as the Saxon constitution, though perhaps they differed a little in some immaterial circumstances from those which exist in the present day. They are portions of land originally held by lords or great personages, a certain portion of which they retained for their own use, which were called their demesne lands; another portion of which they granted to their tenants and followers, originally at will only, and afterwards during the observance of certain customs or the performance of certain services; and the residue, consisting of waste and uncultivated lands and commons, served for public roads, and for common of pasture to the lord and his tenant. Manors were formerly called baronies, as they still are lordships; and each lord or baron was empowered to hold a domestic court, called the court baron, for redressing misdemeanors and nuisances within the manor, and for settling disputes of property among the tenants. This court is an inseparable attendant of every manor; and if the number of suitors should so fail as not to leave sufficient to make a jury or homage, that is, two tenants at least, the manor itself was lost. But this is now altered, as we shall presently see, by the recent act for the enfranchisement of copyholds. Formerly, manors within manors were granted; but this subinfeudation was put a stop to by several statutes besides Magna Charta; so that all manors existing at this day must have existed as early as the reign of Edward I.

In different manors, the customs or conditions of tenure, as they may be termed, differ; and so do the durations of holding. As before observed, originally the tenure was purely at the will of the lord; but, step by step, it has, according to the degree of vigilance with which the lords have preserved their original rights, crept into an inheritable right, or at least a right for life. In some manors, where the custom hath been to permit the heir to succeed the ancestor in his tenure, the estates are copyholds of inheritance; in others, copyholds for life: for the custom of the manor has in both cases so far superseded the will of the lord, that, provided the services are performed as stipulated for by fealty, he cannot, in the first instance, refuse to admit the heir of the tenant upon his death; nor in the second can he remove his present tenant so long as he lives, though nominally holding by the precarious tenure of the lord's will.

As soon as the death of a copyhold tenant is known to the homage, it should be presented at the next general court, and three several proclamations should be made at three successive general courts for the heir or other person claiming title to the land whereof such copyholder died seised to come in and be admitted. Proclamation is said to be unnecessary where the heir appears in court, either personally or by attorney; but until such presentment and proclamations, the heir, though of full age, is not bound to come into court to be admitted. If, after the third proclamation, no such person claims to be admitted, a precept may be issued by the lord or steward to the bailiff of the manor, to seize the lands into the lord's hands for want of a tenant; but the seizure must be quousque &c., and not as an absolute forfeiture, unless there be a custom to warrant it.

The admittance is merely as between the lord and the tenant, for the title of the heir to a copyhold is, as against all but the lord, complete without admittance. The ceremony of admittance is said to be for the lord's sake only; therefore in one case the court refused a mandamus to the lord to admit a person who claimed by descent. But a mandamus will be granted if a proper case be laid before the court; and recently the court, as a matter of right, granted a mandamus to admit a person claiming by descent. If the heir be refused admittance, he shall be terre tenant, even though the lord loses his fine; for the lord is only trustee for the heir, and merely the instrument of the custom for the purpose of admittance. So also is the steward; and therefore an admittance by him will be good, though he act by a counterfeited authority, it being sufficient if in appearance he is steward.

The fruits and appendages of copyhold tenure are fealty, services (as well in rents as otherwise), reliefs, and escheats. The two latter belong only to copyholds of inheritance; the former to those for life also. Besides these, copyholds have also heriots, wardships, and finer.

An heriot is the right in the lord to have a render made to him of the best beast or other chattel by the heir upon the death of the ancestral tenant. This may exist in both species of copyhold. But wardship, which is the right of the lord to act as legal guardian, on the death of the natural one, to his infant tenant, and finer, which are due on the death of the tenant, or on any alienation of the land, belong only to copyholds of inheritance. Fines are sometimes arbitrary and at the will of the lord, and sometimes fixed by custom; but even where arbitrary, the courts will take care that no more than reasonable fines shall be demanded; and, unless in peculiar circumstances, no fine on descent or alienation of more than two years improved value is allowed to be taken. In ascertaining the yearly value, the quit rent must be deducted, but not the land tax. The fine may be recovered by the lord in an action of assumpsit; but he has no right to it till the admittance of the tenant. The lord assesses the fine at his peril; and if he assess it at too high a rate, he cannot recover it. But the assessment need not be entered on the court roll.

Where there exist a tenant for life and a remainder-man, the fine on admission is to be apportioned between them, the admission of the former operating as the admission of the latter also. The lord in these cases may make an apportionment, but he cannot remit the whole to the tenant for life, and charge the whole on the remainder-man; though if he remit the tenant for life's portion, that does not discharge the remainder-man as to the residue.

It may be observed, that if a copyhold is forfeited by breach of the custom on which it is held, though it is absolute at law, equity will relieve against it in general, where compensation for the breach can in the view of the court be made; otherwise it will not.

Where the copyholder had such a power within the custom of the manor, and was anxious to leave his copyhold estate to any person other than his heir, it was necessary that he should first surrender it to the use of his will. Afterwards the 55 Geo. III. c. 192 provided, that where there existed any power to devise a copyhold by will, there should be no necessity for a previous formal surrender. Now, however, by the 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 26 (the New Wills Act), all copyholds as well as all other property whatever, real or personal, may be disposed of by will. This power of devising is expressly stated to extend to "all real estate of the nature of customary freehold or tenant right, or customary or copyhold, notwithstanding that the testator may not have surrendered the same to the use of his will, or notwithstanding that (being entitled as heir, devisee, or otherwise to be admitted thereto) he shall not have been admitted thereto, or notwithstanding that the same (in consequence of the want of a custom to devise or surrender to the use of a will or otherwise) could not at law have been disposed of by will if this act had not been made, or notwithstanding that the same (in consequence of there being a custom that a will or a surrender to the use of a will should continue in force for a limited time only, or any other special custom) could not have been disposed of by will if this act had not been made."

Tenure in ancient demesne is only a more exalted species of copyhold tenure. Ancient demesne consists of those lands which were formerly the demesne lands of the crown. The tenants of some of these lands continued for a long time pure villeins, and their successors now differ only in a few points from common copyholders. Others were in a great measure enfranchised by the royal favour, being only bound to perform some better sort of villein services, and those certain and determinate, all of which are now changed into pecuniary rents. These tenants had many immunities and privileges granted to them; as, to try the right of their property in a peculiar court of their own, called a court of ancient demesne, by a peculiar process denominated a writ of right close; not to pay toll or taxes; not to contribute to the expences of knights of the shire; not to be put on juries; and the like. These tenants, therefore, though their tenures be properly copyhold, yet have an interest equivalent to a freehold. Lands holden by this tenure however, while they differ from the common copyholds principally in the privileges before mentioned, are distinguished from freeholds by one special mark of villeinage, viz. that they cannot be conveyed by feoffment or the like, but must pass by surrender to the lord or his steward in the manner of common copyholds, yet with this distinction, that in the surrender it is said, "to hold according to the custom of the manor," not "to hold according to the will of the lord."

Commutation of Manorial Rights, and Enfranchisement of Copyholds.—With a view to the improvement of this kind of tenure, and also to the gradual abolition of it, an act has been passed, (4 & 5 Vict. c. 35,) for effecting a commutation of the rents, fines, and heriots payable to the lords of manors, and of the lords' rights in timber, in respect of lands of copyhold and customary tenure, and other lands subject to such payments, and for facilitating the voluntary enfranchisement of such lands. The plan is similar to that adopted for the commutation of tithes; and the Tithe Commissioners are constituted a board, under the title of "The Copyhold Commissioners" for carrying the act into execution.

The commutation for such manorial rights may be the payment of an annual sum by way of rent-charge and a small fixed fine (not exceeding 5s.) upon death or alienation; or it may be the payment of a fine only on death or alienation, or at fixed periods; such rent-charge, or such commutation fine, when exceeding 20s. to be valued and variable according to the price of corn, in like manner as is provided with regard to the tithe-commutation rent-charge.

The commutation may be effected either by general agreements between the lord and three-fourths of the tenants, which will then extend to all the tenants of the manor; or by separate agreements between the lord and any one or more of the tenants, which only bind the parties to them; but in all cases to be confirmed by the commissioners. The former may extend not only to the rights above-mentioned, but also to the lord's rights in mines and minerals, if expressly agreed on; and the latter may embrace the same, and also any other of the lord's rights affecting the lands. The agreement, of whichever nature, may determine the entire rent-charge, and also the apportionment for each tenant; or it may leave either or both to be fixed by valuers, subject to confirmation by the commissioners.

And from the 1st of January next following the confirmation of the schedule of apportionment by the commissioners, the lands are to be absolutely discharged from the payment of all the lord's rents, fines, and heriots, and from the lord's rights in timber, and from any other right which may be the subject of such commutation. They will continue to be held by copy of court-roll or by custom, and to be conveyed by surrender or admittance or otherwise as heretofore; but with respect to descent, dower, and curtesy, they will become subject to the same laws as lands held in fee and common socage, saving only the custom of gavelkind in the county of Kent.

The rent-charge, when in arrear for twenty-one days, may be recovered by distress and entry, and the other means provided for recovery of tithe-commutation rent-charge; and any tenant paying it is entitled to deduct the amount from his rent.

The commutation fine is recoverable in the same manner as fines upon death or alienation are now by law recoverable.

Enfranchisements.—By the same act, provision is made for enabling lords and tenants of manors to effect either general or partial enfranchisements of their lands. Any lord of a manor (whatever be his estate or interest) is empowered, with the consent of the commissioners, to enfranchise all or any of the lands of his manor in consideration of such sum or sums of money as shall be agreed on by the tenant, and which may be made payable either forthwith or at a future time.

Where all the tenants of a manor, or any twelve of them, shall agree at the same time with the lord for such enfranchisement, it may be effected by a schedule of apportionment either specifically agreed upon between them, or prepared by the steward of the manor, and in either case afterwards confirmed by the commissioners. Such schedule must state the sums to be paid for enfranchisement by the several tenants, or charged on their respective lands, the period for the payment of the principal money respectively, and for the commencement of interest, and also the compensation to be paid to the steward and other officers of the manor for the loss they may sustain by such enfranchisement. And all the provisions of the act for carrying into effect a commutation apportionment are extended, so far as applicable, to the case of an enfranchisement, save that the commissioners shall not make any alteration therein without the consent of the parties interested. But when the estate of any party is less than an estate in fee simple, or corresponding copyhold or customary estate, notice is to be given to the person entitled to the next estate of inheritance in remainder or reversion.

Where such agreement for an enfranchisement is not entered into with all the tenants of a manor, or their number shall be less than twelve, or whatever be their number, if the parties think fit, an enfranchisement may be effected, with the consent of the commissioners, by such a conveyance, deed, or assurance as would or might be adopted if the lord were seised of the manor for an absolute estate of inheritance in fee simple in possession.

And from the date of the final confirmation by the commissioners of the apportionment or conveyance by which such enfranchisement is effected, the several lands shall stand charged with the respective sums mentioned therein, with lawful interest for the same; and, until payment, the person for the time being seised of the manor shall be deemed to stand seised of the said lands as mortgagee in fee thereof, for the benefit of the lord as to the sums payable to him, and of the steward or other officers as to the sums payable to him or them; and the same shall be a first charge on the lands, and have priority over all incumbrances whatsoever, tithe rent-charge only excepted.

And after enfranchisement the lands will become in all respects of freehold tenure, subject to the payment of the enfranchisement consideration; but the tenant is not therefore to be deprived of any commonable right to which he was previously entitled. Nor is such conversion into freehold to affect any mortgage (except as aforesaid), or to defeat the beneficial limitations of any will or settlement theretofore executed, or alter the descent or distribution of any estate or interest in land on the decease of any tenant or person entitled thereto in possession or remainder at the time of such enfranchisement.

After the 31st December, 1841, customary courts may be holden by the lord of a manor, his steward, or the deputy, though there be no tenants, or none present. But no proclamation made at any such court shall affect the estate or interest of any person not present, unless notice be duly served on him within one month afterwards. Lords of manors may make grants of lands, and admit tenants, without holding a court; and presentment by the homage shall be no longer essential to an admission. But every surrender to the lord, and will delivered, either in or out of court, and every grant and admission, shall be entered on the court rolls.

By the custom of some manors tenants could not aliene their tenements otherwise than by entreties; but any tenant may now, by licence from the lord (which licence he is hereby empowered to give), dispose of his ancient tenements, or any part thereof by devise, sale, exchange, or mortgage, in such parcels as he may think proper, subject to the payment of such portion of the lord's rent as shall be apportioned thereon by the lord or his steward.

CHAPTER IV.

Of Freehold Estates of Inheritance.

THE next subject for our inquiry is the nature and properties of estates. An estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, signifies the interest which the person possessed has therein.¹ Sometimes the term is used merely as a local description, as "all my estate at A.;" but the above is the legal signification of the word.

This subject may be considered under the three following views:—1st, The quantity of interest; 2dly, The time of enjoyment; 3dly, The number and connexion of the tenants or owners of the estate.

With regard to the quantity of interest, estates may be divided into—1. Estates of freehold; and 2. Estates less than freehold.

A freehold is the possession of the soil by a freeman; which possession could only be given at common law by livery of seisin, that is, a formal delivery of possession on the land itself, and which was effected by delivery of a clod of earth, a stick, the key of the outer door, or the like. The want of it, however, was sometimes relieved in equity.² But now, by 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, all corporeal tenements and hereditaments, as regards the conveyance of the immediate freehold, lie in grant as well as in livery.

Freeholds may be either freeholds of inheritance or freeholds not of inheritance.² The former, again, are divided into inheritances absolute, or fee simple, and inheritances limited, one species of which is usually called fee-tail.

I. AN ESTATE IN FEE SIMPLE, or IN FEE, is where the person holding it has the absolute dominion over the property, so that he may do just what he pleases with it. Every other estate may be created out of it, and all others merge in it (excepting estates tail) when the owner of the fee simple becomes entitled to them.

Its attributes are—1. An unlimited power of alienation by deed or will; 2. An uncontrollable power of committing waste; 3. It is liable, into whosoever hands the estate may come, to dower, curtesy, docketed judgments, enrolled annuities charged on the land, debts of a bankrupt owner, crown debts of record. In the hands of the heir it was always liable to specialty debts; and now, by the recent act, 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 104 it is rendered liable to simple contract debts also, though it is first to pay specialty debts. In the hands of a purchaser with notice, it is liable to unenrolled annuities charged on land, simple contract crown debts, and undocketed judgments. 4. Another attribute of it is, descent to a man's heirs general. 5. It is liable to escheat and forfeiture—for treason, to the crown absolutely; for murder, to the crown for a year and a day, without restriction as to waste, then to the lord of the manor absolutely; and for other felonies, to the crown for a year and a day, without restriction as to waste, and then the rents and profits go to the lord of the manor for the felon's life, the legal estate being still in the felon.

¹ See Randall v. Tuchin, 6 Taunt. 410; Bridgwater v. Bolton, 1 Salk. 236. It is a word of importance.

² See 1 Mad. Cha. 40; 1 Fonbl. Eq. 37, note.

Fee simples are created by deed or will. In a deed, the word "heirs" is absolutely necessary, except in the case of corporations, when the word "successors" is equivalent. In wills the same strictness is not required; for, even before the passing of the recent Wills Act, 1 Vict. c. 27, where words of perpetuity were used a fee would pass, though the legal word of inheritance, "heirs," was omitted. And now by this act it is provided, that a devise without any limitation shall pass the fee, unless a contrary intention appear. This act, however, does not extend to wills made before the 1st January, 1838.

A fee passes to a corporation aggregate without the word "successors;" also to a dean and chapter; but not to a corporation sole, as a bishop, parson, &c., except to the crown, which in this respect is like a corporation aggregate.

A rent granted by one coparcener to her companion for equality of partition, will pass an estate in fee without the word "heirs."

11. LIMITED FEES are of two sorts:—1. Base or qualified fees; and, 2. Fees conditional, as they were called at common law, and afterwards fees tail by the statute De donis, 13 Edw. I. c. 1.

1. BASE OR QUALIFIED FEES are such as have a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to them is at an end: as, if lands are given "to A and his heirs, tenants of the manor of Dale"; here, whenever the heirs of A cease to be tenants of the manor of Dale, the estate is determined. This estate is a fee, because it may possibly descend to a man and his heirs for ever; but as the purity of the donation is qualified or debased by the duration being left dependent on a collateral circumstance, it is called a qualified or base fee.

A base fee has all the incidents of a fee simple except the first, viz., an unlimited power of alienation. Unlike the conditional fee, or fee tail, it merged in the immediate reversion or remainder whenever the two estates became united in the same person; but this is now altered by the recent act 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, § 39, and the base fee is thereby enlarged.

2. ESTATES IN FEE TAIL.—When an estate is limited to a person and his or her descendants the heirs of the grantee's body, it is called an estate tail, or fee tail; as, to a man "and the heirs of his body," to a woman "and the heirs of her body," to a man and woman "and the heirs of their bodies." If it be to the heirs of his, her, or their bodies generally, it is called tail general, as any descendant (whether male or female) may inherit. If "to Thomas and the heirs of his body by his wife Jane," or "Jane &c. by her husband Thomas," or "to Thomas and Jane and the heirs of their bodies," it is tail special, so that only the children of Jane's body begotten by Thomas (be they male or female) can inherit. If "to the heirs male of the body &c." it is tail male, so that in default of male issue, the female cannot take. If "to the heirs female of the body &c.," tail female, so that the heirs male cannot take if there are no female heirs. Half blood is no impediment in the descent of estates tail.

Where an estate is given to a brother and sister, or to others who may not intermarry, "and the heirs of their bodies," the first takers have a joint estate for life, with several inheritances in tail, as tenants in common, to their issue.

The words "heirs of the body" are absolutely necessary to create an estate tail in a deed.

Of barring Entails.—Before the statute De donis conditionalibus, 13 Edw. I. c. 1, if lands and tenements were given to a man "and the heirs of his body," the estate was considered a fee simple conditional, which could not be absolutely aliened until the performance of the implied condition, namely, that a child should be born to the donee. But as, when any condition is performed, it is thenceforth considered entirely gone, and the thing to which it was before annexed becomes absolute and wholly unconditional; so, as soon as the grantee had any issue born, his estate was supposed to become absolute, at least for these three purposes: 1. To enable the tenant to aliene the land, and thereby bar, not only his own issue, but also the donor and his heirs of their interest in the reversion; 2. To subject him to forfeit it for treason, which he could not do, till issue born, longer than for his own life; and 3. To empower him to charge the land with rents, commons, and certain other incumbrances, so as to bind the issue. If the tenant, however, did not in fact aliene the land, the course of descent was not altered by this performance of the condition. But this notion, that it became absolutely the property of the donee on the birth of issue, was put an end to by the above-mentioned statute, which declared, that although the estate should descend to the issue, if there were any, according to the tenor of the grant or deed, yet if there were none, that it should revert to the donor.

Upon the construction of this act the judges determined, that the donee had no longer a conditional fee simple, which might be rendered absolute by birth of issue; but they divided the estate into two parts, leaving in the donee a new kind of particular estate, which they denominated a fee-tail, and vesting in the donor the ultimate fee simple of the land, expectant on the failure of issue: which expectant estate is now termed a reversion.

However, the interest both of the issue in tail and of the donor himself was at length, in the reign of Edward IV., held capable of being barred by a common recovery suffered by the tenant in possession; and afterwards, by the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 36, a fine duly levied by tenant in tail was declared to be a complete bar to him and his heirs and all other persons claiming under such entail. Yet, in order to preserve the property of the crown from any danger of infringement, all estates tail created by the crown, and of which the crown has the reversion, are excepted by this statute; and the same exception is made with regard to common recoveries by the 34 & 35 Hen VIII. c. 29.

Next, by the 33 Hen. VIII. c. 32, all estates tail are rendered liable to be charged for payment of debts due to the crown by record or special contract; as since, by the bankrupt laws, they have been made subject to be sold for the debts contracted by a bankrupt. And lastly, by the construction of the 43 Eliz. c. 4, an appointment by tenant in tail of the lands entailed to a charitable use is held good without fine or recovery.

Estates tail, being thus by degrees unfettered, were at length reduced to almost the same state, even before issue born, as conditional fees were in at the common law after the condition was performed by the birth of issue. They became extendible into a fee simple, and capable of alienation, in particular cases and modes. Where the tenant in tail had also the immediate fee in expectancy, he might acquire the absolute ownership by levying a fine, whether his estate tail was immediate or expectant on a preceding life or other partial estate. Where, however, the property was limited over to another on failure of the lineal heirs in the entail, then the tenant in tail, in order to acquire the absolute fee, was obliged to resort to a common recovery; and this was practicable only where either he himself was entitled to the possession, or he could obtain the concurrence of the immediate tenant of the freehold, as in the ordinary instance of a son tenant in tail expectant upon the death of his father having a preceding life estate.

Fines and recoveries, however, are now abolished, and more simple modes of effecting the objects they were intended to accomplish are provided by the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74.

By this act, an actual tenant in tail, whether in possession, remainder, contingency, or otherwise, may, by a deed enrolled within six months, make an absolute disposition either of the fee simple or of any less estate, which shall be effectual against all persons claiming by force of any estate tail vested in or claimed by him at the time of his making such disposition, and also against all persons whose estates are to take effect after the determination or in defeasance of such estate tail; saving, however, the rights of persons in respect of estates prior to the estate tail. But such power of disposition is not to extend to tenants of estates tail who by the 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. or any other act are restrained from barring their estates tail, nor to tenants in tail after possibility of issue extinct. Nor is it to be exercised by women tenants in tail ex provisione viri, under the 11 Hen. VII. c. 20, but with the assent required by that act. Nor are persons enabled to dispose of lands entailed in respect of any expectant interest as issue inheritable to an estate tail therein.

Tenants in tail may in like manner make a disposition by way of mortgage, or for any other limited purpose.

But as, before this act, tenant in tail expectant on an estate of freehold could only have barred his own issue by a fine, unless he obtained the concurrence of the tenant of the immediate freehold in suffering a recovery, so now his power is equally limited by the present act, unless he obtain the concurrence of the tenant of the immediate freehold, who is here styled the Protector of the Settlement; and the act contains a variety of provisions to explain who shall be such protector in cases where it might be otherwise doubtful. The protector may give consent by the same deed by which the estate tail is disposed of, or by a separate deed; but the consent deed must be enrolled at or before the time of enrolling the assurance.

By the law as it previously stood, where a tenant in tail who had also the immediate reversion, acquired a base fee, the base fee merged in the reversion. This led to many very inconvenient results, especially where the reversion had been encumbered by the ancestor. Now, however, by § 39 of this act, the base fee is thereby enlarged.

¹ He may therefore grant leases for any term, and untrammelled by any condition.

Every disposition by tenant in tail under this act must be evidenced by deed; he cannot bind the entail by will, nor even by deed if resting only in contract. And all assurances by him (except leases not exceeding twenty-one years at rack rent) must be enrolled within six months.

Courts of equity are excluded from giving effect to dispositions by tenants in tail, or consents of protectors of settlement, which would not be effectual in courts of law.

The preceding clauses apply also to copyholds, so far as circumstances and the different tenures will admit, except as they are altered by the subsequent clauses, and except that the tenant in tail of a legal estate in copyholds shall convey by surrender, and of an equitable estate by surrender or deed. Equitable tenants in tail of copyholds may dispose of such lands as if they were of freehold tenure; and no enrolment is in such case necessary.

A married woman, with the concurrence of her husband, may convey as a feme sole. The power of disposition thus given to her, however, is not to interfere with any power which, independently of this act, may be vested in or limited or reserved to her. Every deed executed by her under this act (except as protector) is to be acknowledged by her before one of the judges, or a master in chancery, or two commissioners appointed under the provisions of the act; and she must be examined to see if she freely and voluntarily consent before she is permitted to acknowledge the deed.

CHAPTER V.

Of Freehold Estates not of Inheritance.

NEXT to freeholds of inheritance are ranked freeholds not of inheritance.

An estate for life, whether for one's own life, or for the life of another, is an estate of freehold, though not of inheritance. It is an estate, in possession, remainder, or reversion, in either corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, which is held for life, or for some uncertain interest,¹ created by will, or by some mode of conveyance capable of transferring the freehold, which may last during the life of the devisee or grantee, or during the life or lives of some other person.

A freehold, in the eye of the law, is always a greater interest than a term of years, which is only a chattel interest. Thus, an estate for life, though that life may not endure two days, is more valuable in the eye of the law than an estate for 1000 years; and consequently, as the lesser estate always merges in the greater, if a term of 1000 years and an estate for life meet in the same person, the term merges in the freehold, unless some other estate intervene.

¹ There are interests in land which, although of uncertain duration, are nevertheless chattels, such as estates by statute merchant, statute staple, and elegit. The possessors are said to hold the land as freehold, but their interest is really a chattel only.

A freehold interest may be had in offices relating to land, or exercisable within particular districts, as the office of marshal of England, chamberlain of the exchequer, forester, &c.

Estates of freehold not of inheritance may be divided into—

1. Estate of tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct.
2. Estate for life (eo nomine)
3. Estate pur autre vie.
4. Estate of dower.
5. Estate of jointure.
6. Estate by curtesy.
7. Estate by special occupancy.

1. TENANT IN TAIL AFTER POSSIBILITY OF ISSUE EXTINGUISHED.—This estate arises when lands are limited in tail special, and one of the parties from whom the issue is to proceed dies, or, having left issue, that issue becomes extinct; the survivor is entitled to the lands &c. for his or her life, and is then called tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct. This is an estate arising by operation of law, and not from contract. It can only be created by the death of the party from whose body the issue was to spring; and therefore a divorce will not be sufficient to create it. It may exist in remainder.

So far as respects alienation, it resembles a tenancy for life; but he has several privileges above tenant for life; as, for instance, he is not punishable for waste. These privileges are in respect of the privacy of estate, and the inheritance once in him; and therefore if he assign, the assignee is mere tenant pur autre vie.

Coke mentions four circumstances in which it resembles a common life estate: 1. Liability to forfeiture if the tenant attempt to alienate the estate in fee. 2. It will merge in the fee simple or fee tail. 3. The reversioner or remainder-man shall be received upon his or her default. 4. An exchange with a mere tenant for life, or for any estate of equal value, is good.

2. ESTATE FOR LIFE.—By the words an estate for life is generally understood an estate for one's own life. This is an estate of freehold, and generally arises out of contract; as where a lease is made to a man, to hold for his own or any other person or persons' life or lives. That of which we now treat is for a man's own life; and this estate could formerly have been created or transferred only by livery of seisin, lease and release, bargain and sale enrolled, or surrender, but it may now be made by deed of grant under 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106. It may be created, not only by express words, but also by a general grant, without defining or limiting any specific estate; as if one grants to A the manor of D, this makes him tenant for life. And a grant "for life" generally, without saying whose life, is, if the grantor has power to grant so much, generally construed to mean the grantee's life.

Coke mentions several estates of uncertain duration, the tenants of which may, in pleading, allege that they are seised for their lives, viz. "An estate to a woman so long as she continues sole," or "during her widowhood," or "so long as she conducts herself properly," or "to a man and woman during coverture," or "so long as grantee shall dwell in such a place," or "so long as grantee pay 100*l.* per annum," or "till grantee be promoted to a benefice," or "to A, till B make T. S. bailiff of his manor."

An estate for life is forfeited by any act displacing or divesting the remainders or reversions; as if tenant for life attempt to alienate for another's life, in tail, or in fee, his own estate is forfeited to the remainder-man or reversioner. But lease and release, bargain and sale enrolled, and covenant to stand seised, being innocent conveyances, work no forfeiture; for even though professing to pass the fee, they pass no more than the releasor, bargainor, or covenantor may lawfully part with.

Tenant for life may cut down underwood, or work open mines, and sink new shafts to pursue open veins. But he may not work open mines if they were illegally opened by a preceding tenant in tail; and it is waste to open a new mine. He may fell timber for repairs, but not otherwise; and if he sell timber, though he apply the money in repairs, it is waste. He is entitled to estovers, house, plough, and hay bote without assignment, and is bound to repair buildings, banks, sea and river walls. It is waste to convert one species of land into another, as pasture into arable, or wood into meadow; and it is equally waste to cut down decaying timber as any other.

The action for waste has been superseded by an action on the case in the nature of waste, to be brought by any one in remainder or reversion, either for years, life, or inheritance.

Chancery will grant an injunction to stay waste, on bill filed by tenant for life in remainder. If tenant for life cut timber, the first person having an estate in inheritance may bring an action of trover. Where, however, it is manifestly proper, the court of chancery will order timber to be felled for the benefit of the estate. And the court of chancery will interfere to prevent collusion between tenant for life and a remote remainder-man, to the injury of unborn children; and also if the tenant for life has the next vested estate of inheritance.

Although generally a tenant for life is liable for waste committed by him, yet sometimes he is, by the deed &c. which creates his estate, unimpeachable for waste. When such is the case, he may open mines, and fell timber (except ornamental); is entitled to timber blown down on the estate; and he may grant leases out of his own interest without impeachment of waste. But he may not, nor may his lessee, maliciously waste the estate, by pulling down houses &c.; if they do, an injunction will be granted, and they are bound to repair.

The tenant for life's executor, and his under-tenants, are entitled to the emblements, or profits of the growing crop, in all cases where the estate determines by the act of God; but it is otherwise if by his own act, in which case it is doubtful whether even the under-tenants are entitled to emblements.

Emblements are corn, peas, beans, tares, hemp, flax, and annual roots, as parsnips, carrots, and turnips; and if the lessee for life of a hop ground die in August before severance of the hops, the executor shall have them, though on ancient roots; for all these are produced by great manurance and industry. But all other roots and trees not annuals; fruit on the trees, though ripe; and grass growing, though ready to be cut into hay, and improved by manure and the labour and industry of the occupier by trenching, or sowing hay seed, are not emblements, but belong to the remainder-man or heir.

With respect to who is entitled to emblements, Lord Ellenborough observed, in 8 East. 343, that the distinction between the heir and devisee in this respect is capricious enough. In the testator himself, the standing corn, though part of the realty, subsists for some purposes as a chattel interest, which goes on his death to his executor, as against the heir; though as against the executors, it goes to the devisee of the land, who is in the place of the heir, unless otherwise directed. This is founded upon a presumed intention of the deviser in favour of the devisee. But this again may be rebutted by words which show an intent that the executor shall have it. A devise to the executor of all the testator's stock on the farm entitles him to the crops in opposition to the devisee of the estate. Every one who has an uncertain estate or interest, if his estate determine by the act of God before severance of the corn, shall have the emblements, or they go to his executors or administrator: as if a tenant for life sow the land and die before severance, or if he be tenant pur autre vie and cestuique vie die, or tenant for years if he so long live, or the lessee of tenant for life, or a lessee strictly at will; or if a tenant by statute merchant &c. sow, and his debt be satisfied by the casual profits before severance. However, a lessee of tenant for life is bound to take notice of the time of the death of his lessor; and if, in ignorance of it, he afterwards sow corn, he is not entitled to the produce.

It has been held, that if a devise be to A for life, remainder to B, and before severance A dies, B shall have them; and that if a devise be to A for life, who dies before severance, he in reversion shall have them; but the contrary is now established, and the executor of the tenant for life shall have them, it being for the benefit of the kingdom, which is interested in the continual produce of corn.

If the particular estate determine by the act of another, as if a lessee at will sow the land, and before severance the lessor determine his will, the lessee shall have the emblements.

But if a person has a certain interest, and knows the determination of it, he shall not have the emblements at the end of his term, unless he can establish a right to an away-going crop, which sometimes exists by custom or local usage; as if lessee for years sow the land, and before the corn be severed his term end, the lessor or he in reversion shall have the corn; and if an outgoing tenant sow corn, even under a bond fide supposition that he is entitled to an away-going crop, when he is not so, and after the expiration of his tenancy cut and carry away the corn, the landlord may support trover for the same. So if a person determine his estate by his own act, he shall not have the emblements; as if lessee at will sow, and afterwards determine the will before severance. So if an estate determine by forfeiture for condition broken.

The statute 28 Hen. VIII. c. 11 enables the incumbent of a parish to bequeath by will the corn and grain growing upon the glebe land manured and sown at his own cost. But a person who resigns his living is not entitled to emblements.¹

¹ Emblements are deemed personal property, and pass as such to the executor or administrator of the occupier (whether owner in fee, for life, or for

Apportionment of Rent.—At common law, if tenant in fee died after sunset and before midnight of the last day when the rent became due, it went to the heir, and not to the executor, for the rent is not due till the last instant of the day.¹ This gave to the lessees of a tenant for life a most unreasonable advantage; for, at the death of their lessors, they might, if they pleased, quit the premises, and pay no rent to any body for the occupation of the land from the last quarter-day. But the 11 Geo. II. c. 19, § 15, after reciting that “where lessor or landlord, having only an estate for life in the lands, tenements, or hereditaments demised, happens to die before or on the day on which any rent is reserved or made payable, such rent, or any part thereof, is not by law recoverable by the executors or administrators of such lessor or landlord, nor is the person in reversion entitled thereto any other than for the use and occupation of such lands, tenements, or hereditaments from the death of the tenant for life, of which advantage hath been often taken by the under-tenants, who thereby avoid paying anything for the same,” for remedy thereof, enacts, “That where any tenant for life shall happen to die before or on the day on which any rent is reserved or made payable upon any demise or lease of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments which determined on the death of such tenant for life, the executors or administrators of such tenant for life shall and may, in an action on the case, recover of and from such under-tenant or under-tenants of such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, if such tenant for life die on the day on which the same was made payable, the whole, or if before such day, then a proportion of such rent, according to the time such tenant for life lived of the last year or quarter of a year, or other time in which the said rent was growing due as aforesaid, making all just allowances, or a proportionable part thereof respectively.”

years), if he die before he has actually cut and reaped or gathered the same; and this although, being affixed to the soil, for some purposes they may be considered, whilst growing, as part of the realty.

At common law, fructus industriales, as growing corn and other annual produce, which would go to the executor upon death, may be taken in execution. The appraisement and sale thereof are regulated by statute. And, by statute, growing crops may be taken as a distress, and sold when ripe. But a crop of natural grass, growing at the time of the death of a tenant for life, does not belong to his executor, but goes to the remainder-man.

At one time it was held that a crop of growing turnips, potatoes, or corn, partook so much of the real property where they were growing and continuing to improve, that a sale of them was in effect a sale of an interest in or concerning land, and that unless the contract of sale were in writing and signed by the vendor, it was void under the Statute against Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, s. 4. Afterwards a distinction was taken as to the degree of maturity, and the time of the year when the sale took place; and if a crop of potatoes were sold in November, when they had done growing, the land was considered merely as a warehouse, and the sale is in effect only of personalty. But finally another and more sensible principle was established, and which still prevails, that when the growing crop is of such a nature as that it would constitute emblements going to an executor in case of death, the same, in whatever state of maturity it may be, is to be considered as goods, and not an interest in land; though it might be otherwise in the case of a sale of a growing crop of natural grass. A sale of growing underwood, to be cut by the purchaser, has been considered a sale of an interest in land, though after the wood or tree had been cut, it would be otherwise; but now a sale of such underwood or of growing trees would be considered as merely a sale of goods. It has been observed, that the apparent desire of the courts rather to escape from the rule in Crosby v. Wadsworth respecting the sale of a growing crop of meadow grass, without over-ruling that case, renders it difficult to apply the law to individual cases.—1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 91—94.

¹ See post, Division of Time, under title TERMS OF YEARS.

But where the mischief recited in this act did not apply, and the lease did not determine on the death of the tenant for life, the case was not affected by it; and therefore if a tenant for life with a leasing power demised the premises pursuant to such power, and died before the rent became due, as the rent and the means of recovering it went to the remainder-man or reversioner,² and therefore would not be lost, the case was considered as not within the act, and the executors of the tenant for life were not entitled to any proportion of the accruing rent. So if a tenant pur autre vie leased and the cestui que vie died, the lessee was not compellable to pay any rent from the last day of payment before the death of the cestui que vie. But now, by the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 22, which recites that doubts have been entertained whether the provisions of the 11 Geo. II. c. 19 apply to every case in which the interests of persons determine on the death of the person by whom such interests have been created and on the death of any life or lives for which such person was entitled to the lands demised, although every such case is within the mischief intended to have been remedied by the said act; and that by law, rents, annuities, and other payments due at fixed or stated periods are not apportionable (unless express provision be made for that purpose), it is enacted, "That rents reserved and made payable on any demise or lease of lands, tenements, or hereditaments which have been or shall be made, and which leases or demises determined or shall determine on the death of the person making the same (although such person was not strictly tenant for life thereof), or on the death of the life or lives for which such person was entitled to such hereditaments, shall, so far as respects the rents reserved by such leases, and the recovery of a proportion thereof by the person granting the same, his executors or administrators, be considered as within the provisions of the said act." And, by sect. 2, "all rents service reserved on any lease by a tenant in fee or for any life interest, or by a lease granted under any power (and which leases shall have been granted after the passing of this act), and all rents-charge and other rents, annuities, pensions, dividends, moduses, compositions, and all other payments of every description, in the United Kingdom, made payable or coming due at fixed periods under any instrument executed after the passing of this act, or, being a will or testamentary instrument, that shall come into operation after the passing of this act, shall be apportioned in such manner that on the death of any person interested in such rents, annuities, pensions, dividends, moduses, compositions, or other payments, or in the estate, fund, office, or benefice from or in respect of which the same shall be issuing or derived, or on the determination by any other means whatsoever of the interest of any such person, he or she, and his or her executors, administrators, or assigns, shall be entitled to a proportion of such rents &c. according to the time which shall have elapsed from the commencement or last period of payment thereof respectively (as the case may be), including the day of the death of such person, or of the determination of his or her interest, all just allowances and deductions in respect of charges on such rents &c. being made; and that every such person, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall have such and the same remedies at law and in equity for recovering such apportiontioned parts of the said rents &c., when the entire portion of which such apportioned parts shall form part shall become due and payable, and not before, as they would have had for recovering and obtaining such entire rents &c. if entitled thereto, but so that persons liable to pay rents reserved by any lease or demise, and the lands, tenements, and hereditaments comprised therein, shall not be resorted to for such apportioned parts specifically as aforesaid, but the entire rents of which such portions shall form a part shall be received and recovered by the persons who if this act had not passed would have been entitled to such entire rents; and such portions shall be recoverable from such persons by the parties entitled to the same under this act in any action or suit at law or in equity."

² See 3 Maule & Selw. 182.

But, by § 3, the provisions herein contained shall not apply to any case in which it shall be expressly stipulated that no apportionment shall take place, nor to annual sums made payable in policies of assurance of any description.

3. ESTATE PUR AUTRE VIE.—An estate pur autre vie is the lowest estate of freehold. It is an estate for another's life, and is not regarded as so beneficial an estate as for one's own life.

If A have an estate for his own life, with remainder to B for the life of B, B can take a surrender from A; the effect of which will be, that A's estate will merge in B's, and B's will be accelerated into possession.

This estate cannot commence in futuro. Being freehold, it must be created by some mode of conveyance to pass a freehold in possession. It may be surrendered to the reversioner or remainder-man; and, though freehold, it may be limited to a man and his executors and administrators as well as to his heirs; and in such case his successors take as special occupants, and not by descent; which mode of limitation is frequently preferable, as it may save the estate from a minority.

It may be limited over by way of remainder, and, in effect, entailed by way of trust, or by a devise to uses on trust, &c. But those who have interests in the nature of estates tail may bar their issue and remainders by any mode of alienation, as by lease and release, surrender, &c., or even by marriage articles in equity. The remainder-man, if not barred, takes as special occupant. Moreover, estates pur autre vie may be limited by way of executory devise.

The tenant pur autre vie is entitled to emblements on the death of cestui que vie. But out of this species of estate neither curtesy nor dower can arise. As to waste, the same principles apply as in the case of tenant for life, already shown.

4, 5. DOWER AND JOINTURE.—We have already discussed the nature of estates in dower and in jointure.¹

6. ESTATE BY CURTESY.—Curtesy is an estate for life given by law to the husband in all the lands and tenements of inheritance of which the wife was solely seised, or which were left in trust for her, and to which the issue of the marriage might have inherited.

It is a freehold estate, and may be assigned, or surrendered to the heir or reversioner. There is, however, no estate by curtesy of a remainder or reversion on a freehold, nor of a freehold in possession not of in- heritance. To give title to curtesy, the wife must be solely seised, in fee simple or fee tail; the issue must be born alive, and must be such as might by possibility have inherited. It is immaterial when the issue was born, whether before or after the lands vested in the wife, or whether then alive or dead. The wife must have been seised in lam, a seisin in deed not being sufficient. The possession of a tenant for years is the possession of the wife.

¹ See ante, tit HUSBAND AND WIFE, p. 318, 332.

Of advowsons, rents, &c. of which actual seisin cannot be had, there is curtesy, though the wife died before avoidance or receipt.

By gavelkind, the husband has a moiety only as long as he remains unmarried, whether he has issue or not.

A tenant by curtesy is subject to an action for waste, and to forfeiture. If seised of the freehold in possession, his concurrence was necessary to make a tenant to the præcipe, being, like a tenant in dower, omitted in the 14 Geo. II. c. 20. This estate is not forfeited by adultery. 1 Lloyd & G. 326.

7. ESTATE BY SPECIAL OCCUPANCY.—This arises out of an estate pur autre vie. By the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3), an estate pur autre vie is devisable, and the party to whom it comes after the death of the first tenant is termed the special occupant. If there is no devise, and it comes to the heir as special occupant, it is chargeable in his hands as assets by descent. If there be no other special occupant, it shall go to the executors or administrators of the party, and be assets in their hands. By 14 Geo. II. c. 20, § 9, if there be no devise nor special occupant, it shall be applied and distributed in the same manner as the personal estate of the intestate.

If the executor die intestate, the estate goes to his executor, and not to the administrator de bonis non.

CHAPTER VI.

Of Estates less than Freehold.

THERE are several leading distinctions between freehold estates or interests and those which are less than freehold. The former are termed real estates, the latter personal.

A freehold interest must formerly have been created either by feoffment and livery (applicable only to corporeal property), or by a deed under seal, operating under the Statute of Uses. It cannot be created by parol, or by an unsealed written instrument;¹ whereas an estate or interest less than freehold (except in an incorporeal hereditament), as a lease or demise even for 1000 years, might, before the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, have been created without deed, and before the Statute of Frauds (which requires a signed instrument when for a term exceeding three years), might have been created even by mere words.

¹ Thus, if a rector grant or demise his tithe by an instrument not under seal, he is still deemed in law the owner and occupier of the tithe, and as such to be rated in respect thereof, because the legal interest in the tithe passes only by grant under seal: whereas if the same instrument had been under seal, the lessee would be the proper person to be rated.—Eagle on Tithes, 19.

Another distinction is, that a freehold cannot commence in futuro by any common law conveyance, as by feoffment and livery (which livery must be given at the time of the feoffment¹); though by a conveyance under the Statute of Uses a freehold may be created to commence in futuro with only an estate for years intervening. But, with respect to chattels real, a lease even for 1000 years may be created to commence in futuro; except where expressly prohibited, as in the case of tenants in tail.

Another rule is, that an estate of freehold cannot be derived from an estate for years. Therefore, where a rent was granted for life out of a long term of years, though it was decided to be a good charge as long as the term lasted, yet the court held it to be only a chattel, and not a freehold.

Another rule is, that no freehold interest in remainder can, by any common law conveyance, be supported by an intervening estate less than freehold.

Again, a freehold interest cannot merge in a chattel interest; though the latter may merge in the former, if both be legal, or both equitable estates, but not otherwise. Consequently, if an estate of freehold for his life vest in a person who is owner of a term of 1000 years, the freehold interest, though substantially of shorter duration, will not merge, but the term will merge in the freehold.

In pleading, the owner of a freehold is said to be seised in his demesne as of freehold &c.; whereas the owner of a term of years is said to be possessed of the tenements &c., or of the interest in a certain term, &c.

Estates less than freehold are of three sorts—1. Estates for years; 2. Estates at will; and 3. Estates by sufferance.

1. ESTATES FOR YEARS.—An estate for years is a contract for the possession of lands or tenements for some determinate period, and it takes place where a man lets them to another for a certain number of years agreed upon, and the lessee enters thereon. If a lease in writing be but for a half or a quarter of a year, the lessee is respected as and is termed lessee for years, a year being the shortest term of which the law takes notice in this case.²

¹ Nevertheless, a lease for lives, to begin from the day of the date thereof, with seisin delivered afterwards, is good, and shall not be said to commence in futuro. So a lessee under a lease for lives commencing in futuro, and who has covenanted to pay rent, will be estopped, whilst he continues in possession, from insisting that, being a lease for lives, it could not commence in futuro, or be granted without livery of seisin, or lease and release, or bargain and sale.

² It may not be improper to make a few observations on the division and calculation of time according to the law of England.

A year consists of 365 days; for though in leap years it consists actually of 366, yet by the stat. 21 Hen. III. the increasing day in leap year and the preceding day are counted one day only.

Before 1752, the year commenced on the 25th March, the Julian calendar being used, and much inaccuracy and inconvenience resulted; which occasioned the introduction of the new style by the 24 Geo. II. c. 23, which enacted, that the 1st of January shall be reckoned the first day of the year; threw out 11 days in that year, from the 2d September to the 14th; and in other respects regulated the future computation of time, with a saving of ancient custom, &c.

Where a statute speaks of a year, it shall be computed to be the whole twelve months according to the calendar, and not twelve lunar months; but if a statute direct a prosecution to be within twelve months, it is too late to proceed after the expiration of twelve lunar months.

Half a year consists of 182 days, for there shall be no regard to a part or a fraction of a day. The time to collate within six months shall be reckoned half a year, or 182 days, and not lunar months. So a quarter of a

Every estate which must expire at a period certain and prefixed, by whatever words created, is a term of years. Therefore, if it is for year consists but of 91 days, for the law does not regard the six hours afterwards. But both half years and quarters are usually divided according to certain feasts or holidays, rather than by a precise division of days, as Lady-day, Midsummer-day, Michaelmas-day, and Christmas, or Old Lady-day (6th April), and Old Michaelmas-day (11th October). In these cases such division of the year by the parties is regarded by the law; and therefore though half a year's notice to quit is necessary to determine a tenancy from year to year, yet a notice served on the 29th September to quit on the 25th March, being half a year's notice according to the above division, is good, though there be only 178 days.

A month, in law, is a lunar month, or 28 days, unless otherwise expressed; therefore, a lease for "twelve months" is only 48 weeks; but if it be for "a twelvemonth," it is for the whole year, or 365 days, it being generally understood that by the space of time called thus, in the singular number, a twelvemonth, is meant the whole year, consisting of one solar revolution.

In general, when a statute speaks of a month without adding "calendar," or other words showing a contrary intention, it shall be intended a lunar month of 28 days; and generally, in all matters temporal, the term month is understood to mean lunar. But in matters ecclesiastical, as non-residence, it is deemed a calendar month. So the six months of lapse and quare impedit are calendar months. The term, therefore, is taken in that sense which is conformable to the subject matter to which it is applied.

When a deed speaks of a month, it shall be intended a lunar month, unless it can be collected from the context that it was intended to be calendar. So in all other contracts, unless it be proved that the general understanding in that department of trade is, that bargains of that nature are according to calendar months. And the custom of trade, as in case of bills of exchange and promissory notes, has established, that a month named in those contracts shall be deemed calendar.

In all legal proceedings, as in commitments, pleadings, &c., a month means four weeks. When a calendar month's notice of action is required, the day on which it is served is included, and reckoned one of the days; and therefore if a notice be served on the 28th April, it expires on the 27th May, and the action may be commenced on the 28th May. And when a statute requires the action against an officer of the customs to be brought within three months, they mean lunar, though the same act requires a calendar month's notice of action.

A day is natural, which consists of 24 hours; or artificial, which contains the time from the rising of the sun to the setting. A day is usually intended of a natural day; as, in an indictment for burglary, we say, "in the night of the same day." Sometimes days are calculated exclusively, as where an act required ten clear days' notice of the intention to appeal, it was held that the ten days are to be taken exclusively both of the day of serving the notice and the day of holding the sessions. A legal act done at any part of the day will in general relate to the first part of the day.

In the space of a day all the 24 hours are usually reckoned, the law generally rejecting fractions of a day, in order to avoid disputes. Therefore, if I am bound to pay money on any certain day, I discharge the obligation if I pay it before twelve o'clock at night; after which the following day commences.

But although the law generally rejects fractions of a day, yet it admits them in cases where it is necessary to distinguish for the purposes of justice; and there seems no reason why the very hour may not be so too, where it is necessary and can be done. A fraction of a day was admitted in support of a commission of bankruptcy, by allowing evidence that the act of bankruptcy, though on the same day, was previous to issuing the commission. So where the goods are seized under a fiery facias the same day that the party commits an act of bankruptcy, it is open to inquire at what time of the day the goods were seized and the act of bankruptcy was committed, and the validity of the execution depends on the actual priority. So, to prevent reputed ownership at the time of the act of bankruptcy.

An hour consists of sixty minutes. There is a distinction in law as to the certainty of stating a month or day, and an hour, when a fact took place. "About such an hour," is sufficient; but not so as to a day, which must be stated with precision, though it may be varied from in proof.

It has been considered an established rule, that if a thing is to be done within such a time after such a fact, the day of the fact shall be taken inclusive. And therefore where the statute 21 Jac. I. c. 19, § 2, enacted, that a trader lying in prison two months after an arrest for debt should be adjudged a bankrupt, that included the day of arrest. When a month's notice of action is necessary, it begins with the day on which the notice is given; and if a robbery be committed on the 9th October, the action against the hundred must be brought in a year inclusive of that day. But where it is limited within such a time after the date of the deed &c. the day of the date of the deed shall be taken exclusive; as if a statute require the enrolment within a specified time after the date of the instrument. Thus, where a patent, dated 10th May, contained a proviso that a so many years as A. shall name, when the time is named, it is a good term. But unless the duration is ascertainable immediately, it is not a good term. Thus, if it is for so many years as J. shall live, or be parson, it is bad. But if for 50 years, if J. shall so long live or be parson, then it is good; for although it may end on J.'s death or ceasing to be a parson, yet it cannot continue longer than 50 years.

The grant of an estate for years is called a demise, or lease. The proper words of creation are "demise, lease, and to farm let." It may be created by other means, as by bargain and sale not enrolled. It relates, however, only to the possession, and does not affect the seisin of the lands. Terms are merely chattel interests, for whatever length of time they may be granted; and they may commence in futuro.

A demise gives a right of entry only, and till entry the lessee has only an interesse termini. Therefore, before entry the lessee cannot receive a release or confirmation; nor can he surrender, except by a surrender in law. It is assignable and underleaseable. An assignment is where the lessee parts with his whole interest; an underlease where less, as the whole term wanting a day. In an assignment the operative words are "assigned, transferred, and set over;" in an underlease, the same words as in an original lease. So also after entry the lessee may surrender, the operative words of which are, "doth surrender, yield up, and for ever quit claim;" but it is proper also to use words of grant, that the term may pass by the deed, if any thing should prevent its passing by surrender.

A surrender at law is the acceptance of a second lease incompatible with the first; but an underlease is not destroyed by a surrender of the lease. If, however, the original lease becomes void, the underlease goes with it. So, if the lease is defeated by entry of lessor for breach of condition, the underlease goes with it. By the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3) no term may be created, assigned, granted, or surrendered, otherwise than by deed or note in writing, signed by the grantee or his agent authorized in writing, or by act of law; and by 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, an assignment of a chattel interest, not being copyhold, in any tenement or hereditament, and a surrender in writing of an interest in any tenement or hereditament, not being a copyhold interest, and not being an interest which might by law have been created without writing, made after the 1st October, 1845, is void at law unless made by deed.

Estates for years may be devised or limited by way of trust, to one for life and after his decease to another, or to A and the heirs of his body. But no limitations are allowed which would render them unalienable beyond a life or lives in being and twenty-one years afterwards.

specification shall be enrolled within one calendar month next and immediately after the date thereof, and the specification was enrolled on the 10th June following, it was held, that the month did not begin to run till the day after the date of the patent, and that the specification was in time. However, in a case in equity, the master of the rolls, after considering many of the decisions, said, upon the first part of this rule, that whatever dicta there may be that when a thing is to be done after the doing of an act, the day of its happening must be included, it is clear the actual decision cannot be brought under any such general rule; and he inclined for excluding the first day in all cases, and ruled, that where a security was to be given within six months after a testator's death, the day of the death was to be excluded.—2 Chit. Bla. Com. 14, n. 3.

¹ The 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106 has left the word where it implies a covenant.

demise to operate as at the common law

Terms created by devise do not require entry to vest them as estates, Terms of years may be made voidable by a defeazance made any time after their creation.

When terms are not vested in trustees, the tenant for life is, at law, considered as having the whole term vested in him, and the person entitled under the limitation over has only a possibility, and no actual estate; yet his interest is a legal right, since on the death of quasi tenant for life, he has at once a title to entry. He cannot, however, at law transfer his interest during the life of quasi tenant for life, but he may devise it; and his assignment even is good in equity. So he may release it to the tenant for life; and his grant to the same would be as an extinguishment. So a surrender to reversioner would operate as a release. The possession of the termor is, at law, the possession of the freeholder, or person entitled to the fee. One term will merge in another immediately reversionary to it, although the term in reversion be of a less duration, in point of time, to the one to which the party in possession is entitled, if both terms be in the same person. If they are in different persons, he who has the term first created is entitled to possession, and the person entitled to the term in reversion is entitled to the rents and services; consequently the first termor is legally tenant to the other, and this even if no rent is paid; therefore, the first may surrender to the other. When both meet in the same person, the first merges. The lessee, when not restrained by covenants or a reservation to the contrary (now usually made), is entitled to estovers. When a term is to determine on a collateral event, the lessee or his personal representatives are entitled to emblements when it happens. With respect to waste and forfeiture, the same rules apply to a lessee as to a tenant for life.

An estate from year to year may be created by parol or written agreement.

It is now raised by construction of law, instead of an estate at will, in every instance where possession is taken with consent of the legal owner without any conveyance or agreement conveying a legal interest, and where an annual rent is paid. Either party may at any time give notice to quit. But if there be no agreement on this point, notice must be at least half a year's (not six months), requiring, or offering to give up possession at the expiration of the current year, computed from the time when the tenancy commenced. Parol notice is enough, but written is better, for the sake of evidence. When the commencement of the tenancy cannot be ascertained, notice personally served to quit at the end of a year, regulated by the time of payment of rent, will be prima facie evidence of the commencement of the tenancy at that period, unless the tenant prove the contrary, or object to the notice at the time of its being served. In any case, notice to quit at the expiration of the current year which shall expire next after the end of half a year from the date of the notice, is sufficient. However, after notice to quit, acceptance of rent due after the determination of the tenancy according to the notice is a waiver of the notice.

A tenant from year to year, after entry, has possession with privity, and may receive a release from his lessor, whence arises the ordinary mode of conveyance by lease and release, of which we shall say more hereafter.

Of the Covenants attaching on Leasehold Property.—Leasehold covenants are divided into—1. Express, or collateral; and 2. Implied.

1. Express, or collateral, are those special ones expressly entered into between the parties.

2. Implied are those which, though not mentioned, the law always implies between the parties; as, for instance, on the landlord's part, that lessee shall quietly enjoy during the term; and on the tenant's part, to pay the rent, to cultivate the land, to keep the premises in repair, &c. These implied covenants are often narrowed or enlarged by express ones. Thus, the covenant for quiet enjoyment may be narrowed to "against lessor and those claiming under him;" that to pay rent, to "while the premises are inhabitable;" and the tenant is sometimes exempted from repairs rendered necessary by fire, wind, or tempest.

All implied covenants run with the land, and so do many express ones; that is, they are not personal only as between the first contracting parties, but follow and attach on the property, into whosoever hands it may fall, provided it is not adversely to such original parties.

The distinction between such express covenants as run with the land and those which do not, but are collateral thereto and affect only the person of the covenantor, is very refined.¹

The following express covenants run with the land, viz. For quiet enjoyment;—for further assurance;—for renewal;—to repair;—to pay rent;—to discharge lessor of charges, ordinary and extraordinary;—to permit a lessor free passage to any rooms excepted in the demise;—to cultivate the lands in a particular manner;—to reside upon the premises;—and not to carry on particular trades.

It is a settled rule, that covenants running with the land not only bind the covenantor during his life by the privity of contract, and his representatives in respect of assets, but also every one taking by assignment, though such assignee be not affected by privity of estate.²

Covenants in law bind the lessor and lessee, in deed, by privity of estate. Between them privity of estate exists no longer than the relation of landlord and tenant. If lessor assigns, the privity of estate is destroyed, and his liability so far ceases.³ But, to do this, the landlord's assent to the assignment is necessary. This assent is either express or implied, as by receiving rent, or recognizing the assignee as tenant by some other act.

It is otherwise in respect of privity of contract. When the lessee has expressly bound himself, he can by no means release himself.

* As between lessor and assignee, immediately upon assignment the lessor has a right against assignee by privity of estate, and may enforce all covenants which run with the land. Between lessor and under-lessee there is neither privity of contract nor of estate. No covenants exist between them either at law or in deed. Still, by 4 Geo. II. c. 28, the landlord has a right of distress into whosoever hands the lands come, which no assignment or underlease can avoid.⁴

¹ See 4 Western's Conveyancing, 28, 45, 46, 53.

² All covenants run with the land, when either the liability to perform them, or the right to take advantage of them, passes to the assignee of the reversion.

³ See the recent case of Woolveridge v. Stewart, 3 Moo. & Scott, 561, in error, per Lord Denman C.J.

⁴ See further, tit. LANDLORD AND TENANT, ante, 352—371; and as to Emblements, ante, 512, tit. ESTATES FOR LIFE.

In an assignment, covenants at law pass from the assignor to assignee, being inherent to the estate itself; and express covenants which run with the land are on nearly the same footing.

As between the lessor and the latter, the implied covenants bind in any event; but the express covenants depend on the solvency of the lessee.

A covenant "not to assign, transfer, or set over, or otherwise do or put away with this present indenture of demise," was held not to extend to an underlease. But the words being "not to assign or set over or otherwise part with this indenture of lease," would not permit an underlease from year to year.

An agreement for a lease is sometimes resorted to as an evasion; but the lessor cannot distrain under such an agreement. A covenant "not to let, set, or assign, transfer, or set over, or otherwise part with the premises, or this indenture, or his term or interest or any part thereof," did not prevent the deposit of the lease by way of mortgage. A covenant on the part of the landlord for continued renewals, as it tends to create a perpetuity, is not favoured in any court.

It had been held that an equitable mortgagee of a lease deposited to secure a debt was liable to all the covenants, though he did not take possession. (7 Sim. 149.) But this has been since overruled.¹

Terms of Years to attend the Inheritance.—Terms of years to attend the inheritance are peculiar to the system of real property established in this country, and can only arise where there is a recognized distinction between the legal and equitable ownership of estates.

They are, at law, termed in gross, and severed from the inheritance, even after the purposes of their creation are satisfied, unless a condition for cesser be annexed.

The courts of law will not enter into the equity of any persons claiming against the termor. But as in equity the freeholder, after the purposes for which the term was created are satisfied &c., is entitled to a surrender, equity regards the termor after such period as a trustee for the freeholder.

Common terms are but chattels, and go to the personal representatives of the party dying seised or possessed; but, in equity, a term to attend follows the fee, and the person entitled to that is cestui que trust of the term. Consequently, 1. It is not a chattel, and will not be forfeited by felony of the owner of the fee. 2. It does not, as against the heirs or devisees of the cestui que trust, or assignees of bankrupt, prevent dower or curtesy of the wife or husband of cestui que trust; and if the inheritance escheat, the term goes with it.

The advantage which a purchaser or incumbrancer secures, by procuring an assignment to a trustee in trust for himself is, that he protects his estate from being defeated or injured by prior titles and charges of which he is unacquainted, however valid they may be. But the only persons whom equity will so allow to protect themselves are purchasers for a valuable consideration, which includes claimants under marriage settlements, mortgagees, annuitants, &c. without notice of the incumbrance &c. at the time of purchase &c.

The 8 & 9 Vic. c. 112 (intituled "An act to render the assignment of satisfied terms unnecessary,") reciting that the assignment of sa-tified terms has been found to be attended with great difficulty, delay, and expence, and to operate in many cases to the prejudice of the persons justly entitled to the lands to which they relate, enacts, "That every satisfied term of years which, either by express declaration or by construction of law, shall, upon the 31st Dec. 1845, be attendant upon the inheritance or reversion of any lands, shall on that day absolutely cease and determine as to the land upon the inheritance or reversion whereof such term shall be attendant as aforesaid; except that every such term which shall be so attendant as aforesaid by express declaration, although thereby made to cease and determine, shall afford to every person the same protection against every incumbrance, charge, estate, right, action, suit, claim, and demand, as it would have afforded to him if it had continued to subsist, but had not been assigned or dealt with after the 31st Dec. 1845, and shall, for the purpose of such protection, be considered in every court of law and equity to be a subsisting term."—§ 1.

¹ Moore v. Choate, 8 Sim. 508; Close v. Wilberforce, 1 Beav. 112. See 3 Western's Conveyancing, 67 et seq.

"And that every term of years subsisting at the passing of the act, or thereafter to be created, becoming satisfied after the 31st Dec. 1845, and which, either by express declaration or by construction of law, shall after that day become attendant upon the inheritance or reversion of any lands, shall, immediately upon the same becoming so attendant, absolutely cease and determine as to the land upon the inheritance or reversion whereof such term shall become attendant as aforesaid." § 2.

Of other estates less than freehold, namely, ESTATES AT WILL, and ESTATES BY SUFFERANCE, which include the estate of a mortgagor in possession, of a cestui que trust in possession, and of purchasers entering under a contract afterwards become inoperative, we have already made a few observations.

CHAPTER VII.

Of Estates on Condition.

ESTATES upon condition are either implied or expressed, or those in pledge (such as mortgages), or held under statute merchant or staple (modes now almost totally disused), or by elegit.

An implied conditional estate is dependent on the performance of a condition inseparably connected with the possession. As if a man grants an office to another, it is always on an implied condition that he shall duly execute the duties thereof; and the estate therein may be forfeited either by non-user or misuser.

These conditions are attached to life estates or estates for years; and if a man attempt to give to another a larger estate than he himself has therein, it is by common-law a forfeiture. The forfeitures to the crown for felony or the like are of a similar nature.

Conditions expressed are either precedent or subsequent. The former may be exemplified thus: if a man grants an estate to A upon his marriage, A has no estate till the marriage takes place; but if a man grants to another an estate to hold upon payment of a certain rent, with liberty to re-enter upon non-payment, this is a condition subsequent, and he shall hold until he omit to pay the rent.

Express conditions, if they are impossible at the time of their creation, or afterwards become so by the act of God or of the party creating them, or if they are contrary to law, or are repugnant to nature, are void. Under these circumstances, if the condition to be performed be subsequent, the estate becomes absolute in the grantee; but if precedent, then both condition and estate are void and fall together.

But the kind of estate on condition which requires our principal attention is that arising out of mortgage, of which we shall proceed to treat briefly.

MORTGAGES.—A mortgage is the pledge of land for the repayment of money borrowed: the party pledging is called the mortgagor; and the party lending the money and taking the security is denominated the mortgagee. The mortgagor sometimes retains possession, paying the interest of the money lent, by agreement between the parties. Of his estate we have taken occasion to make a few remarks already.¹ When the mortgagee takes possession, he holds the property in equity (for, after the condition broken as to repayment in a certain time, the estate of the mortgagor is gone absolutely at law) till such time as out of the rents and profits he has repaid himself, or until he is repaid by other means; whence his also is an estate upon condition.

The striking distinction between the mortgage of lands or goods and a pawn of goods is, that in the former case the mortgagee has, after the condition forfeited, an absolute interest in the thing mortgaged; whereas the pawnee has but a special property in the goods, to detain them for his security. We are here only speaking of pawns in general; for, as we have already seen,² pawnbrokers under act of parliament may, after a year and a day, sell the property pawned, unless interest on the money advanced be paid in the meantime.

A modern mortgage may be described to be a conveyance of land by a debtor to his creditor, as a pledge and security for the repayment of a sum of money borrowed, with a provision that such conveyance shall be void on repayment of the money borrowed and interest thereon at a certain day (usually six months); and in all mortgages, although the money be not paid at the time appointed, by which the conveyance of the lands becomes absolute at law, yet the mortgagor has still an equity of redemption, that is, a right in equity, on payment of the principal, interest, and costs within a reasonable time, to call for a reconveyance of the lands.

Equity of Redemption.—The equity of redemption continues open for twenty years after the last acknowledgment of the property being held on mortgage, either expressed or implied, but after that time the mortgagor is for ever barred. At law he has lost the estate by non-performance of the condition. So in equity, by allowing the mortgagee to remain in possession twenty years without demanding an acknowledgment of the existence of the mortgage. "The lapse of twenty years," says Sir Thomas Plomer, "affords a substantive insuperable plea in bar; it is the fixed limit to the remedy,—the tempus constitutum; one day beyond is as much too late as one hundred years, if there has been adverse possession; and no disability or fraud, no plea of poverty, ignorance, or mistake can be of avail, however clear and indisputable the title, if the merits could be inquired into, however demonstratively tortious and wrongful the adverse possession, the fact of such possession and the time preclude all investigation of the title; the door of justice is shut.¹"

¹ See ante, 359.

² Ante, 474.

The equity of redemption may be released to the mortgagee, or it may be assigned, granted, or demised. It cannot pass by feoffment, bargain and sale, lease and release, it being a mere equitable right, and the legal title being in the mortgagor.

Dower is not allowed out of the equity of redemption on a mortgage in fee made before marriage; though it is otherwise if the mortgage be after marriage, unless the wife concurred by fine or recovery in the mortgage.

As to a mortgage in fee made before marriage, the wife cannot redeem; but as to one by demise only, she has one third of the rent and reversion. But a doweress, like an heir or devisee, has a right to have the personal estate of her husband, as far as it will extend, applied in discharge of mortgages and other debts contracted by her husband, which are charges on the land whereof she is dowerable.

With respect to the subjects of mortgage, it may be laid down that every species of property real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, moveable or immoveable, in possession or expectancy, or even a chose in action, may be mortgaged. If the property be freehold and by the form of conveyance the estate is covenanted to be re-conveyed on payment of the money due, though the money be repaid within the time provided in the agreement, yet the necessity for a formal re-conveyance by deed cannot be avoided.

An ingenious mode of mortgage has been suggested in cases where two persons are advancing money at the same time on one estate, and preference is not wished to be given to either, but each is desirous of having a lien on the whole estate, and yet of avoiding the intervention of a mutual trustee, viz., limiting one moiety of the estate for a long term of years to one mortgagee, with remainder in fee to the other mortgagee, and vice versa as to the other moiety. Thus each is first mortgagee for a long term of one moiety and second mortgagee in fee of the other.

Copyhold is usually mortgaged by a conditional surrender in the manor court by the mortgagor to the mortgagee and his heirs. By the condition the surrender is made void on repayment of the money due, which condition is entered on the court rolls immediately following the surrender. On the performance of the condition by payment of the money due, the surrender is at an end, and the surrenderor is in possession in statu quo, without any fine or re-admission. But if the condition is broken, and the mortgagee is admitted, the mortgagor on redemption must be re-admitted and pay the fine. Unless there be a custom to the contrary, the surrenderee cannot be compelled, even after condition broken, to come in and be admitted. If he has not been admitted, the practice is, on repayment of the money, for the mortgagee to give a warrant to the steward to vacate the surrender, and thereupon the mortgage is at an end.

¹ Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 J. & W. 180.

Where leaseholds are made a mortgage security, it is usual, in order to avoid the liability of rent and covenants in the original lease, to take an underlease at a peppercorn or merely nominal rent, reserving a few days of the original term, and the mortgagor covenants to pay the rent and perform the covenants in the original lease; otherwise, if the mortgagee takes an assignment of the original lease, he becomes liable to all the covenants for rent &c., and that, it seems, whether he takes possession or not.

If the mortgagee of a leasehold estate obtain a renewal of the lease, although there subsisted only a tenant right, the renewed lease will be held subject to the like equity as subsisted in the old lease, and will be redeemable accordingly. The mortgagee is not bound to renew; but if he do, he will be entitled to his costs attendant on the renewal, with interest.

Mortgages with Power of Sale.—Though formerly questioned, it is now established, that a mortgagee may have a power of sale given to him in case of default of payment of the mortgage money beyond a time limited. The better way of doing it is this:—the estate is limited to the mortgagee in fee, with the usual proviso for redemption, attended with a declaration that if default is made in payment of the money at the appointed time, it shall be lawful for the mortgagee, his heirs or assigns, after notice in writing requiring payment, to sell &c.' with a proviso that such power of sale shall not prejudice his right to foreclosure. In this case, if the sale take place, the mortgagor is not a necessary party to the conveyance.

Of Equitable Mortgages.—To constitute a valid mortgage at law, and such are those we have been considering, all the formalities of strictly legal deeds are requisite. But there are mortgages which are as effectual in equity without any of these formalities, except that these latter, which are termed equitable mortgages, require the aid and interposition of a court of equity to make them so, while a legal mortgage is complete in itself, and requires no such extraneous assistance.

The doctrine of equitable mortgage, it has been said, has been carried already to a sufficient extent, so that the inclination of some of the courts of equity is to limit rather than extend it.²

An equitable mortgage is, in general, constituted by a deposit of the title deeds or other documents, whatever they may be, by which the title to the property, be it real or personal, is held; sometimes the deposit is accompanied by a memorandum expressing the terms and the nature of the deposit, and sometimes without even a verbal communication of any kind passing between the parties, and it is regarded as evidence of itself of an agreement executed within the 4th section or the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3) for a mortgage of the estate. And upon the mere deposit the mortgagee may file a bill for ¹ And that it shall not be necessary for the mortgagee, and is usually adopted in practice. Corder v. Morgan, 18 Ves. 347.

² Exp. Cooper, 9 Ves. 477.

completing the security; or, in bankruptcy, he may petition that the estate so incumbered may be sold and his debt paid out of the proceeds, if sufficient, with power to prove against the estate of the bankrupt mortgagor for the difference. It may as well be here intimated, that in cases of bankruptcy it is a fixed rule, that if there be no memorandum in writing accompanying the deposit, the costs of the petition for the sale must be paid out of the mortgagee's own pocket; but otherwise they are allowed out of the proceeds of the sale.¹

As to an equitable mortgage being constituted by mere delivery of the deeds without any kind of communication, written or verbal, between the parties, it was decided, in the late case of Bozon v. Williams,² that it can only occur as against strangers, in cases where the possession of the title deeds can be accounted for in no other manner than from their having been deposited by way of equitable mortgage, or the holder being otherwise a stranger to the title and the lands. Thus, though a solicitor may have deeds in his possession, and may have a lien on such deeds for any bill of costs due to him, and may retain them till the same is discharged, yet he has no equitable mortgage, so as to give him any interest in the property to which such deeds relate, because the deeds will be prima facie presumed to be in his hands in his character of solicitor, and to have been placed there for other purposes.

It has been laid down, 1st, That it is requisite that the deposit shall be made with the view and intent of an immediate security, and not diverso intuitu. But in the case of Hockley v. Banlock,³ where executors, who were also trustees, agreed to give one of the residuary legatees, as a security for his share of the real estate, part of the testator's residuary assets, and, for the purpose of having the mortgage prepared, delivered the title deeds to his agents, it was held that this gave him an equitable lien on the property against the executors, though not as against the other residuary legatees.

2dly, If nothing passes between the parties but the mere delivery of the deeds, it will only extend to the debt then actually due.

3dly, If an agreement of any kind, express or implied, can be established in evidence, it may extend as a security for future advances; though the courts are averse to this extension of the security.

4thly, The deposit may be made with the creditor himself, or with a third person as agent to receive it for the creditor alone, provided the depositor has no further controul over it. The wife of the debtor, or the debtor himself, cannot properly be such agent. Nor will such deposit in the hands of one person be extended to an advance made by another person, unless the party holding the deeds be a mere trustee, and not a creditor.

5thly, It is good without any stamp affixed to the memorandum.⁴

6thly, An equitable mortgage by deposit has preference over a purchaser or legal mortgagee with notice; which notice is implied from the nature of the transaction, as where he is told that the deeds are in the equitable mortgagee's hands.

¹ A memorandum or agreement of this nature must be stamped with the proper ad valorem duty for a mortgage or it cannot be received in evidence, but when the agreement is not stamped, parol evidence will be admitted to establish the equitable mortgage. Allen v. Mill, 13 Ves. 114.—

EDITOR.

7thly, If a bond fide deposit be made, and the mortgagor afterwards, though in anticipation of immediate bankruptcy, execute a legal mortgage to the depositor, it will be good against the assignees.

8thly, The security may be extended to a larger sum than that for which the equitable mortgage was first made, merely by agreement between the parties, or (as in case of a change of the partners of either mortgagors or mortgagees) it may be in like manner extended to other parties.

9thly, It seems that all the deeds must be deposited in order to constitute a good equitable mortgage, and that where one part of them is deposited with one person, and the remainder with another person, neither of them, conjunctively or separately, has a valid security.

10thly, In copyholds the equitable mortgage is effected by deposit of a copy of the court roll.

11thly, If there be a memorandum expressing the terms of the deposit, that is not to be contradicted by any other species of evidence contained in affidavits alone. It is always desirable to have a written memorandum; otherwise, in case of bankruptcy, the mortgagee will be put to costs he might have thus avoided.

An equity of redemption (which we have already endeavoured to explain) being something more than a mere right, may itself be mortgaged; and if several mortgages of this description are made, they in general take priority according to their date. For this and several other reasons, this is a very disadvantageous kind of security.¹

Bearing very closely upon the subject of equitable mortgages is that of equitable liens. If a vendor convey his estate to the vendee without receiving payment, even although the conveyance expresses and acknowledges the receipt of the payment as having been made, the vendee is considered as a trustee of the estate for the vendor, and the latter has a continuous lien thereon. So if the vendee has paid a deposit and the bargain is broken off, he has a lien for the deposit. Such lien binds the land in the hands of himself, his heirs, or volunteers, as they are termed, (that is, persons taking by gift, or by devise or voluntary conveyance of any kind), and even of purchasers with notice. However, this lien may, by implied contract that it shall not continue, be rebutted; but it is now settled, that a mere personal security taken, whether by bond, bill, note, or the like, will not be implied to take the lien away. A mortgage of other lands may, and at all events a mortgage of the same lands for part of the purchase money, leaving the remainder on personal security, will raise the presumption.

It must be recollected that this doctrine of equitable lien does not apply to personal estate; for as soon as the vendee has possession, actual or constructive, the lien is gone; and, after the delivery of part, there can be no stoppage in transitu of the remainder.

Mortgage of Personals.—Personal chattels may be mortgaged, like real property; but possession should, in general, always accompany the transaction; for if the mortgagor remain in possession, it is generally considered a badge of fraud, and may render the transaction void as against creditors. Where the possession cannot be given, as in the case of a ship at sea, or wines in the London Docks, &c., the delivery of the muniments of the title to such property will be sufficient, as, in the case of wines, the delivery of the dock warrants.¹

¹ As to these, see Coote on Mortgages, 240.

Where goods are bulky, and lie in a warehouse separate from others of the mortgagor, the delivery of the key has been held to be sufficient. So where the delivery has been contracted for, but is refused by the mortgagor; or where the possession is consistent with the deed of assignment, as in the case of goods bonâ fide settled on marriage.

Of the effect of reputed ownership in bankruptcy, we shall have occasion to make a few observations hereafter. In the mortgage of ships and their freight the greatest care and attention are required, it being a transaction attended with much nicety.²

In the case of an assignment of the mortgage by the mortgagee, if the mortgagor is not a party thereto, the assignee is bound by all the equities and settlements of accounts which subsisted between the mortgagor and the mortgagee; and therefore if the mortgagor, after the assignment, pays off part of the debt, or the interest thereon, the assignee is thereby bound; nor will any agreement between the mortgagee and the assignee to turn the interest due into principal bind the mortgagor; nor, even if the latter acquiesced, would such an agreement bind other creditors who had intermediate securities on the property. In these cases the mortgagee should always obtain the consent of the mortgagor. One evil of the contrary is, that the mortgagee is otherwise a necessary party to a bill for redemption; and moreover, if the mortgagor has given up possession to him, he is considered a trustee for the mortgagor's benefit, and accountable for all profits. At law, a mortgage being a mere chase in action, the debt is not assignable; so that it is necessary for the assignee to obtain from the mortgagee a power of attorney to sue in his name, &c.

We have already endeavoured shortly to describe the nature of the estate of the mortgagor in possession³ and we have seen that he is in general regarded as the mere tenant at will of the mortgagee. The mortgagee, by virtue of his mortgage, is the legal owner of the land, and entitled to immediate possession, and to the receipt of the rent if the land be let. He may evict the mortgagor without notice, and is entitled to the emblements on the land. But it is an invariable rule, that he can have no account from the mortgagor of any profits he has received; and therefore if, even after notice by the mortgagee not to do so, a tenant pay his rent to the mortgagor, the mortgagee cannot recover the same back from the mortgagor. He may, however, after such notice, distrain on the tenant, just as an ordinary landlord may. The mortgagee is entitled, out of the profits, to repay himself all the necessary expences attending the collection of the rents, and, under some circumstances is entitled to the expences of a bailiff or receiver; but he can make no charge for his personal trouble, nor appoint himself receiver.

The mortgagee in possession is bound to keep the premises in repair, and will be allowed the charge of permanent improvements, with interest, from the time of advancing the necessary funds, as also the expences on renewal of leases or maintaining the title. To prevent forfeiture for waste, he may pull down ruinous houses, and build others on their site; and if the security be defective, he may fell timber, and apply the proceeds in liquidation of his debt. But he is not bound to do other than necessary repairs. He cannot compel the mortgagor to advance money for the renewal of leases, without an express agreement to that effect. If he has been in possession seven years prior to the election, he may qualify to sit in parliament. So, if in possession, he might, before the Reform Act, have voted as an elector; and he may now gain a settlement under the poor laws.

¹ Exp. Davenport, in re Leech, 1 Dea. & Chit. 337.

² See Coote, 276, and ante, 259, 392.

³ Ante, p. 359; but his real character has never yet been ascertained; see Birch v. Wright, 1 Term Rep. 382.

He is bound to account to the mortgagor for such value of the land as he has received, or for so much as he might have received except for any wilful default or neglect of which he has been guilty.

As regards the provisions relating to infant mortgagees, we need only refer to page 330, in the former part of this work.

To guard against undue advantage being taken by reason of his controul over the necessities of the mortgagor, a mortgagee is unable, it is said, to accept a lease, even at a fair rent, from the mortgagor; but this has been questioned. Neither can he in equity make a valid or binding lease, unless it seems there is an absolute necessity for it. And because courts of equity are fearful of opening a door to fraud and usury, they will not permit any charge to be made on the estate for any personal trouble the mortgagee may be put to. If the mortgagee assign his mortgage without the concurrence of the mortgagor, and the assignee turn out insolvent, the mortgagee continues liable to account to the mortgagor.

The mortgagee cannot bar the mortgagor's right of redemption by fine and recovery or otherwise; and if the mortgagee is disseised, the mortgagor, on payment or tender of the mortgage money, will have five years to prosecute his right, even though the mortgagee had been barred by fine and nonclaim for five years. If a mortgagee renews a lease, the property mortgaged being leasehold, such renewal enures to the benefit of the mortgagor in redemption.

If the mortgagee presents to an advowson on a vacancy, and his clerk be admitted, the mortgagor may, by bill in equity, compel him to resign, if he proceeds within six months of the death of the last incumbent. He may be restrained from committing waste, and cannot fell timber even, unless his security is clearly scanty. If the mortgagor commit any act whereby he forfeits his estate, the mortgagee must abide by it, and can only have recourse to his collateral remedies, such as the mortgage bond; and lastly, as we have before shown, he can have no account against the mortgagor for any part of the profits which the mortgagor has at any time received.

* Of Notice as affecting Mortgages.—Notice is either express and actual; or it is implied and constructive, as arising from a presumption of law brought about by the peculiar state of facts; or else such as arises from statutory enactments, as an instance of which we may mention notice of bankruptcy, from the insertion of the issuing of the fiat in the London Gazette.¹

If a party having notice convey for a valuable consideration to one who has not notice, or if a party not having notice convey to one who has, the latter in either case will not be affected by the notice; for he may in the first case defend himself by his own want of notice, and in the second by the want of notice to the party conveying to him. And if A has notice and sells to B without notice, who again sells to C who has notice, C nevertheless protects his purchase by B's want of notice. If there be fraud in the original creation of the mortgage, as, for example, if no money actually passed between the parties, and if the mortgagee afterwards assign to a third person for valuable consideration without notice of the fraud in the original transaction, and the mortgagor convey his equitable interest to a stranger for valuable consideration without notice of mortgage, the money paid on the assignment will make good the original transaction and purge the fraud.

¹ 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 83.

Notice is not to be inferred from vague rumours proceeding from strangers to the estate; for to these no regard need be paid; and, in fact, it is expected that there should be some degree of precision as to the nature of the supposed right, which should not consist of mere general and undefined claims. It is right, however, that purchasers should always inquire as far as possible even into the most vague report on the subject of the title.

Implied or constructive notice, in general, is to be inferred where a party has such a clue to the fact, whatever it may be, that he might, by diligently following it up, have arrived at the true state of affairs. Thus, notice that a party is in possession as tenant is sufficient to set the purchaser on the inquiry as to all the particulars of the tenancy; and knowledge that the deeds are in another person's keeping is sufficient notice of any title or right under which they are so held. Notice to an agent is notice to the principal. Hence arise the danger and inconvenience of both vendor and purchaser, or mortgagor and mortgagee, employing the same agent or attorney to transact their business; for whatever knowledge such third party acquires on behalf of one of his clients is sufficient notice, through him, to the other principal. But the notice, even in this case, must be connected with the particular affair then in hand. The recital of a deed is always a sufficient notice of its contents, provided it be all one transaction; but it is different if the deed is referred to in one transaction, and the consequences of notice are sought to be attached on a subsequent purchase unconnected with the deed making the reference or recital.

The registration of a deed is not of itself notice; and consequently if a mortgagee having the legal estate under a deed duly registered make further advances, he will have preference over an immediate incumbrancer or purchaser, of whose title he had not notice, although the intermediate deed of sale or charge be duly registered; and if a subsequent mortgagee obtains the legal estate, he will have preference over a prior equitable incumbrancer duly registered, of which he had not notice. So a registered deed shall not prevail against a prior unregistered deed, of which the party registering had notice.

An act of bankruptcy is not notice; nor is it clear that a fiat of bankruptcy is notice, by the general law of the land. Neither is the docketing of a judgment. On the other hand, if the party docketing have notice of a prior undocketed judgment, he will in equity be bound by it. A decree is not constructive notice of the determination of a suit to persons not parties to it; and a purchaser pendente lite, although for valuable consideration and without notice, will be bound by the decree, if there has been a close and continuous prosecution of the suit. It was once held, that a witness to a deed was affected with all the consequences of notice of its contents, and that if a mortgagee witnessed a second deed without giving notice to the second incumbrancer of his prior mortgage, that he would be postponed: but this doctrine has long been exploded, since in practice a mere witness scarcely ever knows the contents of a deed he signs, and it might be extremely easy for a party to be cheated out of his right by getting him to act as a witness.

Of Tacking, and of the Priority of Incumbrances.—The doctrine of tacking is founded on an application of equitable maxims, that he who seeks equity shall do equity to the person from whom he requires it; and that where equities are equal, the law shall prevail. It is equitable that the creditor shall not be deprived of his pledge without payment of all sums of money due to him from his debtor which form a general or specific lien on the land; and therefore if the mortgagee advance other sums of money to the mortgagor expressly by way of further charge (forming a specific lien, or on judgment or statute forming a general lien) neither the mortgagor nor (generally speaking) any one claiming under him shall be allowed to redeem without a settlement to the full amount. But this doctrine will not apply if the security could not form a lien on the estate, either specifically or generally; and therefore as copyholds are not at law liable to an extent, a judgment debt cannot be tacked to a mortgage of copyhold lands.

How far a bonâ fide debt may be tacked to a mortgage has excited a good deal of discussion; the point appears to be now settled, and the cases on this head in the books are numerous. It will be here sufficient to state the results; premising only, that it makes no difference in the right of tacking, whether the bond debt is prior or subsequent to the mortgage, or whether the mortgage be made to the bond creditor originally or be taken by assignment. The point may be considered as settled, that, as against the mortgagor himself, the mortgagee cannot insist on tacking a bond debt. The cases are uniform, that the heir, and also the beneficial devisee, must redeem both; but if the devise be for payment of debts generally, the mortgagor must, as to his bond debt, come in rateably with the other creditors; and the result is the same, whether there be an express trust or only a charge for the payment of debts.

If a mortgage be made of a chattel real, and the mortgagor die indebted to the mortgagee by simple contract, and the executor of the mortgagor bring his bill to redeem, he must pay both debts. The bond creditor also cannot tack against the assignee of the heir, or of the beneficial devisee, or of the executor.

An assignee from the mortgagor may of course redeem without payment of the bond debt. On the principle, that he who seeks equity shall do equity, and that equity will not deprive a creditor of the advantage of the legal estate, if obtained without fraud; it has been held, that if one estate is mortgaged for the payment of a debt, and another estate is mortgaged between the same parties for the payment of another debt, and the title to one estate proves defective, the mortgagor or his assigns shall not redeem without payment of both. It may be necessary to add, that, to apply this doctrine, the transaction must be between the same parties, or those claiming under them: for if A concur with B in a mortgage of Whiteacre to C, and afterwards B mortgage Blackacre to C for a different sum, nevertheless A and those claiming under him may redeem Whiteacre without also redeeming Blackacre.

It is laid down that if a sum of money be secured by mortgage, the mortgagor will not be admitted to redeem after the day of payment has elapsed, without paying likewise all that was due to the mortgagee on notes or simple contract. The same doctrine is stated in the Treatise on Equity. Notwithstanding these authorities, a mortgagee cannot, it seems, tack a mere simple contract debt against a mortgagor. A mortgagee of a lease or other chattel interest may, however, tack a simple contract debt against the executor, but not against creditors coming to redeem, or purchasers for a valuable consideration, or creditors for whose benefit the equity of redemption has been assigned by the executor.

The next rule to be noticed in the doctrine of tacking applies to the rights of mesne or intermediate incumbrancers, and is of great importance to be well understood. It is thus stated in Mr. Fonblanque's edition of the Treatise on Equity:—"In æquali jure melior est conditio possidentis; where equity is equal, the law shall prevail; and he who hath only a title in equity shall not prevail against both law and equity. As if a purchaser or mortgagee coming in upon a valuable consideration without notice, purchase a preceding incumbrance, it shall protect his estate against any person who hath a mortgage subsequent to the first and before the last mortgage, though he purchased the incumbrance after he had notice of the second mortgage; for he has both law and equity."

An exception to the rule, however, prevails, if the first mortgagee takes the assignment as a trustee for another person; in which case he shall not be allowed to tack the mortgages; for if he might, then a mere stranger purchasing a third mortgage, and declaring he had bought it in trust only for the first mortgagee, might tack both together, and defeat all the other incumbrancers.

The right of priority may be lost by fraud. In an able note by Mr. Fonblanque, in the Treatise on Equity, the principle is thus stated: "If a man, by suppression of a truth which he was bound to communicate, or by the wilful suggestion of a falsehood, be the cause of prejudice to another who had a right to a full and correct representation of the fact, it is certainly agreeable to the dictates of a good conscience that his claim should be postponed to that of the person whose confidence was induced by his representation."

If A, being about to lend money to B, informs C of his intention, and asks C whether he has any incumbrance on B's estate, and C denies that he has any, whereby A is induced to lend his money to B, and it proves that C had at the time an existing mortgage or judgment on B's estate; this is fraud on the part of C, and his security shall be postponed to that of A. But, to fix C with the fraud, it is necessary he should be informed of A's intention to lend the money; for otherwise the fraudulent intention is wanting on which the relief is to proceed, and the mere falsehood is not sufficient for such purpose. If a prior incumbrancer is a party or privy to the subsequent transaction, and fraudulently conceals his incumbrance, this is also a ground for postponement, and more especially if the prior incumbrancer is professionally employed in the second transaction, and does not divulge his mortgage.

It was formerly held, that if a first mortgagee was a witness to the second incumbrance, this was sufficient evidence of concealment to postpone his mortgage; but this was subsequently questioned by Lord Thurlow, and does not seem to be law.

Equity is not scrupulous by what means a bonâ fide incumbrancer, without notice at the time of advancing his money, obtains a legal protection for his security; for if he get in a judgment or statute which is satisfied, yet if he can make use of it at law for his protection, equity will not interfere to prevent him.

Of the Interest.—The usury laws of this country allow no more than five per cent interest to be received by the mortgage deed; though in regard to lands in our colonies and in Ireland a higher rate is allowed by a special act of parliament.

If at the time of creating a mortgage an agreement is entered into, that as soon as interest falls due it shall be converted into principal and carry interest, so as to give compound interest (of which equity is very jealous), such an agreement is held to be unjust and oppressive, and tending to usury, and consequently void. But when any portion of the interest is actually due, the mortgagor and mortgagee, as between themselves, may at all events agree to that effect:—I say, between themselves; for if a mortgagee has notice of any subsequent incumbrance, the interest so converted into principal by agreement is looked on as a further advance, and therefore postponed to the intermediate incumbrance. The agreement to convert the interest in this manner should always properly (in regard to evidence of it) be signed by the mortgagor, for the mere statement of an account will not do. If a suit is instituted for an account of what is due on a mortgage, interest upon interest will be given from the time of the confirmation of the master's report, except, as before observed, as against intervening mortgagees. If the court allows time to the mortgagor or mesne incumbrancer to redeem, it is but just and reasonable that they should pay interest on the interest then due.

As regards particular tenants and remainder-men or reversioners, the tenant for life of an equity of redemption is, during his tenure, bound to keep down the mortgage interest. But if any arrear has accrued before his possession, the remainder-man must bear the burthen of it.

A tenant in tail cannot, however, be so compelled, because he has the reversioner or remainder-man wholly in his power, so as to bar them if he pleases. If, however, he be an infant, the guardian or trustee (from the infant's liability to destroy the entail) is bound to keep down the interest.

There is one thing in relation to the interest on mortgages which ought to be carefully borne in mind, which is this, that if at any time the mortgagor becomes desirous of paying off the mortgage after the day named in the deed for the payment thereof has elapsed, he must, in order to stop interest, give the mortgagee six months notice of his intention, and at the expiration of the six months, on the very day, must actually tender the whole money due to the mortgagee, personally. How far this is requisite in case the day of payment named in the deed is not gone by, does not seem decided; though in principle it would seem that no such notice is requisite, as the party is entitled to a reconveyance at law without recourse to equity, where notice was, in this particular, first deemed to be necessary.

Out of what Fund the Mortgage Debt shall be discharged.—The personal estate of the mortgagor is prima facie liable to this payment, and where it has been held otherwise, it is a mere exception to the general rule; and though, to render the general rule applicable, it is necessary that the debt should be that of the deceased, yet it is optional in him, and he may be considered to have so adopted the debt as to have rendered it his own: this depends entirely on evidence deduced from the party's will or other sources.

..In applying the principle of the primary liability of the personal estate for the payment of debts to the particular case of mortgage, it is necessary to remark, that it will not prevail to the prejudice of legatees whether specific or pecuniary, and much less to the prejudice of creditors, and it is decided that the paraphernalia of the widow is also exempted. The rule is, in fact, applicable between the heir and devisee on the one hand, and the executor or administrator and the residuary legatees or next of kin on the other, but not as between other parties; and therefore if a mortgage creditor resorts to the personal estate, and thereby exhausts the fund, the other creditors and the legatees will have relief in equity on the real estate in mortgage, or, in other words, equity will marshal the assets for their benefit.

There are four classes of estates to be applied in discharge of mortgage debts: 1st. The general personal estate, unless specially exempted; 2dly, Estates particularly devised for payment of debts; 3dly, Estates descended, whether purchased before or after the date of the will; and 4thly, Estates specially devised charged with the payment of debts.

On the question of the fund liable to discharge a mortgage, a distinction from ordinary cases exists in that of husband and wife, where the latter's estate is mortgaged. The question is decided by general principles: 1st, That if the money be raised for the husband's benefit, the wife or her heir will be a creditor in the place of the mortgagee of the husband, in preference of his legatees, but not of his creditors; 2dly, Parol evidence is admitted to contradict the deed, and to show for whose benefit the money was really raised; 3dly, If raised by the husband to pay off the wife's debts dum sola, the wife's estate shall bear the burthen, even although a small portion were applied for the husband's uses; 4thly, If the wife or her heir promise to relinquish her claim, parol evidence is admissible of such agreement; 5thly, The wife will not waive her claim by a covenant that the estate shall, after the husband's death, stand charged with the original debt, and also with a farther sum advanced to her; and ~~she~~ ^{the husband} will have a right to be indemnified out of the wife's estate, if, ~~as a mortgagor~~ ^{as a creditor} of the mortgage charged on the wife's estate, he enter into a covenant or give bond for its payment; and if at the time of the original mortgage of his wife's estate he made a provision out of his own estate for the wife's benefit, he may, under circumstances, be considered as a purchaser of the money raised by the mortgage.

In the case of bankruptcy, the mortgagee is empowered to go before the commissioner and have a sale directed of the property, and if the purchase money is not sufficient to pay off the debt, principal, interest, and costs, he is entitled to prove for the residue against the mortgagor's effects.

Of Foreclosures.—Equity having determined that the mortgaged debt shall be considered the principal, and the land a pledge, and, as a consequence, that the mortgagor, notwithstanding his breach of condition and subsequent forfeiture at law of his estate, shall be relievable in equity on payment of principal, interest, and costs, and the mortgagee in possession be accountable for the rents and profits, it became, on the other hand, just, that the mortgagee should not be subject to a perpetual account, nor converted into a perpetual bailiff, but that, after a fair and reasonable time given to the mortgagor to discharge the debt, he should lose his equity, or, in other words, be foreclosed of his right of redemption. On this principle rests the doctrine of foreclosure; and, in the application of it, the forbearance of equity on behalf of the mortgagor seems to have been carried to its utmost limits, even so far as in some instances to work a serious detriment to the mortgagee. For equity is ever ready to receive the excuses of the mortgagor, as well for the purpose of giving him time to procure the money previously to the foreclosure (which has been extended to four enlargements of the time), as also for the purpose of opening the foreclosure even after many years quiet possession by the mortgagee under an absolute decree of foreclosure confirmed, and even signed and enrolled.

The usual course to pursue to obtain a decree for foreclosure is for the mortgagee to file a bill in equity, calling on the mortgagor to redeem within a specified time, and praying that in the alternative he may stand foreclosed. After the answer is put in, the cause is referred to a master to take an account of what is due to the mortgagee for principal, interest, and costs; upon which a decree is made, ordering payment within six months, or in default that the mortgagor shall stand foreclosed; in which latter case the decree is confirmed, signed and enrolled, and becomes absolute, subject to the foregoing observations as to re-opening it.¹

ESTATES BY STATUTE MERCHANT and STATUTE STAMER are very similar to that of mortgage. In these the creditor holds possession till he has repaid himself his debt. The main distinction between them and mortgages consisted in the form in which they were created, into which however it would be useless now to inquire, as they may be considered obsolete modes of securing debts.

The ESTATE BY EMBOW is subject to the same observations.

¹ See Code on Mortgages, passim; whence the foregoing observations on mortgages have been principally extracted.

CHAPTER VIII.

Of Estates in Possession, Remainder, and Reversion.

WE have hitherto considered estates solely with respect to their duration, or the quantity of interest which their owners have in them. We are now to regard them as to the time of their enjoyment, in which view they are either estates in possession or in expectancy; and of expectant estates there are two kinds: the first created by the act of the parties, called a remainder; the other by the operation of law, and called a reversion.

I. OF ESTATES IN POSSESSION, or, as they are sometimes called, estates executed (in contradistinction to executory estates, which depend on some subsequent circumstance or contingency), we have nothing particular to say in this place; because, in treating of estates, we have all along laid down the rules as applicable to estates actually in the tenant's possession.

II. AN ESTATE IN REMAINDER is that portion of an estate which, on the creation of a particular or immediate estate, is limited over to another, to take effect or be enjoyed when the other is determined.

• Remainders are—1. Vested; or 2. Contingent.

1. A vested remainder is that which is limited or transmitted to a person capable of receiving the possession should the particular estate happen to determine immediately; as, to A for life, remainder to B and his heirs; here B being in existence, he or his heirs will take the moment A dies.

2. A contingent remainder is where the particular estate may happen to determine before the person to whom the remainder is limited can take possession; as, to A for life, remainder to the heirs of B. Now B can have no heir till his death; A may die before B; and then no one would be in existence to take the estate under the limitation.

Contingent remainders were destroyed by the destruction of the particular estate on which they depend; and this might be by the merger, surrender, or forfeiture of the particular estate. In the creation of remainders, the following rules were required to be observed.

1. There must be a present immediate or particular estate created, which, if the remainder be vested, may be for years; but if the remainder be contingent, it must be an estate of freehold; though it need not be in the actual possession or seisin of the particular tenant, it being enough if it confer a right to the possession. An estate at will, however, cannot support a freehold remainder; because entry to deliver seisin to the remainder-man would be a determination of the estate at will.

2. The particular estate and the remainder must be created by the same deed. It is to be remembered, that a will and codicil are but one instrument.

3. The remainder must vest in the grantee during the particular estate, or at the very instant it determines.

4. If the remainder be contingent, it must be limited to some one that may by common possibility be in esse at or before the determination of the particular estate.

5. If a condition be annexed to a particular estate, making it void on a given event, and a remainder be limited to take effect, not only on the determination of the particular estate, but on its destruction by operation of the condition, the remainder is void from its creation, because it does not come within the third rule, "to vest the moment the particular estate is determined," and because only the grantor and his heirs can take advantage of a breach of the condition.

But now the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, § 8, enacts, that a contingent remainder existing at any time after the 31st December, 1844, shall be, and if created before the passing of this act, shall be deemed to have been, capable of taking effect notwithstanding the determination, by forfeiture, surrender, or merger, of any preceding estate of freehold, in the same manner in all respects as if such determination had not happened.

This kind of remainder, in conveyances to uses and in wills, is known by the names of conditional limitations and executory devises; of which we shall say a few words presently.

Cross Remainders.—Gifts with cross remainders are founded on a tenancy in common. As, under a gift to A, B, and C, tenants in tail in common, and in default of the issue of either of them, then to the other or others of them as tenants in common in tail, and in default of issue of them all, then to X in fee; here A, B, and C are tenants in common of one third each in possession, with remainder as to A to B and C as tenants in common in tail, with remainder as to B to C in tail, and with remainder as to C to B in tail, and so reciprocally as to the other two thirds.

In deeds, cross remainders cannot arise without express words; but in wills, marriage settlements, and executory trusts, they may be implied. Between two, the presumption is in favour of cross remainders; but between more than two, against them. A tenant in tail with cross remainders over might, by common recovery, convey his own property of the estate in fee.

We shall now say a few words of conditional limitations and executory devises.

1. Conditional Limitations.—The difference between them and remainders is, that a remainder is, as it were, a continuation of the same estate, while a conditional limitation is entirely a different and separate estate.

There are these distinctions between a condition and a conditional limitation. A condition brings the estate back to the grantor or his heirs, while a conditional limitation carries it over to a stranger. The breach of a condition gives a right, but the happening of the event whereon the conditional limitation depends gives an estate. Some act must be done by the grantor or his heir to reduce the estate into possession on breach of a condition,—he must enter, or claim; but a conditional limitation destroys the prior estate without any act to be done by the successor. In fact, an executory devise is a contingent limitation by will, and a shifting use is the same by deed. If there be no preceding estate, the future isolated gift assumes the character of a contingent use if by deed, or an executory devise if by will; if there be a preceding estate, then the subsequent interest is, in strictness, a conditional limitation. But this distinction is not always attended to in practice. If these conditional limitations be limited after an estate tail, they might have been barred by recovery. As to barring them by estoppel, assignment in equity, or devise, the law is the same as with respect to an executory fee by devise.¹

2. Executory Devises.—An executory devise differs from a remainder (amongst other things) in this, that a remainder must have a particular estate to support it, while it is essential to an executory devise, that no particular estate be in existence; it being a rule, that that shall never be construed an executory devise which can be supported as a remainder. In short an executory devise differs from a contingent remainder in the following points:—1. It is admitted only in wills and testaments; 2. It respects personal as well as real property; 3. It requires no preceding estate to support it; 4. Where any estate precedes, it is not necessary that the executory devise should vest when that determines; 5. It cannot be prevented or destroyed by any alteration whatsoever in the estate out of or after which it is limited, except it be limited on an estate tail. But though admitted in wills and testaments only, yet in deeds taking effect by the Statute of Uses, limitations tantamount are permitted, under the names of conditional limitations and springing or contingent uses.

By executory devise a fee or less estate may be limited after a fee, so that it take effect within a life or lives in being and twenty-one years afterwards; or a fee may be limited to commence in futuro. Quasi remainders in chattels real or personal may be limited by executory devise, if to a person or persons in being, or to vest within twenty-one years after the death of a person or persons in being. But if the remainder be such, that if it were freehold property it would amount to an express entail, it rests in the person in whom it vests, and will be at his disposal, or go to his representatives on his death. An executory devise cannot be barred or destroyed by any act of the person taking the preceding fee, though by feoffment or matter of record; except the preceding estate be a fee tail, and then the tenant in tail could have destroyed it by suffering a recovery. But the person entitled may bar his own executory estate by release to the first taker in possession, or he may assign it in equity for a valuable consideration, or devise it by will; or if he was vouchee, or levied a fine, he was barred by estoppel.

The utmost length that has hitherto been allowed for the contingency of an executory devise of either kind to happen in is that of a life or lives in being and twenty-one years after. As, when lands are devised to such unborn son of a feme covert as shall first attain the age of twenty-one and his heirs, the utmost length of time that can happen before the estate can vest is the life of the mother and the subsequent infancy of her son; and this has been decreed to be a good executory devise.

¹ The recent cases of construction of limitations are, Doe dem. Burne & Martyn, 8 Barn. & Cress 497; Doe dem. Littledale v. Smeddle, 2 Barn. & Aid. 126; and Wheeler v. Duke, 1 Crom. & Mee. 210.

III. REVERSIONS.—When a person grants a portion of his interest in lands, the possession returns or reverts to him on the determination of the granted portion of interest, and during the existence of the grant an interest remains in the grantee, called his reversion, or more properly, his right of reverter.

It is an actual estate, bearing the fruits of seignory. It can only arise by act of law. Being an immediate interest, it may be conveyed to any one. The proper mode is by grant, though it is usually passed by lease and release; it passes also by bargain and sale enrolled, or by a covenant to stand seised. It cannot be granted over, so as to commence in futuro; but it may be charged by the reversioner.

During the particular estate the reversioner continues tenant to the lord, and the tenant of the particular estate is tenant to the reversioner; so that rent, fealty, &c. belong to and follow the reversion. The moment the particular estate determines, the reversion must come into possession.

By 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, § 9, when the reversion expectant on a lease (made either before or after the passing of that act) of tenements or hereditaments, of any tenure, shall, after the 1st of October, 1845, be surrendered or merge, the estate which shall for the time being confer as against the tenant under the same lease the next vested right to the same tenements or hereditaments, shall, to the extent and for the purpose of preserving such incidents to and obligations on the same reversion as, but for the surrender or merger thereof, would have subsisted, be deemed the reversion, expectant on the same lease.

CHAPTER IX.

Of Estates in Severalty, Joint Tenancy, Coparcenary, and in Common.

WE now come to treat of estates with respect to the number and connexion of their owners, the tenants who occupy and hold them; and, considered in this view, estates of any quantity or length of duration, and whether they are in actual possession or in expectancy, may be held in four different ways, viz. in severalty, in joint-tenancy, in coparcenary, or in common.

I. AN ESTATE IN SEVERALTY needs scarcely any comment, it being where only one person is possessed of the estate, without any other person being joined or connected with him in point of interest during his estate therein.

II. AN ESTATE IN JOINT TENANCY is where lands or tenements are granted to two or more persons, to hold in fee simple, fee tail, for life, for years, or at will. Joint-tenants always take by purchase, and cannot, from the nature and attributes of the estate, take by descent or mere act of law.

The mode whereby this kind of estate is created is, if for life, "to A and B and their assigns"; if in fee, "to A and B and their heirs,"

The properties of a joint estate are derived from its unity, which is four-fold,—the unity of interest, of title, of time, and of possession; or, in other words, joint tenants have one and the same interest, derived by one and the same title or deed, commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. The estate must be created by the same deed, and vest at the same time. It may be for life or in fee, but not in tail, unless the donees may lawfully marry. Whenever lands are conveyed to two or more, without modifying or disjunctive words, they take as joint tenants. Joint tenants are seised per mie et per tout; therefore they cannot grant, bargain and sell, surrender, enfeoff, exchange, or devise to each other, but can only release. On the death of one joint tenant his interest survives to the other, and does not go to the heirs, executors, or administrators of the deceased; and therefore all charges by a joint tenant are void against his surviving companion, since without a severance the party charging has no power over the estate after the event of his own death.

Joint estates are not subject to dower or curtesy.

Each tenant may sever at pleasure by granting his portion to a stranger, either to the use of a stranger or of himself; or they may compel a partition, by statute. A mortgage is a severance at law; and an equitable mortgage is an equitable severance.

Joint tenants may exchange with a stranger, or surrender to an immediate reversioner. Having unity of seisin and possession, the entry and seisin of one enures to all the joint tenants. A joint tenant cannot grant his chance of survivorship to a stranger, so as to bind himself by estoppel. A covenant or agreement to sell has been held to create an equitable severance. Judgments, and crown debts even, against the deceased joint tenant do not affect the estate in the hands of the surviving joint tenant. But if he aliene so as to sever, and he become survivor, or sole owner by release, prior judgments become available. The surviving joint tenant is entitled to emblements, if the joint estate continues up to the death of one of the tenants.

III. AN ESTATE IN COPARCENARY arises where lands of inheritance descend, by common law or by custom, to two or more persons: by common law, as where the next heirs of a party dying seised are two or more females, his daughters, aunts, sisters, or cousins; by custom, such as that of gavelkind, where all the males of equal degree, as all the sons, uncles, or brothers, inherit equally. Coparceners always take by descent, and compose, in fact, but one heir to the party from whom they derive the estate. They have a several seisin as regards themselves, though it is joint as regards strangers. They have a unity but not an entirety of interest. They may sue and be sued jointly in all matters relating to their own lands. They cannot sue each other as trespassers, but may stop the committal of any waste by resorting to a partition of the estate. They are properly entitled each to the whole of a distinct moiety. Hence it is that they convey to each other by deed of grant, release, and feoffment, and to strangers by any conveyance sufficient to pass a freehold, as deed of grant, feoffment, release, bargain and sale enrolled, or they may covenant to stand seised. Unlike the estate of joint tenancy, there is no survivorship; for on the death of the coparcener her share descends to her heir, subject to her husband's curtesy; in which case the heir or the husband holds that share with the other coparceners in coparcenary. If the heir male dies leaving a widow, she is entitled to dower out of such share.

In gavelkind the estate descends to all the sons, who hold in coparcenary.

This tenancy is destroyed by alienation or devise to a stranger, and is thereby converted into a tenancy in common.

The possession of one coparcener is that of the others, so as to create a seisin by all and carry their shares by descent to their heirs, though they never individually entered. So entry by one, when not adverse, enures to all. In advowsons, they present according to seniority, the eldest taking the first turn.

Coparcenary relates to the estate, as joint tenancy does to the person. Hence there is this singularity, that one may be coparcener with himself; as, for instance, if two moieties descend to one person, one from his father, another from his mother, on his death without lineal descendants, one share goes to his heirs on the father's side, and the other to those on the mother's side.

The seisin of coparceners is both joint and several. That it is joint is shown by a release being good from one to another without a bargain and sale to vest the seisin; yet it is several, inasmuch as one may enfeoff the other. But they cannot exchange till after partition has been made.

This estate may be dissolved, either by partition, which disunites the possession: by alienation of one parcener, which disunites the title, and may disunite the interest; or by the whole at last descending to and vesting in one single person, which brings it to an estate in severalty.

Partition may be made in several ways—four by consent, and one by compulsion. The first is by a simple written agreement among themselves, allotting to each her portion.¹ The second is, where they choose a common friend to make partition, and then the sisters shall choose each of them her part according to their seniority in age or otherwise as shall be agreed. The third is, where the eldest divides, and she shall choose her part last. The fourth is, by casting lots after a division. The fifth, and that by compulsion, is where one or more sue out a writ of partition against the others; whereupon the sheriff, to whom the writ is directed, goes to the lands and makes partition thereof by the verdict of a jury there impanelled, and assigns to each her part in severalty. If there be things which cannot be divided, (as a mansion house, or incorporeal rights, such as common of estovers or of piscary, and the like), the eldest may at her option enjoy them, making compensation in money or other parts of the property to the others; or if that cannot be, they shall take the property by turns, in the same manner as they take advowsons, commencing with the eldest.

IV. TENANCY IN COMMON.—Tenants in common, like joint tenants, take by purchase, in the legal acceptation of the word. They may hold by distinct titles or by entire disunion of interest, but must have unity of possession. They have separate freeholds and separate inheritances; therefore a lease by two operates as two distinct leases; and if two join to give a rent-charge of 20s., the grantee will have two rent-charges of 20s.

¹ But by 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, a partition of any tenements or hereditaments not being copyhold, after the 1st October, 1845, is void at law, unless made by deed. If the lands &c. be copyhold, the law remains as before the passing of that act, and the partition may be evidenced by a written agreement.

In a deed, the best way to create this tenancy is to limit a moiety to one and a moiety to the other, or to use the words "to hold as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants."

In a will, the following expressions have been held to create this tenancy: "equally to be divided;" "equally between or to them;" "equally;" "respectively;" "rateably;" "share and share alike." These last words, in a deed operating under the Statute of Uses, give an estate in common, though it is otherwise in a deed at common law. But this distinction is far from settled; and the courts seem inclined to construe "equally to be divided" as a tenancy in common in all cases.

Real estate bought with partnership property is, in equity, always held in common, even if the words in the purchase deed give to the co-partner a joint estate.

Tenants in common cannot exchange with each other, though they may with a stranger, the possession being undivided. But one may enfeoff the other; or if one have a greater estate, the other may surrender to him. One may devise his interest to his companion. But they cannot release to each other, because such release must operate by way of enlargement, and there is no estate of the companion in the share of the releasor to be enlarged.

Like coparceners, they may compel partition. Compulsory partitions are usually by commissioners from chancery; the commission is granted of right, and the partition is perfected by mutual conveyances. An agreement for partition is enough in equity. When one of the parties is an infant, the only effectual way of making partition is by an act of parliament.

Formerly partition of lands of copyhold or customary tenure could not be obtained in a court of equity; but the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35 enacts, "that it shall be lawful for any court of equity, in a suit instituted for the partition of lands of copyhold or customary tenure, to make the like decree for ascertaining the rights of the respective parties to the suit, and for the issue of a commission for the partition of the lands and the allotment in severalty of the respective shares therein, as, according to the practice of the court, may now be made with respect to lands of freehold tenure."

TENANCY BY ENTIRETIES.—When an estate is conveyed or devised to a man and his wife during coverture, they are called tenants by entireties. Each is seised of the whole, and neither of a part; consequently the husband's conveyance alone has no effect on the surviving wife. To pass the estate, a fine with the wife's acknowledgment, under 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, is necessary; so that it could not be conveyed without such acknowledgment, if freehold; but if an estate for years, the husband alone may assign the term, so as to bar his wife surviving, it being a chattel interest.

A gift to a man and woman, who afterwards marry, does not make them tenants by entireties.

CHAPTER X.

Of Title to Real Property in General.

TITLE signifies the foundation of the right or claim which a man has to his property, and is of several degrees.

1. The first and lowest species is that of mere naked possession, or actual occupation, without any apparent right, or shadow or pretence of right, to continue such possession. Thus, if because I find a house without any person occupying it, I enter and possess myself of it, my title is simply that of a naked possession. There are, of course, various ways whereby it may be derived, but this is sufficient to show its nature. A party thus possessed is so far protected, that prima facie he has a title to that of which he is in possession, and no one can legally divest him of such possession, except by proving a better and more perfect title in himself. By length of time, also, this title may become good to all intents and purposes. We ought here to observe, however, that in the case of a party having entered under a lease or agreement from the true owner, the owner is not therefore to be called on to prove his title.

2. The next step is the right to possession, which may reside in one man while the actual possession is in another. Thus, if a man is unlawfully turned or kept out of possession of his property, he has still the right of possession, and may exercise it whenever he thinks proper, by entering upon the disseisor, and determining his occupancy. This right of possession, again, is of two sorts, viz. an apparent right, which may be defeated by proving a better and actual right. Thus, if the disseisor dies in possession of the land whereof he so became possessed by his own unlawful act, and the same descends to his heir, now, by the common law, the heir hath obtained the apparent though not the actual right, which remains in the party turned out of his property. But, to divest the heir of his possession, the other must now resort to an action at law, and cannot do so by mere entry or other act of his own. If, however, he who has the actual right of possession puts in his claim, and brings his action within the proper time, and can prove by what unlawful means the ancestor became seised, he will then by a sentence of law recover the possession to which he has such actual right; yet if he omit to bring this his possessory action (as it is termed) within a competent time, his adversary will gain an actual right of possession in consequence of the other's negligence.

A right of entry, according to modern notions, may be defined "a right to bring an action of ejectment." This right is not grantable, but it may be extinguished; it cannot even be surrendered; nor would it have passed to another by fine, though a fine would have been a bar to the right, the cognizor being estopped. Neither is it devisable. The proper mode of extinguishment is by release to the person in actual possession of the lands. It is, however, descendible in its nature.

3. The third degree of title is that of a mere right to the property, without possession or even the right of possession. In this case the party is put to a right. He may have the true ultimate property of the lands in himself, but by the intervention of certain circumstances, either by his own negligence, the solemn act of his ancestor, or the determination of a court of justice, the presumption is strongly in favour of his antagonist, who has thereby obtained the absolute right of possession.

4. A complete title to lands can only exist where the right of possession and the right of property are united; and this is sufficient to give an equitable title: but to constitute a strictly legal title, there must also be the actual possession added to the foregoing.

Limitation of Actions and Suits.—Upon the subject of the time within which it is competent to a party to avail himself of his right of possession, it becomes necessary to advert to the recent act of parliament, 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, whereby the law, which had previously been in this respect in a very unsatisfactory state, has been greatly altered and simplified. The first section points out the extent and operation of the act, by defining the interpretation to be applied to certain expressions used in it. The word land extends to all corporeal hereditaments whatsoever, and also to tithes (other than tithes belonging to a spiritual or eleemosynary corporation sole), and to any interest or estate therein, whether freehold or chattel, and whether the same be of freehold, copyhold, or any other tenure. The word rent extends to all heriots, and to all services and suits for which a distress may be made, and to annuities and periodical sums of money charged upon or payable out of land, except moduses or compositions belonging to a spiritual or eleemosynary corporation sole. It then enacts as follows:—

After the 31st December, 1833, no person shall make an entry or distress, or bring an action, to recover any land or rent, but within twenty years next after the time at which the right to make such entry or distress or to bring such action shall have first accrued to some person through whom he claims; or if such right shall not have accrued to any person through whom he claims, then within twenty years next after the time at which the right shall have first accrued to the person making or bringing the same.

In the construction of this act, the right to make an entry or distress or bring an action to recover any land or rent shall be deemed to have first accrued as follows:—

When the person claiming such land or rent, or some person through whom he claims, shall, in respect of the estate or interest claimed, have been in possession or in receipt of the profits of such land, or in receipt of such rent, and shall while entitled thereto have been dispossessed, or have discontinued such possession or receipt, then such right shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time of such dispossession or discontinuance of possession, or at the last time at which any such profits or rent were so received;

And when the person claiming such land or rent shall claim the estate or interest of some deceased person who shall have continued in such possession or receipt in respect of the same estate or interest until his death, and shall have been the last person entitled to such estate or interest who shall have been in such possession or receipt, then such right shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time of such death;

And when the person claiming such land or rent shall claim in respect of an estate or interest in possession granted, appointed, or otherwise assured by an instrument (other than a will) to him, or some person through whom he claims, by a person being in respect of the same estate or interest in the possession or receipt of the profits of the land, or in the receipt of the rent, and no person entitled under such instrument shall have been in such possession or receipt, then such right shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time at which the person claiming, or the person through whom he claims, became entitled to such possession or receipt by virtue of such instrument;

And when the estate or interest claimed shall have been an estate or interest in reversion or remainder or other future estate or interest, and no person shall have obtained the possession or receipt of the profits of such land or the receipt of such rent in respect of such estate or interest, then such right shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time at which such estate or interest became an estate or interest in possession;

And when the person claiming such land or rent, or the person through whom he claims, shall have become entitled by reason of any forfeiture or breach of condition, then such right shall be deemed to have first accrued when such forfeiture was incurred or such condition was broken.

When any right to make an entry or distress or to bring an action to recover any land or rent by reason of any forfeiture or breach of condition shall have accrued in respect of any estate or interest in reversion or remainder, and the land or rent shall not have been recovered by virtue of such right, the right to make an entry or distress or bring an action to recover such land or rent shall be deemed to have first accrued in respect of such estate or interest at the time when the same shall have become an estate or interest in possession, as if no such forfeiture or breach of condition had happened.

A right to make an entry or distress or to bring an action to recover any land or rent shall be deemed to have first accrued, in respect of an estate or interest in reversion, at the time at which the same shall have become an estate or interest in possession by the determination of any estate in respect of which such land shall have been held, or the profits thereof or such rent shall have been received, notwithstanding the person claiming such land, or some person through whom he claims, shall, at any time previously to the creation of the estate or estates which shall have determined, have been in possession or receipt of the profits of such land, or in receipt of such rent.

For the purposes of this act, an administrator claiming the estate or interest of the deceased person of whose chattels he shall be appointed administrator shall be deemed to claim as if there had been no interval of time between the death of such deceased person and the grant of the letters of administration.

When any person shall be in possession, or in receipt of the profits of any land, or in receipt of any rent, as tenant at will, the right of the person entitled subject thereto, or of the person through whom he claims, to make an entry or distress or bring an action to recover such land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued either at the determination of such tenancy, or at the expiration of one year next after the commencement of such tenancy, at which time such tenancy shall be deemed to have determined. But no mortgagor or cestuique trust shall be deemed to be a tenant at will, within the meaning of this clause, to his mortgagee or trustee.

And when any person shall be in possession or in receipt of the profits of any land, or in receipt of any rent, as tenant from year to year or other period without any lease in writing, the right of the person entitled subject thereto, or of the person through whom he claims, to make an entry or distress or to bring an action to recover such land or rent shall be deemed to have first accrued at the determination of the first of such years or other periods, or at the last time when any rent payable in respect of such tenancy shall have been received, whichever shall last happen.

When any person shall be in possession or in receipt of the profits of any land, or in receipt of any rent, by virtue of a lease in writing by which a rent amounting to the yearly sum of twenty shillings or upwards shall be reserved, and the rent reserved by such lease shall have been received by some person wrongfully claiming to be entitled to such land or rent in reversion immediately expectant on the determination of such lease, and no payment in respect of the rent reserved by such lease shall afterwards have been made to the person rightfully entitled thereto, the right of the person entitled to such land or rent subject to such lease, or of the person through whom he claims, to make an entry or distress or to bring an action after the determination of such lease, shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time at which the rent reserved by such lease was first so received by the person wrongfully claiming as aforesaid: and no such right shall be deemed to have first accrued upon the determination of such lease to the person rightfully entitled.

No person shall be deemed to have been in possession of any land within the meaning of this act merely by reason of having made an entry thereon.

And no continual or other claim upon or near any land shall preserve any right of making an entry or distress or of bringing an action.

When any one or more of several coparceners, joint tenants, or tenants in common, shall have been in possession or receipt of the entirety, or more than their undivided share of any land or of the profits thereof, or of the rent, for their own benefit, or for the benefit of any persons other than the persons entitled to the other shares, such possession or receipt shall not be deemed to have been the possession or receipt of such last-mentioned persons.

When a younger brother or other relation of the person entitled as heir to the possession or receipt of the profits of any land, or to the receipt of any rent, shall enter into the possession or receipt thereof, such possession or receipt shall not be deemed to be the possession or receipt of or by the person entitled as heir.

When any acknowledgment of the title of the person entitled to any land or rent shall have been given to him or his agent in writing signed by the person in possession or in receipt of the profits of such land, or in receipt of such rent, then such possession or receipt of or by the person by whom such acknowledgment shall have been given shall be deemed, according to the meaning of this act, to have been the possession or receipt of or by the person to whom or to whose agents such acknowledgment shall have been given at the time of giving the same, and the right of such last-mentioned person, or of any person claiming through him, to make an entry or distress or bring an action to recover such land or rent shall be deemed to have first accrued at and not before the time at which such acknowledgment, or the last of such acknowledgments (if more than one), was given.

When no such acknowledgment as aforesaid shall have been given before the passing of this act, and the possession or receipt of the profits of the land, or the receipt of the rent, shall not at the time of the passing of this act have been adverse to the right or title of the person claiming to be entitled thereto, then such person, or the person claiming through him, may, notwithstanding the period of twenty years hereinbefore limited shall have expired, make an entry or distress or bring an action to recover such land or interest at any time within five years next after the passing of this act.

As to Disabilities.—If at the time at which the right of any person to make an entry or distress or bring an action to recover any land or rent shall have first accrued as aforesaid such person shall have been under any of the disabilities of infancy, coverture, idiotcy, lunacy, unsoundness of mind, or absence beyond seas, then such person, or the person claiming through him, may, notwithstanding the period of twenty years hereinbefore limited shall have expired, make an entry or distress or bring an action to recover such land or rent at any time within ten years next after the time at which the person to whom such right shall first have accrued as aforesaid shall have ceased to be under any such disability, or shall have died, whichever shall have first happened.

But no entry, distress, or action shall be brought by any person who, at the time at which his right to make an entry or distress or to bring an action to recover any land or rent shall have first accrued, shall be under any of the disabilities hereinbefore mentioned, or by any person claiming through him, but within forty years next after the time at which such right shall have first accrued, although the person under disability at such time may have remained under one or more of such disabilities during the whole of such forty years, or although the term of ten years from the time at which he shall have ceased to be under any such disability, or have died, shall not have expired.

When any person shall be under any of the disabilities hereinbefore mentioned at the time at which his right to make an entry or distress or to bring an action to recover any land or rent shall have first accrued, and shall depart this life without having ceased to be under any such disability, no time to make an entry or distress or to bring an action to recover such land or rent beyond the said period of twenty years next after the right of such person to make an entry or distress or to bring an action to recover such land or rent shall have first accrued, or the said period of ten years next after the time at which such person shall have died, shall be allowed by reason of any disability of any other person.

No part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, nor the Islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, or Sark, nor any islands adjacent to any of them (being part of the dominions of his majesty), shall be deemed to be beyond seas within the meaning of this act.

When the right of any person to make an entry or distress or bring an action to recover any land or rent to which he may have been entitled for an estate or interest in possession shall have been barred by the determination of the period hereinbefore limited which shall be applicable in such case, and such person shall at any time during the said period have been entitled to any other estate, interest, right, or possibility, in reversion, remainder, or otherwise, in or to the same land or rent, no entry, distress, or action shall be made or brought by such person, or any person claiming through him, to recover such land or rent, in respect of such other estate, interest, right, or possibility, unless in the mean time such land or rent shall have been recovered by some person entitled to an estate, interest, or right which shall have been limited or have taken effect after or in defeasance of such estate or interest in possession.

When the right of a tenant in tail of any land or rent to make an entry or distress or to bring an action to recover the same shall have been barred by reason of the same not having been made or brought within the period hereinbefore limited which shall be applicable in such case, no such entry, distress, or action shall be made or brought by any person claiming any estate, interest, or right which such tenant in tail might lawfully have barred.

When a tenant in tail of any land or rent, entitled to recover the same, shall have died before the expiration of the period hereinbefore limited, which shall be applicable in such case for making an entry or distress or bringing an action to recover such land or rent, no person claiming any estate, interest, or right which such tenant in tail might lawfully have barred shall make an entry or distress or bring an action to recover such land or rent but within the period during which, if such tenant in tail had so long continued to live, he might have made such entry or distress or brought such action.

When a tenant in tail of any land or rent shall have made an assurance thereof which shall not operate to bar an estate to take effect after or in defeasance of his estate tail, and any person shall, by virtue of such assurance, at the time of the execution thereof or at any other time afterwards, be in possession or receipt of the profits of such land, or in the receipt of such rent, and the same person, or any other person whatsoever (other than some person entitled to such possession or receipt in respect of an estate which shall have taken effect after or in defeasance of the estate tail) shall continue in such possession or receipt for twenty years next after the commencement of the time at which such assurance, if it had been then executed by such tenant in tail, or the person who would have been entitled to his estate tail if such assurance had not been executed, would, without the consent of any other person, have operated to bar such estate as aforesaid, then at the expiration of such period of twenty years such assurance shall be deemed to have been effectual as against any person claiming any estate, interest, or right to take effect after or in defeasance of such estate tail.

Suits in Equity.—And after the said 31st December, 1833, no person claiming any land or rent in equity shall bring any suit to recover the same but within the period during which by virtue of the provisions hereinbefore contained he might have made an entry or distress or brought an action to recover the same respectively, if he had been entitled at law to such estate or right in or to the same as he shall claim therein in equity.

But when any land or rent shall be vested in a trustee upon any express trust, the right of the cestuique trust, or any person claiming through him, to recover such land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued, according to the meaning of this act, at and not before the time at which such land or rent shall have been conveyed to a purchaser for a valuable consideration, and shall then be deemed to have accrued only as against such purchaser, and any person claiming through him.

And in every case of a concealed fraud the right of any person to bring a suit in equity for the recovery of any land or rent of which he, or any person through whom he claims, may have been deprived by such fraud, shall be deemed to have first accrued at and not before the time at which such fraud shall or with reasonable diligence might have been first known or discovered. Provided, that nothing in this clause contained shall enable any owner of lands or rents to have a suit in equity for the recovery of such lands or rents, or for setting aside any conveyance of such lands or rents on account of fraud, against any bonâ fide purchaser for valuable consideration who has not assisted in the commission of such fraud, and who at the time that he made the purchase did not know and had no reason to believe that any fraud had been committed.

But nothing in this act shall be deemed to interfere with any rule or jurisdiction of courts of equity in refusing relief on the ground of acquiescence or otherwise to any person whose right to bring a suit may not be barred by virtue of this act.

Mortgages.—When a mortgagee shall have obtained the possession or receipt of the profits of any land, or the receipt of any rent comprised in his mortgage, the mortgagor or any person claiming through him shall not bring a suit to redeem the mortgage but within twenty years next after the time at which the mortgagee obtained such possession or receipt, unless in the meantime an acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagor or of his right of redemption shall have been given to the mortgagor, or some person claiming his estate, or to the agent of such mortgagor or person, in writing signed by the mortgagee or the person claiming through him; and in such case no such suit shall be brought but within twenty years next after the time at which such acknowledgment, or the last of such acknowledgments if more than one, was given. And when there shall be more than one mortgagor, or more than one person claiming through the mortgagor, such acknowledgment, if given to any of such mortgagors or persons, or his agents, shall be as effectual as if given to all. But where there shall be more than one mortgagee or person claiming the estate or interest, such acknowledgment signed by one or more of such mortgagees or persons shall be effectual only as against the parties signing and the persons claiming under them, and any persons entitled to any estate or interest to take effect after or in defeasance of their estate or interest, and shall not operate to give to the mortgagor a right to redeem the mortgage as against the persons entitled to any other undivided or divided part of the money or land or rent. And where such of the mortgagees or persons as shall have given such acknowledgment shall be entitled to a divided part of the land or rent, or some estate or interest therein, and not to any ascertained part of the mortgaged money, the mortgagor shall be entitled to redeem the same on payment with interest of the part of the mortgaged money which shall bear the same proportion to the whole as the value of such divided part of the land or rent shall bear to the value of the whole of the land or rent.

Ecclesiastical Owners.—It shall be lawful for any archbishop, bishop, dean, prebendary, parson, vicar, master of hospital, or other spiritual or eleemosynary corporation sole, to make an entry or distress or to bring an action or suit to recover any land or rent within such period as hereinafter is mentioned next after the time at which the right of such corporation sole, or of his predecessor, to make such entry or distress or bring such action or suit shall first have accrued; that is to say,—the period during which two persons in succession shall have held the office or benefice in respect whereof such land or rent shall be claimed, and six years after a third person shall have been appointed thereto, if the times of such two incumbencies and such term of six years taken together shall amount to the full period of sixty years; and if such times taken together shall not amount to the full period of sixty years, then during such further number of years in addition to such six years as will with the time of the holding of such two persons and such six years make up the full period of sixty years; and after the said 31st December, 1833, no such entry, distress, action, or suit shall be made or brought at any time beyond the determination of such period.

Advowsons.—After the 31st December, 1833, no person shall bring any quare impedit or other action, or any suit, to enforce a right to present to or bestow any church, vicarage, or other ecclesiastical benefice, as the patron thereof, after the expiration of such period as hereinafter is mentioned; that is to say,—the period during which three clerks in succession shall have held the same, all of whom shall have obtained possession thereof adversely to the right of presentation or gift of such person, or of some person through whom he claims, if the times of such incumbencies taken together shall amount to the full period of sixty years; and if they shall not together amount to the full period of sixty years, then after the expiration of such further time as will make up the full period of sixty years.

When on the avoidance, after a clerk shall have obtained possession of an ecclesiastical benefice adversely to the right of presentation or gift of the patron thereof, a clerk shall be presented or collated thereto by his majesty or the ordinary by reason of a lapse, such last-mentioned clerk shall be deemed to have obtained possession adversely to the right of presentation or gift of such patron as aforesaid; but when a clerk shall have been presented by his majesty upon the avoidance of a benefice in consequence of the incumbent thereof having been made a bishop, the incumbency of such clerk shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed a continuance of the incumbency of the clerk so made bishop.

In the construction of this act, every person claiming a right to present to or bestow any ecclesiastical benefice, as patron thereof, by virtue of any estate, interest, or right which the owner of an estate tail in the advowson might have barred, shall be deemed to be a person claiming through the person entitled to such estate tail, and the right to bring any quare impedit, action, or suit shall be limited accordingly.

After the said 31st December, 1833, no person shall bring any quare impedit or other action, or any suit, to enforce a right to present to or bestow any ecclesiastical benefice as the patron thereof, after the expiration of one hundred years from the time at which the clerk shall have obtained possession of such benefice adversely to the right of presentation or gift of such person, or of some person through whom he claims, or of some person entitled to some preceding estate or interest or undivided share or alternate right of presentation or gift held or derived under the same title, unless a clerk shall subsequently have obtained possession of such benefice on the presentation or gift of the person so claiming, or of some person through whom he claims, or of some other person entitled in respect of an estate, share, or right held or derived under the same title.

At the determination of the period limited by this act to any person for making an entry or distress, or bringing any writ of quare impedit or other action or suit, the right and title of such person to the land, rent, or advowson for the recovery whereof such entry, distress, action, or suit respectively might have been made or brought within such period, shall be extinguished.

The receipt of the rent payable by any tenant from year to year or other lessee shall, as against such lessee or any person claiming under him (but subject to the lease), be deemed to be the receipt of the profits of the land for the purposes of this act.

Abolition of Real and Mixed Actions.—Although perhaps not applying strictly to the matter at present before us, it is as well, in relation to the beforementioned act, to say, that by its other clauses no action real or mixed (except a writ of right of dower, or writ of dower unde nihil habet, or a quare impedit, or an ejectment), and no plaint in the nature of any such writ or action (except a plaint for freebench or dower), shall be brought after the 31st December, 1834.

But when on the said 31st December, 1834, any person who shall not have a right of entry to any land shall be entitled to maintain any such writ or action as aforesaid in respect of such land, such writ or action may be brought at any time before the 1st June, 1835, in case the same might have been brought if this act had not been made, notwithstanding the period of twenty years hereinbefore limited shall have expired.

And when, on the said 1st June, 1835, any person whose right of entry to any land shall have been taken away by any descent cast, discontinuance, or warranty, might maintain any such writ or action as aforesaid in respect of such land, such writ or action may be brought after the said 1st June, 1835, but only within the period during which by virtue of this act an entry might have been made upon the same land by the person bringing such writ or action if his right of entry had not been so taken away.

No descent cast, discontinuance, or warranty which may happen or be made after the said 31st December, 1833, shall toll (take away) or defeat any right of entry or action for the recovery of land.

After the said 31st December, 1833, no action or suit or other proceeding shall be brought to recover any sum of money secured by any mortgage, judgment, or lien, or otherwise charged upon or payable out of any land or rent, at law or in equity, or any legacy, but within twenty years next after a present right to receive the same shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or release of the same, unless in the meantime some part of the principal money, or some interest thereon, shall have been paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto shall have been given in writing signed by the person by whom the same shall be payable or his agent, to the person entitled thereto or his agent; and in such case no such action or suit or proceeding shall be brought but within twenty years after such payment or acknowledgment (or the last, if more than one) was given.

After the said 31st December, 1833, no arrears of dower, nor any damages on account of such arrears, shall be recovered or obtained by any action or suit for a longer period than six years next before the commencement of such action or suit.

After the said 31st December, 1833, no arrears of rent, or of interest in respect of any sum of money charged upon or payable out of any land or rent, or in respect of any legacy, or any damages in respect of such arrears of rent or interest, shall be recovered by any distress, action, or suit, but within six years next after the same respectively shall have become due, or next after an acknowledgment of the same in writing shall have been given to the person entitled thereto or his agent, signed by the person by whom the same was payable or his agent. Provided nevertheless, that where any prior mortgagee or other incumbrancer shall have been in possession of any land, or in the receipt of the profits thereof, within one year next before an action or suit shall be brought by any person entitled to a subsequent mortgage or other incumbrance of the same land, the person entitled to such subsequent mortgage or incumbrance may recover in such action or suit the arrears of interest which shall have become due during the whole time that such prior mortgage or incumbrance was in such possession or receipt, although such time may have exceeded the term of six years.

After the said 31st December, 1833, no person claiming any tithes, legacy, or other property, for the recovery of which he might bring an action or suit at law or in equity, shall bring a suit or other proceeding in any spiritual court to recover the same but within the period during which he might bring an action or suit at law or in equity.

This act shall not extend to Scotland, nor, so far as it relates to any right to present to or bestow any church, vicarage, or other ecclesiastical benefice, to Ireland.

CHAPTER XI.

Of Title by Descent.

WE are now to consider the several modes by which titles may be reciprocally lost and acquired, or whereby the property of things real is either continued or transferred. Acquisition and loss are here used as terms of relation and of a reciprocal nature, for by the same method that one man gains an estate another loses it; as, for instance, if an heir takes by descent, the ancestor loses it by his death, and the like with all others.

By our law, the modes of acquiring on the one hand and of losing on the other a title to real property are reduced to two: descent, where the title is vested in a man by the single operation of the law on the decease of the person through whom he derives his title; and purchase, where the title is vested in him by his own act or agreement, and which includes every other mode of coming to an estate whatever besides descent, whether by devise, gift, or grant of any kind.

The principal distinctions between these two modes of acquiring estates are these:—1st. That by purchase the estate acquires a new inheritable quality, and is descendible to the owner's blood in general, and not confined to the blood of some particular ancestor; and 2dly, An estate acquired by purchase does not render the owner responsible for the acts of the ancestor, as an estate by descent does.

It is a rule, that where the heir takes any thing which vested or might have vested in the ancestor, the heir shall be in by descent; but otherwise he shall take by purchase. As if a man buy an estate, and take a conveyance to him and his heirs; or if a remainder be limited by a stranger to the right heirs of A, who has no estate in the premises, this will be an estate by purchase.

Formerly, where an ancestor devised his estate to his heir at law, so that the heir took the same estate, and neither more nor less than he would have had by descent, he was in by descent; but now, by the recent act for the amendment of the law of inheritance, 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, which we shall notice more particularly presently, he takes in such case by purchase.

We shall reserve the consideration of who are and who are not capable of taking as heirs till we come to the subject of escheat, and confine ourselves for the present to the common law doctrine of inheritances; referring to what has been already advanced for the exceptions thereto, whether by custom, such as gavelkind, borough English, &c., or by statute, as in the case of fees tail, which, as we have seen, are restrained and regulated by the words of the original donation, and do not therefore entirely pursue the course of descent by the common law. For the better elucidation of the subject, it will be necessary briefly to state the true notion of kindred and the several degrees of consanguinity.

Consanguinity is the connexion or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor, and is either lineal or collateral.

Lineal consanguinity is that which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as between A and his father, grandfather, and so forth, in the direct ascending line; or between A and his son, grandson, great grandson, &c., in the direct descending line.

Collateral consanguinity is the relation subsisting between those who are descended from one common stock, but are not descended from or through one another, as brothers, nephews, uncles, cousins, &c.

In lineal consanguinity, every generation constitutes a degree, reckoning either upwards or downwards. Thus A is related to his father and to his son in the first degree, to his grandfather and to his grandson in the second degree, to his great grandfather and to his great grandson in the third degree, and so on. This mode of reckoning obtains equally in the canon, civil, and common law. But with regard to collateral consanguinity, there are two modes of reckoning the degrees, one adopted by the canon law, with which also the common law of England agrees, and the other by the civil law. The former, in reckoning the degree of consanguinity between collateral relations, count upwards from the most remote of the two persons to the common ancestor; and in whatever degree he is distant from the common ancestor, that is the degree in which they are said to be related. But the civil law counts upwards from either of the persons related to the common stock, and then downwards again to the other, reckoning a degree for each person, both ascending and descending. Thus, to give an instance from English history, Henry VII. was a collateral relation of Richard III. both being descended from their common ancestor Edward III. in the following manner:

EDWARD III.

Edmund, Duke of York, fifth son.

John of Gaunt, fourth son.

Richard, Earl of Cambridge.

John, Earl of Somerset.

Richard, Duke of York.

John, Duke of Somerset.

Richard III.

Margaret, Countess of Richmond.

Henry VII.

By the canon and common law they are considered as related in the fifth degree, that being the degree in which the furthest of them (Henry VII.) is removed from the common ancestor. But by the civil computation we must count up from Richard III. to Edward III., the common stock or ancestor, four degrees, and then down again from the said Edward to Henry VII., five more, making in the whole nine degrees; so that Henry VII. and Richard III. were related in the ninth degree according to the civilians.

We shall now proceed to state the principal rules or canons of inheritance, some of which have lately undergone considerable alteration by recent statutory enactments, that have set at rest long pending disputes, and thus tended in those particular points to a more perfect elucidation of the law of descent.

The first rule was, that inheritances shall lineally descend to the issue of the person who last died actually seised in infinitum, but should never lineally ascend.

The latter part of this rule, namely, "that inheritances shall never lineally ascend," is now entirely abrogated by the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106; and, on failure of the lineal descending line, the ancestor in the lineal ascending line is in every case admitted, in the order of inheritance, before his descendants. Thus the father will take before brothers or sisters; and if there be neither father nor brothers or sisters, or their descendants, a surviving grandfather will take before uncles or aunts.

Seisin, also, (or in incorporeal hereditaments that which is equivalent thereto) was necessary in order to make a party an ancestor from whom an estate of inheritance could be derived. A bare right to enter or be otherwise seised was not sufficient; for in such case his heir would not have been entitled at his death, but the heir of the person who was actually last seised. But this part of the rule also is now altered by the same act, which enacts, that "the person last entitled to the land" shall be considered to have been the purchaser thereof, unless it be proved that he inherited the same, and by the first section the expression "the person last entitled to the land," is to be construed to extend to the last person who had a right thereto, whether he did or did not obtain the possession, or the receipt of the rents or profits thereof.

In explanation of so much of the rule as still exists, we must observe, that till the death of the ancestor no person can be complete heir to him; he may have an heir apparent or presumptive, but nemo est hæres viventis. Heirs apparent are those whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided they outlive the ancestor, as the eldest son or his issue. Heirs presumptive are fathers, brothers, daughters, or the like, who under present circumstances are presumed likely to come to the inheritance, but may be prevented by the birth of a son.

The second general rule is, that the male issue shall be admitted in preference to the female; and this rule is so absolute, that the son of a second marriage shall succeed in preference to the daughters of the first.

The third rule is, that where there are two or more males in equal degree, as brothers, the elder shall inherit; but if there be only females, they all inherit as coparceners. In the latter case, however, where the succession to the crown is in question, the right of primogeniture subsists; and the succession to dignities and honours shall not fall on all, but shall rest in abeyance till the crown confers them on such female heirs or heiresses as it pleases.

The fourth canon is, that the lineal descendants in infinitum of any person deceased shall represent their ancestor, that is, shall stand in the same place as the person himself would have done had he been living. Thus the child, grandchild, or great grandchild, either male or female, of the eldest son, succeeds before the younger son, and so on in infinitum. And these representatives shall take neither more nor less, but just so much as the principals would have done. As if there be two sisters, Margaret and Charlotte, and Margaret dies leaving six daughters, and then the father of the two sisters dies without other issue, these six daughters shall take among them exactly the same as their mother Margaret would have done had she been living, that is, a moiety of the father's lands between them in coparcenary; so that if his land were divided into twelve parts, Charlotte would have six parts, and the six daughters of Margaret one apiece. This is called succession per stirpes.

The fifth rule is, that, on failure of lineal descendants or issue of the person last seised, the inheritance shall descend to his collateral relations being of the blood of the first purchaser, and subject to the last preceding rules. Thus, if G. S. acquires land either by sale or gift, or by any other method except descent, and it descends to J. S. his son, and J. S. dies seised thereof without issue, whoever succeeds to this inheritance must be of the blood of G. S. The great principle upon which the law of collateral inheritances depends is, that, upon failure of issue of the last proprietor, the estate shall descend to the blood of the first purchaser; or, that it shall result back to the heirs of the body of that ancestor from whom it either really had or is supposed by legal fiction to have descended, according to the rule laid down, that he who would have been heir to the father of the deceased shall also be heir to the son,—a maxim that will hold universally.

The sixth canon was, that the collateral heir of the person last seised must be his next collateral kinsman of the whole blood. As to this rule, as regards the exclusion of the half blood, we need only refer to the recent statute to show that it no longer exists. (See post, 560.)

The seventh and last canon is, that in collateral inheritances the male stocks shall be preferred to the female (that is, kindred derived from the blood of the male ancestors, however remote, shall be admitted before those from the blood of the female, however near), unless where the lands have in fact descended from the female.

We shall now detail more particularly the provisions of the recent act for the amendment of the law of inheritance, 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106; and, in order to understand the full extent of its operation, it is necessary to observe, that by the first section the word land is declared to extend throughout to all manors, advowsons, messuages, and all other hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, whether of freehold, copyhold, or any other tenure, and whether descendible according to the common law, or the custom of gavelkind, borough English, or any other custom, and to money to be laid out in the purchase of land, and to chattels and other personal property transmissible to heirs, and to any possibility, right, or title of entry or action, or other interest capable of being inherited, and whether in possession, reversion, remainder, or contingency.

The act then proceeds to enact, That in every case descent shall be traced from the purchaser; and, to the intent that the pedigree may never be carried further back than the circumstances of the case and the nature of the title require, the person last entitled to the land shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered to have been the purchaser thereof unless it be proved that he inherited the same, in which case the person from whom he inherited it shall be considered to have been the purchaser unless it be proved that he inherited the same; and in like manner the last person from whom the land shall be proved to have been inherited shall in every case be considered to have been the purchaser, unless it be proved that he inherited the same.

When any land shall have been devised, by any testator who shall die after the 31st December, 1833, to the heir or to the person who shall be the heir of such testator, such heir shall be considered to have acquired the land as a devisee, and not by descent; and when any land shall have been limited, by any assurance executed after the said 31st December, 1833, to the person or to the heirs of the person who shall thereby have conveyed the same land, such person shall be considered to have acquired the same as a purchaser by virtue of such assurance, and shall not be considered to be entitled thereto as his former estate or part thereof.

When any person shall have acquired any land by purchase under a limitation "to the heirs," or "to the heirs of the body," of any of his ancestors, contained in an assurance executed after the said 31st December, 1833, or under a limitation "to the heirs" or "to the heirs of the body" of any of his ancestors (or under any limitation having the same effect) contained in a will of any testator who shall depart this life after the said 31st December, 1833, then and in any of such cases such land shall descend, and the descent thereof shall be traced, as if the ancestor named in such limitation had been the purchaser of such land.

No brother or sister shall be considered to inherit immediately from his or her brother or sister, but every descent from a brother or sister shall be traced through the parent.

Every lineal ancestor shall be capable of being heir to any of his issue; and in every case where there shall be no issue of the purchaser, his nearest lineal ancestor shall be his heir in preference to any person who would have been entitled to inherit, either by tracing his descent through such lineal ancestor, or in consequence of there being no descendant of such lineal ancestor, so that the father shall be preferred to a brother or sister, and a more remote lineal ancestor to any of his issue other than a nearer lineal ancestor or his issue.

None of the maternal ancestors of the person from whom the descent is to be traced, nor any of their descendants, shall be capable of inheriting until all his paternal ancestors and their descendants shall have failed; and no female paternal ancestor of such person, nor any of her descendants, shall be capable of inheriting until all his male paternal ancestors and their descendants shall have failed; and no female maternal ancestor of such person, nor any of her descendants, shall be capable of inheriting until all his male maternal ancestors and their descendants shall have failed.

Where there shall be a failure of male paternal ancestors of the person from whom the descent is to be traced, and their descendants, the mother of his more remote male paternal ancestor or her descendants shall be the heir or heirs of such person in preference to the mother of a less remote male paternal ancestor or her descendants; and where there shall be a failure of male paternal ancestors of such person and their descendants, the mother of his more remote male maternal ancestor and her descendants shall be the heir or heirs of such person in preference to the mother of a less remote male maternal ancestor and her descendants.

Any person related to the person from whom the descent is to be traced by the half blood shall be capable of being his heir; and the place in which any such relation by the half blood shall stand in the order of inheritance, so as to be entitled to inherit, shall be next after any relation in the same degree of the whole blood and his issue where the common ancestor shall be a male, and next after the common ancestor where such common ancestor shall be a female, so that the brother of the half blood on the part of the father shall inherit next after the sisters of the whole blood on the part of the father and their issue, and the brother of the half blood on the part of the mother shall inherit next after the mother.

When the person from whom the descent of any land is to be traced shall have had any relation who, having been attainted, shall have died before such descent shall have taken place, then such attainder shall not prevent any person from inheriting such land who would have been capable of inheriting the same by tracing his descent through such relation if he had not been attainted, unless such land shall have escheated in consequence of such attainder before the 1st January, 1834.

This act shall not extend to any descent which shall take place on the death of any person who shall die before the 1st January, 1834.

Where any assurance executed before the 1st January, 1834, or the will of any person who shall die before the same 1st January, 1834, shall contain any limitation or gift to the heir or heirs of any person, under which the persons answering the description of heir shall be entitled to an estate by purchase, then the persons who would have answered such description of heir if this act had not been made shall be entitled by virtue of such limitation or gift, whether the person named as ancestor shall or shall not be living on or after the said 1st January, 1834.

In establishing a claim by descent, it must first be shown who was last legally seised, or, in other words, in actual possession, or in the receipt of the rents of the property sought to be recovered (technically termed, in real actions, the esplees), and then to prove his death; and next, all the different links in the chain, which will show that the claimant is the next and proper heir of the person so last actually seised, and the times of each death, or at least to show successively through whom the right from time to time descended, or, had they been living, would have descended from the person last seised to the claimant. If the claimant insists that he is lineal heir, he must prove the death of the person who so died seised, his marriage, and the birth of his son, then the marriage and death of such son, and the birth of his son, his marriage and death, and the birth of the claimant. If he claim by collateral descent, then the marriages, births, and deaths, and the identities of each relative through whom the pedigree is to be established must be shown, so as to prove that the claimant is the nearest and oldest surviving collateral heir. If in any part of the pedigree the claim be through the younger brother of several, then the deaths of the elder brothers or other elder collateral relations must be shown; and it is usual and prudent to be prepared to prove affirmatively that each of them died unmarried, or at least without issue, so as to avoid any doubt upon the trial. It has even been supposed, and stated in a very valuable work, that this latter evidence is essential even in the first instance; but that supposition has been recently refuted; and it suffices in a trial of ejectment (at least in the first instance) to prove the death of every elder relative; and then, if the opponent should prove his marriage, and the birth of a child, the claimant may prove in reply that he died at such a time, at such an age, or under such circumstances, as not to impede the course of descent relied upon. Thus it was held, that proof by an old member of the family, that many years before a younger brother of the person last seised had gone abroad, and that the repute of the family was that he had died there, and that the witness had never heard in the family of his having been married, is prima facie evidence that the party was dead without lawful issue, so as to entitle the next claimant by descent to recover in ejectment. Lord Ellenborough observed, the evidence was sufficient to call upon the defendant to give prima facie evidence at least that the younger brother was married; for what other evidence could the lessee of the plaintiff be expected to produce that he was not married, than that none of the family had ever heard that he was. But, in deducing a title to a purchaser, it is usual (unless where the facts may happen to be disclosed by recitals in old deeds executed twenty or thirty years back) to require some satisfactory evidence of the death and failure of issue capable of inheriting of every person through whom the title must be deduced.

It is usual on the trial to produce a pedigree, at least to assist the judge; and perhaps the jury, in following the evidence. There are two modes of establishing a pedigree: the first, by the testimony of old witnesses well acquainted with every member of the family and the events respecting them; and the second, by copies of registries, and proof of identity of the parties therein referred to. Hearsay and reputation are admitted in evidence in cases of pedigree. It is usually found that the evidence of perhaps one old intelligent witness (especially if a female) will dispense with the necessity of any other proof, though it is certainly advisable to have in court copies of the registries of marriages, births, and burials, ready to be proved by a person who has examined the same with the originals, so as to assist or corroborate the witnesses as to dates and other facts.¹

CHAPTER XII.

Of Title by Purchase.

TITLE by purchase may be defined to be the right to lands and tenements which a man acquires by any means other than by descent. It is not necessary that something should be given in return for that which is thus acquired; for, in the legal sense of the term purchase, if a man freely give me an estate by will or otherwise, I am a purchaser. An estate tail is an estate by purchase, since its properties, as to enjoyment and otherwise, are at variance with those of an estate by descent.

¹ Chit. Gen. Prac. 276.

Estates by purchase are acquired by—1. Escheat; 2. Occupancy; 3. Prescription; 4. Forfeiture; and 5. Alienation; which last admits of many branches and ramifications.

I. ESCHEAT.

Escheat is the reverting back of an estate to the lord of the fee, or original grantor, upon an obstruction in the course of descent and consequent determination of the tenure; but in order, in this event, to complete the lord's title, he must enter upon the estate, or sue out his writ of escheat, or else his title is barred, as it may also be by any other act of waiver.

Escheats are divided into those arising from a failure of heirs capable of inheriting, and those from attainder. As to failure of heirs, the former chapter on Title by Descent must be referred to. Under this division falls the case where the being who would otherwise be entitled to inherit is a monster which hath not the shape of mankind, but in any part evidently bears a resemblance of the brute creation. Such a one cannot be heir, although born in wedlock. But mere deformity does not constitute a monster. So bastards cannot inherit; neither can they have any heirs, except such as are descended immediately from them. Thus, if a bastard acquires an estate, and marries, and dies without issue, although his mother and father, and their several children (nominally his brothers, as descending from the same common parents), be then living, yet he has no heir, and the estate must escheat. So if a man's only relations are aliens, the estate shall escheat, as they cannot inherit; neither can they have heirs, as they can hold no property here of a heritable quality. If a man be made a denizen by letters patent, his sons born thereafter may inherit, though one born before denization cannot; but if the father be naturalized, then indeed his eldest son shall inherit, though born before such naturalization, as this has a retrospective effect.

By attainder, until the recent alteration in the law of inheritance, the blood of the person attainted became so corrupt as to be no longer inheritable. He was thereby rendered not only incapable himself of inheriting or of transmitting his own property by heirship, but he also obstructed the descent of lands to his posterity in all cases where they were obliged to derive their title through him from any remote ancestor. But now the 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 106, § 20, enacts, That when the person from whom the descent of any lands is to be traced shall have had any relation who, having been attainted, shall have died before such descent shall have taken place, then such attainder shall not prevent any person from inheriting such land who would have been capable of inheriting the same by tracing his descent through such relation if he had not been attainted, unless such land shall have escheated in consequence of such attainder before the 1st Jan. 1834.

If a copyholder be attainted of treason or felony, his copyhold is forfeited to the lord, yet, by the custom of some manors, the son may inherit from his father notwithstanding the attainder of the latter. A copyhold of inheritance was held not to be forfeited by a conviction for felony without attainder, where there was no special custom to that effect.¹ Where a copyholder was convicted of a capital felony, but pardoned on condition of remaining two years in prison, and the lord did not take any steps for seizing the copyhold, it was held that at the expiration of two years the copyholder might maintain an ejectment for the land against one who had ousted him, inasmuch as the pardon restored his competency to hold lands,² and the estate did not vest in the lord without some act done by him.

By the statute 54 Geo. III. c. 145, it is enacted, that no attainder for felony, after the 27th July, 1814, (except in cases of the crime of high treason or of the crime of petit treason or murder, or of abetting, procuring, or counselling the same), shall extend to the disinheriting of an heir, nor to the prejudice of the right or title of any person or persons other than the right or title of the offender or offenders during his, her, or their natural lives only; and that it shall be lawful for every person or persons to whom the right or interest of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, after the death of any such offender or offenders, should or might have appertained if no such attainder had been, to enter into the same.

In regard to estates in the hands of trustees, by the 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 23, it is enacted, that where any person seised of any land upon any trust or by way of mortgage dies without an heir, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to appoint a person to convey such land, in like manner as is provided by the 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. c. 60 in case such trustee or mortgagee had left an heir and it was not known who was such heir; and such conveyance shall be as effectual as if there was such heir.

And no land, chattels, or stock vested in any person upon any trust or by way of mortgage, or any profits thereof, shall escheat or be forfeited to his majesty, his heirs or successors, or to any corporation, lord of a manor, or other person, by reason of the attainder or conviction for any offence of such trustee or mortgagee, but shall remain in such trustee or mortgagee, or survive to his co-trustee, or descend or vest in his representative, as if no such attainder or conviction had taken place.

The several provisions of this act shall extend to every case of a trustee having some beneficial estate or interest in the same subject, or some duty as trustee to perform, and also to every case of a trust arising or resulting by implication of law or by construction of equity.

Provided, that nothing in this act shall prevent the escheat or forfeiture of any land, chattels, or stock vested in any such trustee or mortgagee, so far as relates to any beneficial interest therein of any such trustee or mortgagee, but such land, chattels, stock, so far as relates to any such beneficial interest, shall be recoverable in the same manner as if this act had not passed.

And whereas it is expedient to relieve persons beneficially entitled to real or personal property which has already escheated or become forfeited to his majesty, to corporations, to lords of manors, or others, by any of the means aforesaid, it is enacted, That in all cases where before the passing of this act any person possessed of or entitled to any land, chattels, or stock, or any right to or interest therein, as a trustee thereof, either in whole or in part, or jointly with some other trustee or trustees, shall have died without an heir, or shall have been convicted of any offence whereby the said land, chattels, or stock have escheated or been forfeited, or become subject to any escheat or forfeiture, then and in every such case the said land, chattels, or stock, or the right thereto or interest therein which hath become subject to escheat or forfeiture by reason thereof, shall be subject to the order and disposition of the Court of Chancery, for the use of the party beneficially interested therein, in such manner and subject in all respects to such rights and incidents and to such orders and regulations of the said court, under the provisions of the said act of 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. as if such person so dead without an heir, or so convicted as aforesaid, were out of the jurisdiction of or not amenable to the process of the court, without having been so convicted. Provided, that nothing in this clause shall extend to any land, chattels, or stock now vested in any person by virtue of any grant made subsequently to the time when such escheat or forfeiture first occurred, or to any land, chattels, or stock which more than twenty years prior to the passing of this act shall have been actually vested in possession or reduced into possession by the party entitled thereto by virtue of any such escheat or forfeiture.

¹ Rex v. Willis, 5 B. & A. 510.

² 6 Geo. IV. c. 25.

Before concluding the head of escheat, we will mention one singular instance in which lands held in fee simple are not liable to escheat to the lord, even when their owner is no more, and has left no heirs to inherit them. This is in the case of a corporation. If the corporation is dissolved, the donor and his heirs shall have the land again in reversion, and not the lord by escheat; and this is upon an implied tacit agreement, which the law annexes to the gift or grant, that such shall be the case.

II. OCCUPANCY.

Occupancy is the taking possession of those things which before belonged to nobody. This, as we have seen, was the true ground and foundation of all property, and of holding those things in severalty which by the law of nature, unqualified by that of society, were common to all mankind. This right, as far as real property is in question, is very much narrowed by our laws, and exists but in one solitary instance. It is where a man has an estate granted to him alone (without mention of heirs &c.) for and during the life of another. Here the question is, if the grantee die during the life of the cestuique vie, since the estate was to continue in some one till the cestuique vie's death, what is to become of it? who is to enjoy this estate? For several reasons, neither the grantor nor the heir, nor the executors or administrators, could formerly take possession of such estate by right, and the law allowed the first occupier to continue the enjoyment as long as he could, except the reversion of the fee were in the crown. He was called the common occupant. If an estate of such a nature be granted to a man and his heirs, then the heir is entitled to it as special occupant.

However, common occupancy is now abolished; for where there is no special occupant appointed by the deed or grant, by the 29 Car. II. c. 3, the tenant pur autre vie may devise it by will, or it shall go to the executors or administrators, and be assets in their hands for payment of debts; and by the 14 Geo. II. c. 20, the surplus of such estate, after payment of debts shall go in the course of distribution like any chattel.

III. PRESCRIPTION.

When a person can show no other title to property than that he and those under whom he claims have immemorially used to enjoy it, he is said to claim it by prescription. The subject of this kind of title must be some incorporeal hereditament, as a right of way, right of common, or the like; for no prescription can give a title to lands or other corporeal substances, of which more certain evidence may be had. Neither can it be for a thing which cannot be raised by grant; for prescription presupposes the loss of a once existing grant. That which is to arise by matter of record cannot be prescribed for, but must be claimed by grant entered of record. And of things incorporeal which may be claimed by prescription, a distinction must be made with regard to the manner of prescribing; whether a man shall prescribe in the que estate (that is, in himself and those whose estate he holds), or in himself and his ancestors. For if a man prescribes in the que estate, nothing is claimable by this prescription but such things as are appendant, incident, or appurtenant to lands; but if he prescribes for himself and his ancestors, he may prescribe for any thing that lies in grant, whether appurtenant or in gross. That which is in common right, and which the law gives, ought not to be prescribed for.

Estates acquired by prescription are not, of course, descendible to the heirs general, like other purchased estates, but are an exception to the rule; for if a man prescribe for a right in himself and his ancestors, it will descend only to the blood of that line of ancestors in which he so prescribes; but if in a que estate, it will follow the nature of that estate in which the prescription is laid, and be inheritable in the same manner, whether it were acquired by descent or purchase.

All that need be stated further on this subject is contained in the recent act, 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71, which, after reciting, that whereas the expression "time immemorial," or "time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," is now by the law of England in many cases considered to include and denote the whole period of time from the reign of king Richard the First, whereby the title to matters that have been long enjoyed is sometimes defeated by showing the commencement of such enjoyment, which is in many cases productive of inconvenience and injustice, enacts, That no claim which may be lawfully made at the common law, by custom, prescription, or grant, to any right of common or other profit or benefit to be taken and enjoyed from or upon any land of our sovereign lord the king, his heirs or successors, or any land being parcel of the duchy of Lancaster or of the duchy of Cornwall, or of any ecclesiastical or lay person, or body corporate, (except such matters and things as are herein specially provided for, and except tithes, rent, and services) shall, where such right, profit, or benefit shall have been actually taken and enjoyed by any person claiming right thereto without interruption for the full period of thirty years, be defeated or destroyed by showing only that such right, profit, or benefit was first taken or enjoyed at any time prior to such period of thirty years; but nevertheless the claim may be defeated in any other way by which the same is now liable to be defeated. And when such right, profit, or benefit shall have been so taken and enjoyed as aforesaid for the full period of sixty years, the right thereto shall be deemed absolute and indefeasible, unless it shall appear that the same was taken and enjoyed by some consent or agreement expressly made or given for that purpose by deed or writing.

And no claim which may be lawfully made at the common law, by custom, prescription, or grant, to any way or other easement, or to any watercourse, or the use of any water, to be enjoyed or derived upon, over, or from any land or water of our said lord the king, his heirs or successors, or being parcel of the duchy of Lancaster or of the duchy of Cornwall, or being the property of any ecclesiastical or lay person, or body corporate, when such way or other matter as herein last before mentioned shall have been actually enjoyed by any person claiming right thereto without interruption for the full period of twenty years, shall be defeated or destroyed by showing only that such way or other matter was first enjoyed at any time prior to such period of twenty years; but nevertheless such claim may be defeated in any other way by which the same is now liable to be defeated. And where such way or other matter as herein last before mentioned shall have been so enjoyed as aforesaid for the full period of forty years, the right thereto shall be deemed absolute and indefeasible, unless it shall appear that the same was enjoyed by some consent or agreement expressly given or made for that purpose by deed or writing.

And when the access and use of light to and for any dwelling-house, workshop, or other building shall have been actually enjoyed therewith for the full period of twenty years without interruption, the right thereto shall be deemed absolute and indefeasible, any local usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding, unless it appear that the same was enjoyed by some consent or agreement expressly made or given for that purpose by deed or writing.

Each of the respective periods of years herein-before mentioned shall be deemed and taken to be the period next before some suit or action wherein the claim or matter to which such period may relate shall have been or shall be brought into question; and no act or other matter shall be deemed to be an interruption within the meaning of this statute, unless the same shall have been or shall be submitted to or acquiesced in for one year after the party interrupted shall have had or shall have notice thereof and of the person making or authorizing the same to be made.

In all actions upon the case and other pleadings wherein the party claiming may now by law allege his rights generally, without averring the existence of such right from time immemorial, such general allegation shall still be deemed sufficient; and if the same shall be denied, all and every the matters in this case mentioned and provided, which shall be applicable to the case, shall be admissible in evidence to sus-tain or rebut such allegation. And in all pleadings to actions of trespass, and in all other pleadings wherein before the passing of this act it would have been necessary to allege the right to have existed from time immemorial, it shall be sufficient to allege the enjoyment thereof as of right by the occupiers of the tenement in respect whereof the same is claimed for and during such of the periods mentioned in this act as may be applicable to the case, and without claiming in the name or right of the owner of the fee, as is now usually done; and if the other party shall intend to rely on any proviso, exemption, incapacity, disability, contract, agreement, or other matter hereinbefore mentioned, or on any cause or matter of fact or of law not inconsistent with the simple fact of enjoyment, the same shall be specially alleged and set forth in answer to the allegation of the party claiming, and shall not be received in evidence on any general traverse or denial of such allegation.

In the several cases mentioned in and provided for by this act, no presumption shall be allowed and made in favour or support of any claim, upon proof of the exercise or enjoyment of the right or matter claimed for any less period of time or number of years than for such period or number mentioned in this act as may be applicable to the case and to the nature of the claim.

The time during which any person otherwise capable of resisting any claim to any of the matters before mentioned shall have been or shall be an infant, idiot, non compos mentis, feme covert, or tenant for life, or during which any action or suit shall have been pending, and which shall have been diligently prosecuted or abated by the death of any party or parties thereto, shall be excluded in the computation of the periods hereinbefore mentioned, except only in cases where the right or claim is hereby declared to be absolute and indefeasible.

When any land or water upon, over, or from which any such way or other convenient watercourse or use of water shall have been or shall be enjoyed or derived hath been or shall be held under or by virtue of any term of life, or any term of years exceeding three years from the granting thereof, the time of the enjoyment of any such way or other matter as herein last before mentioned during the continuance of such term shall be excluded in the computation of the said period of forty years, in case the claim shall within three years next after the end or sooner determination of such term be resisted by any person entitled to any reversion expectant on the determination thereof.

IV. FORFEITURE.

Forfeiture, says Blackstone, is a punishment annexed by law to some illegal act or negligence in the owner of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whereby he loses all his interest therein, and they go to the party injured as a recompence for the wrong which either he alone or the public together with him hath sustained; and it occurs, 1. By certain crimes and misdemeanors; 2. By alienation contrary to law; 3. By non-presentation to a benefice, when, as we have already seen, the forfeiture is denominated a lapse; 4. By simony; 5. By non-performance of conditions; 6. By waste; 7. By breach of copyhold customs; and 8. By bankruptcy.

1. The first of these subjects, namely, that forfeiture which emanates from crimes and misdemeanors, we shall leave for a subsequent page, referring also to a former page (562 &c.), where we have already pointed out some of the alterations lately made in the law relating thereto.

2. Lands may be forfeited by alienating or conveying them to another contrary to law; as against the mortmain acts; or to an alien; or by particular tenants, as they are termed, that is, those who have only a limited interest in property, as tenants for life or for years.

The law of forfeiture for alienation in mortmain arose (we may briefly state) from that grasping desire which was shown, prior to the revolution, by the catholic clergy, to get into their hands, as far as they could, all the landed property in the kingdom, and which they endeavoured to effect by the influence they had over the minds of men in a dying state. To remedy this growing evil, among other acts, the 9 Geo. II. c. 36 was passed, whereby it is enacted, That no manors, lands, tenements, rents, advowsons, or other hereditaments corporeal or incorporeal whatsoever, nor any sum or sums of money, goods, chattels, stocks in the public funds, security for money, or any other personal estate whatsoever, to be laid out or disposed of in the purchase of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, shall be given, granted, aliened, limited, released, transferred, signed, or appointed, or any ways conveyed or settled to or upon any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, or otherwise, for any estate or interest whatsoever, or any ways charged or incumbered by any person or persons whatsoever, in trust for the benefit of any charitable uses whatsoever, unless such gift, conveyance, appointment, or settlement of any such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, sum or sums of money, or personal estate (other than stock in the public funds), be and be made by deed indented, sealed and delivered in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, twelve calendar months at least before the death of such donor or grantor (including the days of execution and death), and be enrolled in the high court of chancery within six calendar months next after the execution thereof, and unless such stocks be transferred in the public books usually kept for the transfer of stocks, six calendar months before the death of the donor or grantor (including the days of the transfer and death), and unless the same be made to take effect in possession for the charitable use intended immediately from the making thereof, and be without any power of revocation, reservation, trust, condition, limitation, clause, or agreement whatsoever, for the benefit of the donor or grantor, or of any person or persons claiming under him.

Provided always, that nothing herein before mentioned relating to the sealing and delivering of any deed or deeds twelve calendar months at least before the death of the grantor, or to the transfer of any stock six calendar months before the death of the grantor or person making such transfer, shall extend or be construed to extend to any purchase of an estate or interest in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any transfer of any stock, to be made really and bonâ fide for a full and valuable consideration actually paid at or before the making such conveyance or transfer, without fraud or collusion.

And it was further enacted, that all gifts, grants, conveyance, appointments, assurances, transfers, and settlements of any lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, or of any estate or interest therein, or of any charge or incumbrance affecting them, or of any stock, money, goods, chattels, or other personal estate, or securities for money to be laid out in the purchase thereof, to or in trust for any charitable uses whatsoever, which shall at any time after the 24th June, 1736, be made in any other manner or form than is by this act directed, shall be absolutely null and void.

Provided, that the act shall not extend to make void the disposition of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or of any personal estate to be laid out in the purchase thereof, made in any other manner or form, to or in trust for either of the two universities in England, or any of the colleges or houses of learning therein, or to or in trust for the colleges of Eton, Winchester, or Westminster.

By the 5th section it was provided, that no such college or house of learning should hold a greater number of advowsons than should be equal to a moiety of the fellows, or, where there were no fellows, to a moiety of the students on the foundation of such college; but by the 45 Geo. III. c. 101, this section of the statute is repealed, so that they may now hold any number of advowsons. But, it is said, a licence from the crown is still necessary when a college purchases an advowson. Many colleges are provided with licences to purchase to a specified extent, and they have been held valid.

It has been determined that this statute (9 Geo. II.) extends to the devise of lands to trustees to be sold and the produce of the sale converted to charitable uses. Money secured upon mortgage of turnpike tolls, poor rates, and county rates, and the residue of lands and personalty disposable by will in trust for the benefit of any charitable use, are likewise within the scope of the act. And under this statute a grant of land to a charity, where there is a resulting trust for the grantor during his life, is void, as it is not an interest to take effect in possession immediately; but a reservation to the grantor of a power for regulating the charity would not in any way invalidate it. A conveyance bad only in part under the statute is not wholly void, but may pass so much of the estate as is not demised in mortmain.¹

Alienation of lands to an alien is likewise a forfeiture; for, as we have already stated, though the conveyance is good, yet the alien can only hold for the queen's benefit. In such a case the vendor, having received the consideration for the purchase, has no equity to set it aside.²

Alienations by particular tenants, when they are greater than the law allows, and divest the remainder or reversion, are forfeitures to him whose right is attacked thereby. As if tenant for life alienes pur autre vie, in tail, or in fee, here his own particular estate is forfeited to the remainder man or reversioner. The same holds with respect to all tenants of the mere freehold (or of an estate not of inheritance) and of chattel interests. There are many species of conveyance, however, which, though purporting to convey a greater estate than the tenant may have, do not occasion a forfeiture: these are therefore called innocent

¹ See the numerous cases upon this subject in Chit. Eq. Ind., tit. Charity, II. 1; also Highmore on Mortmain, passim.

² See ante, 227.

conveyances. By grant, lease for years, bargain and sale, lease and release, the grantor, lessor, &c. can pass no interest beyond the compass of his own estate, and therefore by these no forfeiture is incurred. But a feoffment, if purporting to exceed the bounds of the estate, formerly divested the remainders and reversion, and created a new and wrongful fee simple: hence this was termed a tortious conveyance; and in this case the person who had the immediate remainder or reversion was entitled to enter, and thus restore all the estates except that of the feoffor, which was thereby absolutely forfeited. If, however, the reversioner or remainder-man by deed confirmed the estate so granted, it became as valid as if the confirming party had joined in the original grant. But now the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, § 4, declares that a feoffment, made after the 1st October, 1845, shall not have a tortious operation.

Equivalent, both in its nature and consequences, to an illegal alienation by the particular tenant, is the civil crime of disclaimer. If a tenant set his landlord at defiance and do any act disclaiming to hold of him as a tenant (as, for instance, if he attorn to some other person), no notice to quit will be necessary, for in such case the landlord may treat him as a trespasser. It has, however, been held, that a refusal to pay rent to a devisee under a contested will, accompanied with a declaration that he (the tenant) was ready to pay the rent to any person who was entitled to receive it, was not a disavowal sufficient to dispense with the necessity of a regular notice. If it be known to a landlord that his tenant has disclaimed, though he may demand the performance of covenants by an action of covenant, yet he should do so promptly, or take advantage of the disclaimer and proceed for the forfeiture; for otherwise, as to third persons coming into possession under the tenant, it will be adverse, and the Statute of Limitations will begin to run. A devisee in fee may by deed without notice of record disclaim the estate devised, and it seems that thereupon the estate would vest by such disclaimer in the heir.

3. Of the forfeiture occasioned by lapse we have already said sufficient under the head of advertisements.

4. By simony, also, the right of presentation to a living is forfeited, and vested pro hac vice in the crown. This subject we have already introduced to our readers, and the former pages alone need be referred to.

5. The next kind of forfeitures are those occasioned by breach or non-performance of a condition annexed to the estate, either expressly by deed at its original creation, or impliedly by law; which we have also considered at large in a former chapter.

6. Waste is another cause of forfeiture, and it consists of a spoil or destruction in houses, gardens, trees, or other corporeal hereditaments, to the disherison of him that hath the remainder or reversion. It is, either voluntary or permissive; the one being a commission of damage, and the other an omission of reparation. A removal of those things which the law regards as fixtures, though they were put up by the tenant in possession, constitutes waste. But damage arising by the act of providence can never constitute waste in a legal sense; and though a house be damaged or destroyed by fire arising from carelessness, yet (by 6 Ann. c. 31) no action will lie against the tenant.

Waste may be committed in ponds, warrens, dove-cotes, and the like, by such an excessive destruction of the creatures belonging thereto as to deteriorate the reversioner's interest therein. So cutting unfit (and in some cases, any) timber. The conversion, too, of land from one species of culture to another, as wood, meadow, or pasture, into arable, and the like; and in such cases the improvement that the property undergoes will not render the tenant less liable to its consequences. Therefore to open new mines is waste; though the working of old mines is not. In treating of the different kinds of estates we have already shown what tenants are, and what are not, liable to the consequences of waste.

The punishment for waste committed was, by common law and the Statute of Marlbridge, only single damages, except in the case of a guardian in chivalry, who also forfeited his wardship by the provision of the Great Charter. But the Statute of Gloucester directs that the tenant (whether tenant in dower, by curtesy, for life, or for years) shall lose and forfeit the place wherein the waste is committed, and also treble damages to him that hath the inheritance.

7. A seventh species of forfeiture is that of copyhold estates for breach of the custom of the manor. Copyhold estates are not only liable to the same forfeitures as those which are held in socage, for treason, felony, alienation, and waste, whereupon the lord may seize them without any presentment by the homage; but also to peculiar forfeitures annexed to this species of tenure, which are incurred by the breach of either the general customs of all copyholds, or the peculiar local customs of certain particular manors. And we may observe, that, as these estates were originally holden by the lowest and most abject species of tenure, the marks of feudal dominion still continue much the strongest upon this kind of property. Most of the offences which occasioned a resumption of the fief by the feudal law still continue to be causes of forfeiture in many of our modern copyholds; as, subtraction of suit and service, disclaiming to hold of the lord, or swearing himself not his copyholder, or refusing, when sworn of the homage, to present the truth according to his oath. In these and a variety of other cases the forfeiture does not accrue to the lord till after the offences are presented by the homage, or jury of the lord's court baron.

8. By bankruptcy and insolvency the debtor forfeits all his real as well as personal property, to be divided among his creditors, till their debts are fully paid, when the surplus (if any exists) of the produce of such property will belong to him. Of these subjects we shall say no more in this place, as we shall be required to devote considerable attention to each in our future pages.

V. TITLE BY ALIENATION.

This is the most common means of acquiring a title to real estates; and under it may be comprised any method whereby estates are voluntarily resigned by one man and accepted by another, whether that be effected by sale, gift, marriage settlement, devise, or other transmission of property by the mutual consent of the parties.

In examining the nature of alienation, let us inquire, 1st, Who may aliene, and to whom ; and 2dly, How a man may aliene ; or the usual modes of conveyance.

1. Who may aliene.—As all persons in possession of property are prima facie capable both of conveying and purchasing, unless the law has laid them under any particular disabilities, it will be better rather to consider the incapacity than the capacity to alienate.

A man who had only the bare right either of possession or of property could not formerly convey it to another. Reversions and remainders might be granted, because the possession of the particular tenant is considered as the possession of him in reversion or remainder ; but contingencies and mere possibilities, though they might be released, or devised by will, or would pass to the heir or executor, yet could not (it was said) be assigned at law to a stranger, unless coupled with some present interest. But now the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106 enacts, that after the 1st day of October, 1845, a contingent, an executory, and a future interest, and a possibility coupled with an interest, in any tenements or hereditaments of any tenure, whether the object of the gift or limitation of such interest or possibility be or be not ascertained,—also a right of entry, whether immediate or future, and whether vested or contingent, into or upon any tenements or hereditaments in England, of any tenure,—may be disposed of by deed ; but that no such disposition shall, by force only of this act, defeat or enlarge an estate tail ; and that every such disposition by a married woman must be made conformably to the provisions of the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74 (Abolition of Fines and Recoveries Act.)

Persons attainted of treason, felony, and præmunire, cannot convey from the time of the offence committed, provided attainder follows. They may purchase, but such purchase would be for the crown's benefit, not for their own. So corporations may purchase lands ; but, unless they have a licence to hold lands in mortmain, their purchase is forfeited to the lord of the fee.

Idiots and persons of nonsane memory and infants (as we have already shown), and persons under duress, can neither purchase nor convey effectually. Their acts are not indeed actually void, but voidable, though, as regards a person non compos, not by himself ; for it is a maxim, that no man can stultify himself, or plead his own disability. With respect to a lunatic, the conveyance must be clearly shown not to have been during a lucid interval.

How far aliens may convey has been already shown.

As to married women : before the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, the conveyance or other contract of a married woman (except by some matter of record, as a fine or recovery) was absolutely void at law, and not merely voidable, and could not be affirmed or made good by any subsequent agreement. By that act, however, fines and recoveries were abolished, and a married woman has been enabled by it, since the 31st December 1833, with the concurrence of her husband, in every case (except that of being a tenant in tail, for which special provision is made) to dispose of lands of any tenure by deed, and also by deed to release or surrender or extinguish any estate or power that she alone, or she and her husband in her right, may have in lands of any tenure, as fully and effectually as if she were a feme sole.

The preceding observations apply only to the legal estates of a married woman. Where property is settled to her separate use without any restraint or alienation, she is in equity considered as a feme sole, and may convey or deal with it as such, and her conveyances and contracts will be supported in equity; and this rule existed before, and is quite independent of, the above-mentioned statute.

By the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, § 7, after the 1st October, 1845, an estate or interest in any tenements or hereditaments in England, of any tenure, may be disclaimed by a married woman by deed; every such disclaimer to be made conformably to the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74.

2. We shall next consider how a man may convey, or the several modes of conveyance. Legal evidences of transfers of real property are called the common assurances of the kingdom, being such whereby every man's estate is assured or confirmed to him. They are of four kinds: 1. By deed; 2. By matter of record, or assurance transacted in the queen's courts of record; 3. By special custom, obtaining only in particular places and relating to a particular species of property; and 4. By devise. We shall treat of each kind separately.

CHAPTER XIII.

Of Alienation by Deed.

IN treating of deeds, we shall consider, first, their general nature; and secondly, their several sorts or kinds, with their respective incidents.

1. With respect to the general nature of deeds, let us inquire, 1st, What a deed is; 2dly, Its requisites; and 3dly, How it may be avoided.

1. A deed is a writing sealed and delivered by the parties. It is the most solemn act a man can possibly perform with relation to the disposal of his property; and therefore a man is always estopped by his own deed, and cannot prove (in law) any thing in contradiction to what he has once so solemnly and deliberately avowed. If a deed be made by more parties than one, there ought to be regularly as many copies of it as there are parties; and each copy should be cut or indented in a waving line on the top or side, to tally or correspond with the other; whence such a deed derived the name of indenture.¹ The late Transfer of Real Property Act, 7 & 8 Vic. c. 76, (now repealed) enacted, that it should not be necessary in any case to have a deed indented; and that any person not being a party to a deed might take an immediate benefit under it in the same manner as he might under a deed poll. And the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, which repealed that act, and is substituted in its room, contains a clause to the same effect, (sec. 5), "That a deed executed after the 1st day of October, 1845,

¹ Formerly, when deeds were more concise than at present, it was usual to write both parts or copies upon the same skin of parchment, and then to write between the two copies some word through which the indented line was cut, leaving one half of the word on one part or copy, and the other half on the other, whereby any fraudulent substitution was prevented.

purporting to be an indenture, shall have the effect of an indenture, although not actually indented;¹ and that the benefit of a condition or covenant respecting any tenements or hereditaments may be taken, although the taker thereof be not named a party to the same indenture."

Requisites of Deeds.—The first requisite we must mention is, that all the parties to be bound by a deed must be of ability to contract; there must also be a thing to be contracted for; all which must be sufficiently expressed. Then there must be a good and sufficient consideration appearing upon the face of it. It must not be upon an usurious contract, nor upon fraud or collusion, either to deceive purchasers bonâ fide or just and lawful creditors; any of which bad considerations will vacate the deed, and subject such persons as put the same in ure to forfeitures, and often to imprisonment. A deed also, or other grant, made without any consideration is, as it were, of no effect; for it is construed to enure or be effectual only to the use of the grantor himself. This, it has been said, applies only to the case of a bargain and sale, which herein is said to differ from a gift, as the latter may be without any consideration or cause at all, but a bargain and sale must always have some meritorious cause moving it, and cannot be without it.

The consideration may be either a good or a valuable one. A good consideration is such as that of blood, or of natural love and affection, when a man grants an estate to a near relation, being founded on motives of generosity, prudence, or natural duty; and the circumstance of the donee being illegitimate does not invalidate it. A valuable consideration is such as money, marriage, or the like, which the law esteems an equivalent given for the grant, and is therefore founded on motives of justice.

A voluntary conveyance is good, both in law and equity, against the party himself. It was originally considered that if a person made a voluntary grant of lands, although he could not resume them himself, yet if he afterwards made another conveyance of them for a valuable consideration, the first grant would be void with regard to this purchaser under 27 Eliz. c. 4; and though decided by Lord Mansfield and the court that there must be some circumstances of fraud to vacate the first conveyance, and that the want of consideration alone was not sufficient, yet it has been more recently determined, that a voluntary settlement of lands made even in consideration of mutual love and affection, and in favour of the nearest relations, as parents or children, is void as against a subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration, though with notice of a prior settlement before all the purchase money was paid or the deeds executed, and there was no fraud in fact in the transaction;² for the law, which in all cases is the judge of fraud and covin arising out of facts and intents, infers fraud in this case upon the construction of the 27 Eliz. c. 4.

If a person is indebted at the time of making a voluntary grant, or becomes so soon afterwards, it will be held fraudulent and void with respect to creditors under the 13 Eliz. c. 5, and 6 Geo. IV. c. 16.

¹ But even before these acts, a judge in court would have supplied the omission by indenting the instrument; although Lord Coke considered that a deed must be indented to make it valid. (Co. Litt. 143.)

² Doe v. Manning, 9 East. 59.

Next, a deed must be either written or printed on paper or parchment; and the printing of the signatures, instead of writing them, would not render such signatures less available.

It must also be duly stamped.

The matter must be set forth legally and orderly, sufficient in law to bind the parties. It is not absolutely necessary to use all the formal parts and technicalities of the deed; but, as these are calculated to convey the meaning in the best manner, they should always, as far as possible, be adopted; for, however persons out of the profession may cavil at the lengthened verbosity of deeds, experience has taught us that the use of them is in general a preventative against litigation.

The next requisite to a complete deed is the reading of it. This is necessary when any of the parties desire it; and if not done at his request, the deed is void as to him. If he can, he should read it himself. False reading will render that part of it void.

Next, it should be signed and scaled; though the signing seems unnecessary, except in cases under the Statute of Frauds, and in deeds executed under powers.

Next is the delivery, the form of which is by placing the hand or a seal (as though in the act of sealing) upon the seal, and using the words, "I deliver this my act and deed," or words of a similar import.

Deeds may be avoided by the absence of any of the foregoing requisites, except as already mentioned. They may also be avoided by matter ex post facto, as by re-ame, interlining, or altering any material part, unless a memorandum be made thereof at the time of the execution and attestation; also by breaking off or defacing the seal, if done intentionally by the parties. If several join in a deed, and be separately bound thereby, the breaking off the seal of one party with intent to discharge him from future liability will not alter the liability of the others. Also by cancellation: though when property passes by a deed, this mode is insufficient to re-pass the property, a re-conveyance being requisite, or, in the case of a lease, a surrender. Also, by the disagreement of such whose concurrence is necessary; as a husband, where a feme covert is concerned, or in some cases where a wife after the death of a husband refuses to acknowledge the deed, or an infant on his coming of age, or a person under duress, when the disabilities are removed.

Lastly, a deed may be avoided by a judgment or decree of a court of law or equity, either where fraud, force, or foul practice of any kind were used in obtaining it, and à fortiori where it proves to be an absolute forgery.

II. The kinds of deeds.—There are several kinds of deeds or conveyances; some termed original, as feoffments, gifts, grants, leases, exchanges, and partitions; and others derivative, as releases, confirmations, surrenders, assignments, and defeasances.

1. FEOFFMENTS.—A feoffment is a conveyance operating by transmutation of possession, and it is essential to it that seisin be passed. Therefore it can only be used for the transfer of freehold estates in possession.

By the 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, sec. 3, every feoffment made after the 1st day of October, 1845, other than a feoffment made under a custom by an infant, shall be void at law unless evidenced by deed.

And sec. 4 enacts, that a feoffment made after the 1st day of October, 1845, shall not have any tortious operation.

2. A GIFT is properly a voluntary conveyance, that is, without a consideration either of money or of blood; and it is void therefore against those who were creditors of the donor when it was made, though valid as to subsequent ones. There being no consideration, no use arises upon it; so that if it be of an estate of freehold in possession, it requires livery. The term gift is now generally restricted to an estate tail, the giver being called the donor, and the person taking the donee, &c. It differs little in form from a feoffment, except in the operative words, which are "give and grant."

